The Trial of MARY BLANDY, Spinſter, for the Murder of her Father, Francis Blandy, Gent. at the Aſſizes held at Oxford for the County of Oxford, on Saturday the 29th of February, 1752. Before the Honourable Heneage Legge, Eſq. and Sir Sydney Stafford Smythe, Knt. two of the Barons of his Majeſty's Court of Exchequer.

[Publiſhed by Permiſſion of the Judges.]

ON Monday, the 2d of March 1752, a Bill of Indictment was found by the Grand Inqueſt for the County of Oxford, againſt Mary Blandy, Spinſter, for the Murder of Francis Blandy, late of the Pariſh of Henley upon Thames, in the ſaid County, Gentleman.

On Tueſday, the 3d of March 1752, the Court being met, the Priſoner Mary Blandy was ſet to the Bar, when the Court proceeded thus:

Clerk of the Arraigns. Mary Blandy, hold up thy Hand. (Which ſhe did.) You ſtand indicted by the Name of Mary Blandy, late of the Pariſh of Henley upon Thames, in the County of Oxford, Spinſter; Daughter of Francis Blandy, late of the ſame Place, Gentleman, deceaſed; for that you, not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, and of your Malice aforethought, contriving and intending, him the ſaid Francis Blandy, your ſaid late Father, in his Life-time, to deprive of his Life; and him felonioufly to kill and murder, on the 10th Day of November, in the 23d Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, now King of Great Britain; and on divers Days and Times, between the ſaid 10th Day of November, and the 5th Day of Auguſt, in the 25th Year of the Reign of his ſaid Majeſty, with Force and Arms, at the Pariſh of Henley upon Thames aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, did knowingly, wilfully, and felonioufly, and of your Malice aforethought, mix and mingle certain deadly Poiſon, to wit, white Arſenick, in certain Tea, which had been at divers Times, during the Time above ſpecified, prepared for the Uſe of the ſaid Francis Blandy, to be drank by him: You the ſaid Mary, then and there well knowing that the ſaid Tea, with which you did ſo mix and mingle the ſaid deadly Poiſon as aforeſaid, was then and there prepared for the Uſe of the ſaid Francis Blandy, with Intent to be then and there adminiſtered to him, for his drinking the ſame; and the ſaid Tea with which the ſaid Poiſon was ſo mixed as aforeſaid, afterwards, to wit, on the ſaid 10th Day of November, and on the divers Days and Times aforeſaid, at Henley upon Thames aforeſaid, was delivered to the ſaid Francis, to be then and there drank by him; and the ſaid Francis Blandy, not knowing the ſaid Poiſon to have been mixed with the ſaid Tea, did afterwards, to wit, on the ſaid 10th Day of November, and on the ſaid divers Days and Times aforeſaid, there drink and ſwallow ſeveral Quantities of the ſaid Poiſon, ſo mixed as aforeſaid with the ſaid Tea; and that you the ſaid Mary Blandy might more ſpeedily kill and murder the ſaid Francis Blandy, you the ſaid Mary Blandy, on the ſaid 5th Day of Auguſt, and at divers other Days and Times between the ſaid 5th Day of Auguſt and the 14th Day of Auguſt, in the 25th Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord George the Second, now King of Great Britain, &c. with Force and Arms, at the Pariſh of Henley upon Thames aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, did knowingly, wilfully, felonioufly, and of your Malice aforethought, mix and mingle certain deadly Poiſon, to wit, white Arſenick, with certain Water-Gruel, which had been made and prepared for the Uſe of your ſaid then Father, the ſaid Francis Blandy, to be drank by him, you the ſaid Mary then and there well knowing that the ſaid Water-Gruel, with which you did ſo mix and mingle the ſaid deadly Poiſon as aforeſaid, was then and there made for the Uſe of the ſaid Francis Blandy, with Intent to be then and there adminiſtered to him for his drinking the ſame; and the ſame Water-Gruel, with which the ſaid Poiſon was ſo mixt as aforeſaid, afterwards, to wit, on the ſame Day and Year, at Henley upon Thames aforeſaid, was delivered to the ſaid Francis, to be then and there drank by him; and the ſaid Francis Blandy, not knowing the ſaid Poiſon to have been mixed with the ſaid Water-Gruel, did afterwards, to wit, on the ſaid 5th Day of Auguſt, and on the Day next following, and on divers other Days and Times afterwards, and before the ſaid 14th Day of Auguſt, there drink and ſwallow ſeveral Quantities of the ſaid Poiſon, ſo mixed as aforeſaid with the ſaid Water-Gruel; and the ſaid Francis Blandy, of the Poiſon aforeſaid, and by the Operation thereof, became ſick, and greatly diſtempered in his Body; and from the ſeveral Times aforeſaid until the 14th Day of the ſame Month of Auguſt, in the 25th Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, did languiſh; on which ſaid 14th Day of Auguſt, in the 25th Year aforeſaid, the ſaid Francis Blandy, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, of that Poiſon died: And ſo you, the ſaid Mary Blandy, him the aforeſaid Francis Blandy, at Henley upon Thames aforeſaid, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, felonioufly, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did poiſon, kill and murder, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Clerk of the Arraigns. How ſayeſt thou, Mary Blandy, art thou guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or not guilty?

Priſoner. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

Priſ. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make a Proclamation for Silence.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! My Lords the King's Juſtices ſtrictly charge and command all Manner of Perſons to keep Silence, upon pain of Impriſonment.

Cryer. Oyez! You good Men, that are impannelled to try between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, anſwer to your Names, and ſave your Fines.

The Jury were called over and appeared.

Cl. of Arr. You, the Priſoner at the Bar, theſe Men which were laſt called, and do now appear, are thoſe who are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon the Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, you muſt challenge them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they are ſworn: And you ſhall be heard.

Cl. of Arr. Anthony Woodward.

Cryer. Anthony Woodward, look upon the Priſoner; You ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in Charge, and a true Verdict give, according to the Evidence: So help you God.

And the ſame Oath was adminiſtered to the reſt, (which were ſworn) and their Names are as follow:

Anthony Woodward, ſworn. Charles Harriſon, ſworn. Samuel George Glaze, ſworn. William Farebrother, ſworn. William Haynes, ſworn. Thomas Crutch, ſworn.

Henry Swell, challenged.

John Clarke, ſworn.

William Read, challenged. Harford Dobſon, challenged. William Stone, challenged.

William Hawkins, ſworn. John Haynes, the Elder, ſworn. Samuel Badger, ſworn. Samuel Bradley, ſworn.

William Brooks, challenged.

Joſeph Jagger, ſworn.

Cl. of Arr. Crier, count theſe.

Anthony Woodward,	John Clarke,
Charles Harriſon,	William Hawkins,
Samuel George Glaze,	John Haynes, the Elder,
William Farebrother,	Samuel Badger,
William Haynes,	Samuel Bradley,
Thomas Crutch,	Joſeph Jagger.

Cryer. Gentlemen, are ye all ſworn?

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney-General, or this Inqueſt now to be taken, of any Treaſons, Murders, Felonies, or Miſdemeanors, committed or done by the Priſoner at the Bar, let him come forth, and he ſhall be heard, for the Priſoner ſtands now at the Bar upon her Deliverance; and all Perſons that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, or they will forfeit their Recognizances.

Cl. of Arr. Mary Blandy, hold up thy Hand; Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to her Charge; ſhe ſtands indicted by the Name of Mary Blandy, of the Pariſh of Henley upon Thames, in the County of Oxford, Spinſter, Daughter of Francis Blandy, late of the ſame Place, Gentleman, deceaſed, for that ſhe not having (as in the Indictment before ſet forth). Upon this Indictment ſhe has been arraigned, and upon her Arraignment has pleaded Not Guilty; and for her Trial has put herſelf upon God and her Country, which Country you are: Your Charge therefore is, to inquire whether ſhe be guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof ſhe ſtands indicted, or not guilty.

guilty. If you find her guilty, you ſhall enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements ſhe had at the Time of the Felony committed, or at any Time ſince: If you find her not guilty, you ſhall enquire whether ſhe fled for the ſame: If you find that ſhe did fly for the ſame, you ſhall enquire of her Goods and Chattels, as if you had found her guilty: If you find her not guilty, and that ſhe did not fly for the ſame, ſay ſo, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

The Hon. Mr. Barrington then opened the Indictment. After which, the Hon. Mr. Bathurſt ſpoke as follows:

May it pleaſe your Lordſhips, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counſel in this Caſe for the King, in whoſe Name, and at whoſe Expence, this Proſecution is carried on againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, in order to bring her to Juſtice, for a Crime of ſo black a Dye, that I am not at all ſurpriſed at this vaſt Concourſe of People, collected together to hear, and to ſee the Trial and Cataſtrophe of ſo execrable an Offender as ſhe is ſuppoſed to be.

For, Gentlemen, the Priſoner at the Bar, Miſs Mary Blandy, a Gentlewoman by Birth and Education, ſtands indicted for no leſs a Crime than that of Murder: And not only for Murder, but for the Murder of her own Father; and for the Murder of a Father paſſionately fond of her; undertaken with the utmoſt Deliberation; carried on with an unvaried Continuation of Intention; and at laſt accompliſhed by a frequent Repetition of the baneful Doſe, adminiſtered with her own Hands. A Crime ſo ſhocking in its own Nature, and ſo aggravated in all its Circumſtances, as will (if ſhe is proved to be guilty of it) juſtly render her infamous to the lateſt Poſterity; and make our Children's Children, when they read the horrid Tale of this Day, bluſh to think that ſuch an inhuman Creature ever had an Exiſtence.

I need not, Gentlemen, paint to you the Heinouſneſs of the Crime of Murder. You have but to conſult your own Breaſts, and you will know it.

Has a Murder been committed? Whoever beheld the ghaſtly Corpſe of the murdered Innocent weltering in its Blood, and did not feel his own Blood run ſlow and cold through all his Veins?——Has the Murderer eſcaped? With what Eagerneſs do we purſue? With what Zeal do we apprehend? With what Joy do we bring to Juſtice? And when the dreadful Sentence of Death is pronounced upon him, every Body hears it with Satisfaction, and acknowledges the Juſtice of the divine Denunciation, that, By whom Man's Blood is ſhed, by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed.

If this then is the Caſe of every common Murderer, what will be thought of one, who has murdered her own Father? who has deſignedly done the greateſt of all human Injuries to him, from whom ſhe received the firſt and greateſt of all human Benefits? who has wickedly taken away his Life, to whom ſhe ſtands indebted for Life? who has deliberately deſtroyed, in his old Age, him, by whoſe Care and Tenderneſs ſhe was protected in her helpleſs Infancy? who has impiouſly ſhut her Ears againſt the loud Voice of Nature and of God, which bid her honour her Father, and inſtead of honouring him, has murdered him?

It becomes us, Gentlemen, who appear here as Counſel for the Crown, ſhortly to open the Hiſtory of this whole Affair, that you may be better able to attend to and underſtand the Evidence we have to lay before you. And though, in doing this, I will endeavour rather to extenuate than to aggravate: Yet I truſt I have ſuch an Hiſtory to open as will ſhock the Ears of all who hear me,

Mr. Francis Blandy, the unfortunate deceaſed, was an Attorney at Law, who lived at Henley in this County. A Man of Character and Reputation; he had one only Child,—a Daughter,—the Darling of his Soul, the Comfort of his Age. He took the utmoſt Care of her Education, and had the Satisfaction to ſee his Care was not ill-beſtowed; for ſhe was genteel, agreeable, ſprightly, ſenſible. His whole Thoughts were bent to ſettle her advantageouſly in the World. In order to do that, he made uſe of a pious Fraud, (if I may be allowed the Expreſſion) pretending he could give her 10,000*l.* for her Fortune. This he did in hopes that ſome of the neighbouring Gentlemen would pay their Addreſſes to her: For out of Regard to him, ſhe was from her earlieſt Youth received into the beſt Company; and her own Behaviour made her afterwards acceptable to them. But how ſhort-ſighted is human Prudence! What was intended for her Promotion, proved his Death and her Deſtruction.

For, Gentlemen, about ſix Years ago, one Captain William Henry Cranſtoun, a Gentleman then in the Army, happened to come to Henley to recruit. He ſoon got acquainted with the Priſoner, and hearing ſhe was to have 10,000*l.* fell in Love—not with her, but with her Fortune. Children he had before; married he was at that Time, yet concealing it from her, he inſinuated himſelf into her good Graces, and obtained her Conſent for Marriage.

The Father, who had heard a bad Character of him, and who had Reaſon to believe what was afterwards confirmed, that he was at that very Time married, you will eaſily imagine was averſe to the Propoſal. Upon this Captain Cranſtoun and the Priſoner determined to remove that Obſtacle out of their Way, and reſolved to get as ſoon as poſſible into Poſſeſſion of the 10,000*l.* that the poor Man had unfortunately ſaid he was worth.

In order for this, the Captain being at Mr. Blandy's Houſe in Auguſt 1750, they both agreed upon this horrid Deed. And that People might be leſs ſurpriſed at Mr. Blandy's Death, they began by giving out that they heard Muſic in the Houſe——A certain Sign (as Mr. Cranſtoun had learned from a wiſe Woman, one Mrs. Morgan, in Scotland) that the Father would die in leſs than twelve Months.——The Captain too pretended he was endowed with the Gift of ſecond Sight, and affirmed that he had ſeen Mr. Blandy's Apparition. This was another certain Sign of his Death, as ſhe told the Servants; to whom ſhe frequently ſaid her Father would not live long. Nay, ſhe went farther, and told them, he would not live till the October following.

When it was ſhe firſt began to mix Poiſon with his Victuals, it is impoſſible for us to aſcertain; but probably it was not long after November 1750, when Mr. Cranſtoun left Henley. The Effects of the Poiſon were ſoon perceived. You will hear Dr. Addington, his Phyſician, tell you, Mr. Blandy had for many Months felt the dreadful Effects of it. One of the Effects was the Teeth dropping out of his Head, whole from their Sockets. Yet what do you think, Gentlemen, the Daughter did when ſhe perceived it? She d——n'd him for a toothleſs old Rogue, and wiſhed him at Hell. The poor Man frequently complained of Pains in his Bowels; had frequent Reachings and Sickneſs: Yet, inſtead of deſiſting, ſhe wanted more Poiſon to effect her Purpoſe. And Mr. Cranſtoun did accordingly in the April following ſend her a freſh Supply; under the Pretence of a Preſent of Scotch Pebbles, he incloſed a Paper of white Arſenic. This ſhe frequently adminiſtered in his Tea; and we ſhall prove to you, that in June, having put ſome of it into a Diſh of Tea, Mr. Blandy diſliking the Taſte, left half in the Cup. Unfortunately! a poor old Chair-woman (by Name Ann Emmet) glad to get a Breakfaſt, drank the Remainder, together with a Diſh or two more out of the Pot, and eat what Bread and Butter had been left. The Conſequence was, that ſhe was taken violently ill with purging and vomiting, and was in imminent Danger of her Life. The poor Woman's Daughter came and told Miſs Blandy how ill her Mother was; ſhe, ſorry that the Poiſon was miſapplied, ſaid, Do not let your Mother be uneaſy, I will ſend her what is proper for her. And accordingly ſent her great Quantities of Sack Whey and thin Mutton Broth, than which no Phyſician could have preſcribed better: And thus drenched the poor Woman for ten Days together, till ſhe grew tired of her Medicines, and ſent her Daughter again to Miſs Blandy to beg a little ſmall Beer. No, no ſmall Beer, the Priſoner ſaid, that was not proper for her. Moſt plainly then ſhe knew what it was the Woman had taken in her Father's Tea. She knew its Effect. She knew the proper Antidotes.——Having now experienced the Strength of the Poiſon, ſhe grew more open and undaunted; was heard to ſay, Who would grudge to ſend an old Father to Hell for 10,000*l.*? I will make no Remark upon ſuch an horrid Expreſſion,——it needs none. After this ſhe continued to mix the Poiſon with her Father's Tea as often as ſhe had an Opportunity. Soon afterwards Suſan Gunnell, another Witneſs we ſhall call, happened to drink ſome which her Maſter had left; ſhe was taken ill upon it, and continued ſo for three Weeks. This ſecond Accident alarmed the Priſoner. She was afraid of being diſcovered. She found it would not mix well with Tea. Accordingly ſhe wrote to Mr. Cranſtoun for further Inſtructions. In Anſwer to it, he bids her put it into ſome Liquid of a more thickiſh Subſtance.

The Father being ill, frequently took Water-gruel. This was a proper Vehicle for the Powder. Therefore from this Time you will find her always buſy about her Father's Gruel. But leſt Suſan Gunnell, who had been ill, ſhould eat any of it, ſhe cautioned her particularly againſt it; ſaying, Suſan, As you have been ſo ill, you had better not eat any of your Maſter's Water-gruel; I have been told Water-gruel has done me Harm, and perhaps it may have the ſame Effect upon you. And leſt this Caution ſhould not be ſufficient, ſhe ſpoke to Betty Binfield, the other Maid-Servant, and aſked her whether Suſan ever eat any of her Father's Gruel, adding, She had better not; for if ſhe does, it may do for her, you may tell her. Evidently then ſhe knew what were the Effects of the Powder ſhe put into her Father's Gruel; for if it would do for the Servant, it would do for her Father.

But the Time approached beyond which ſhe had foretold her Father would not live.——It was the Middle of July, and the Father ſtill living. ——At this Mr. Cranſtoun grows impatient. Upon the 18th of July he writes to her, and expreſſing himſelf in an allegorical Manner, which however you will eaſily underſtand, he ſays, I am ſorry there are ſuch Occaſions to clean your Pebbles; you muſt make uſe of the Powder to them, by putting it in any thing of Subſtance, wherein it will not ſwim a-top of the Water, of which I wrote to you of in one of my laſt. I am afraid it will be too weak to take off their Ruſt, or at leaſt it will take too long a Time. Here he is encouraging her to double the Doſe; ſays, he is afraid it will be too weak, and will take up too much Time. And, as a further Incitement to her to make haſte, deſcribes the Beauties of Scotland, and tells her that his Mother, Lady Cranſtoun, had employed Workmen to fit up an Apartment for her at Lennel-Houſe.

Soon after the Receipt of this Letter ſhe followed the Advice. And you will accordingly find the Doſe doubled. Her Father grew worſe, and, as ſhe herſelf told the Servants, complained of a Fireball in his Stomach, ſaying, He never will be well till he has got rid of it. And yet you will find ſhe herſelf, fearful leſt he ſhould get rid of it, was continually adding Fuel to the Fire, till it had conſumed her Father's Entrails.

Gentlemen, I will not detain you by going through every Particular, but bring you to the fatal Period. Upon the 3d of Auguſt, being Saturday, Suſan Gunnell made a large Pan of Water-gruel for her Maſter. Upon Monday the 5th, the Priſoner will be proved to go into the Pantry where it was kept, and after having, according to Mr. Cranſtoun's Advice, put in a double Doſe of the Powder, ſhe ſtirred it about for a conſiderable Time, in order to make it mix the better. When fearing ſhe ſhould have been obſerved, ſhe went immediately into the Laundry, to the Maids, and told them, that ſhe had been in the Pantry, and after ſtirring her Papa's Water-gruel, had eat the Oatmeal at the Bottom, ſaying, that, if ſhe was ever to take to the eating any thing in particular, it would be Oatmeal. Strange Inconſiſtence! She who had cautioned the Maid againſt it not above a Fortnight before, who had declared that it had been prejudicial to her own Health, "is on a ſudden grown mighty fond of it."——But the Pretence is eaſily to be ſeen through. That Afternoon ſome of the Water-gruel was taken out of the Pan, and prepared for her Father's Supper. She again in the Kitchen takes care to ſtir it ſufficiently; looks at the Spoon; rubs ſome between her Fingers; and then ſends it up to the poor old Man her Father. He ſcarce had ſwallowed it, when he was taken violently ill, and continued ſo all the next Day, with a Griping, Purging, and Vomiting. Yet ſhe herſelf orders a ſecond Meſs of the ſame Gruel for her Father's Supper on the Tueſday, and was herſelf the Perſon who carried it up to her Father, and adminiſtered it to him as Nouriſhment. The poor old Man, grown weak with the frequent Repetition, had not drank half the Meſs before he was ſeized, from Head to Foot, with the moſt violent pricking Pains, continual Reaching and Vomiting;——and was obliged to go to Bed without finiſhing it. The next Morning the poor Chair-woman coming again to the Houſe, unfortunately eat the Remainder of the Gruel, and was inſtantly affected in ſo violent a Manner, that for two Hours together it was thought ſhe would have died in Mr. Blandy's Houſe. The Priſoner at this Time was in Bed; but the Maid going up to her Room, told her how ill Dame Emmet had been; at the ſame Time ſaying, ſhe had eat nothing but the Remainder of her Father's Water-gruel. The Priſoner's Anſwer was, Poor Woman! I am glad I was not up, I ſhould have been ſhock'd to have ſeen her---ſhould have been ſhocked to have ſeen the poor Chair-woman eat what was prepared for her Father; but was never ſhock'd at her Father's eating it, or at his Sufferings!

Gentlemen, in the Afternoon of the Wedneſday, notwithſtanding the poor Man, her Father, had ſuffered ſo much for two Days together, yet ſhe again endeavours to give him more of the ſame Gruel. No, (ſays the Maid) it has an odd Taſte; it is grown ſtale, I will make freſh. It is not worth while to make freſh now, it will take you from your Ironing; this will do, was the Priſoner's Anſwer. However, Suſan made freſh, after which wanting the Pan to put it in, ſhe went to throw away what was before in it. Upon tilting the Pan, ſhe perceived a white Powder at the Bottom, which ſhe knew could not be Oat-meal. She ſhewed it her Fellow-Servant, when feeling it they found it gritty. They then to plainly perceived what it was had made their poor old Maſter ſo ill. What was to be done? Suſan immediately carried the Pan, with the Gruel and Powder in it, to Mrs. Mounteney, a Neighbour and Friend of the deceaſed. Mrs. Mounteney kept it till it was delivered to the Apothecary, the Apothecary delivered it to the Phyſician, and he will tell you, that upon trying it, he found it to be white Arſenic. Mr. Blandy continued from Day to Day to grow worſe. At laſt, upon the Saturday Morning, Suſan Gunnell, an old honeſt Maid-Servant, uneaſy to ſee how her poor Maſter had been treated, went to his Bed-ſide, and, in the moſt prudent and gentleſt Manner, broke to him what had been the Cauſe of his Illneſs, and the ſtrong Ground there was to ſuſpect that his Daughter was the Occaſion of it. The Father, with a Fondneſs greater than ever a Father felt before, cried out, Poor Love-ſick Girl! What will not a Woman do for the Man ſhe loves? But who do you think gave her the Powder? She anſwered, She could not tell, unleſs it was ſent by Mr. Cranſtoun. I believe ſo too, ſays the Maſter, for I remember he has talked learnedly of Poiſons. I always thought there was Miſchief in theſe curſed Scotch Pebbles.

Soon afterwards he got up and came to Breakfaſt in his Parlour, where his Daughter and Mr. Littleton, his Clerk, then were. A Diſh of Tea, in the uſual Manner, was ready poured out for him. He juſt taſted it, and ſaid, This Tea has a bad Taſte; looked at the Cup, then looked hard at his Daughter. She was, for the firſt Time, ſhocked, burſt into Tears, and ran out of the Room. The poor Father, more ſhocked than the Daughter, poured the Tea into the Cat's Baſon, and went to the Window to recover himſelf. She ſoon came again into the Room. Mr. Littleton ſaid, Madam, I fear your Father is very ill, for he has flung away his Tea. Upon this News ſhe trembled, and the Tears again ſtood in her Eyes. She again withdrew. Soon afterwards the Father came into the Kitchen, and addreſſing himſelf to her, ſaid, Molly! I had like to have been poiſoned twenty Years ago, and now I find I ſhall die by Poiſon at laſt. This was Warning ſufficient. She immediately went up Stairs, brought down Mr. Cranſtoun's Letters, together with the Remainder of the Poiſon, and threw them (as ſhe thought unobſerved) into the Fire. Thinking ſhe had now cleared herſelf from the ſuſpicious Appearances of Poiſon, her Spirits mend, ſhe thanked God, that ſhe was much better, and ſaid, her Mind was more at Eaſe than it had been. Alas! how often does that, which we fondly imagine will ſave us, become our Deſtruction? So it was in the preſent Inſtance. For providentially, though the Letters were deſtroyed, the Paper with the Poiſon in it was not burnt. One of the Maids having immediately flung ſome freſh Coals upon the Fire, Miſs Blandy went well ſatisfied out of the Room. Upon her going out, Suſan Gunnell ſaid to her Fellow-Servant, I ſaw Miſs Blandy throw ſome Papers in the Fire, let us ſee whether we can diſcover what they were. They removed the Coals, and found a Paper with white Powder in it, wrote upon, in Mr. Cranſtoun's Hand, "Powder to clean the Pebbles." This Powder they preſerved, and the Doctor will tell you, that it was white Arſenic, the ſame which had been found in the Pan of Gruel.

Having now (as ſhe imagined) concealed her own being concerned, you will find her the next Day endeavouring to prevent her Lover from being diſcovered. Mr. Blandy, of Kingſton, having come the Night before to ſee her Father, on Sunday Morning ſhe ſent Mr. Littleton with him to Church; while they were there, ſhe ſat down and wrote this Letter to her beloved Cranſtoun:

Dear Willy,

My Father is ſo bad, that I have only Time to tell you, that if you do not hear from me ſoon again, don't be frightened. I am better myſelf. Leſt any Accident ſhould happen to your Letters, take care what you write. My ſincere Compliments. I am ever yours.

My Father is ſo bad.——Who had made him ſo? Yet does ſhe ſay ſhe was ſorry for it? No. She knew her Father was then dying by that Powder that he had ſent her, yet could acquaint him ſhe was herſelf better. Under thoſe Circumſtances could caution him to take care what he wrote, leſt his Letters ſhould be diſcovered. What can ſpeak more ſtrongly their mutual Guilt? This Letter ſhe ſealed with no leſs than five Wafers. When Mr. Littleton came from Church, ſhe privately gave it to him, deſiring it might be directed as uſual, and put into the Poſt. Mr. Littleton was at that Time too well appriſed of this black Tranſaction to obey her Commands. He opened the Letter. Took a Copy of it. Upon further Recollection, carried the Original to the Father, who bid him open and read it. He did ſo. What do you think, Gentlemen! was all the poor old Man ſaid upon this Diſcovery?

He only again dropped theſe Words, Poor Love-ſick Girl! What will not a Woman do for the Man ſhe loves?

Upon the Monday Morning, after having been kept for two Days without ſeeing her Father, by the Order of the Phyſicians, her Conſcience, or rather Fear, began to trouble her; ſhe told the Maid ſhe ſhould go diſtracted if ſhe did not ſee her Father, and ſent a Meſſage to beg to ſee him. Accordingly ſhe was admitted. The Converſation between them was this: "Papa, how do you do?" My Dear, I am very ill. She immediately fell upon her Knees, and ſaid, "Dear Sir, baniſh me where "you will; do with me what you pleaſe, ſo you do but pardon and for-"give me. And as to Mr. Cranſtoun, I never will ſee, write, or ſpeak to "him again." He anſwered; I do forgive you, but you ſhould, my Dear, have conſidered that I was your own Father. Upon this the Priſoner ſaid, "Sir, as to your Illneſs I am innocent." Suſan Gunnell, who was preſent, interrupted her at this Expreſſion, and told her, ſhe was aſtoniſhed to hear her ſay ſhe was innocent, when they had the Poiſon to produce againſt her, that ſhe had put into her Father's Water-gruel, and had preſerved the Paper ſhe had thrown into the Fire. The Father, whoſe Love and Tenderneſs for his Daughter exceeded Expreſſion, could not bear to hear her thus accuſed; therefore turning himſelf in his Bed, cried out, "Oh that Villain! that hath eat of the beſt, and drank of the beſt my Houſe could afford, to take away my Life, and ruin my Daughter! Upon hearing this, the Daughter ran to the other Side of the Bed to him; upon which he added, My Dear, you muſt hate that Man; you muſt hate the very Ground he treads on. Struck with this, the Priſoner ſaid, "Dear Sir, your Kind-"neſs towards me is worſe than Swords to my Heart. I muſt down upon "my Knees, and beg you not to curſe me." Hear the Father's Anſwer, a Father then dying by Poiſon given by her Hand: I curſe thee, my Dear! no, I bleſs you, and will pray to God to bleſs you, and to amend your Life; then added, So do, my Dear, go out of the Room, leſt you ſhould ſay any thing to accuſe yourſelf. Was ever ſuch Tenderneſs from a Parent to a Child! She was prudent enough to follow his Advice, and went out of the Room without ſpeaking. His Kindneſs was Swords to her Heart, for near half an Hour. Going down Stairs ſhe met Betty Binfield, and whilſt ſhe was thus affected, owned to her, ſhe had put ſome Powder into her Father's Gruel, and that Suſan and ſhe for their Honeſty to their Maſter deſerved half her Fortune.

Gentlemen, not to tire you with the Particulars of every Day; upon Wednesday, in the Afternoon, the Father died. Upon his Death, the Priſoner finding herſelf diſcovered, endeavoured to perſuade the Man-Servant to go off with her; but he was too honeſt to be tempted by a Reward to aſſiſt her in going off, though ſhe told him it would be 500*l.* in his Way. That Night ſhe refuſed to go to Bed. Not out of Grief for her Father's Death; for you will be told by the Maid who ſat up with her, that ſhe never, during the whole Night, ſhewed the leaſt Sorrow, Compaſſion, or Remorſe upon his Account. But in the Middle of the Night ſhe propoſed to get a Poſt-Chaiſe in order to go to London, and offered the Maid twenty-five Guineas to go with her. A Poſt-Chaiſe! and go to London! God forbid, Madam! I ſhould do ſuch a Thing. The Priſoner finding the Maid not proper for her Purpoſe, immediately put a Smile upon her Face, "I was only joking." Only joking! Good God! would ſhe now have it thought ſhe was only joking?

Her Father juſt dead by Poiſon: She ſuſpected of having poiſoned him; accuſed of being a Parricide; and would ſhe have it thought ſhe was capable of joking?

When I ſee the Aſſiſtance ſhe now has, (and I am glad to ſee ſhe has the Aſſiſtance of three as able Gentlemen as any in the Profeſſion) I am ſure ſhe will not be now adviſed to ſay ſhe was then joking. But it will appear very plainly to you, Gentlemen, that ſhe was not joking; for the next Morning ſhe dreſſed herſelf in a proper Habit for a Journey, and, while the People put to take Care of her were abſent, ſtole out of the Houſe, and went over Henley-Bridge. But the Mob, who had heard of what ſhe had done, followed her ſo cloſe, that ſhe was forced to take Shelter in a little Alehouſe, the Angel. Mr. Fiſher, a Gentleman, who was afterwards one of the Jury upon the Coroner's Inquiſition, came there, and prevailed with her (or in other Words forced her) to return home. Upon her Return, the Inqueſt ſitting, ſhe ſends for Mr. Fiſher into another Room, and ſaid, Dear Mr. Fiſher! what do you think they will do with me? Will they ſend me to Oxford Gaol? Madam! ſaid he, I am afraid it will go hard with you. But if you have any of Mr. Cranſtoun's Letters, and produce them, they may be of ſome Service to you. Upon hearing this, ſhe cried out, Dear Mr. Fiſher! What have I done? I had Letters that would have hanged that Villain, but I have burnt them. My Honour to that Villain has brought me to my Deſtruction. And ſhe ſpoke the Truth.

This, Gentlemen, is in Subſtance the Hiſtory of this black Affair. But, my Lords! though this is the Hiſtory in Order of Time, yet it is not the Order in which we ſhall lay the Evidence before your Lordſhips and the Jury. It will be proper for us to begin by eſtabliſhing the Fact, that Mr. Francis Blandy did die of Poiſon. When the Phyſicians have proved that, we will then proceed to ſhew, that he died of the Poiſon put into the Water-gruel on the 5th of Auguſt. After this we will call Witneſſes, who from a Number of Circumſtances, as well as from her own Confeſſion, will prove ſhe put it into her Father's Water-gruel, knowing it was for her Father, and knowing it to be Poiſon.

Having done this, we will conclude with a Piece of Evidence which I forgot to mention before, and that is the Converſation between her and Mr. Lane at the Angel. Mr. Lane and his Wife happening to be walking at that Time, finding a Mob about the Door, ſtepped into the Alehouſe, to ſee the Priſoner. The Moment ſhe ſaw a Gentleman, though it was one ſhe did not know, ſhe accoſted him, "Sir! you appear to be a Gen-"tleman; for Heaven's Sake, what will become of me?" Madam! ſaid he, you will be ſent to Oxford Goal, you will there be tried for your Life; if you are innocent, you will be acquitted; if you are guilty, you will ſuffer Death.

The Priſoner, upon hearing this, ſtamped with her Foot, and ſaid, Oh! that damn'd Villain! Then pauſing, But why do I blame him? I am moſt to blame myſelf, for I gave it, and I knew the Conſequence. If ſhe knew the Conſequence, I am ſure there are none of you, Gentlemen, but who will think ſhe deſerves to ſuffer the Conſequence.

And let me here obſerve, how evidently the Hand of Providence has interpoſed to bring her to this Day's Trial, that ſhe may ſuffer the Conſequence. For what, but the Hand of Providence, could have preſerved the Paper thrown by her into the Fire, and have ſnatched it unburnt from the devouring Flame?——Good God! how wonderful are all thy Ways! and how miraculouſly haſt thou preſerved this Paper, to be this Day produced in Evidence againſt the Priſoner, in order that ſhe may ſuffer the Puniſhment due to her Crime; and be a dreadful Example to all others who may be tempted in like Manner to offend thy Divine Majesty!

Let me add, that next to Providence, the Public are obliged to the two Noble Lords, whose indefatigable Diligence in inquiring into this hidden Work of Darkness, has enabled us to lay before you, upon this Occasion, the clearest and strongest Proof that such a dark Transaction will admit of. For Poisoning is done in secret and alone; it is not like other Murders, neither can it be proved with equal Perspicuity. However, the Evidence we have in this Case is as clear and direct as possible; and if it comes up to what I have opened to you, I make no doubt but you will do that Justice to your Country, which the Oath you have taken requires of you.

Mr. Serjeant Hayward.

May it please your Lordships, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I likewise am appointed to assist the Crown on this Occasion; but his Majesty's learned Counsel having laid before you so faithful a Narrative of this dismal Transaction, it seems almost unnecessary for me to take up any more of your Time, in repeating any Thing that has been before said; and indeed my own Inclinations would lead me to cast a Veil over the guilty Scene: A Scene, so black, and so horrid, that if my Duty did not call me to it, I could rather wish it might be for ever concealed from human Eyes. But as we are now making Inquisition for Blood, it is absolutely necessary for me to make some Observations upon that Chain of Circumstances, that attended this bloody Contrivance and detested Murder.

Experience has taught us, that in many Cases a single Fact may be supported by false Testimony; but where it is attended with a Train of Circumstances that cannot be invented (had they never happened), such a Fact will always be made out to the Satisfaction of a Jury, by the concurring Assistance of circumstantial Evidence. Because Circumstances that tally one with another are above human Contrivance. And especially, such as naturally arise in their Order, from the first Contrivance of a Scheme to the fatal Execution of it.

Having suggested thus much, I shall now proceed to lay before you those Sort of Circumstances that seem to me to arise through this whole Affair, and leave it to your Judgment, whether they do not amount to too convincing a Proof that the Prisoner at the Bar has knowingly been the Cause of her own Father's Death; for upon the Prisoner's Knowledge of what she did, will depend her Fate.

Of all kinds of Murders, that by Poison is the most dreadful, as it takes a Man unguarded, and gives him no Opportunity to defend himself; much more so when administered by the Hand of a Child, whom one could least suspect, and from whom one might naturally look for Assistance and Comfort. Could a Father entertain any Suspicion of a Child, to whom, under God, he had been the second Cause of Life? No sure, and yet this is the Case now before you. The unfortunate Deceased has received his Death by Poison, and that undoubtedly administered by the Hand of his own,—his only,—his beloved Child. Spare me, Gentlemen, to pay the Tribute of one Tear to the Memory of a Person with whom I was most intimately acquainted, and to the Excellency of whose Disposition and Integrity of Heart, I can safely bear faithful Testimony. Oh! were he now living, and to see his Daughter there, the severest Tortures that Poison could give, would be nothing to what he would suffer from such a Sight.

And since the bittерest Agonies must at this Time surround the Heart of the Prisoner, if she does but think of what a Father she has lost; I can readily join with her in her severest Afflictions upon this Occasion, and shall never blame myself, for weeping with those that weep; nor can I make the least Question, but my learned Assistants in this Prosecution will with me rejoice likewise, if the Prisoner, by making her Innocence appear, shall upon the Conclusion of this Inquiry find Occasion to rejoice. But, alas! too strong I fear will the Charge against her be proved, too convincing are the Circumstances that attend it: What those are, and what may be collected from them, is my next Business to offer to your Consideration.

But before I enter thereupon, I must beg leave to address myself to this numerous and crowded Assembly, whom Curiosity hath led hither to hear the Event of this solemn Trial; hoping that whatever may be the Consequence of it to the Prisoner, her present melancholy Situation may turn to our Advantage, and reduce our Minds to Seriousness and Attention. Solemn indeed I may well call it, as being a Tribunal truly awful: For this Method of Trial, before two of his Majesty's learned Judges, has scarce ever been known upon a Circuit; Judges of undoubted Virtue, Integrity, and Learning, who undergo this laborious and important Work, not only for the sake of bringing Guilt to Punishment, but to guard and protect Innocence whenever it appears.

But You, young Gentlemen of this University, I particularly beg your Attention, earnestly beseeching you to guard against the first Approaches of, and Temptations to Vice. See here the dreadful Consequence of Disobedience to a Parent. Who could have thought that Miss Blandy, a young Lady virtuously brought up, distinguished for her good Behaviour and prudent Conduct in Life, till her unfortunate Acquaintance with the wicked Cranstoun, should ever be brought to a Trial for her Life; and that for the most desperate and bloodiest kind of Murder, committed by her own Hand, upon her own Father? Had she listened to his Admonitions, this Calamity never had befallen her. Learn hence the dreadful Consequences of Disobedience to Parents: and know also, that the same Mischief, in all Probability, may happen to such who obstinately disregard, neglect, and despise the Advice of those Persons who have the Charge and Care of their Education; of Governors likewise, and of Magistrates, and of all others who are put in Authority over them. Let this fix in your Mind the excellent Maxim of the good Physician, Venienti occurrite Morbo. Let us defend ourselves against the first Temptations to Sin, and guard our Innocency as we would our Lives; for if once we yield, though but a little, in whose Power is it to say, Hitherto will I go, and no further?

And now, Gentlemen of the Jury, those Observations I had before mentioned, I shall attempt to lay before you, in order to assist you in making a true Judgment of the Matter committed to your Charge. The Author and Contriver of this bloody Affair is not at present here. I sincerely wish that he was; because we should be able to convince him, that such Crimes as his cannot escape unpunished. The unhappy Prisoner, ruin'd and undone, by the treacherous Flattery and pernicious Advice of that abandon'd, insidious and execrable Wretch, who had found means of introducing himself into her Father's Family, and, whilst there, by false Pretences of Love, gain'd the Affection of his only Daughter and Child. Love! did I call it? It deserves not the Name; if it was Love of any thing, it was of the Ten thousand Pounds, supposed to be the young Lady's Fortune. Could a Man that had a Wife of his own, and Children, be really in Love with another Woman? Such a Thing cannot be supposed, and therefore I beg leave to call it Avarice and Lust only; but be it what it will, the Life of the Father becomes an Obstacle to the criminal Proceedings that were intended and designed to be carried on between them, and therefore he must be removed, before that imaginary State of Felicity could be obtain'd, according to their projected Scheme. Mark how the Destruction of this poor Man is usher'd into the World: Apparitions, Noises, Voices, Musick, reported to be heard from time to time in the deceased's House. Even his Days are number'd out, and his own Child limits the Space of his Life but till the following Month of October. What could be the Meaning of this, but to prepare the World for a Death that was predetermin'd? Who could limit the Days of a Man's Life, but a Person that knew what was intended to be done towards the shortening of it?

In order to bring this about, Cranstoun sends Presents of Pebbles, as also a Powder to clean them; and this Powder, Gentlemen, you will find is the dreadful Poison that accomplished this abominable Scheme.

From time to time Mention is made of the Pebbles; but not a Syllable of the Powder. Why not of the one as well as of the other, if there had not been a Mystery concealed in it? Preparation is made for an Experiment of its Power before Cranstoun's Departure; he mixes the deadly Draught; but the Prisoner's Conscience, not yet harden'd, forced her to turn away her Eyes, and she durst not venture to behold the Cup prepared, that was to send the Father into another World.

Soon after this Cranstoun quits the Family, (having, no question, left Instructions how to proceed farther in compleating the Scheme he had laid for taking off the old Man) and this you'll find, by Letters under his own Hand, that the Powder, whatever it was, must not be mix'd in too thin a Liquid, because it might be discover'd; and therefore Water-gruel is thought fitter for the Purpose. By the frequent Mixtures that were made upon these Occasions, the unfortunate Servant and Chairwoman accidentally drank Part of the deadly Composition. When Complaint is made of their Sickness, how does the Prisoner behave? Does she not administer to them with as much Art and Skill as a Physician could? Does she not prescribe proper Liquids and Draughts to absorb and take off the Edge of the corroding Poison? If she knew not what it was, how could she administer so successfully to prevent the fatal Consequences of it both in the Maid and the Chairwoman? During this Transaction, the unhappy Father finds himself afflicted with torturing Pains, immediately after receiving the Composition from his Daughter. Is there any Care taken of him? Any Physician sent for to attend him? Any healing Draughts prepar'd to quiet the Racks and Tortures that he inwardly felt? None at all, that I can find. He is left to take care of himself, and undergo those Miseries that his own Child had brought upon him, and yet had not the Heart to give him any Assistance. What could this proceed from, but Guilt only? Would not an innocent Child have made the strictest Inquiry how her own Father came to be out of order? Would she not have sought the World over for Advice and Assistance? But instead of that, you hear the bittерest Expressions proceed from her, Expressions sufficient to shock human Nature. They have been all mentioned already by my learned Leader, and I will not again repeat them.

Observe, as Things come nearer the Crisis, whether her Behaviour towards her Father carries any better Appearance. When it began to be suspected that Mr. Blandy's Disorder was owing to Poison, and strongly, from Circumstances, that the Prisoner was privy to it; the poor Man, now too far gone, being inform'd that there was great Reason to suspect his own Child, what Expressions does he make use of? No harsher, than in the gentlest Method saying, Poor Love-sick Girl! I always thought there was Mischief in those Scotch Pebbles. O! that damned Villain Cranstoun, that has eat of the best and drank of the best my House afforded, to serve me thus, and ruin my poor Love-sick Girl! An incontestable Proof that he knew the Cause of his Disorder, and the Authors of it.

The Report spread about the House of the Father's Suspicions, soon alarm'd the Prisoner: What does she do upon this Occasion? Can any other Interpretation be put upon her Actions, than that they proceeded from a manifest Intention to conceal her Guilt? Why is the Paper of Powder thrown into the Fire? from whence, as my learned Leader most elegantly observes, it is miraculously preserved. What Occasion for Concealment, had she not been conscious of something that was wrong? If she had not known what had been in the Paper, for what Purpose was it committed to the Flames? And what really was contained in that Paper, will appear to you to be deadly Poison.

The long wished-for and fatal Hour at last arrives; and but a little before, a Letter is sent by the Prisoner to Cranstoun, that her Father was extremely ill; begging him to be cautious what he writes, lest any Accident should happen to his Letters. Do the Circumstances, the Language, or the Time of writing this Letter, leave any room to suppose the Prisoner could be innocent? They seem to me rather to be the fullest Proof of her knowing what she had done. What Accidents could befal Cranstoun's Letters? Why is he to take care what he writes, if nothing but the Effects of Innocency were to be contained in those Letters? In a very short Time after this, the Strength of the Poison carries the Father out of the World. Do but hear how the Prisoner behaved thereupon. The Father's Corpse was not yet cold, when she makes Application to the Footman, with a Temptation of large Sums of Money, as a Reward, if he would go off with her; but the Fidelity and Virtue of the Servant was Proof against the Temptation even of Four or Five hundred Pounds. The next Proposal is to the Maid, to procure a Chaise, with the Offer of a Reward for ſo doing, and to go along with her to London; but this Project likewiſe failed, through the Honeſty of the Servant. The next Morning, in the Abſence of Edward Herne, (the Guard that was ſet over her) ſhe makes her Eſcape from her Father's Houſe, and dreſſed as if going to take a Journey, walked down the Street; but the Mob was ſoon aware of her, and forced her to take Shelter in a Public-Houſe over the Bridge. Do theſe Proceedings look as if they were the Effects of Innocence? Far otherwiſe, I am afraid. Would an innocent Perſon have quitted a deceaſed Parent's Houſe, at a Time when ſhe was moſt wanting to make proper and decent Preparations for his Funeral? Would an innocent Perſon, at ſuch a Time as this, offer Money for Aſſiſtance to make an Eſcape? I think not: And I wiſh ſhe may find a ſatisfactory Cauſe to aſſign for ſuch amazing Behaviour.

Let us put Innocence and Guilt in the Scale together, and obſerve to which Side the Priſoner's Actions are moſt applicable. Innocence, Celeſtial Virgin, always has her Guard about her; ſhe dares look the Frowns, the Reſentments, and the Perſecutions of the World in the Face; is able to ſtand the Teſt of the ſtricteſt Inquiry; and the more we behold her, ſtill the more ſhall we be in Love with her Charms. But it is not ſo with Guilt: The baneful Fiend makes uſe of unjuſtifiable Means to conceal her wicked Deſigns, and prevent Diſcovery. Artifice and Cunning are her Supporters, Bribery and Corruption the Defenders of her Cauſe; ſhe flies before the Face of Law and Juſtice, and ſhuns the Probation of a candid and impartial Inquiry. Upon the whole Matter, you, Gentlemen, are to judge; and judge as favourably as you can for the Priſoner.

If this were not ſufficient to convince us of the Priſoner's Guilt, I think the laſt Tranſaction of all will leave not the leaſt Room to doubt. When in Diſcourſe with Perſons that came to her at the Houſe where ſhe had taken Shelter, what but a Self-conviction could have drawn ſuch Expreſſions from her? In her Diſcourſe with Mr. Fiſher about Cranſtoun, you will find ſhe declared ſhe had Letters and Papers that would have hanged that Villain: And again, ſays, My Honour, Mr. Fiſher, to that Villain has brought me to Deſtruction: And again, in her Inquiry of Mr. Lane, What they would do with her, ſhe burſts out into this bitter Exclamation, O! that damned Villain! Then after a ſhort Pauſe, But why ſhould I blame him? I am more to blame than he is, for I gave it him. How could ſhe be to blame for giving it, if ſhe knew not what it was? And, as it is ſaid, went yet farther, and declared, that ſhe knew the Conſequence. If ſhe did know it, ſhe muſt expect to ſuffer the Conſequence of it too.

Thus, Gentlemen, have I endeavoured to lay before you ſome Obſervations upon this Tranſaction, and I hope you will think them not unworthy of your Conſideration. I truſt I have ſaid nothing that relates to the Fact, that is not in my Inſtructions; ſhould it be otherwiſe, I aſſure you it was not with Deſign. And whatever is not ſupported by legal Evidence, you will totally diſregard.

If any other Interpretation than what I have offered, can be put upon theſe ſeveral Tranſactions, and the Circumſtances attending them, I doubt not but you will always incline on the merciful Side, where there is Room for ſo doing.

We ſhall now proceed to call our Evidence.

The other Gentlemen, of Counſel for the King, were Mr. Hayes, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Ambler.

The Counſel for the Priſoner, were Mr. Ford, Mr. Morton, and Mr. Aſton.

Dr. Anthony Addington, and Dr. William Lewis, ſworn.

Counſel. Did you, Dr. Addington, attend Mr. Blandy in his laſt Illneſs?

Dr. Addington. Yes, Sir.

Counſel. When was you called to him the firſt Time?

Dr. Addington. On Saturday Evening, Auguſt the 10th.

Counſel. In what Condition did you find him?

Dr. Addington. He was in Bed; and told me, that, after drinking ſome Gruel on Monday Night, Auguſt the 5th, he had perceived an extraordinary Grittineſs in his Mouth, attended with a very painful Burning and Pricking in his Tongue, Throat, Stomach, and Bowels, and with Sickneſs and Gripings; which Symptoms had been relieved by Fits of Vomiting and Purging.

Counſel. Were thoſe Fits owing to any Phyſic he had taken, or to the Gruel?

Dr. Addington. Not to any Phyſic; they came on very ſoon after drinking the Gruel.

Counſel. Had he taken no Phyſic that Day?——Dr. Addington. No.

Counſel. Did he make any farther Complaints?

Dr. Addington. He ſaid, that, after drinking more Gruel on Tueſday Night, Auguſt the 6th, he had felt the Grittineſs in his Mouth again; and that the Burning and Pricking in his Tongue, Throat, Stomach, and Bowels, had return'd with double Violence, and had been aggravated by a prodigious Swelling of his Belly, and exquiſite Pains and Prickings in every external as well as internal Part of his Body; which Prickings he compared to an infinite Number of Needles darting into him all at once.

Counſel. How ſoon after drinking the Gruel?

Dr. Addington. Almoſt immediately. He told me likewiſe, that, at the ſame time, he had had cold Sweats, Hiccup, extreme Reſtleſſneſs and Anxiety; but that then, viz. on Saturday Night, Auguſt the 10th, having had a great many Stools, and ſome bloody ones, he was pretty eaſy every where, except in his Mouth, Lips, Noſe, Eyes, and Fundament; and except ſome tranſient Gripings in his Bowels. I aſked him, to what he imputed thoſe uneaſy Senſations in his Mouth, Lips, Noſe, and Eyes? He ſaid, to the Fumes of ſomething that he had taken in his Gruel, on Monday Night, Auguſt the 5th, and Tueſday Night, Auguſt the 6th.

On Inſpection, I found his Tongue ſwelled, and his Throat ſlightly inflamed, and excoriated. His Lips, eſpecially the upper one, were dry and rough, and had angry Pimples on them. The Inſide of his Noſtrils was in the ſame Condition. His Eyes were a little Blood-ſhot. Beſides theſe Appearances, I obſerved that he had a low, trembling, intermitting Pulſe; a difficult, unequal Reſpiration; a yellowiſh Complexion; a Difficulty in the Utterance of his Words, and an Inability of ſwallowing even a Tea-ſpoonful of the thinneſt Liquor at a Time.

As I ſuſpected that theſe Appearances and Symptoms were the Effect of Poiſon, I aſked Miſs Blandy, whether Mr. Blandy had lately given Offence to either of his Servants, or Clients, or any other Perſon? She anſwered, That he was at Peace with all the World, and that all the World was at Peace with him. I then aſked her, whether he had ever been ſubject to Complaints of this Kind before? She ſaid, that he had often been ſubject to the Colic and Heart-burn; and that ſhe ſuppoſed this was only a Fit of that Sort, and would ſoon go off, as uſual. I told Mr. Blandy, that I aſked theſe Queſtions, becauſe I ſuſpected that by ſome Means or other he had taken Poiſon. He replied, It might be ſo, or in Words to that Effect: But Miſs Blandy ſaid, It was impoſſible.

On Sunday Morning, Auguſt the 10th, he ſeemed much relieved; his Pulſe, Breath, Complexion, and Power of ſwallowing, were greatly mended. He had had ſeveral Stools in the Night, without any Blood in them. The Complaints which he had made of his Mouth, Lips, Noſe, and Eyes, were leſſened; but he ſaid the Pain in his Fundament continued, and that he ſtill felt ſome Pinchings in his Bowels. On viewing his Fundament, I found it almoſt ſurrounded with gleety Excoriations and Ulcers.

About Eight o'Clock this Morning I took my Leave of him; but before I quitted his Room, Miſs Blandy deſired I would viſit him again the next Day.

When I got down Stairs, one of the Maids put a Paper into my Hands, which ſhe ſaid Miſs Blandy had thrown into the Kitchen Fire. Several Holes were burnt in the Paper, but not a Letter of the Superſcription was effaced. The Superſcription was, The Powder to clean the Pebbles with.

Counſel. What is the Maid's Name that gave you that Paper?

Dr. Addington. I cannot recollect which of the Maids it was that gave it me. I opened the Paper very carefully, and found in it a whitiſh Powder, like white Arſenic in Taſte, but ſlightly diſcoloured by a little burnt Paper mixed with it. I cannot ſwear this Powder was Arſenic, or any other Poiſon, becauſe the Quantity was too ſmall to make any Experiment with, that could be depended on.

Counſel. What do you really ſuſpect it to be?

Dr Addington. I really ſuſpect it to be white Arſenic.

Counſel. Pleaſe to proceed, Sir.

Dr. Addington. As ſoon as the Maid had left me, Mr. Norton the Apothecary produced a Powder, that, he ſaid, had been found at the Bottom of that Meſs of Gruel, which, as was ſuppoſed, had poiſoned Mr. Blandy: He gave me ſome of this Powder, and I examined it at my Leiſure, and believe it to be white Arſenic.

On Monday Morning, Auguſt the 12th, I found Mr. Blandy much worſe than I had left him the Day before. His Complexion was very bad; his Pulſe intermitted; and he breathed and ſwallowed with great Difficulty. He complained more of his Fundament than he had done before. His Bowels were ſtill in Pain.

I now deſired that another Phyſician might be called in, as I apprehended Mr. Blandy to be in the utmoſt Danger, and that this Affair might come before a Court of Judicature. Dr. Lewis was then ſent for from Oxford. I ſtaid with Mr. Blandy all this Day. I aſked him more than once, whether he really thought he had taken Poiſon? He anſwered each Time, that he believed he had. I aſked him, whether he thought he had taken Poiſon often? He anſwered in the Affirmative. His Reaſons for thinking ſo, were, becauſe ſome of his Teeth had decayed much faſter than was natural; and becauſe he had frequently, for ſome Months paſt, eſpecially after his Daughter had received a Preſent of Scotch Pebbles from Mr. Cranſtoun, been affected with very violent and unaccountable Prickings and Heats in his Tongue and Throat, and with almoſt intolerable Burnings, and Pains in his Stomach and Bowels, which uſed to go off in Vomitings and Purgings. I aſked him, whom he ſuſpected to be the Giver of the Poiſon? The Tears ſtood in his Eyes; yet he forced a Smile, and ſaid, ——A poor Love-ſick Girl——I forgive her——I always thought there was Miſchief in thoſe curſed Scotch Pebbles.

Dr. Lewis came about Eight o'Clock in the Evening. Before he came, Mr. Blandy's Complexion, Pulſe, Breath, and Faculty of ſwallowing, were got much better again; but he complained more of Pain in his Fundament.

This Evening Miſs Blandy was confined to her Chamber; a Guard was placed over her; and her Keys, Papers, and all Inſtruments wherewith ſhe could hurt either herſelf, or any other Perſon, were taken from her.

Counſel. How came that?

Dr. Addington. I propoſed it to Dr. Lewis, and we both thought it proper; becauſe we had great Reaſon to ſuſpect her as the Author of Mr. Blandy's Illneſs; and becauſe this Suſpicion was not yet publickly known, and, therefore, no Magiſtrate had taken any Notice of her.

Counſel. Pleaſe to go on, Dr. Addington, with your Account of Mr. Blandy.

Dr. Addington. On Tueſday Morning, Auguſt the 13th, we found him worſe again. His Countenance, Pulſe, Breath, and Power of ſwallowing, were extremely bad. He was exceſſively weak. His Hands trembled. Both they and his Face were cold and clammy. The Pain was intirely gone from his Bowels, but not from his Fundament. He was now and then a little delirious. He had frequently a ſhort Cough, and a very extraordinary Elevation of his Cheſt, in fetching his Breath; on which Occaſions an ulcerous Matter generally iſſued from his Fundament. Yet, in his ſenſible Intervals, he was chearful and jocoſe: He ſaid, he was like a Perſon bit by a mad Dog; for that he ſhould be glad to drink, but could not ſwallow.

About Noon this Day his Speech faultered more and more. He was ſometimes very reſtleſs, at others very ſleepy. His Face was quite ghaſtly. This Night was a terrible one.

On Wedneſday Morning, Auguſt the 14th, he recovered his Senſes for an Hour or more. He told me, he would make his Will in two or three Days; but he ſoon grew delirious again; and, ſinking every Moment, died about Two o'Clock in the Afternoon.

Counſel. Upon the whole, did you then think, from the Symptoms you have deſcribed, and the Obſervations you made, that Mr. Blandy died by Poiſon?

Dr. Addington. Indeed I did.

Counſel. And is it your preſent Opinion?

Dr. Addington. It is; and I have never had the leaſt Occaſion to alter it. His Caſe was ſo particular, that he had not a Symptom of any Conſequence, but what other Perſons have had, who have taken white Arſenick; and, after Death, had no * Appearance in his Body, but what other Perſons have had, who have been deſtroyed by white Arſenic.

Counſel. When was his Body opened?

Dr. Addington. On Thurſday in the Afternoon, Auguſt the 15th.

Counſel. What appeared on opening it?

Dr. Addington. I committed the Appearances to Writing, and ſhould be glad to read them, if the Court will give me Leave.

Then the Doctor, on Leave given by the Court, read as follows:

Mr. Blandy's Back, and the hinder Part of his Arms, Thighs, and Legs, were livid. That Fat which lay on the Muſcles of his Belly, was of a looſe Texture, inclining to a State of Fluidity. The Muſcles of his Belly were very pale and flaccid. The Cawl was yellower than is natural; and on the Side next the Stomach and Inteſtines looked browniſh. The Heart was variegated with purple Spots. There was no Water in the Pericardium. The Lungs reſembled Bladders half filled with Air, and blotted in ſome Places with pale, but in moſt with black Ink. The Liver and Spleen were much diſcoloured; the former looked as if it had been boiled, but that Part of it which covered the Stomach, was particularly dark. A Stone was found in the Gall-Bladder. The Bile was very fluid, and of a dirty yellow Colour, inclining to red. The Kidneys were all over ſtained with livid Spots. The Stomach and Bowels were inflated, and appeared, before any Inciſion was made into them, as if they had been pinched, and extravaſated Blood had ſtagnated between their Membranes. They contained nothing, as far as we examined, but a ſlimy bloody Froth. Their Coats were remarkably ſmooth, thin, and flabby. The Wrinkles of the Stomach were totally obliterated. The internal Coat of the Stomach and Duodenum, eſpecially about the Orifices of the former, was prodigiouſly inflamed and excoriated. The Redneſs of the White of the Eye in a violent Inflammation of that Part, or rather, the White of the Eye juſt bruſhed and bleeding with the Beards of Barley, may ſerve to give ſome Idea how this Coat had been wounded. There was no Schirrhus in any Gland of the Abdomen; no Adheſion of the Lungs to the Pleura; nor indeed the leaſt Trace of a natural Decay in any Part whatever.

Counſel to Dr. Lewis.

Counſel. Did you, Dr. Lewis, obſerve that Mr. Blandy had the Symptoms which Dr. Addington has mentioned?---Dr. Lewis. I did.

Counſel. Did you obſerve that there were the ſame Appearances on opening his Body, which Dr. Addington has deſcribed?

Dr. Lewis. I obſerved and remember them all, except the Spots on his Heart.

Counſel. Is it your real Opinion, that thoſe Symptoms and thoſe Appearances were owing to Poiſon?---Dr. Lewis. Yes.

Counſel. And that he died of Poiſon?---Dr. Lewis. Abſolutely.

Dr. Addington Croſs-examined.

Priſoner's Counſel. Did you firſt intimate to Mr. Blandy, or he to you, that he had been poiſoned?

Dr. Addington. He firſt intimated it to me.

Priſ. Counſel. Did you aſk him, whether he was certain that he had been poiſoned by the Gruel that he took on Monday Night, Auguſt the 5th, and on Tueſday Night, Auguſt the 6th?

Dr. Addington. I do not recollect that I did.

Priſ. Counſel. Are you ſure that he ſaid he was diſordered after drinking the Gruel on Monday Night, the 5th of Auguſt?

Dr. Addington. Yes.

Priſ. Counſel. Did you ever aſk him why he drank more Gruel on Tueſday Night, Auguſt the 6th?

Dr. Addington. I believe I did not.

Priſ. Counſel. When did you make Experiments on the Powder delivered to you by Mr. Norton?

Dr. Addington. I made ſome the next Day; but many more ſome time afterwards.

Priſ. Counſel. How long afterwards?

Dr. Addington. I cannot juſtly ſay; it might be a Month or more.

Priſ. Counſel. How often had you Powder given you?

Dr. Addington. Twice.

Priſ. Counſel. Did you make Experiments with both Parcels?

Dr. Addington. Yes: But I gave the greateſt Part of the firſt to Mr. King, an experienced Chemiſt in Reading; and deſired that he would examine it, which he did; and he told me, that it was white Arſenic. The ſecond Parcel was uſed in Trials made by myſelf.

Priſ. Counſel. Who had the ſecond Parcel in keeping till you tried it?

Dr. Addington. I had it, and kept it either in my Pocket, or under Lock and Key.

Priſ. Counſel. Did you never ſhew it to any body?

Dr. Addington. Yes, to ſeveral Perſons; but truſted nobody with it out of my Sight.

Priſ. Counſel. Why do you believe it to be white Arſenic?

Dr. Addington. For the following Reaſons: 1. This Powder has a milky Whiteneſs; ſo has white Arſenic. 2. This is gritty and almoſt inſipid; ſo is white Arſenic. 3. Part of it ſwims on the Surface of cold Water, like a pale ſulphureous Film; but the greateſt Part ſinks to the Bottom, and remains there undiſſolved; the ſame is true of white Arſenic. 4. This thrown on red-hot Iron, does not flame, but riſes entirely in thick white Fumes, which have the Stench of Garlick, and cover cold Iron, held juſt over them, with white Flowers; white Arſenic does the ſame. 5. I boiled ten Grains of this Powder in four Ounces of clean Water, and then, paſſing the Decoction through a Filtre, divided it into five equal Parts, which were put into as many Glaſſes: Into one Glaſs I poured a few Drops of Spirit of Sal Ammoniac; into another ſome of the Lixivium of Tartar; into the third ſome ſtrong Spirit of Vitriol; into the fourth ſome Spirit of Salt; and into the laſt ſome Syrup of Violets. The Spirit of Sal Ammoniac threw down a few Particles of pale Sediment. The Lixivium of Tartar gave a white Cloud, which hung a little above the Middle of the Glaſs. The Spirits of Vitriol and Salt made a conſiderable Precipitation of a lightiſh-coloured Subſtance; which, in the former, hardened into glittering Cryſtals, ſticking to the Sides and Bottom of the Glaſs. Syrup of Violets produced a beautiful pale green Tincture. Having waſhed the Sauce-pan, Funnel, and Glaſſes, uſed in the foregoing Experiments, very clean, and provided a freſh Filtre, I boiled ten Grains of white Arſenic, bought of Mr. Wilcock, Druggiſt in Reading, in four Ounces of clean Water; and filtering and dividing it into five equal Parts, proceeded with them juſt as I had done with the former Decoction. There was an exact Similitude between the Experiments made on the two Decoctions. They correſponded ſo nicely in each Trial, that I declare I never ſaw any two Things in Nature more alike, than the Decoction made with the Powder found in Mr. Blandy's Gruel, and that made with white Arſenic. From theſe Experiments, and others, which I am ready to produce, if deſired, I believe that Powder to be white Arſenic.

Priſ. Counſel. Did any Perſon make theſe Experiments with you?

Dr. Addington. No: But Mr. Wilcock, the Druggiſt, was preſent while I made them; and he weighed both the Powder and the white Arſenic.

Priſ. Counſel. When did Mr. Blandy firſt take Medicines by your Order?

Dr. Addington. As ſoon as he could ſwallow, on Saturday Night, Auguſt the 10th. Before that Time he was under the Care of Mr. Norton.

Benjamin Norton ſworn.

I live at Henley; I remember being ſent for to Mrs. Mounteney's in Henley, on Thurſday, Auguſt the 8th, in order to ſhew me the Powder. There was with her Suſan Gunnell, the Servant-maid. She brought in a Pan; I looked at it, and endeavoured to take it out, that I might give a better Account of it; for as it lay, it was not poſſible to ſee what it was: Then I laid it on white Paper, and delivered it to Mrs. Mounteney, to take Care of, till it dried; ſhe kept it till Sunday Morning, then I had it to ſhew to Dr. Addington; I ſaw the Doctor try it once at my Houſe, upon a red-hot Poker; upon which I did imagine it was of the Arſenic-kind.

Counſel. Did you attend the Deceaſed while he was ill?

Norton. I did; I went on the 6th of Auguſt; he told me he was ill as he imagined of a Fit of the Colic; he complained of a violent Pain in his Stomach, attended with great Reachings, and ſwelled, and a great Purging; I carried him Phyſic, which he took on the Wedneſday Morning; he was then better; on the Thurſday Morning, as I was going, I met the Maid; ſhe told me, he was not up; ſo I went about Twelve: he was then with a Client in the Study; he told me the Phyſic had done him a great deal of Service, and deſired more. I ſent him ſome to take on Friday Morning: I was not with him after Thurſday.

Counſel. Had you uſed to attend him?

Norton. I had for ſeveral Years. The laſt Illneſs he had before, was in July 1750. I uſed to attend him.

Counſel. Did you ever hear Miſs Blandy talk of Muſic?

Norton. I did. She ſaid, ſhe had heard it in the Houſe, and ſhe feared ſomething would happen in the Family. She did not ſay any Thing particular, becauſe I made very light of it.

Counſel. Did ſhe ſay any Thing of Apparitions?

Norton. She ſaid, Mr. Cranſtoun ſaw her Father's Apparition one Night.

Counſel. How long before his Death was it that ſhe talked about Muſic?

Norton. It might be about three or four Months before.

Counſel. Was the Powder you delivered to Dr. Addington, the ſelf-ſame Powder you received of Mrs. Mounteney?

Norton. It was the very ſame, it had not been out of my Cuſtody.

Counſel. Should you know it again?

Norton. I have ſome of the ſame now in my Pocket. (He produces a Paper ſealed up with the Earl of Macclesfield and Lord Cadogan's Seals upon it.) This is ſome of the ſame that I delivered to Dr. Addington.

Croſs-Examined.

Priſoner's Counſel. Who ſent for you to the Houſe?

Norton. I cannot tell that.

Priſ. Counſel. When you came, did you ſee Miſs Blandy?

Norton. I did. She and Mr. Blandy were both together.

Priſ. Counſel. What Converſation had you then?

Norton. I aſked Mr. Blandy, whether or no he had eat any Thing that he thought diſagreed with him? Miſs Blandy made anſwer, and ſaid, her Papa had had nothing that ſhe knew of, except ſome Peas, on the Saturday Night before.

Priſ. Counſel. Did you hear any thing of Water-gruel?

Norton. I knew nothing of that, till it was brought to me.

Priſ. Counſel. Had you any Suſpicion of Poiſon then?

Norton. I had not, nor Mr. Blandy had not mentioned any thing of being poiſoned by having taken Water-gruel.

Priſ. Counſel. What did Miſs Blandy ſay to you?

Norton. She deſired me to be careful of her Father in his Illneſs.

Priſ. Counſel. Did ſhe ſhew any Diſlike to his having Phyſic?

Norton. No, none at all; ſhe deſired, when I ſaw any Danger, I would let her know it, that ſhe might have the Advice of a Phyſician.

Priſ. Counſel. When was this?

Norton. This was on Saturday the 10th.

Priſ. Counſel. When he grew worſe, did ſhe adviſe a Phyſician might be called in?

Norton. Yes, ſhe did, after I ſaid he was worſe; ſhe then begged that Dr. Addington might be ſent for. Mr. Blandy was for deferring it till next Day; but when I came down, ſhe aſk'd, if I thought him in Danger? I ſaid, he is; then ſhe ſaid, Though he ſeems to be againſt it, I will ſend for a Doctor directly; and ſent away a Man unknown to him.

Priſ. Counſel. Was he for delaying?

Norton. He was till the next Morning.

Priſ. Counſel. How has ſhe behaved to him in any other Illneſs of her Father's?

Norton. I never ſaw but at ſuch Times ſhe has behaved with true Affection and Regard.

Priſ. Counſel. Had ſhe uſed to be much with him?

Norton. She uſed to be backwards and forwards with him in the Room.

* The Doctor intended to have excepted the Stone found in Mr. Blandy's Gall-Bladder.

Prif. Counfel. Did you give any Intimation to Miſs Blandy, after the Powder was tried?

Norton. I did not; but went up to acquaint her Uncle; he was ſo affected, he could not come down to apprize Mr. Blandy of it.

Prif. Counfel. When did ſhe firſt know that you knew of it?

Norton. I never knew ſhe knew of it till the Monday.

Prif. Counſel. How came you to ſuſpect That at the Bottom of the Pan to be Poiſon?

Norton. I found it very gritty, and had no Smell. When I went down, and ſaw the old Waſherwoman, that ſhe had taſted of the Water-gruel, and was affected with the ſame Symptoms as Mr. Blandy, I then ſuſpected he was poiſoned, and ſaid, I was afraid Mr. Blandy had had foul Play; but I did not tell either him or Miſs Blandy ſo, becauſe I found by the Maid, that Miſs was ſuſpected.

Priſ. Counſel. Who did you ſuſpect might do it?

Norton. I had Suſpicion it was Miſs Blandy.

King's Counſel. When was Dr. Addington ſent for?

Norton. On the Saturday Night.

Mrs. Mary Mounteney ſworn.

Suſan Gunnell brought a Pan to my Houſe on the 8th of Auguſt with Water-gruel in it, and Powder at the Bottom, and deſired me to look at it: I ſent for Mr. Norton; he took the Powder out on a Piece of white Paper, which I gave him: He delivered the ſame Powder to me, and I took care of it and locked it up.

Croſs-examined.

Priſoner's Counſel. Did you ever ſee any Behaviour of Miſs Blandy otherwiſe than that of an affectionate Daughter?

Mounteney. I never did. She was always dutiful to her Father, as far as I ſaw, when her Father was preſent.

Priſ. Counſel. To whom did you firſt mention that this Powder was put into the Paper?

Mounteney. To the beſt of my Remembrance, I never made Mention of it to any body, till Mr. Norton fetched it away, which was on the 11th of Auguſt, the Sunday Morning after, to be ſhewn to Dr. Addington.

Priſ. Counſel. Between the Time of its being brought to your Houſe, and the Time it was fetched away, was you ever at Mr. Blandy's Houſe?

Mounteney. No, I was not in that Time, but was there on Sunday in the Afternoon.

Priſ. Counſel. Had you not ſhewed it at any other Place during that Time?——Mounteney. I had not, Sir.

Priſ. Counſel. Did you on the Sunday, in the Afternoon, mention it to Mr. or Miſs Blandy?——Mounteney. No, not to either of them.

Suſannah Gunnell ſworn.

Gunnell. I carried the Water-gruel in a Pan to Mrs. Mounteney's Houſe.

Counſel. Whoſe Uſe was it made for?

Gunnell. It was made for Mr. Blandy's Uſe, on the Sunday Seven-night before his Death.

Counſel. Who made it?——Gun. I made it.

Counſel. Where did you put it after you had made it?

Gun. I put it into the common Pantry, where all the Family uſed to go.

Counſel. Did you obſerve any particular Perſon buſy about there afterwards?

Gunnell. No, Nobody; Miſs Blandy told me on the Monday ſhe had been in the Pantry, (I did not ſee her) ſtirring her Father's Water-gruel, and eating the Oatmeal out of the Bottom of it.

Counſel. What Time of the Monday was this?

Gunnell. This was ſome time about the Middle of the Day.

Counſel. Did Mr. Blandy take any of that Water-gruel?

Gun. I gave him a Half-pint Mug of it on Monday Evening, for him to take before he went to Bed.

Counſel. Did you obſerve any body meddle with that Half-pint Mug afterwards?

Gun. I ſaw Miſs Blandy take the Tea-ſpoon that was in the Mug, and ſtir the Water-gruel, and after put her Finger to the Spoon, and then rubbed her Fingers.

Counſel. Did Mr. Blandy drink any of that Water-gruel?

Gun. Mr. Blandy drank ſome of it; and on the Tueſday Morning, when he came down Stairs, he did not come through the Kitchen as uſual, but went the back Way into his Study.

Counſel. Did you ſee him come down?——Gun. I did not.

Counſel. When was the firſt Time you ſaw him that Day?

Gun. It was betwixt Nine and Ten; Miſs Blandy and he were together; he was not well, and going to lie down on the Bed.

Counſel. Did you ſee him in the Evening?

Gun. In the Evening Robert Harman came to me, as I was coming down Stairs, and told me, I muſt warm ſome Water-gruel, for my Maſter was in haſte for Supper.

Counſel. Did you warm ſome?

Gun. I warmed ſome of that out of the Pan, of which he had ſome the Night before, and Miſs Blandy carried it to him into the Parlour.

Counſel. Did he drink it?

Gun. I believe he did; there ſeemed to be about Half of it left the next Morning.

Counſel. How did he ſeem to be after?

Gun. I met him, ſoon after he had eat the Water-gruel, going up Stairs to Bed; I lighted him up: As ſoon as he was got into the Room, he called for a Baſon to reach; he ſeemed to be very ſick, by his reaching a conſiderable Time.

Counſel. How was he next Morning?

Gun. About ſix o'Clock I went up the next Morning to carry him his Phyſick: He ſaid he had had a pretty good Night, and was much better.

Counſel. Had he reached much over-night?

Gun. He had, for the Baſon was half full, which I left clean over-night.

Counſel. Was any Order given you to give him any more Water-gruel?

Gun. On the Wedneſday Miſs Blandy came into the Kitchen, and ſaid, Suſan, as your Maſter has taken Phyſick, he may want more Water-gruel, and as there is ſome in the Houſe, you need not make freſh, as you are ironing. I told her, it was ſtale, if there was enough; and it would not hinder much to make freſh; ſo I made freſh accordingly, and I went into the Pantry to put ſome in for my Maſter's Dinner; then I brought out the Pan (the Evening before I thought it had an odd Taſte), ſo I was willing to taſte it again, to ſee if I was miſtaken or not: I put it to my Mouth, and drank ſome, and taking it from my Mouth, I obſerved ſome Whiteneſs at the Bottom.

Counſel. What did you do upon that?

Gunnell. I went immediately to the Kitchen, and told Betty Binfield, there was a white Settlement, and I did not remember I ever had ſeen Oatmeal ſo white before: Betty ſaid, Let me ſee it; I carried it to her. She ſaid, What Oatmeal is this? I think it looks as white as Flour. We both took the Pan, and turned it about, and ſtrictly obſerved it, and concluded it could be nothing but Oatmeal. I then took it out of Doors into the Light, and ſaw it plainer; then I put my Finger to it, and found it gritty at the Bottom of the Pan; I then recollected I had heard ſay, Poiſon was white and gritty, which made me afraid it was Poiſon.

Counſel. What did you do with the Pan?

Gun. I carried it back again, and ſet it down on the Dreſſer in the Kitchen; it ſtood there a ſmall Time, then I locked it up in the Cloſet, and on the Thurſday Morning I carried it to Mrs. Mounteney, and Mr. Norton came there and ſaw it.

Counſel. Do you remember Miſs Blandy ſaying any thing to you about eating her Papa's Water-gruel?

Gun. About ſix Weeks before his Death, I went into the Parlour; Miſs Blandy ſaid, Suſan, what is the Matter with you? You do not look well: I ſaid, I do not know what is the Matter; I am not well, but I do not know what the Matter is. She ſaid, What have you eat or drank? upon which I ſaid, Nothing more than the reſt of the Family. She ſaid, Suſan, have you eat any Water-gruel? for I am told Water-gruel hurts me, and it may hurt you. I ſaid, It cannot affect me, Madam, for I have not eat any.

Counſel. What was it * Betty Binfield ſaid to you about Water-gruel?

Gun. Betty Binfield ſaid, Miſs Blandy aſked, if I had eat any of her Papa's Water-gruel? ſaying, if I did, I might do for myſelf, a Perſon of my Age.

Counſel. What Time was this?

Gun. I cannot ſay whether it was juſt after or juſt before the Time ſhe had ſpoke to me herſelf. On the Wedneſday Morning, as I was coming down Stairs from giving my Maſter his Phyſic, I met Elizabeth Binfield, with the Water-gruel in a Baſon, which he had left; I ſaid to the Chairwoman, Ann Emmet, Dame, you uſed to be fond of Water-gruel, here is a very fine Meſs my Maſter left laſt Night, and I believe it will do you good; the Woman ſoon ſat down on a Bench in the Kitchen, and eat ſome of it, I cannot ſay all.

Counſel. How was ſhe afterwards?

Gun. She ſaid, the Houſe ſmelt of Phyſic, and every Thing taſted of Phyſic; ſhe went out, I believe into the Waſh-houſe, to reach, before ſhe could finiſh it.

Counſel. Did you follow her?

Gun. No, I did not; but about twenty Minutes, or half an Hour after that, I went to the Neceſſary-houſe, and found her there vomiting and reaching, and, as ſhe ſaid, purging.

Counſel. How long did ſhe abide there?

Gun. She was there an Hour and half, during which Time I went divers Times to her; at firſt I carried her ſome Surfeit-water; ſhe then deſired to have ſome fair Water; the next Time I went to ſee how ſhe did, ſhe ſaid ſhe was no better; I deſired her to come in a-Doors, hoping ſhe would be better by the Fire; ſhe ſaid, ſhe was not able to come in; I ſaid, I would lead her in; I did, and ſet her down in a Chair by the Fire; ſhe was vomiting and reaching continually; ſhe ſat there about half an Hour, or ſomething more, during which Time ſhe grew much worſe, and I thought her to be in a Fit, or ſeized with Death.

Counſel. Did you acquaint Miſs Blandy with the Illneſs and Symptoms of this poor Woman?

Gen. I told Miſs Blandy when I went into the Room to dreſs her, about nine o'Clock, that Dame (the Name we uſed to call her by) had been very ill that Morning; that ſhe had complained that the Smell of her Maſter's Phyſic had made her ſick; and that ſhe had eat nothing but a little of her Maſter's Water-gruel, which he had left laſt Night, which could not hurt her.

Counſel. What did ſhe ſay to that?

Gun. She ſaid ſhe was very glad ſhe was not below Stairs, for ſhe ſhould have been ſhocked to have ſeen her poor Dame ſo ill.

Counſel. As you have lived Servant in the Houſe, how did you obſerve Miſs Blandy behave towards her Father, and in what Manner did ſhe uſe to talk of him, three or four Months before his Death?——Gun. Sometimes ſhe would talk very affectionately, and ſometimes but middling.

Counſel. What do you mean by middling?

Gun. Sometimes ſhe would ſay, he was an old Villain, for uſing an only Child in ſuch a Manner.

Counſel. Did ſhe wiſh him to live?

Gun. Sometimes ſhe wiſhed for his long Life, ſometimes for his Death.

Counſel. When ſhe wiſhed for his Death, in what Manner did ſhe expreſs herſelf?

Gun. She often ſaid, ſhe was very unkward, and that if he was dead, ſhe would go to Scotland, and live with Lady Cranſtoun.

Counſel. Did ſhe ever ſay how long ſhe thought her Father might live?

Gun. Sometimes ſhe would ſay, for his Conſtitution, he might live theſe twenty Years; ſometimes ſhe would ſay, he looked ill and poorly.

Counſel. Do you remember when Dr. Addington was ſent for on the Saturday?——Gun. I do.

Counſel. Had Miſs Blandy uſed to go into her Father's Room after that Time?——Gun. She did as often as ſhe pleaſed till Sunday Night; then Mr. Norton took Miſs Blandy down Stairs, and deſired me not to let any Body go into the Room, except myſelf, to wait on him.

Counſel. Did ſhe come in afterwards?

Gun. She came into the Room on Monday Morning, ſoon after Mr. Norton came in, or with him; I went in about ten o'Clock again.

Counſel. What Converſation paſſed between Miſs Blandy and her Father?

Gun. She fell down on her Knees, and ſaid to him, Baniſh me, or ſend me to any remote Part of the World; do what you pleaſe, ſo you forgive me; and as to Mr. Cranſtoun, I will never ſee him, ſpeak to him, nor write to him more ſo long as I live, ſo you will forgive me.

Counſel. What Anſwer did he make?

* N. B. The Counſel for the Priſoner waved the Objection to this as Hearſay Evidence; becauſe the Counſel for the Crown aſſured them, they ſhould call Betty Binfield herſelf next.

Gunnell.

Gunnell. He ſaid, I forgive thee, my Dear, and I hope God will forgive thee; but thee ſhouldſt have conſidered better, than to have attempted any Thing againſt thy Father; thee ſhouldſt have conſidered, I was thy own Father.

Counſel. What ſaid ſhe to this?

Gun. She anſwered, Sir, as for your Illneſs, I am intirely innocent. I ſaid, Madam, I believe you muſt not ſay you are intirely innocent, for the Powder that was taken out of the Water-gruel, and the Paper of Powder that was taken out of the Fire, are now in ſuch Hands, that they muſt be publickly produced. I told her, I believed, I had one Doſe prepared for my Maſter in a Diſh of Tea, about ſix Weeks ago.

Counſel. Did you tell her this before her Father?—Gun. I did.

Counſel. What Anſwer did ſhe make?

Gun. She ſaid, I have put no Powder into Tea; I have put Powder into Water-gruel, and if you are injured, I am intirely innocent, for it was given me with another Intent.

Counſel. What ſaid Mr. Blandy to this?

Gun. My Maſter turned himſelf in his Bed, and ſaid to her, Oh! ſuch a Villain! come to my Houſe, eat of the beſt, and drink of the beſt that my Houſe could afford, to take away my Life, and ruin my Daughter.

Counſel. What elſe paſſed?

Gun. He ſaid, Oh! my Dear! thee muſt hate that Man, thee muſt hate the Ground he treads on, thee canſt not help it. The Daughter ſaid, Oh! Sir, your Tenderneſs towards me is like a Sword to my Heart; every Word you ſay is like Swords piercing my Heart; much worſe, than if you were to be ever ſo angry. I muſt down on my Knees, and beg you will not curſe me.

Counſel. What ſaid the Father?

Gun. He ſaid, I curſe thee! my Dear, how couldſt thou think I could curſe thee? No, I bleſs thee, and hope God will bleſs thee, and amend thy Life; and ſaid further, Do, my Dear, go out of my Room, ſay no more, leſt thou ſhouldſt ſay any Thing to thy own Prejudice: Go to thy Uncle Stevens, take him for thy Friend: poor Man! I am ſorry for him. Upon this ſhe directly went out of the Room.

Counſel. Give an Account of the Paper you mentioned to her, how it was found.

Gun. On the Saturday before my Maſter died, I was in the Kitchen. Miſs Blandy had wrote a Direction on a Letter to go to her Uncle Stevens. Going to the Fire to dry it, I ſaw her put a Paper into the Fire, or two Papers, I cannot ſay whether. I went to the Fire, and ſaw her ſtir it down with a Stick: Elizabeth Binfield then put on freſh Coals, which I believe kept the Paper from being conſumed. Soon after Miſs Blandy had put it in, ſhe left the Kitchen; I ſaid to Elizabeth Binfield, Betty, Miſs Blandy has been burning ſomething; ſhe aſked, Where? I pointed to the Grate, and ſaid, At that Corner; upon which Betty Binfield moved a Coal, and took from thence a little Paper; I ſtood by and ſaw her, ſhe gave it into my Hand; it was a ſmall Piece of Paper, with ſome Writing on it, folded up about three Inches long. The Writing was, The Powder to clean the Pebbles, to the beſt of my Remembrance.

Counſel. Did you read it?

Gun. I did not, Elizabeth Binfield read it to me. (Produced in Court, Part of it burnt, ſealed up with the Earl of Macclesfield and Lord Cadogan's Seals.) This is the Paper, I believe, by the Look of it; but I did not ſee it unfolded. I delivered it into Elizabeth Binfield's Hand on Saturday Night, between Eleven and Twelve o'Clock. From the Time it was taken out of the Fire, it had not been out of my Pocket, or any Thing done to it, from that Time till I gave it her. I went into my Maſter's Room about Seven o'Clock in the Morning, to carry him ſomething to drink; when he had drank it, I ſaid, I have ſomething to ſay to you concerning your Health, and concerning your Family; I muſt beg you will not put yourſelf in a Paſſion, but hear me what I have to ſay. Then I told him, I believe, Sir, you have got ſomething in your Water-gruel, that has done you ſome Injury, and I believe Miſs Blandy put it in, by her coming into the Waſh-houſe on Monday, and ſaying, ſhe had been ſtirring her Papa's Water-gruel, and eating the Oatmeal out from the Bottom. He ſaid, I find I have ſomething not right: My Head is not right as it uſed to be, nor has been for ſome Time. I had before told him, I had found the Powder in the Gruel. He ſaid, Doſt thou know any Thing of this Powder? Didſt thee ever ſee any of it? I ſaid, No, Sir, I never ſaw any, but what I ſaw in the Water-gruel. He ſaid, Doſt know where ſhe had this Powder, nor canſt not thee Gueſs? I ſaid, I cannot tell, except ſhe had it of Mr. Cranſtoun. My Reaſon for ſuſpecting that was, Miſs Blandy had Letters came oftener than uſual. My Maſter ſaid, And now thee mention'ſt it, I remember when he was at my Houſe, he mentioned a particular Poiſon that they had in their Country, ſaying, Oh! that Villain! that ever he came to my Houſe! I told him likewiſe, I had ſhewed the Powder to Mr. Norton; he aſked what Mr. Norton ſaid to it; I told him, Mr. Norton could not ſay what it was, as it was wet, but ſaid, Let it be what it will, it ought not to be there; and ſaid, he was fearful there was foul Play ſomewhere. My Maſter ſaid, What, Norton not know! that is ſtrange, and ſo much uſed to Drugs. Then I told him, Mr. Norton thought proper he ſhould ſearch her Pockets, and take away her Keys and Papers. He ſaid, I cannot do it, I cannot ſhock her ſo much; canſt not thee, when thou goeſt into her Room, take out a Letter or two, that ſhe may think ſhe dropped them by Chance? I told him, I had no Right to do it: She is your Daughter, and you have a Right to do it, and nobody elſe. He ſaid, I never in all my Life read a Letter that came to my Daughter, from any Perſon. He deſired, if poſſible, if I could meet with any Powder any where, that I would ſecure it.

Counſel. Do you remember when Ann Emmet was ſick (the Chair-woman)?

Gun. I do, but cannot ſay how long, or how little a Time before this; I remember ſhe was ill ſome Time before my Maſter's Death.

Counſel. What did the Priſoner order the old Woman to eat at that Time?

Gun. She ſent her ſome Sack-Whey, and ſome Broth; I believe to the Value of a Quart or three Pints at twice, about once a Day, or every other Day, for four or five Days.

Counſel. Have you been ill from what you eat yourſelf?

Gun. I was ill after drinking a Diſh of Tea one Sunday Morning, which I thought was not well reliſhed, and I believed ſomebody had been taking Salts in the Cup before.

Counſel. Who was it poured out for?

Gun. I believe it was poured out for my Maſter.

Counſel. Why do you believe that?

Gun. Becauſe he uſed to drink in a different Diſh from the reſt of the Family, and it was out of his Diſh.

Counſel. When was this?

Gun. This was about ſix Weeks and three Days before his Death.

Counſel. How did you find yourſelf, after drinking it?

Gun. I found no ill Effect till after Dinner: I then had a Hardneſs in my Stomach, and apprehended it was from eating plentifully of Beans for Dinner.

Counſel. What Symptoms had you afterwards?

Gun. My Stomach ſeemed to have ſomething in it that could not digeſt, and I had remarkable Trembling for three Days, and after that for three Mornings was ſeized with a Reaching.

Counſel. Have you ſince that Time been ill, from what you eat or drank?

Gun. I taſted the Water-gruel twice, once on the Tueſday Evening, when I was mixing it for my Maſter; and on Wedneſday, when I was going to pour it away, I put the Pan to my Mouth and drank a little of it.

Counſel. How did you find yourſelf after that?

Gun. I did not find any remarkable Diſorder till the Wedneſday Morning about Two o'Clock, before my Maſter's Death; then I was ſeemingly ſeized with Convulſions. My Throat was very troubleſome for five or ſix Weeks after, and ſeemed a little foreiſh and a little ſwelled. I continued very ill for three Weeks and upwards after my Maſter's Death, which was on the Wedneſday. I went to Bed ſick at Two that Morning, and apply'd to Dr. Addington.

Counſel. Do you remember any Thing beſides Letters coming from Mr. Cranſtoun?

Gun. I remember ſhe had once a large Box of Table-Linen, and ſome Scotch Pebbles in it; ſhe ſaid, they came from him.

Counſel. What Time was this?

Gun. This was early in the Spring, before my Maſter's Death.

Counſel. Had ſhe more than one Box ſent to her?

Gun. She had a ſmall Box ſent afterwards of Scotch Pebbles; that might be about three Months before his Death, or leſs, I cannot ſay.

Counſel. Did ſhe uſe to ſhew the Pebbles to any body?

Gun. She uſed to ſhew them to any Perſon of her Acquaintance; but I never heard of any Powder to clean them.

Croſs-examined.

Priſoner's Counſel. For a Year before the 5th of Auguſt laſt, had any Thing ailed your Maſter, ſo as to call in the Apothecary?

Gun. About a Year before he had had a violent Cold.

Priſ. Counſel. Was he, or was he not, in good Health for a Year before?

Gun. He was frequently complaining of the Gravel and Heart-burn, which he was ſubject to for Years.

Priſ. Counſel. Did he make any other Complaints?

Gun. He uſed to have little Fits of the Gout.

Priſ. Counſel. Was there any other Complaint for ſeven, eight, nine, or ten Years?

Gun. Nothing particular, but that of the Heart-burn; which I cannot tell whether I ever heard him complain of before or not.

Priſ. Counſel. Can you take upon you to ſay, that he made any particular Complaint of the Heart-burn, more than he had done at any other Time?

Gun. I cannot ſay poſitively; becauſe I have not continued theſe Things in my Memory. He ordered me to give him ſome dry Oatmeal and Water for the Heart-burn.

Priſ. Counſel. Is that good for the Heart-burn?

Gun. I have been told, it is very good for it.

Priſ. Counſel. How was her Behaviour to her Father?

Gun. Her general Behaviour was dutiful, except upon any Paſſion, or a haſty Word from her Father.

Priſ. Counſel. When did ſhe call her Father, old Villain?

Gun. She would uſe Expreſſions of that Kind when ſhe was in a Paſſion.

Priſ. Counſel. Upon what Account?---Gun. For uſing her ill.

King's Counſel. Were theſe Expreſſions made uſe of before his Face, or behind his Back?

Gun. I have heard her before his Face, and behind his Back.

Priſ. Counſel. When have you heard it?

Gun. I believe in the laſt twelve Months; but cannot be ſure.

King's Counſel. Recollect on what Occaſion.

Gun. It has been, I believe, on little Paſſions on both Sides, and that generally from Trifles.

Priſ. Counſel. When did you firſt communicate your Suſpicion to Mr. Blandy, about his being poiſoned?

Gun. On the Saturday Morning before his Death, from what I ſaw on the Wedneſday before.

Priſ. Counſel. Why did you keep this Suſpicion of yours from Wedneſday to Saturday?

Gun. The Reaſon I did not tell my Suſpicions to Mr. Blandy ſooner than Saturday, was, becauſe I ſtaid for Mr. Stevens, the Priſoner's Uncle, who did not come till Friday Night; I told him then, and he deſired me to tell Mr. Blandy of it.

Priſ. Counſel. Did you ever ſay any Thing of it to Miſs Blandy?

Gun. No, I did not.

Priſ. Counſel. Pray, what Converſation paſſed between her Father and her down upon her Knees, &c.?

Gun. She ſaid, Sir, how do you do? He ſaid, I am very ill.

Priſ. Counſel. Was any Thing ſaid about Mr. Cranſtoun's Addreſſes to her?

Gun. Yes, there was. That Converſation was occaſioned by a Meſſage, that Mr. Blandy had ſent to his Daughter by me on Monday Morning.

Priſ. Counſel. What was that Meſſage?

Gun. That he was ready to forgive her, if ſhe would but endeavour to bring that Villain to Juſtice.

Priſ. Counſel. Did ſhe ſay, with what Intent the Powder was given to her?

Gun. She ſaid, it was given her with another Intent.

Priſ. Counſel. Did ſhe ſay, upon what Intent?

Gunnell. She did not ſay that. He did not aſk that.

Priſoner's Counſel. Was not that explained?

Gun. It was no ways explained.

Priſ. Counſel. Did he treat her, as if ſhe herſelf was innocent?

Gun. He did, Sir.

Priſ. Counſel. Then all he ſaid afterwards was as thinking his Daughter very innocent.---Gun. It was, Sir.

Priſ. Counſel. As to the Ruin of his Daughter, did he think it was intirely owing to Cranſtoun?

Gun Mr. Blandy ſaid, he believed his Daughter intirely innocent of what had happened.

Priſ. Counſel. By what he ſaid to you, do you think that the Father thought his Daughter was impoſed upon by Cranſtoun, when he uſed that Expreſſion, She muſt hate the Man, &c?

Gun. I do think ſo; he ſaid, Where is Polly? I anſwered, In her Room; he ſaid, Poor unfortunate Girl! that ever ſhe ſhould be impoſed upon and led away by ſuch a Villain to do ſuch a Thing!

Priſ. Counſel. Do you imagine, from the whole Converſation that paſſed between her Father and her, that ſhe was intirely innocent of the Fact, of the Powder being given?

Gun. I do not think ſo; ſhe ſaid, ſhe was innocent.

Priſ. Counſel. What was your Opinion, did the Father think her wholly unacquainted with the Effect of the Powder?

Gun. I believe he thought ſo; that is as much as I can ſay.

Priſ. Counſel. When you told Miſs Blandy that the Waſherwoman was extremely ill, having eat ſome Water-gruel, was any Thing more ſaid with relation to the Father's having eat ſome of the ſame Water-gruel before?

Gun. I don't remember there was a Word ſaid about the Father's having eat any of it.

Priſ. Counſel. During the Time of his Illneſs, was not Miſs Blandy's Behaviour to her Father, with as much Care and Tenderneſs as any Daughter could ſhew?

Gun. She ſeemed to direct every Thing as ſhe could have done for herſelf, or any other Perſon that was ſick.

Priſ. Counſel. Do you know that ſhe was guilty of any Neglect in this Reſpect?---Gun. No, I do not, Sir.

King's Counſel. What did he mean when he ſaid, "Poor unfortunate "Girl! that ever ſhe ſhould be impoſed upon, and led away by ſuch a "Villain, to do ſuch a Thing!" What do you imagine he meant by ſuch a Thing?

Gun. By giving him That, which ſhe did not know what it was.

Court. When ſhe told you, that Water-gruel would ſerve for her Father on the Wedneſday, did ſhe know that her Father had been ill, by taking Water-gruel on the Monday and Tueſday Nights?

Gun. She knew he was ill, but I cannot tell whether ſhe knew the Cauſe of it; and knew that the Chairwoman was ill, before ſhe propoſed my giving him the ſame Gruel; but did not oppoſe my making freſh, for any other Reaſon, than that it would hinder my Ironing.

Elizabeth Binfield ſworn.

Binfield. I was a Servant to Mr. Francis Blandy at Henley, and had been almoſt three Years.

Counſel. When did you firſt diſcover his Illneſs, and hear him complain of unuſual Prickings in his Stomach?

Binfield. About a Fortnight before he died.

Counſel. Did you ever hear Miſs Blandy talk of ſomething in the Houſe, which ſhe ſaid preſaged his Death, or ſomething like it?

Binfield. I have often heard her talk of Walkings and Muſick in the Houſe that ſhe had heard; ſhe ſaid, ſhe thought it to be her Mother; ſaying, the Muſic foretold her Father's Death.

Counſel. Who has ſhe ſaid ſo to?---Binfield. She has told me ſo.

Counſel. How long ago?

Binfield. For ſome Time before her Father's Death; I believe for three Quarters of a Year.

Counſel. How long did ſhe continue talking in this Manner?

Binfield. She did till his Death; I have often heard her ſay, he would die before October.

Counſel. What Reaſons did ſhe give for that?

Binfield. By the Muſic; ſaying, ſhe had been informed that Muſic foretels Death within a Twelve-month.

Counſel. Who did ſhe ſay had informed her ſo?

Binfield. She ſaid Mr. Cranſtoun had been to ſome famous Woman who had informed him ſo, and named one Mrs. Morgan, who lived either in Scotland, or London; I cannot ſay which.

Counſel. Did ſhe expreſs herſelf glad, or ſorry?

Binfield. Glad; for that then ſhe ſhould ſoon be releaſed from al her Fatigues, and ſoon be happy.

Counſel. Did ſhe talk of the State of Health in which he was?

Binfield. Sometimes ſhe has ſaid, he has been very well, ſometimes ill. I remember I heard her ſay that my Maſter complained of a Ball of Fire in his Guts: I believe it was before the Monday he eat the Water-gruel, I cannot particularly ſay, I believe a Fortnight before he died; then ſhe ſaid, Mr. Cranſtoun had told her of that famous Woman's Opinion about Muſic.

Counſel. Do you remember the firſt Time one Ann Emmet was taken ill?

Binfield. It was about a Month or ſix Weeks before.

Counſel. Do you know what Miſs Blandy ordered her in that Illneſs?

Binfield. I do. She ordered her ſome White-wine Whey, and Broth ſeveral Times. I made it two or three Times, two Quarts at a Time.

Counſel. Do you remember a Paper being taken out of the Fire?

Binfield. I do. It was on the Saturday before my Maſter died, I took it out myſelf.

Counſel. Should you know it again, if you ſee it?

Binfield. I believe I ſhould (ſhe is ſhewn a Paper). I really believe this is it, which I took out of the Fire, and delivered it to Suſan Gunnell; after which I had it again from her, and I delivered it to Dr. Addington, and Mr. Norton.

Counſel. Do you remember Miſs Blandy's ſaying any thing about Suſan Gunnell's eating the Water-gruel?

Binfield. I do. When Suſan was ill, ſhe aſked me, how Suſan did? I ſaid, Very ill. Said ſhe, Do you remember her ever drinking her Maſter's Water-gruel? I ſaid, Not as I know of. She ſaid, If ſhe does, ſhe may do for herſelf, may I tell you.

Counſel. Did ſhe bid you tell Suſan ſo?

Binfield. She did not bid me tell Suſan, but I did tell her.

Counſel. What Time was this?---Binfield. It might be about a Month or ſix Weeks before Mr. Blandy's Death.

Counſel. Do you remember any Expreſſions ſhe made uſe of about her Father?

Binfield. I heard her ſay, Who would grudge to ſend an old Father to Hell for ten thouſand Pounds? exactly them Words.

Counſel. When was this?---Binfield. It was about a Month before his Death, or it may be more, I cannot juſtly tell.

Counſel. How was this Converſation introduced?---Binfield. She was ſpeaking of young Girls being kept out of their Fortunes.

Counſel. Who was with you at this Time?

Binfield. It was to me and nobody elſe.

Counſel. Have you heard her uſe him with bad Language?

Binfield. I have heard her curſe him, call him Raſcal and Villain.

Counſel. What was ſhe ſo angry with her Father about?

Binfield. Mr. Cranſtoun was at our Houſe about three Quarters of a Year before Mr. Blandy's Death. He came in Auguſt 1750, and ſtayed there till near Chriſtmas. It was not agreeable to my Maſter; we uſed to think by his Temper, that he did not approve of his being ſo much with his Daughter; but I do not believe he debarred his Daughter from keeping him Company.

Counſel. Did you ever hear him ſay any Thing to her, of his having been once like to be poiſoned?

Binfield. I was in the Kitchen when my Maſter came in to be ſhaved. I ſtayed there till he went out again. Miſs Blandy was there, and he ſaid, that once he had like to have been poiſoned.

Coun. When was it that he ſaid ſo?

Binfield. It was on the 10th of Auguſt, ſaying, he was once at the Coffee-houſe, or the Lion, and he and two other Gentlemen had like to have been poiſoned by what they had drank. Miſs Blandy ſaid, Sir, I remember it very well; ſhe ſaid, it was at one of thoſe Places; and he ſaid No, it was the other. He ſaid, One of the Gentlemen died immediately, the other is dead now, and I have ſurvived them both; but it is my Fortune to be poiſoned at laſt. He looked very hard at her, during the Time he was talking.

Counſel. What did he ſay was put into the Wine?

Binfield. I remember he ſaid it was white Arſenic.

Counſel. When he looked hard at her, how did ſhe look?

Binfield. She looked in great Confuſion, and all in a Tremble.

Counſel. Did you ſit up with Miſs Blandy the Night after her Father died?

Binfield. I did till Three o'Clock, ſhe went to Bed about One. She ſaid to me, Betty, will you go away with me? If you will go to the Lion or the Bell, and hire a Poſt-Chaiſe, I will give you fifteen Guineas when you get into it, and ten Guineas more when we come to London. I ſaid, Where will you go then, into the North? She ſaid, I ſhall go into the Weſt of England. I ſaid, Shall you go by Sea? She ſaid, I believe ſome Part of the Way. I ſaid, I will not go.

Then ſhe burſt into a Laughter, and ſaid, I was only in a Joke, did you think I was in earneſt? Yes, ſaid I. No, ſaid ſhe, I was only joking.

Counſel. Did you ever hear Miſs tell Dr. Addington, that ſhe had given your Maſter ſome of that Powder?

Binfield. I heard Miſs Blandy tell the Doctor, ſhe had given my Maſter ſome of that Powder before in a Diſh of Tea, which, ſhe ſaid, he did not drink, and ſhe throwed into the Street out of the Window, fearing ſhe ſhould be diſcovered, and filled the Cup again; and that Suſan Gunnell drank it, and was ill for a Week after.

Counſel. When was this?---Binfield. This was on the Monday before my Maſter died.

Counſel. Do you remember what happened on Monday, the 5th of Auguſt?

Binfield. Yes. On that Day I and two Waſher-women were in the Waſh-houſe. Miſs Blandy came in, and ſaid, Betty, I have been in the Pantry eating ſome of the Oatmeal out of your Maſter's Water-gruel. I took no Notice of it; but the ſame Day, in the Afternoon, I went into the Pantry, and Miſs Blandy followed me, and took a Spoon and ſtirred the Water-gruel, and taking ſome up in the Spoon, put it between her Fingers and rubbed it.

Counſel. What was it in?

Binfield. It was in a Pan. When my Maſter was taken ill on the Tueſday in the Afternoon, Miſs came into the Kitchen, and ſaid, Betty, if one Thing ſhould happen, will you go with me to Scotland? I ſaid, Madam, I do not know. What, ſays ſhe, you are unwilling to leave your Friends? Said I, If I ſhould go there, and not like it, it will be expenſive travelling back again.

Counſel. Did ſhe ſay, If one Thing ſhould happen? What Thing?

Binfield. I took no farther Notice of it then; but thoſe were the Words. On the Monday Morning, before he died, ſhe ſaid to me, Betty, go up to your Maſter, and give my Duty to him, and tell him, I beg to ſpeak one Word with him. I did; ſhe went up; I met her when ſhe came out of the Room from him; ſhe claſped me round the Neck, and burſt out a-crying, and ſaid, Suſan and you are the two honeſteſt Servants in the World; you ought to be imaged in Gold for your Honeſty; half my Fortune will not make you amends for your Honeſty to my Father.

Croſs-examined.

Priſoner's Counſel. Had Mr. Blandy at any Time, and when, previous to the 5th of Auguſt been ill?

Binfield. About a Twelvemonth before, he had been ill ſome Time; but I cannot tell how long.

Priſ. Counſel. What was his Illneſs?---Binfield. He had a great Cold.

Priſ Counſel. Did he take any Phyſic?

Binfield. I believe he did once or twice.

Priſ. Counſel. Can you tell the Time?---Binfield. I believe it was the latter End of July, or Beginning of Auguſt.

Priſ. Counſel. Who made the Whey and Broth that were ſent to the Waſher-woman?

Binfield. My Fellow-Servant made the Whey, I made the Broth.

Priſ. Counſel. Was ſhe a kind Miſtreſs to the Waſher-woman?

Binfield. She was; ſhe had a greater Regard for her than any other Woman that came about the Houſe.

Priſ. Counſel. About this Muſic, Who did ſhe ſay heard it?

Binfield. She moſtly mentioned herſelf hearing that.

Priſ. Counſel. Was this Talk when Cranſtoun was there?

Binfield. I heard her talk ſo, when he was there, and in his Abſence.

Priſ. Counſel. Was it when ſhe was in an angry Temper only, that ſhe uſed thoſe Words to her Father?

Binfield. I have heard her in the beſt of Times curſe her Father.

Priſ. Counſel. Was Suſan Gunnell very ill after drinking that Tea?

Binfield. She was, and continued ſo for a Week.

King's Counſel. Was it at the Time Suſan was ill, from drinking of the Tea, that Miſs Blandy aſked you about her taking the Gruel, and ſaid, it would do for her? And did ſhe ſay any Thing elſe?

Binfield. Miſs Blandy ſaid, ſhe poured it out for my Maſter; but he went to Church, and left it.

Priſ. Counſel. Have you had any ill Will againſt her?

Binfield. I always told her, I wiſhed her very well.

Priſ. Counſel. Did you ever ſay, Damn her for a black Bitch, I ſhould be glad to ſee her go up the Ladder, and be hanged?

Binfield. No, Sir, I never did in my Life.

King's Counſel. Did you and the reſt of the Family obſerve, that Mr. Blandy's Looks were as well the laſt ſix Months as before?

Binfield. Miſs Blandy has ſaid to me, Don't you think my Father looks faint? Sometimes I have ſaid, He is; ſometimes not. I never obſerved any Alteration at all.

Here Dr. Addington is appealed to by the Counſel for the Priſoner.

Priſoner's Counſel. Do you, Dr. Addington, remember Miſs Blandy's telling you on Monday Night, Auguſt the 12th, that ſhe had on a Sunday Morning, about ſix Weeks before, when her Father was abſent from the Parlour, mixed a Powder with his Tea; and that Suſan Gunnell had drank that Tea?

Dr. Addington. I remember her telling me that Monday Night, that ſhe d on a Sunday Morning, about ſix Weeks before, when her Father was ſent from the Parlour, mixed a Powder with his Tea; but do not remember her ſaying, that Suſan Gunnell had drank that Tea. I have ſeveral times heard Suſan Gunnell ſay, that ſhe was ſure ſhe had been poiſoned by drinking Tea out of Mr. Blandy's Cup that Sunaay Morning.

Priſ. Counſel. Did not Miſs Blandy declare to you, that ſhe had always thought the Powder innocent?

Dr. Addington. Yes.

Priſ. Counſel. Did ſhe not always declare the ſame?

Dr. Addington. Yes.

The King's Counſel then interpoſed, and ſaid, that he had not intended to mention what had paſſed in Diſcourſe between the Priſoner and Dr. Addington; but that now, as her own Counſel had been pleaſed to call for Part of it, he deſired the Whole might be laid before the Court.

Dr. Addington. On Monday Night, Auguſt the 12th, after Miſs Blandy had been ſecured, and her Papers, Keys, &c. taken from her, ſhe threw herſelf on the Bed and groaned; then raiſed herſelf, and wrung her Hands, and ſaid, That it was impoſſible for any Words to deſcribe the Horrors and Agonies in her Breaſt; that Mr. Cranſtoun had ruined her; that ſhe had ever, till now, believed him a Man of the ſtricteſt Honour; that ſhe had mixed a Powder with the Gruel, which her Father had drank on the foregoing Monday and Tueſday Nights; that ſhe was the Cauſe of his Death, and that ſhe deſired Life for no End, but to go through a painful Penance for her Sin. She proteſted at the ſame Time, that ſhe had never mixed the Powder with any Thing elſe that he had ſwallowed; and that ſhe did not know it to be Poiſon, till ſhe had ſeen its Effects. She ſaid, that ſhe had received the Powder from Mr. Cranſtoun, with a Preſent of Scotch Pebbles; that he had wrote on the Paper that held it, The Powder to clean the Pebbles with; that he had aſſured her it was harmleſs; that he had often taken it himſelf; that if ſhe would give her Father ſome of it now and then, a little and a little at a Time, in any Liquid, it would make him kind to him and her; that accordingly, about ſix Weeks before, at Breakfaſt-time, her Father being out of the Room, ſhe had put a little of it into his Cup of Tea, but that he never drank it; that Part of the Powder ſwimming at Top of the Tea, and Part ſinking to the Bottom, ſhe had poured it out of the Window, and filled up the Cup with freſh Tea; that then ſhe wrote to Mr. Cranſtoun, to let him know that ſhe could not give it in Tea without being Diſcovered; and that, in his Anſwer, he had adviſed her to give it in Water-gruel for the future, or in any other thickiſh Fluid. I aſked her, whether ſhe would endeavour to bring Mr. Cranſtoun to Juſtice? After a ſhort Pauſe, ſhe anſwered, That ſhe was fully conſcious of her own Guilt, and was unwilling to add Guilt to Guilt; which ſhe thought ſhe ſhould do, if ſhe took any Step to the Prejudice of Mr. Cranſtoun, whom ſhe conſidered as her Huſband, tho' the Ceremony had not paſſed between them.

King's Counſel. Was any Thing more ſaid by the Priſoner or you?

Dr. Addington. I aſked her, whether ſhe had been ſo weak as to believe the Powder, that ſhe had put into her Father's Tea and Gruel, ſo harmleſs as Mr. Cranſtoun had repreſented it? Why Mr. Cranſtoun had called it a Powder to clean Pebbles, if it was intended only to make Mr. Blandy kind? Why ſhe had not tried it on herſelf, before ſhe ventured to try it on her Father? Why ſhe had flung it into the Fire? Why, if ſhe had really thought it innocent, ſhe had been fearful of a Diſcovery, when Part of it ſwam on the Top of the Tea? Why, when ſhe had found it hurtful to her Father, ſhe had neglected, ſo many Days, to call proper Aſſiſtance to him? And why, when I was called at laſt, ſhe had endeavoured to keep me in the dark, and hide the true Cauſe of his Illneſs?

Counſel. What Anſwers did ſhe make to theſe Queſtions?

Dr. Addington. I cannot juſtly ſay; but very well remember, that they were not ſuch as gave me any Satisfaction.

Priſ. Counſel. She ſaid then, that ſhe was entirely ignorant of the Effects of the Powder.

Dr. Addington. She ſaid, that ſhe did not know it to be Poiſon, 'till ſhe had ſeen its Effects.

Priſ. Counſel. Let me aſk you, Dr. Addington, this ſingle Queſtion: Whether the Horrors and Agonies, which Miſs Blandy was in at this Time, were not, in your Opinion, owing ſolely to an hearty Concern for her Father?

Dr. Addington. I beg, Sir, that you will excuſe my giving an Anſwer to this Queſtion. It is not eaſy, you know, to form a true Judgment of the Heart; and I hope a Witneſs need not deliver his Opinion of it.

Priſ. Counſel. I do not ſpeak of the Heart: You are only deſired to ſay, whether thoſe Agitations of Body and Mind, which Miſs Blandy ſhewed at this Time, did not ſeem to you to ariſe intirely from a tender Concern for her Father?

Dr. Addington. Since you oblige me, Sir, to ſpeak to this Particular, I muſt ſay, that all the Agitations of Body and Mind, which Miſs Blandy ſhewed at this Time, or any other, when I was with her, ſeemed to me to ariſe more from the Apprehenſion of unhappy Conſequences to herſelf, than from a tender and hearty Concern for her Father.

Priſ. Counſel. Did you never then obſerve in her any evident Tokens of Grief for her Father?

Dr. Addington. I never thought I did.

Priſ. Counſel. Did ſhe never wiſh for his Recovery?

Dr. Addington. Often.

Priſ. Counſel. Did not you think that thoſe Wiſhes implied a Concern for him?

Dr. Addington. I did not; becauſe I had before told her, that if he died ſoon, ſhe would inevitably be ruined.

Priſ. Counſel. When did you tell her this?

Dr. Addington. On Sunday Morning, Auguſt the 11th, juſt before I left Henley.

Priſ. Counſel. Did not ſhe deſire you that Morning, before you quitted his Room, to viſit him again the next Day?—Dr. Addington. Yes.

Priſ. Counſel. And was ſhe not very ſollicitous that you ſhould do him all the Service in your Power?

Dr. Addington. I cannot ſay that I diſcovered any Sollicitude in her on this Score, 'till Monday Night, Auguſt the 12th, after ſhe was confined, and her Keys, and other Things, had been taken from her.

King's Counſel. Did you, Dr. Addington, attend Suſan Gunnell in her Illneſs?

Dr. Addington. Yes, Sir; but I took no Minutes of her Caſe.

King's Counſel. Did her Symptoms agree with Mr. Blandy's?

Dr. Addington. They differed from his in ſome Reſpects; but the moſt material were manifeſtly of the ſame Kind with his, though in a much leſs Degree.

King's Counſel. Did you think them owing to Poiſon?

Dr. Addington. Yes.

King's Counſel. Did you attend Ann Emmet?—Dr. Addington. Yes, Sir.

King's Counſel. To what Cauſe did you aſcribe her Diſorder?

Dr. Addington. To Poiſon: For ſhe told me, that on Wedneſday Morning, Auguſt the 7th, very ſoon after drinking ſome Gruel at Mr. Blandy's, ſhe had been ſeized with Prickings and Burnings in her Tongue, Throat, and Stomach, which had been followed by ſevere Fits of Vomiting and Purging. And I obſerved that ſhe had many other Symptoms, which agreed with Mr. Blandy's.

King's Counſel. Did ſhe ſay, that ſhe thought ſhe had ever taken Poiſon before?

Dr. Addington. On my telling her that I aſcribed her Complaints to Poiſon, which ſhe had taken in Gruel at Mr. Blandy's, Auguſt the 7th, ſhe ſaid, that if ſhe had been poiſoned by drinking that Gruel at Mr. Blandy's, ſhe was ſure that ſhe had been poiſoned there the Hay-time before by drinking ſomething elſe.

Alice Emmet ſworn.

My Mother is now very ill, and cannot attend; ſhe was Chairwoman at Mr. Blandy's in June laſt; ſhe was taken very ill in the Night, with a Vomiting and Reaching, upwards and downwards. I went to Miſs Blandy in the Morning, by her Deſire, to ſee if ſhe would ſend her ſomething, as ſhe wanted ſomething to drink, ſaying ſhe was very dry; Miſs ſaid, ſhe would ſend ſomething, which ſhe did in about two Hours.

Counſel. Did you tell her what your Mother had eat or drank?

Emmet. No, I did not; only ſaid, my Mother was very ill and very dry, and deſired ſomething to drink.

Mr. Robert Littleton ſworn.

I was Clerk to Mr. Blandy almoſt two Years; the latter End of July laſt I went to my Father's in Warwickſhire, and returned again Auguſt the 9th, and breakfaſted with Mr. Blandy and his Daughter the next Morning, which was on a Saturday; he was in great Agony, and complained very much; he had a particular Diſh to drink his Tea in; he taſted his Tea, and did not drink it; ſaying, it had a gritty bad Taſte, and aſked Miſs, whether ſhe had not put too much of the black Stuff in it? meaning Bohea Tea. She anſwered, it was as uſual; he taſted it again and ſaid, it had a bad Taſte; ſhe ſeemed to be in ſome Sort of a Tremor; he looked particular at her, and ſhe looked very much confuſed and hurried, and went out of the Room. Soon after, my Maſter poured it out into the Cat's Baſon, and ſet it to be filled again; after this, when he was not there, Miſs aſked me what he did with the Tea? I ſaid, he had not drank it, but put it into the Cat's Baſon in the Window; then ſhe looked a good deal confuſed and hurried. The next Day Mr. Blandy of Kingſton came about half an Hour after Nine in the Morning; they walked into the Parlour, and left me to breakfaſt by myſelf in the Kitchen; I went to Church; when I returned, the Priſoner deſired me to walk with her Couſin into the Garden; ſhe delivered a Letter to me, and deſired me to ſeal and direct it as uſual, and put it into the Poſt.

Counſel. Had you ever directed any Letter for her before?

Littleton. I have a great many; I uſed to direct her Letters to Mr. Cranſtoun.

He is ſhewn a Letter.

Littleton. This is one.

Counſel. Did you put it into the Poſt?

Littleton. I did not; I opened it, having juſt before heard Mr. Blandy was poiſoned by his own Daughter; I tranſcribed it, and took it to Mr. Norton's the Apothecary at Henley, and after that I ſhewed it, and read it to Mr. Blandy.

Counſel. What did he ſay?

Littleton. He ſaid very little; he ſmiled and ſaid, Poor love-ſick Girl! What won't a Girl do for a Man ſhe loves? (or to that Effect.)

Counſel. Have you ever ſeen her write?

Littleton. I have very often.

Counſel. Look at this Letter, is it her own Hand-writing?

Littleton. I cannot tell; it is wrote worſe than ſhe uſed to write, but it is the ſame ſhe gave me.

Counſel. Do you remember Mr. Cranſtoun coming there in Auguſt 1750?

Littleton. I do. It was either the latter End of July, or the Beginning of Auguſt.

Counſel. Did you hear any Talk about Muſic about that Time?

Littleton. After he was gone, I heard the Priſoner ſay, ſhe heard Muſic in the Houſe; this I heard her ſay very often, and that it denoted a Death in the Family; ſometimes ſhe ſaid, ſhe believed it would be herſelf; at other Times, it might be her Father, by Reaſon of his being ſo much broken; I heard her ſay once, ſhe thought ſhe heard her Mother.

Counſel. Did ſhe ſay when that Death would happen?

Littleton. She ſaid that Death would happen before October, meaning the Death of her Father, ſeeming to me.

Counſel. Have you heard her curſe her Father?

Littleton. I have heard her ſeveral Times, for a Rogue, a Villain, a toothleſs old Dog.

Counſel. How long was this before her Father's Death?

Littleton. I cannot juſtly tell that, but I have heard her a great many Times within two Months of his Death, and a great while before; I had uſed to tell her he was much broken latterly, and would not live long; ſhe would ſay, ſhe thought ſo too, and that the Muſic portended his Death.

Croſs-examined.

Priſoner's Counſel. When you breakfaſted with them in the Parlour, who was there firſt?

Littleton. She was.

Priſ. Counſel. Did you ſee the Tea made?---Littleton. No, Sir.

Priſ. Counſel. Did you ſee it poured out?

Littleton. No; but he deſired me to taſte the Tea; I did mine, and ſaid, I fancied his Mouth was out of Taſte.

Priſ. Counſel. Did not this Hurry, you ſay Miſs Blandy was in, ariſe from the Diſpleaſure of her Father, becauſe the Tea was not made to his Mind?

Littleton. I cannot ſay that, or what it was from.

Priſ. Counſel. What became of that he throwed into the Cat's Baſon?

Littleton. He left it there.

Robert Harman ſworn.

I was Servant to Mr. Blandy at the Time of his Death; that Night he died, the Priſoner aſked me, where I ſhould live next? I ſaid, I did not know; ſhe aſked me to go with her; I aſked her, where ſhe was going? ſhe ſaid, It would be 500*l.* in my Way, and no Hurt to me, if I would; I told her, I did not chuſe to go.

Counſel. Did ſhe tell you to what Place ſhe was going?

Harman. She did not.

Counſel. Did ſhe want to go away at that Time of Night?

Harman. Then, immediately.

Croſs-examined.

Priſoner's Counſel. Did ſhe give any Reaſon why ſhe deſired to go away?

Harman. No, ſhe gave none.

Priſ. Counſel. How long had you lived there?

Harman. A Twelve-month.

Priſ. Counſel. What has been her general Behaviour to her Father, during the Time you was there?

Harman. She behaved very well, ſo far as ever I ſaw, and to all the Family.

King's Counſel. Did you ever hear her ſwear about her Father?

Harman. No, I never did.

Mr. Richard Fiſher ſworn.

I was one of the Jury on the Coroner's Inqueſt, that ſat on Mr. Blandy's Body on Thurſday, Auguſt the 15th. As I was going up Street to go to Market, I was told, Miſs Blandy was gone over the Bridge. I went, and found her at the Sign of the Angel, on the other Side of the Bridge. I told her, I was very ſorry for her Misfortune, and aſked her what ſhe could think of herſelf to come from Home, and if ſhe would be glad to go Home again? She ſaid, "Yes; but what muſt I do to get there for the Mob?" I ſaid, I would endeavour to get a cloſe Poſt-Chaiſe, and carry her Home. I went out through the Mob, and got one, and carried her Home. She aſked me, whether ſhe was to go to Oxford that Night or not? I ſaid, I believed not. When I came to her Father's Houſe, I delivered her up to the Conſtables. When we were upon the Enquiry before the Coroner, a Gentleman was aſking for ſome Letters, which came in the Time of Mr. Blandy's Illneſs; I went to her Uncle Stevens to ſee for them. She then aſked me again, What the Gentlemen intended to do with her, or how it would go? I ſaid, I was afraid very hard, unleſs ſhe could produce ſome Letters to bring Mr. Cranſtoun to Juſtice. She ſaid, "Dear Mr. Fiſher, "I am afraid I have burnt ſome that would have brought him to Juſtice." She took a Key out of her Pocket, and ſaid, "Take this Key, and ſee "if you can find ſuch Letters in ſuch a Drawer." There was one Mrs. Minn ſtood by, I deſired her to go with the Key, which ſhe did; but no Letters were found there; then Miſs Blandy ſaid, My Honour to him will prove my Ruin.

Counſel. Whad did ſhe mean by the Word him?

Fiſher. Mr. Cranſtoun: When ſhe found there were no Letters of Conſequence to be found.

Mrs. Lane ſworn.

I was with my Huſband at Henley, at the Sign of the Angel on the other Side the Bridge; there was Miſs Blandy. The firſt Word I heard Mr. Lane my Huſband ſay, was, if ſhe was found guilty, ſhe would ſuffer according to Law; upon which ſhe ſtampt her Foot upon the Ground, and ſaid, O! that damn'd Villain! then pauſed a little, and ſaid, But why ſhould I blame him? for I am more to blame than he, for I gave it him, and knew the Conſequence.

Counſel. Did ſhe ſay, I knew, or I know?

Mrs. Lane. I really cannot ſay, Sir; for I did not expect to be called for to be examined here, and will not take upon me to ſwear poſitively to a Word; ſhe was in a Sort of an Agony, in a very great Fright.

Mr. Lane ſworn.

I went into the Room where the Priſoner was before my Wife, the Day after Mr. Blandy's Death; ſhe aroſe from her Chair, and met me, and looked hard at me; ſhe ſaid, Sir, I have not the Pleaſure of knowing you. Said I, No, I am a Stranger to you. She ſaid, Sir, you look like a Gentleman, what do you think they will do with me? Said I, you will be committed to the County-Gaol, and be tried at the Aſſizes, and if your Innocence appears, you will be acquitted; if not, you will ſuffer accordingly. She ſtamped with her Foot, and ſaid, O! that damn'd Villain! But why do I blame him? I am more to blame. Then Mr. Littleton came in, which took off my Attention from her, that I did not hear ſo as to give an Account of the whole.

(The Letter which Littleton opened, read in Court.) Directed to the Honourable William Henry Cranſtoun, Eſq.

Dear Willy,

My Father is ſo bad, that I have only Time to tell you, that if you do not hear from me ſoon again, do not be frightened; I am better myſelf; and leſt any Accident ſhould happen to your Letters, take Care what you write. My ſincere Compliments. I am ever Yours.

The Priſoner's Defence.

My Lords,

IT is morally impoſſible for me to lay down the Hardſhips I have received——I have been aſperſed in my Character. In the firſt Place, it has been ſaid, that I have ſpoke ill of my Father; that I have curſed him, and wiſhed him at Hell; which is extremely falſe.---Sometimes little Family Affairs have happened, and he did not ſpeak to me ſo kind as I could wiſh.---I own I am paſſionate, My Lords, and in thoſe Paſſions ſome haſty Expreſſions might have dropt: But great Care has been taken to recollect every Word I have ſpoken at different Times, and to apply them to ſuch particular Purpoſes, as my Enemies knew would do me the greateſt Injury. Theſe are Hardſhips, my Lords, extreme Hardſhips! ſuch as you yourſelves muſt allow to be ſo. It is ſaid too, My Lords, that I endeavoured to make my Eſcape. Your Lordſhips will judge, from the Difficulties I laboured under. I had loſt my Father---I was accuſed of being his Murderer---I was not permitted to go near him---I was forſaken by my Friends ---affronted by the Mob---inſulted by my Servants.---Although I begged to have the Liberty to liſten at the Door where he died, I was not allowed it. My Keys were taken from me, my Shoe-buckles and Garters too,---to prevent me from making away with myſelf, as though I was the moſt abandoned Creature.---What could I do, My Lords? I verily believe I muſt have been out of my Senſes.—When I heard my Father was dead, and the Door open, I ran out of the Houſe, and over the Bridge, and had nothing on but an Half-Sack and Petticoat, without a Hoop,---my Petticoats hanging about me.---The Mob gathered about me.---Was this a Condition, My Lords, to make my Eſcape in?---A good Woman beyond the Bridge ſeeing me in this Diſtreſs, deſired me to walk in till the Mob was diſperſed; the Town-Serjeant was there, I begged he would take me under his Protection to have me Home; the Woman ſaid, it was not proper, the Mob was very great, and that I had better ſtay a little. When I came Home, they ſaid I uſed the Conſtable ill.---I was locked up for fifteen Hours, with only an old Servant of the Family to attend me.---I was not allowed a Maid for the common Decencies of my Sex. I was ſent to Gaol, and was in Hopes, there, at leaſt, this Uſage would have ended. But was told, it was reported I was frequently drunk;---that I attempted to make my Eſcape;---that I never attended the Chapel. A more abſtemious Woman, My Lords, I believe, does not live.

Upon the Report of my making my Eſcape, the Gentleman who was High-Sheriff laſt Year, (not the preſent) came and told me, by Order of the Higher Powers, he muſt put an Iron on me; I ſubmitted, as I always do to the Higher Powers. Some Time after he came again, and ſaid he muſt put an heavier upon me, which I have worn, My Lords, till I came hither. I aſked the Sheriff, Why I was ſo ironed? He ſaid, he did it by the Command of ſome Noble Peer, on his hearing that I intended to make my Eſcape. I told them, I never had ſuch a Thought, and I would bear it with the other cruel Uſage I had received on my Character. The Reverend Mr. Swinton, the worthy Clergyman who attended me in Priſon, can teſtify that I was very regular at the Chapel, whenever I was well; ſometimes I really was not able to come out, and then he attended me in my Room.---They likewiſe have publiſhed Papers and Depoſitions, which ought not to have been publiſhed, in order to repreſent me as the moſt abandoned of my Sex, and to prejudice the World againſt me. I ſubmit myſelf to your Lordſhips, and to the worthy Jury.---I can aſſure your Lordſhips, as I am to anſwer it before that Grand Tribunal, where I muſt appear, I am as innocent as the Child unborn of the Death of my Father.---I would not endeavour to ſave my Life at the Expence of Truth. —I really thought the Powder an innocent, inoffenſive Thing, and I gave it to procure his Love.---It has been mentioned, I ſhould ſay I was RUINED: My Lords, when a young Woman loſes her Character, is not that her RUIN? Why, then, ſhould this Expreſſion be conſtrued in ſo wide a Senſe? Is it not ruining my Character to have ſuch a Thing laid to my Charge? And whatever may be the Event of this Trial, I am RUINED moſt effectually.

For the Priſoner. Ann James ſworn.

I live at Henley, and had uſe to waſh for Mr. Blandy; I remember the Time Mr. Blandy grew ill; before he was ill, there was a Difference between Elizabeth Binfield and Miſs Blandy, and Binfield was to go away.

Counſel. How long before Mr. Blandy's Death?

Ann James. It might be pretty near a Quarter of a Year before: I have heard her curſe Miſs Blandy, and damn her for a Bitch; and ſaid ſhe would not ſtay. Since this Affair happened, I heard her ſay, Damn her for a black Bitch, I ſhall be glad to ſee her go up the Ladder, and ſwing.

Counſel. How long after?

Ann James. It was after Miſs was ſent away to Gaol.

Croſs-

Croſs-examined.

King's Counſel. What was this Quarrel about?

Ann James. I do not know; I heard her ſay ſhe had a Quarrel, and was to go away, ſeveral Times.

King's Counſel. Who was by at this Time?

Ann James. Mary Banks was by, and Nurſe Edwards, and Mary Seymour; and I am not ſure whether Robert Harman was there, or not.

King's Counſel. How was it introduced?

Ann James. It happened in Mr. Blandy's Kitchen, ſhe was always talking about Miſs.

King's Counſel. Was you there on the 5th of Auguſt?

Ann James. I cannot ſay I was.

King's Counſel. Do you remember the Priſoner's coming into the Waſh-houſe, and ſaying, ſhe had been doing ſomething with her Father's Water-gruel?——Ann James. No, I do not remember it.

Elizabeth Binfield was called up again.

King's Counſel. Did you, Elizabeth Binfield, ever make uſe of ſuch an Expreſſion as this Witneſs has mentioned?

Eliz. Binfield. I never ſaid ſuch Words.

King's Counſel. Did you ever tell this Witneſs Miſs and you had quarrelled?——Eliz. Binfield. To the beſt of my Knowledge, I never told her about a Quarrel.

King's Counſel. Have you ever had a Quarrel?

Eliz. Binfield. We had a little Quarrel ſome Time before.

King's Counſel. Did you ever declare you was to go away?

Eliz. Binfield. I did.

Mary Banks ſworn.

I remember being in Mr. Blandy's Kitchen in Company with Ann James.

Counſel. Who was in Company?—Mary Banks. I do not remember.

Counſel. Do you remember a Converſation between Elizabeth Binfield and Ann James?

Mary Banks. I do not remember any Thing of it.

Counſel. Do you remember her aſperſing Miſs Blandy's Character?

Mary Banks. I do not recollect.

Counſel. Did you hear her ſay, ſhe ſhould be glad to ſee the black Bitch go up the Ladder to be hanged?

Mary Banks. She did ſay, ſhe ſhould be glad to ſee the black Bitch go up the Ladder to be hanged.

Counſel. When was this?

Mary Banks. It was the Night Mr. Blandy was opened.

Counſel. Are you ſure it was that Day?—Mary Banks. I am ſure it was.

Counſel. Where was Miſs Blandy then?

Mary Banks. She was then in the Houſe.

Edward Herne ſworn.

I formerly was a Servant in Mr. Blandy's Family; I went there eighteen Years ago, and left them about twelve Years ago laſt November, but have been frequently at the Houſe ever ſince; that is, may be once, twice, thrice, or four Times in a Week.

Counſel. What was Miſs's general Behaviour to her Father, and in the Family?—Herne. She behaved, according to what I always obſerved, as well to her Father and the Family, as any Body could do, an affectionate, dutiful Daughter.

Counſel. Did you ſee her during the Time of Mr. Blandy's Illneſs?

Herne. I did. The firſt Time I went into the Room, ſhe was not able to ſpeak to me, nor I to her, for ten Minutes.

Counſel. What was that owing to?

Herne. It was owing to the Greatneſs of her Grief.

Counſel. When was this?——Herne. It was the 12th of Auguſt, at Night.

Counſel. How did her Father ſeem to be ſatisfied with her Behaviour and Conduct?——Herne. She was put into my Cuſtody that Night; when I went into the Room, (upon hearing the Groans of her Father) ſhe ſaid, at my Return, Pray, Ned, how does he do?

Counſel. Did you ever hear her ſpeak ill of her Father?

Herne. I never heard her ſwear an Oath all the Time I have known her, or ſpeak a diſreſpectful Word of her Father.

Croſs-examined.

King's Counſel. What are you?——Herne. I am Sexton of the Pariſh.

King's Counſel. On what Night did Mr. Blandy die?

Herne. On the Wedneſday Night.

King's Counſel. How came you, as ſhe was put under your Care, to let her get away?

Herne. I was gone to dig a Grave, and was ſent for Home; they told me ſhe was gone over the Bridge.

King's Counſel. Had you any Talk with her about this Affair?

Herne. She declared to me, that Captain Cranſtoun put ſome Powder into Tea one Morning for Mr. Blandy, and ſhe turned herſelf about when he was ſtirring of it in the Cup.

King's Counſel. When did ſhe tell you this?—Herne. In Auguſt 1750.

King's Counſel. Have you ſeen her ſince ſhe has been in Oxford Gaol?

Herne. I have. When the Report was ſpread that the Captain was taken, I was with her in the Gaol; a Gentleman came in, and ſaid, he was taken; ſhe wrung her Hands, and ſaid, I hope in God it is true, that he may be brought to Juſtice as well as I, and that he may ſuffer the Puniſhment due to his Crime, as ſhe ſhould do for her's.

Priſoner. Give me Leave to aſk the laſt Witneſs ſome Queſtions.

Court. You had better tell your Queſtions to your Counſel; for you may do yourſelf Harm by aſking Queſtions.

Priſ. Counſel. Did not the Priſoner at the ſame Time declare, That, as to herſelf, ſhe was totally innocent, and had no Deſign to hurt her Father?

Herne. At that Time ſhe declared, That when Cranſtoun put the Powder into the Tea, upon which no Damage at all came, and when ſhe put Powder afterwards herſelf, ſhe apprehended no Damage could come to her Father.

Priſ. Counſel. When ſhe ſpoke of her own Suffering, did ſhe not mean the ſame Misfortune that ſhe then laboured under?

Herne. She ſaid, ſhe ſhould be glad Cranſtoun ſhould be taken, and brought to Juſtice; ſhe thought it would bring the whole to Light, he being the Occaſion of it all; for ſhe ſuffered (by being in Priſon) and was innocent, and knew nothing that it was Poiſon, no more than I, or any one Perſon in the Houſe.

Thomas Cawley ſworn.

I have known Miſs Blandy twenty Years, and upwards, and her Father likewiſe; I was intimate in the Family, and have frequently drank Tea there.

Counſel. What was her Behaviour to her Father, during your Knowledge of her?

Cawley. I never ſaw any other than dutiful.

Thomas Staverton ſworn.

Thomas Staverton. I have lived near them five or ſix-and-twenty Years, and upwards, and was always intimate with them; I always thought they were two happy People, he happy in a Daughter, and ſhe in a Father, as any in the World; the laſt Time ſhe was at our Houſe, ſhe expreſſed her Father had had many Wives laid out for him, but ſhe was ſatisfied he never would marry till ſhe was ſettled.

Croſs-examined.

King's Counſel. Did you obſerve, for the laſt three or four Months before his Death, that he declined in his Health?

Staverton. I obſerved he did; I do not ſay as to his Health; but he ſeemed to ſhrink, and I have often told my Wife, my old Friend Blandy was going.

King's Counſel. Had he loſt any Teeth latterly?

Staverton. I do not know as to that; he was a good-looking Man.

Priſ. Counſel. How old was he?

Staverton. I think he was ſixty-two.

Mary Davis ſworn.

I live at the Angel at Henley-Bridge; I remember Miſs Blandy coming over the Bridge the Day that Mr. Blandy was opened; ſhe was walking along, and a great Crowd of People after her. I ſeeing that, went and aſked what was the Matter; I aſked her where ſhe was going? She ſaid, To take a Walk for a little Air, for they were going to open her Father, and ſhe could not bear the Houſe. The Mob followed her ſo faſt, was the Reaſon I aſked her to go to my Houſe, which ſhe accepted.

Counſel. Did ſhe walk faſt, or ſlowly?

Mary Davis. She was walking as ſoftly as Foot could be laid to the Ground; it had not the leaſt Appearance of her going to make her Eſcape.

Robert Stoke ſworn.

Robert Stoke. I ſaw the Priſoner with Mrs. Davis the Day her Father was opened; I told her, I had Orders from the Mayor to detain her; ſhe ſaid, ſhe was very glad, becauſe the Mob was about.

Counſel. Did you think, from her Dreſs and Behaviour, ſhe was about an Attempt to make her Eſcape?

Stoke. No, it did not appear to me at all.

Croſs-examined.

King's Counſel. Was you there when Mr. and Mrs. Lane came in?

Stoke. I was.

King's Counſel. Did you hear the Words ſhe ſaid to Mr. Lane?

Stoke. I heard nothing at all.

Mr. Ford. As very unjuſtifiable and illegal Methods have been uſed to prejudice the World againſt Miſs Blandy; ſuch as, it is to be hoped, no Man will have the Boldneſs to repeat, I mean the printing and publiſhing the Examination of Witneſſes before her Trial; and as very ſcandalous Reports have been ſpread concerning her Behaviour, ever ſince her Impriſonment; it is deſired, that the Reverend Gentleman who has attended her as a Clergyman, may give an Account of her Conduct whilſt in Gaol, that ſhe may at leaſt be delivered of ſome of the Infamy ſhe at preſent lies under.

To which he was anſwered by the Court, That it was needleſs to call a Witneſs to that, as the Jury was only to regard what was depoſed in Court, and entirely to diſregard what Papers had been printed, and ſpread about, or any Report whatſoever.

The Honourable Mr. Bathurſt's Reply.

Your Lordſhips will, I hope, indulge me in a very few Words by way of Reply; and after the Length of Evidence which has been laid before the Jury, I will take up but little of your Lordſhips Time.

Gentlemen, you obſerve it has been proved to a Demonſtration, That Mr. Francis Blandy did die of Poiſon. It is as clearly proved, that he died of the Poiſon put into his Water-gruel upon the 5th of Auguſt; and that the Priſoner at the Bar put it in: For ſo much appears, not only from her own Confeſſion, but from a Variety of other Evidence.——The ſingle Queſtion, therefore, for your Conſideration is, Whether ſhe did it knowingly or ignorantly?

I admit, that in ſome of the Converſations which ſhe has had at different Times with different Perſons, ſhe has ſaid ſhe did it without knowing it to be Poiſon, or believing it to be ſo.——At the ſame time I beg Leave to obſerve, (as you will find when their Lordſhips ſum up the Evidence to you) that ſhe did not always make the ſame Pretence.

Examine then, Gentlemen, whether it is poſſible ſhe could do it ignorantly.

It has appeared in Evidence, that ſhe owned ſhe ſaw Mr. Cranſtoun put ſome Powder into her Father's Tea in the Month of Auguſt preceding; that ſhe had herſelf afterwards done the ſame; but ſhe ſaid ſhe ſaw no ill Effect from it, and therefore concluded it was not hurtful.——Her own Witneſs, Thomas Staverton, ſays, that for a Year paſt Mr. Blandy uſed to ſhrink in his Cloaths; that he made the Obſervation to his Wife, and told her his Friend Blandy was going.——Our Witneſſes have ſaid, That ſhe herſelf made the ſame Obſervation; told them, her Father looked very ill, as though he would not live; and ſaid, he would not live till October.

And here let me obſerve one Thing. She ſays, ſhe gave her Father this Powder to make him love her.——After having heard the great Affection with which the poor dying Man behaved towards her, can you think ſhe wanted any Charm for that Purpoſe? After having heard what her own Witneſſes have ſaid of the Father's Fondneſs for the Daughter, can you believe ſhe had Occaſion for any Love-powder?

But one Thing more. She knew her Father had taken this Powder in his Water-gruel upon the Monday Night, and upon the Tuesday Night; saw how violently he was affected by it; and yet would have had more of the same Gruel given to him upon the Wednesday.

Yet one Thing more. When she must have been fully satisfied that it was Poison, and that it would probably be the Occasion of his Death; she endeavoured to burn the Paper in which the rest of the Powder was contained, without ever acquainting the Physicians what she had given him, which might have been the Means for them to have prescribed what was proper for his Relief.

Still one Thing more. She is accused upon the Saturday; she attempts to burn the Powder upon the Saturday; and yet upon the Sunday she stays from Church, in order to write a Letter to Mr. Cranstoun.---In that Letter she stiles him her Dear Willy;---acquaints him, her Father is so bad that he must not be frightened, if he does not soon hear from her again;---says, she is herself better;---then cautions him to take care what he writes, lest his Letters should fall into a wrong Hand. Was this such a Letter as she would have wrote, if she had been innocent? if she had not known the Quality of the Powder? if she had been imposed upon by Mr. Cranstoun?

I will only make one other Observation, which is, that of all our Witnesses she has attempted to discredit only one. She called two Persons to contradict Elizabeth Binfield in regard to a scandalous Expression (which she was charged with, but which she positively denied ever to have made use of), in saying, She should be glad to see the Prisoner go up the Ladder, and swing.---They first called Ann James; she swore to the Expression, and said, It was after Miss Blandy was sent to Oxford Gaol. The next Witness, Mary Banks, who, at first, did not remember the Conversation, and, at last, did not remember who were present, said (upon being asked about the Time) that she was sure the Conversation happened upon the Thursday Night on which Mr. Blandy was opened, and during the Time that Miss Blandy was in the House. These two Witnesses, therefore, grosly contradict one another; consequently ought not to take away the Credit of Elizabeth Binfield. And let me observe, that Elizabeth Binfield proved nothing (besides some few Expressions used by Miss Blandy), but what was confirmed by the other Maid-Servant, Susan Gunnell.

I will, in Justice to the Prisoner, add (what has already been observed by Mr. Ford), that the printing what was given in Evidence before the Coroner, drawing odious Comparisons between her and former Parricides, and spreading scandalous Reports in regard to her Manner of demeaning herself in Prison, was a shameful Behaviour towards her, and a gross Offence against Public Justice. But you, Gentlemen, are Men of Sense, and upon your Oaths; you will therefore totally disregard whatever you have heard out of this Place. You are sworn to give a true Verdict between the King and the Prisoner at the Bar, according to the Evidence now laid before you: It is upon that we (who appear for the Publick) rest our Cause.---If, upon that Evidence, she appears to be innocent, in God's Name let her be acquitted: But if, upon that Evidence, she appears to be guilty, I am sure you will do Justice to the Public, and acquit your own Consciences.

Prisoner. It is said, I gave it my Father to make him fond of me.——There was no Occasion for that,—but to make him fond of Cranstoun.

Mr Baron Legge.

GENTLEMEN of the Jury——Mary Blandy, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted before you for the Murder of Francis Blandy, her late Father, by mixing Poison in Tea and Water-gruel, which she had prepared for him. To which she has pleaded, that she is Not Guilty.

In the first Place, Gentlemen, I would take Notice to you of a very improper and a very scandalous Behaviour towards the Prisoner, by certain People, who have taken upon themselves, very unjustifiably, to publish in Print, what they call Depositions, taken before the Coroner, in relation to this very Affair, which is now brought before you to determine. I hope you have not seen them; but if you have, I must tell you, as you are Men of Sense and Probity, that you must divest yourselves of every Prejudice that can arise from thence, and attend merely to the Evidence that has now been given before you in Court, which I shall endeavour to repeat to you, as exactly as I am able after so great a Length of Examination.

In Support of the Indictment, the Counsel for the Crown have called a great Number of Witnesses. In order to establish, in the first Place, the Fact, that Mr. Blandy died of Poison, they begin with Dr. Addington, who tells you, that he did attend Mr. Blandy in his last Illness; that he was first called in upon Saturday Evening, the 10th of August last; that the Deceased complained, that after drinking some Water-gruel on Monday Night, the 5th of August, he perceived a Grittiness in his Mouth, attended with a pricking Burning, especially about his Tongue and Throat; that he had a Pricking and Burning in his Stomach, accompanied with Sickness; a Pricking and Griping in his Bowels; but that afterwards he purged and vomited a good deal, which had lessened those Symptoms he had complained of; that on Tuesday Night, the 6th of August, he took more Gruel, and had immediately a Return of the same Symptoms, but more aggravated; that he had besides Hiccups, cold Sweats, great Anxieties, Prickings in every external as well as internal Part of his Body, which he compared to so many Needles, darting at the same Time into all Parts of him; but the Doctor tells you, at the Time he saw him, he said he was easy, except in his Mouth, his Nose, Lips, Eyes, and Fundament, and some transient Pinchings in his Bowels, which the Doctor then imputed to the Purgings and Vomitings, for he had had some bloody Stools; that he imputed the Sensations upwards to the Fumes of something he had taken the Monday and Tuesday before; that he inspected the Parts affected, and found his Tongue swelled, his Throat excoriated and a little swelled, his Lips dry, and Pimples on them, Pimples on the Inside of his Nostrils, and his Eyes blood-shot; (that next Morning he examined his Fundament, which he found surrounded with Ulcers) his Pulse trembled and intermitted, his Breath was interrupted and laborious, his Complexion yellowish, and he could not with the greatest Difficulty swallow a Tea-spoonful of the thinnest Liquid; that he then asked him, if he had given Offence to any Person whatever. His Daughter the Prisoner was then present, and she made Answer, that her Father was at Peace with all the World, and all the World with him. He then asked, if he had been subject to this kind of Complaint before: The Prisoner said, that he was subject to the Heart-burn and Colic, and she supposed this would go off as it used to do; that he then told them, that he suspected that by some means or other he had taken Poison: To which the Deceased replied, he did not know but he might, or Words to that Effect; but the Prisoner said, it was impossible. He returned to visit him on Sunday Morning, and found him something relieved; that he had had some Stools, but none bloody, which he took for a Spasm; that afterwards Norton the Apothecary gave him some Powder, which he said had been taken out of Gruel, which the Deceased had drank on Monday and Tuesday; this Powder he examined at Leisure, and believes it to be white Arsenic; that the same Morning a Paper was put into his Hands by one of the Maids, which she said had been taken out of the Fire, and which she saw Miss Blandy throw in; there was a Superscription on the Paper Powder to clean the Pebbles; there was so little of it, that he can't say positively what it was, but suspects it to be Arsenic, for he put it on his Tongue, and it felt like Arsenic, but some burnt Paper mixed with it had discoloured and softened it. He tells you, that on Monday Morning the Deceased was worse; all the Symptoms returned, and he complained more of his Fundament than before: He then desired the Assistance of some skilful Physician, because he looked upon him to be in the utmost Danger, and apprehended this Affair might come before a Court of Judicature: He asked the Deceased, if he really thought he was poisoned: to which he answered, that he really believed so, and thought he had taken it often, because his Teeth rotted faster than usual; he had frequent Prickings and Burnings in his Tongue and Throat, violent Heart-burn and frequent Stools, that carried it off again by unaccountable Fits of Vomiting and Purging; that he had had these Symptoms, especially after his Daughter had received a Present of Scotch Pebbles from Mr. Cranstoun. He then asked the Deceased who he suspected had given the Poison to him; the Tears then stood in his Eyes, but he forced a Smile, and said, A poor love-sick Girl! I forgive her: I always thought there was Mischief in those cursed Scotch Pebbles.

Dr. Lewis came that Evening, and Miss Blandy was sent into her Chamber, under a Guard, and all Papers in her Pocket, and all Instruments with which she might hurt herself, or any other Person, and her Keys, were taken from her, that nothing might be secreted; for it was not then publickly known that Mr. Blandy was poisoned, and they thought themselves accountable for her forth-coming. On Monday Night the Deceased mended again, and grew better and worse, unaccountably, as long as he lived. On Tuesday Morning every Thing growing worse, he became excessively weak, rambled in his Discourse, and grew delirious, had cold clammy Sweats, short Cough, and a deep Way of fetching his Breath; and he observed, upon those Occasions, that an ulcerous Matter issued from his Fundament. In the Midst of all this, whenever he recovered his Senses, he said he was better, and seemed quite serene, and told him, he thought himself like a Man bit by a mad Dog. I should be glad to drink, but I can't swallow. About Noon his Speech faltered more than before; he grew ghastly; was a shocking Sight; and had a very bad Night. On Wednesday Morning he recovered his Senses a little, and said he would make his Will in a few Days; but soon grew delirious again, sunk every Minute, and about Two in the Afternoon he died.

The Doctor tells you, he then thought, and still thinks, that he died of Poison; that he had no Symptoms while he lived, nor after he was dead, but what are common in People who have taken white Arsenic. He then read some Observations which he had made on the Appearances of his Body after he was dead; that his Back, and the Parts he lay on, were livid; the Fat on the Muscles of his Belly was loose in Texture, and approached Fluidity; the Muscles of the Belly were pale and flaccid; the Cawl yellower than natural; the Side next the Stomach and Intestines browniish; the Heart variegated with purple Spots; there was no Water in the Pericardium; the Lungs resembled Bladders filled with Air, blotted with black, like Ink; the Liver and Spleen were discoloured, and the former looked as if it had been boiled; a Stone was found in the Gall-bladder; the Bile was very fluid, and of a dirty yellow Colour, inclining to red; the Kidneys were stained with livid Spots; the Stomach and Bowels were inflated, and looked as if they had been pinched, and Blood stagnated in the Membranes; they contained slimy bloody Froth; their Coats were thin, smooth and flabby; the Inside of the Stomach was quite smooth, and, about the Orifices, inflamed, and appeared stabbed and wounded, like the White of an Eye just brushed by the Beards of Barley; that there was no Appearance of any natural Decay at all in him, and therefore he has no Doubt of his dying by Poison; and believes that Poison to have been white Arsenic; that the Deceased never gave him any Reason why he took the same Sort of Gruel a second Time, nor did he ask him. He tells you, as to the Powder that was given him by Norton, he made some Experiments with it the next Day, and some Part of it he gave to Mr. King, an experienced Chemist in Reading, who, upon Trial, found it to be Arsenic, as he told him; that he twice had Powder from Norton; and that what he had the second Time he kept entirely in his own Custody, and made Experiments with it a Month afterwards; that he never was out of the Room, while those Experiments were making, and he observed them to tally exactly with other Arsenic which he tried at the same Time. I need not mispend your Time in repeating the several Experiments which the Doctor has told you he made of it; he has been very minute and particular in his Account of them; and, upon the whole, concludes the same to have been Arsenic.

Dr. Lewis, the other Physician, who has likewise been sworn, stood by all the while, and confirms Dr. Addington's Evidence; tells you he observed the same Symptoms, and gives it absolutely as his Opinion, that Mr. Blandy died by Poison, of which he has not the least Doubt.

The next Witness that is called on the Part of the Crown is Benjamin Norton, who is an Apothecary at Henley: He tells you, he was sent for to Mrs. Mounteney's in Henley, on Thursday Morning, the 8th of August; that there was a Pan brought thither by Susan Gunnell, Mr. Blandy's Maid.

Maid-ſervant, with ſome Water-gruel in it; that he was aſked, what that Powder was in the Bottom of the Pan; to which he replied, That it was impoſſible to ſay, whilſt it was wet in the Gruel, but that he would take it out; that accordingly he did take it out, and laid it upon Paper, and gave it to Mrs. Mounteney to keep, which ſhe did till the Sunday following, when it was delivered to him, and he ſhewed it to Doctor Addington, to whom he gave ſome of it twice, and, by the Experiment made upon it with a hot Poker, he apprehended it to be of the Arſenic-kind; that the Powder he gave Doctor Addington was the ſame that he received from Mrs. Mounteney; that he has ſome of it ſtill by him, which he now produces in Court. He tells you, that he was ſent for to Mr. Blandy on Tueſday the 6th of Auguſt; that he was very ill, as he imagined, of the Colic, and complained of a violent Pain in his Stomach, attended with Reaching and Purging, and Swelling of the Bowels; that he took Phyſic on Wedneſday Morning, for which he found himſelf better; that on Thurſday he went there in the Morning, but did not then ſee him, but went again about Twelve o'Clock, and then ſaw him; he deſired to have more Phyſic, which he ſent him to take on the Friday Morning; that he has been uſed to attend Mr. Blandy, but that he never ſaw him thus out of Order; that the laſt Illneſs he had had was thirteen Months before. He tells you, that he has heard the Priſoner ſay, that ſhe had heard Muſic in the Houſe, which portended ſomething, and that Cranſtoun had ſeen her Father's Apparition; and this was ſome Months before her Father's Death; he ſays, that he can't tell who it was ſent for him, but that, when he came, he found Mr. Blandy and the Priſoner together; that he aſked, if he had eat any thing that had diſagreed with him; to which the Priſoner made Anſwer, nothing that ſhe knew of, except ſome Peas on the Saturday Night before: That, at that Time, he did not apprehend any thing of Poiſon, nor did Mr. Blandy mention any Thing of taking the Gruel to him: That on Saturday the Priſoner deſired he would take Care of her Father, and, if there were any Danger, call for Help; he told her, he thought he was in great Danger; and then ſhe begged Dr. Addington might be ſent for. Mr. Blandy himſelf would have deferred it till the next Day, but ſhe, notwithſtanding, ſent for him immediately: He tells you, that as to the Powder he found it to be gritty, and had no Smell; at firſt he could not tell what it was, till he took Notice of the old Woman's Symptoms to be the ſame as Mr. Blandy's; then he ſuſpected foul Play, and, from what he heard in the Family, ſuſpected Miſs Blandy.

Mrs. Mounteney is then called, who tells you, that ſhe remembers Suſan Gunnell bringing a Pan to her Houſe, with Water-gruel, and Powder at the Bottom of it, on Thurſday; that ſhe ſent for Norton the Apothecary, who took the Powder out, and laid it on white Paper, which he gave to her to keep till it was called for; that ſhe locked it up, and delivered the ſame to Norton on the Sunday following: She tells you, that the Priſoner always behaved dutifully to her Father, as far as ever ſhe ſaw, when in his Preſence; that ſhe did not mention the Paper left with her to any body, till it was fetched away on Sunday Morning, the 11th of Auguſt; that ſhe was not at Mr. Blandy's in that Time, and neither ſaw him, nor the Priſoner; but ſhe was there on the Sunday Afternoon, though ſhe did not then mention any Thing of it.

The next Witneſs is Suſan Gunnell, who tells you, that ſhe carried the Pan of Water-gruel to Mrs. Mounteney's from Mr. Blandy's, which had been made at his Houſe, the Sunday Se'nnight before his Death, by herſelf; that ſhe ſet it in the common Pantry, where all the Family uſed to go, and obſerved Nobody to be buſy there afterwards; but on Monday the Priſoner told her ſhe had been ſtirring her Papa's Water-gruel, and eating the Oatmeal out of the Bottom; that ſhe gave him a half-pint Mug of it that Monday Night, before he went to Bed; that ſhe ſaw the Priſoner take the Tea-ſpoon that was in the Mug, ſtir it about, and then put her Fingers to the Spoon, and rub them together, and then he drank ſome Part of it; that on Tueſday Morning ſhe did not ſee him when firſt he came down Stairs, and the firſt Time ſhe ſaw him was between Nine and Ten o'Clock, when Miſs Blandy and he were together; that he then ſaid he was not well, and going to lie down; that on Tueſday Evening Robert Harman bid her warm her Maſter ſome Water-gruel, for he was in Haſte for Supper; that ſhe warmed him ſome of the ſame, which Miſs Blandy carried into the Parlour, and ſhe believes he eat of it, for there was about half left in the Morning; that ſhe met him that Night, after the Water-gruel, as he was going up to Bed; as ſoon as he got into the Room, he called for a Baſon to reach, and ſeemed to be very ſick, by reaching ſeveral Times; the next Morning, about Six o'Clock, ſhe carried him up his Phyſic, when he told her he had had a pretty good Night, and was better; but he had vomited in the Night, as ſhe judges by the Baſon, which ſhe had left clean, and was then about half full; that on Wedneſday the Priſoner came into the Kitchen, and ſaid to her, that as her Maſter had taken Phyſic, he might want Water-gruel, therefore ſhe might give him the ſame again, and not leave her Work to make freſh, as ſhe was buſy ironing; to which ſhe anſwered, that it was ſtale, if there was enough of it; that it would not take much Time, and ſhe would make freſh, and accordingly did ſo; that ſhe had the Evening before taken up the Pan, and diſliked the Taſte, and thought it ſtale, but was now willing to taſte it again; that ſhe put the Pan to her Mouth, and drank ſome of it, and then obſerved ſome Whiteneſs at the Bottom, and told Betty Binfield, that ſhe never ſaw any Oatmeal Settlement ſo white before, whereupon Betty Binfield look'd at it, and ſaid, Oatmeal this! I think it looks as white as Flour; ſhe then took it out of Doors, where there was more Light, and putting her Finger to the Bottom of the Pan, found it gritty; upon which ſhe recollected, that ſhe had heard that Poiſon was white and gritty, which made her fear this might be Poiſon; ſhe therefore locked it up in a Cloſet, and on Thurſday Morning carried it to Mrs. Mounteney's, where Mr. Norton ſaw it. She tells you, that about ſix Weeks before Mr. Blandy's Death, ſhe was not very well herſelf, and Miſs Blandy then aſked her what was the Matter with her, and what ſhe had eat or drank; to which ſhe anſwered, That ſhe knew not what ailed her, but ſhe had taken nothing more than the reſt of the Family; upon which the Priſoner ſaid to her, Suſan, have you eat any Water-gruel? for I am told it hurts me, and may hurt you. To which ſhe anſwered, Madam, it cannot affect me, for I have eat none. She then mentions a Converſation, that Betty Binfield told her ſhe had with the Priſoner on the ſame Subject; but that you will hear from Betty Binfield herſelf. She then tells you, that on the Wedneſday Morning, after ſhe had given her Maſter his Phyſic, ſhe ſaw Ann Emmet the Chair-woman; and ſaid to her, Dame, you uſed to be fond of Water-gruel, here's a fine Meſs for you, which my Maſter left laſt Night; and thereupon warmed it, and gave it her; that the Woman ſat down on a Bench in the Kitchen, and drank ſome of it, but not all; and ſaid the Houſe ſmelt of Phyſic, and every Thing taſted of Phyſic, and ſhe muſt go out and reach before ſhe could finiſh it; that ſhe went out to the Waſh-houſe, as ſhe believes; that in about half an Hour ſhe followed her, and then found her in the Neceſſary-houſe reaching, and, as ſhe ſaid, purging; that the old Woman ſtaid there an Hour and an half, during which Time ſhe went frequently to her, and carried her Surfeit-water; ſhe ſaid ſhe was no better, and deſired ſome fair Water; upon that ſhe perſuaded her to come into the Houſe; but ſhe ſaid ſhe was not able without Help; that then ſhe led her in, and put her in a Chair by the Fire, where the Coughing and Reaching continued; that ſhe ſtaid in the Houſe about half an Hour, and grew worſe; and ſhe thought her in a Fit, or ſeized with Death; that about Nine of the Clock that Morning, ſhe went up to Miſs Blandy, and acquainted her, that her Dame had been very ill, and complained that the Smell of Phyſic had made her ſick, and at the ſame Time told her, that ſhe had eat nothing but a little of her Maſter's Water-gruel, which could not hurt her; to which the Priſoner ſaid, that ſhe was glad ſhe was not below Stairs, for ſhe ſhould have been ſhocked to have ſeen her poor Dame ſo ill. She tells you, that ſometimes the Priſoner talked affectionately of her Father, and at other Times but middling, and called him an old Villain for uſing an only Child ſo. Sometimes ſhe wiſhed for his long Life, and ſometimes for his Death; and would often ſay, that ſhe was very unkward; and that if her Father was dead, ſhe would go to Scotland, and live with Lady Cranſtoun. That by her Father's Conſtitution he might live twenty Years; but ſometimes would ſay, ſhe did not think he looked ſo well. She remembers Dr. Addington being ſent for on Saturday Evening; and tells you, that the Priſoner was not debarred going into her Father's Room till Sunday Night, when Mr. Norton brought her down with him, and told this Witneſs not to ſuffer any Perſon to go into her Maſter's Room, except herſelf, who looked after him. That about Ten of the Clock, on Monday Morning, the Priſoner came into the Room after Mr. Norton; that ſhe then fell on her Knees to her Father, and ſaid, Sir, Baniſh me where you pleaſe, do with me what you pleaſe, ſo you do but forgive me; and as for Cranſtoun, I will never ſee him, ſpeak to him, or write to him more, as long as I live, if you will forgive me: To which the Deceaſed made Anſwer, I forgive thee, my Dear, and I hope God will forgive thee; but thee ſhouldſt have conſidered better, before thee attempteſt any Thing againſt thy Father; thee ſhouldſt have conſidered I was thy own Father: That the Priſoner then ſaid, Sir, as to your Illneſs I am intirely innocent: To which the Witneſs replied, Madam, I believe you muſt not ſay you are intirely innocent, for the Powder left in the Water-gruel, and the Paper of Powder taken out of the Fire, are now in ſuch Hands, that they muſt be publickly produced. The Witneſs then told her, that ſhe believed ſhe had herſelf taken, about ſix Weeks before, a Doſe in Tea, that was prepared for her Maſter: To which the Priſoner anſwered, I have put no Powder in Tea, I have put Powder in Water-gruel; if you have received any Injury, I am entirely innocent; it was given me with another Intent: The Deceaſed hearing this, turned himſelf in his Bed, and ſaid, Oh, ſuch a Villain! Come to my Houſe, eat of the beſt and drink of the beſt my Houſe could afford, ſhould take away my Life, and ruin my Daughter. Oh! my Dear, thee muſt hate that Man; thee muſt hate the Ground he goes on; thee canſt not help it: That the Priſoner replied, Sir, your Tenderneſs to me is like a Sword to my Heart; every Word you ſay is like Swords piercing my Heart, much worſe than if you were to be ever ſo angry; I muſt down on my Knees, and beg you will not curſe me. To which her Father anſwered, I curſe thee, my Dear! how ſhouldſt think I could curſe thee! No; I bleſs thee, and hope God will bleſs thee, and amend thy Life. Do, my Dear, go out of the Room; ſay no more, leſt thee ſhouldſt ſay any Thing to thy own Prejudice: Go to thy Uncle Stevens, take him for thy Friend: Poor Man! I am ſorry for him. And that then the Priſoner went directly out of the Room. This Witneſs further tells you, that on the Saturday before, ſhe was in the Kitchen about Twelve of the Clock at Noon, when the Priſoner having wrote the Direction of a Letter to her Uncle Stevens, and going to the Fire to dry it, ſhe obſerved her put a Paper or two into the Fire, and ſaw her thruſt them down with a Stick; that Elizabeth Binfield then putting ſome freſh Coals on, ſhe believes kept the Paper from being conſumed; ſoon after which the Priſoner left the Kitchen, and ſhe herſelf acquainted Betty Binfield that the Priſoner had been burning ſomething; that Betty Binfield aſked where; and the Witneſs pointed to the Corner of the Grate; whereupon Betty Binfield moved a large Coal, and took out a Paper, and gave it to her; that it was a ſmall Piece of Paper, with Writing upon it, viz. The Powder to clean the Pebbles, to the beſt of her Remembrance. She did not read it herſelf, but Betty Binfield did, and told her what it was; that about Eleven or Twelve of the Clock that Night ſhe delivered this Paper to Betty Binfield again, but it had never been out of her Pocket till that Time. She tells you, that before this, upon the ſame Saturday Morning, ſhe had been in her Maſter's Room about Seven of the Clock, to carry him ſomething to drink, and when he had drank it, ſhe ſaid to him, Sir, I have ſomething to communicate to you, which nearly concerns your Health and your Family; I believe you have got ſomething in your Water-gruel that I am afraid has hurt you, and I believe Miſs Blandy put it in, by her coming into the Waſh-houſe on Monday, and ſaying, that ſhe had been ſtirring her Papa's Water-gruel, and eating the Oatmeal out of it: Upon which he ſaid, I find I have ſomething not right, my Head is not right as it uſed to be, nor has been for ſome Time: This Witneſs told him, that ſhe had found a Powder in the Pan; upon which he ſaid to her, Doſt thee know any Thing of this Powder? didſt thee ever ſee any of it? To which ſhe anſwered, No, none but what ſhe ſaw in the Water-gruel; he then then asked her, Dost know where she had this Powder, or canst guess? To which she replied, I cannot guess any where, except from Mr. Cranstoun; my Reason to suspect that is, Miss Blandy has lately had Letters oftener than usual: Her Master then said, Now you mention it, I remember, when he was at my House, he talked of a particular Poison they had in his Country: Oh! that Villain! that ever he came into my House. She likewise told him, that she had shewn the Powder to Mr. Norton, but he could not tell what it was, as it was wet; but whatever it was, it ought not to be there; her Master expressed some Surprize, and said, Mr. Norton not know! that's strange! a Person so much used to Drugs. She told him, Mr. Norton thought it would be proper for him (her Father) to seize her Pockets, with her Keys and Papers: To which he said, I cannot do it; I cannot shock her so much.—But canst not thee take out a Letter or two, which she may think she has dropped by Chance? The Witness told him, No, Sir, I have no Right, she is your Daughter; you may do it, and nobody else. She tells you, she cannot say how long before this it was, that Ann Emmet had been sick with the Tea; that Miss Blandy then sent her Whey and Broth, a Quart or three Pints at a Time, once a Day, or every other Day; that she herself once drank a Dish of Tea on a Sunday Morning, out of her Master's Dish, which was not well relished, and she thought somebody had been taking Salts in that Cup; and this was about six Weeks and three Days before her Master's Death; that she found no ill Effect from it till after Dinner that Day; she had then a Hardness at her Stomach, which she apprehended was from eating plentifully of Beans at Dinner; that afterwards she seemed to have some Indigestion, and had a remarkable Trembling upon her; that she had no other Symptoms for three Days, but afterwards, for about three Days more, she was troubled with a Reaching every Morning. She says, she tasted the Water-gruel twice; once on the Tuesday, when she was mixing it for her Master, and again on the Wednesday, but found no remarkable Disorder till about Two o'Clock on the Wednesday Morning before her Master's Death, when she was seized with Convulsions. She says, that her Throat continued troublesome for six or seven Weeks after she had drank the Tea, and continued ill for three Weeks after her Master's Death; she remembers once that the Prisoner had a large Box of Linnen and some Pebbles from Mr. Cranstoun, in the Spring, before her Master's Death, and a small Box of Scotch Pebbles afterwards, about three Months before his Death; that the Prisoner shewed the Pebbles to many of her Acquaintance, but the Witness never heard of Powder to clean them; she tells you, that about a Year before his Death, her Master had a Cold, but she does not remember he was so ill as to send for the Apothecary; that he used to be equally complaining of the Gravel, Gout, and Heart-burn for twelve Years; knows nothing particular of any Complaint but the Heart-burn, and that he may have complained of all the Time she has lived in the House; but she is not positive.

She says, the Prisoner's Behaviour to her Father, in general, seemed to be dutiful, but she used undutiful Expressions in her Passions; that there had been no Conversation between her Master and the Prisoner, before her asking Forgiveness, but a Message sent by him to her, that he was willing to forgive her, if she would bring that Villain to Justice; in all he said afterwards, he seemed to speak of his Daughter, as if he believed her innocent of any Intention to hurt him, and looked on Cranstoun as the first Mover and Contriver of all, and had said, Poor unfortunate Girl! that ever she should be led away by such a Villain to do such a Thing! She believes he thought his Daughter unacquainted with the Effects of the Powder; that the Prisoner, during his Illness, kept him Company, and directed every Thing for him as for herself; the Prisoner knew her Father was ill on Monday and Tuesday Nights, but won't take upon her to say, that she knew what was the Cause of it; but she knew that the Chairwoman had been ill on the Wednesday Morning, before she told the Witness that the old Water-gruel would serve for her Father.

The next Witness is Elizabeth Binfield, who tells you, that she was a Servant to the Deceased almost three Years before his Death; that he first complained of unusual Pains and Prickings, about a Fortnight before his Death; that she has often heard the Prisoner mention Walkings, and Music, that she had heard in the House; that she thought it to be her Mother; and three Quarters of a Year before her Master's Death, the Prisoner told her that the Music presaged his Death, and continued talking in the same Way to the Time of it; that she has often heard her say, he would die before October; that the Prisoner told her, that Mr. Cranstoun had informed her, that a famous Woman, one Mrs. Morgan, who lived in Scotland, or London, but which the Witness cannot say, had said so; that the Prisoner used to appear glad when she spoke of the Prospect of her Father's Death, for that then she should be released from all her Fatigues, and be happy. She tells you, she heard the Prisoner say, that her Father complained of a Ball of Fire in his Guts, before the Monday on which he took the Water-gruel; she tells you, that she remembers that Ann Emmet, the Chairwoman, was ill about five or six Weeks before this Time, and that the Prisoner ordered her White-wine Whey and Broth; that she herself made the Broth two or three Times, two Quarts at a Time; she says, that on Saturday, the 10th of August, the Paper was taken out of the Fire by herself, which she looks upon, and says, she really believes it to be the same which she gave to Susan Gunnell, had again from her, and then delivered to Dr. Addington and Mr. Norton. She tells you, that when Susan Gunnell was ill, the Prisoner asked this Witness, if Susan had taken any of her Father's Water-gruel; and upon her answering, Not that I know, the Prisoner said, If she does, she may do for herself, may I tell you: With this Conversation she acquainted Susan Gunnell, about a Month or six Weeks before her Master's Death, in which Particular she is confirmed by Susan Gunnell. She says further, that she heard the Prisoner say, Who would grudge to send an old Father to Hell for 10,000*l?* And this she introduced by talking of young Girls being kept out of their Fortunes. She has heard the Prisoner often curse her Father, and call him Rascal and Villain; she says, that Mr. Cranstoun had been at her Master's about three Quarters of a Year before his Death, and she believes her Master did not approve of his being so much with his Daughter, as she judged by his Temper; but she does not believe he debarred his Daughter from keeping him Company. She says, that upon Saturday, the 10th of August, she was in the Kitchen when her Master was shaving, and the Prisoner was there; and her Master said he had once like to have been poisoned at a Public-house; to which the Prisoner answered, That she remembered it very well: Her Master said, that one of the Company died immediately, the other is now dead, but it is my Fortune to be poisoned at last; and then looked hard at the Prisoner, who appeared in great Confusion, and seemed all in a Tremble; her Master said further, that it was white Arsenic that was put into their Wine. This Witness then tells you, that she sat up with the Prisoner the Night her Father died, till Three o'Clock, but the Prisoner went to Bed about One; that they had no Discourse at all of her Father; but the Prisoner asked her if she would go away with her, and offered, if she would go to the Bell, or the Lion, and hire a Post-Chaise, she would give her fifteen Guineas at getting into the Chaise, and ten Guineas more when they got to London; that on the Witness refusing to comply with this Request, the Prisoner burst into a Laughter, and said she was only joking. She tells you further, that she heard the Prisoner tell Dr. Addington that she had given the Powder to her Father before, and then it was in Tea; that she was afraid of a Discovery, so flung it away, and filled the Cup up again, which Susan Gunnell drank, and was ill for a Week after. She says, that upon Monday, the 5th of August, the Prisoner came into the Wash-house, and said that she had been in the Pantry, eating Oatmeal out of her Father's Gruel, which she little regarded then; but the same Day in the Afternoon she saw the Prisoner in the Pantry take a Tea-spoon, and stir the Water-gruel which was in a Pan, and then rubbed it between her Fingers; that on the Tuesday Evening the Prisoner came into the Kitchen to her, and said, Betty, if one Thing should happen, will you go into Scotland with me? To which she said, Madam, I do not know. What, says the Prisoner, you are unwilling to leave your Friends? To which the Witness replied, that if she should go there, and not like it, it would be expensive travelling. She says, that on Monday Morning, the 12th of August, she went on a Message from the Prisoner, to beg of her Father that she might speak one Word with him, which being granted, the Prisoner went up; and that she afterwards met the Prisoner coming out of her Father's Room, when she clasped the Witness round the Neck, burst out a-crying, and said to her, Susan and you are the two honestest Servants in the World; you deserve to be imaged in Gold for your Honesty; half my Fortune will not make you Amends for your Honesty to my Father. She tells you, that her Master had been out of order about twelve Months before this Time; and that it was at the Time when Susan Gunnell was ill by drinking the Tea, that the Prisoner cautioned her about Susan's drinking her Father's Water-gruel.

Dr. Addington having been appealed to by the last Witness, in the Course of her Evidence, is again called up, and confirms all that this Witness has said, except, he does not remember the Circumstance of Susan Gunnell's being ill with the Tea.

He says, that the Prisoner always told him she thought it an innocent Powder, but said, it was impossible to express her Horror, that she was the Cause of her Father's Death; tho' she protested that she thought it innocent when she gave it; for Mr. Cranstoun had assured her that he used to take it himself, and called it a Love-Powder; that she had a Letter from him, directing her to give it in Gruel, as she had informed him it did not mix in Tea; that for her own Part she desired Life for no other Purpose, than only to go thro' a severe Penance for her Sins; that on her being pressed by him to discover all she knew relating to Cranstoun, her Answer was, that she was fully conscious of her own Guilt, and would not add Guilt to Guilt, for she looked on Cranstoun as her Husband, tho' the Ceremony had not passed between them. He tells you further, that he does not remember that she gave him any satisfactory Answer to any of the Questions which he put to her, which he has repeated to you, and which are very material ones, but always persisted that she was intirely ignorant of the Effects of the Powder, till she saw them on her Father; and often said, Pray God send it may not kill him, after he had told her, and her Father too, the Danger of her Father, and that he apprehended her to be undone: He then tells you he attended Susan Gunnell, who had the same Symptoms with the Deceased, but in a less Degree; he also attended Ann Emmet, who had the same Symptoms, and told her that she was poisoned.

Alice Emmet is then called, who is Daughter to Ann Emmet the old Chairwoman, who gives you an Account that her Mother was Chairwoman at Mr. Blandy's in June last, in the Time of Hay-harvest; that she was then taken sick, was seized in the Night-time with a Vomiting and Purging, and this Witness went in the Morning to the Prisoner, by her Mother's Desire, and acquainted her with the Condition she was in; that the Prisoner said she was sorry, and would send her something to drink, which she did in about an Hour or two afterwards.

The next Witness is Mr. Littleton, who had been Clerk to the Deceased about two Years, and tells you he came Home from his Father's in Warwickshire, upon the 9th of August last; that the next Morning the Prisoner, her Father, and himself, were at Breakfast together; that they stayed for the Deceased some Time; that when he came, he appeared to be ill and in great Agony; that he had always a particular Cup to himself; that he tasted his Tea, and did not like it, but said it had a gritty bad Taste, and asked the Prisoner if she had not put too much of the black Stuff in it (meaning Bohea Tea); the Prisoner said, it was as usual; he then tasted it again, and said it had a bad Taste, and looked very particularly at her; she seemed in a Hurry, and walked out of the Room; the Deceased then poured the Tea into the Cat's Bason, and went away. Soon after the Prisoner came into the Room again, when he told her that he thought the Deceased was very ill, for that he could not eat his Breakfast; on which she asked what he had done with it; and upon his acquainting her that it was poured into the Cat's Bason, she seemed a good deal confused. That the next Day, being Sunday Morning, Mr. Blandy of Kingston came to their House, and went to Church along with him; that after they returned from Church, the Prisoner desired this Witness to walk with her and Mr. Blandy in the Garden, when she put a Letter into his Hand, and bid him direct it as usual, which he understood underſtood to be to Mr. Cranſtoun, (having been uſed to direct others before) to ſeal it, and put it in the Poſt. He tells you, he had then heard ſo much, that he opened the Letter, tranſcribed it, carried it to Mr. Norton, and read it to the Deceaſed, who only ſaid, Poor love-ſick Girl! what won't a Girl do for a Man ſhe loves? This Letter he has now looked at; tells you, that it is wrote worſe than uſual, therefore he cannot ſwear whether 'tis her Hand or no, but he can ſwear 'tis the ſame ſhe gave him; the Letter itſelf has been read to you, and I will make no Remarks upon it. He tells you, that after Mr. Cranſtoun was gone from Henley in Auguſt 1750, he has often heard the Priſoner ſay, that ſhe heard Muſic, which portended Death in the Family, and ſometimes thought it might be herſelf, ſometimes her Father, becauſe he was ſo much broken; that he has heard her ſay, Death would happen before October; that he has often heard her curſe her Father, damn him for a Rogue and a toothleſs old Dog, within two Months of his Death, and a great while before; that he has told her himſelf, that he thought Mr. Blandy ſeemed broken; upon which ſhe ſaid ſhe thought ſo too, and that the Muſic portended his Death.

Robert Harman is called next, who tells you, that he was Servant to Mr. Blandy at the Time of his Death; that the Night his Maſter died, the Priſoner aſked him where he ſhould live next; on which he told her he did not know; and ſhe then aſked him if he would go away with her; and upon his ſaying he did not care to do ſo, ſhe told him no Hurt would come to him, but it would be 500*l.* in his Way, and wanted him to go away then immediately. He ſays, the Priſoner behaved well to her Father, and all the Family, as far as he knows, and never heard her ſwear about her Father.

The next Witneſs is Richard Fiſher, who was one of the Jury on Inſpection of the Body of the Deceaſed. On Thurſday, the 15th of Auguſt, he was informed that Miſs Blandy was gone over Henley-Bridge, and went to her at the Angel; when he came into the Room, he told her he was ſorry for her Misfortune, and aſked her, if ſhe would not be glad to go Home again? She ſaid ſhe ſhould, but could not get through the Mob; upon which he got a covered Poſt-chaiſe, and carried her Home. As they were going, ſhe aſked him, if ſhe was to go to Oxford that Night; that he told her he believed not; when he brought her to her Father's Houſe, he delivered her up to the Conſtable; that after this he was upon the Jury, and when he went to her again, ſhe aſked him how it was likely to go with her; upon which he told her, he was afraid very hardly, unleſs ſhe could produce Letters or Papers of Conſequence to bring Cranſtoun to Juſtice. Upon which ſhe ſaid, Dear Mr. Fiſher, I have burnt thoſe Letters that would have brought him to Juſtice, and gave a Key out of her Pocket to ſearch a Drawer for Letters; but none being found, ſhe ſaid, My Honour to him (meaning Cranſtoun) will prove my Ruin.

Mrs. Lane is then called, who ſays, ſhe went to the Angel along with her Huſband, when the Priſoner was there; the firſt Word ſhe heard her Huſband ſay was, if ſhe was guilty, ſhe would ſuffer according to Law; upon which the Priſoner ſtampt on the Ground, and the firſt thing ſhe heard her ſay was, O that damned Villain! then pauſed a little, and went on again, But why do I blame him? I am more to blame myſelf, for it was I gave it him, and knew the Conſequence. Upon being aſked, whether ſhe ſaid, I knew, or I know, the Witneſs tells you, that ſhe will not be poſitive which, but the Priſoner was in a Sort of Agony; whichever Way it was, it may make ſome little Difference, but nothing material.

Mr. Lane, the Huſband of the laſt Witneſs, is then called, and tells you, that he went into the Room before his Wife; that the Priſoner roſe and met him, told him he was a Stranger to her, but as he appeared like a Gentleman, ſhe aſked him what they would do with her? That he told her, ſhe would be committed to the County Gaol, and tried at the Aſſizes; if her Innocence appeared, ſhe would be acquitted; if not, ſhe would ſuffer accordingly. Upon which ſhe ſtampt with her Foot, and ſaid, O that damned Villain! But why do I blame him? I am more to blame.— That then Mr. Littleton came in, which took off his Attention; that he did not hear what followed, ſo as to be able to give an Account of it.

The Letter from the Priſoner to Captain Cranſtoun, without any Date to it, which was opened by Littleton, has then been read to you, and with that the Counſel for the Crown conclude their Evidence.

The Priſoner in her Defence complains of hard Uſage ſhe has met with, denies her ever ſpeaking ill of her Father, owns herſelf to be paſſionate, and complains that Words of Heat, upon Family-Affairs, have been miſconſtrued and applied to an ill Intention in her; that ſhe was not in her Senſes when ſhe loſt her Father, nor in a proper Dreſs to make her Eſcape when ſhe went over Henley-Bridge; that ſhe was taken in at the Angel by the Woman of the Houſe out of mere Compaſſion, and was then deſirous to put herſelf under the Protection of the Town-Serjeant; that, during her Confinement, ſhe was not ſuffered to have decent Attendance for a Woman; that ſhe was affronted by her own Servants, cruelly traduced, and heavily ironed, without any reaſonable Cauſe; that ſhe thought the Powder innocent, and never had a Thought of hurting her Father; but her own Ruin is effected by ſuch an Imputation upon her, and her Appearance here, without her being convicted. She then calls her Witneſſes, and the firſt is Ann James, who tells you ſhe lives at Henley, and uſed to waſh at Mr. Blandy's Houſe; that ſhe remembers that ſome time before Mr. Blandy's Illneſs, there was a Difference between the Priſoner and Elizabeth Binfield, and that the latter was to go away; and that ſhe has heard Elizabeth Binfield curſe the Priſoner, and damn her for a Bitch, and ſay, ſhe would not ſtay; that ſince this Affair happened, ſhe heard her ſay (ſpeaking of the Priſoner), Damn her for a black Bitch, ſhe ſhould be glad to ſee her go up the Ladder, and ſwing. She tells you, that when this Converſation happened, the Priſoner was gone to Gaol; that it was in Mr. Blandy's Kitchen; and that Nurſe Edwards, Mary Seymour, and Mary Banks, were preſent.

Elizabeth Binfield is then called up again, and abſolutely denies the Words ſhe is charged with: She ſays, ſhe never acquainted the Witneſs with any Quarrel ſhe had had, to the beſt of her Remembrance, but that ſhe had ſome few Words of Difference with the Priſoner, and had ſaid, that ſhe was to go away.

Mary Banks is then called, who ſays, That ſhe was in Mr. Blandy's Kitchen while he was dead in the Houſe; but ſhe does not remember who was in Company, nor any Converſation that paſſed between Elizabeth Binfield and Ann James, till the Words are directly put into her Mouth, and then ſhe recollects that Elizabeth Binfield ſaid, ſhe ſhould be glad to ſee Miſs Blandy, that black Bitch, go up the Ladder to be hanged; but ſhe tells you, this was on the Night that Mr. Blandy was opened, and that the Priſoner was then in the Houſe.

Theſe two Witneſſes are called to impeach the Credit of Elizabeth Binfield, as having a Prejudice againſt the Priſoner; but I ſee no great Streſs to be laid on their Evidence, for they manifeſtly contradict one another, but do not falſify her in any one Thing ſhe has ſaid.

The next Witneſs that ſhe calls is Edward Herne, who was a Servant to Mr. Blandy eighteen Years ago, and has left his Place about twelve Years; but he has been very ſeldom without going three or four Days a-Week to his Houſe ever ſince; that the Priſoner's general Behaviour to her Father and the Family was as well as any Body could do, with Affection and Duty, as far as ever he ſaw; that on the Monday Night before Mr. Blandy died, he went to the Houſe, and that neither the Priſoner nor he could ſpeak for ſome Minutes, which he attributed to her great Concern; that ſhe was put into his Cuſtody that Night; that on hearing the Groans of her Father, he went in to him, at her Deſire, to enquire how he did; that he never heard her ſwear, or ſpeak diſreſpectfully of her Father: He ſays, he was not in the Way when ſhe went over Henley-Bridge (being ſent for to dig a Grave, he being the Sexton); that he has ſeen her ſince her Confinement at Oxford, and ſhe told him, that Captain Cranſtoun had before put ſome Powder in her Father's Tea; that ſhe turned about, and when ſhe turned again he was ſtirring it in; that on a Report that Captain Cranſtoun was taken, ſhe wrung her Hands, and ſaid, She hoped in God it was true, that he might be brought to Juſtice as well as herſelf; that as ſhe was to ſuffer the Puniſhment due to her Crime, he might do ſo too; but at the ſame time ſhe declared, that when Cranſtoun put the Powder into the Tea, and ſhe herſelf did ſo afterwards, ſhe knew no ill Effects of it, or ſaw any Harm from it; but if he were taken, it would bring the whole to light; for ſhe was innocent, and knew no more of its being Poiſon than any Perſon there.

Thomas Cawley, the next Witneſs, ſays, That he has known the Priſoner twenty Years and upwards; that he was intimate in the Family, and never ſaw any other than the Behaviour of a dutiful Daughter from her.

Thomas Staverton, That he has known the Priſoner five or ſix-and-twenty Years; that he has lived near the Family, and always thought that her Father and ſhe were very happy in each other. He has obſerved that Mr. Blandy was declining in his Health; for four Years or more he ſeemed to ſhrink, and believes he was about ſixty-two Years of Age.

Mary Davis is the next Witneſs; ſhe lives at the Angel by Henley-Bridge, and remembers the Priſoner coming over, the Day her Father was opened; that ſhe was walking along, with a great Crowd after her; that ſhe went to her, and aſked her what was the Matter, and where ſhe was going? The Priſoner ſaid, ſhe was going to walk for the Air, for that they were going to open her Father, and that ſhe could not bear the Houſe; the Mob followed ſo cloſe, that ſhe invited the Priſoner into her Houſe, which ſhe accepted, and was walking gently; and had not the Appearance of making an Eſcape.

Robert Stokes tells you, he knows the laſt Witneſs Mrs. Davis, and ſaw the Priſoner with her in her Houſe the Day her Father was opened; that he was ordered by the Mayor to take Care of the Priſoner, which ſhe ſaid ſhe was very glad of, becauſe the Mob was about; and he did not obſerve any Inclination or Attempt whatſoever to make an Eſcape.

This, Gentlemen, is the Subſtance of the Evidence on both Sides, as nearly as I can recollect it. I have not wilfully omitted or miſ-ſtated any Part of it; but, if I have, I hope the Gentlemen who are of Counſel on either Side, will be ſo kind as to ſet me right.

A very tragical Story it is, Gentlemen, that you have heard, and upon which you are now to form your Judgment, and give your Verdict.

The Crime with which the Priſoner ſtands charged, is of the moſt heinous Nature and blackeſt Dye, attended with Conſiderations that ſhock human Nature, being not only Murder, but Parricide——the Murder of her own Father.——But the more atrocious, the more flagrant the Crime is, the more clearly and ſatisfactory you will expect that it ſhould be made out to you.

In all Caſes of Murder, it is of Neceſſity, that there ſhould be Malice aforethought, which is the Eſſence of, and conſtitutes the Offence: But that Malice may be either expreſs, or implied by the Law: Expreſs Malice muſt ariſe from the previous Acts or Declarations of the Party offending; but implied Malice may ariſe from Numbers of Circumſtances, relating either to the Nature of the Act itſelf, the Manner of executing it, the Perſon killing, or the Perſon killed, from which the Law will as certainly infer Malice, as where it is expreſs.

Poiſon, in particular, is in its Nature ſo ſecret, and withal ſo deliberate, that wherever that is knowingly given, and Death enſues, the ſo putting to Death can be no other than wilful and malicious.

In the preſent Caſe, which is to be made out by Circumſtances, great Part of the Evidence muſt reſt upon Preſumption, in which the Law makes a Diſtinction: A ſlight or probable Preſumption only has little or no Weight: but a violent Preſumption amounts in Law to full Proof, that is, where Circumſtances ſpeak ſo ſtrongly, that to ſuppoſe the contrary, would be abſurd: I mention this to you, that you may fix your Attention on the ſeveral Circumſtances that have been laid before you, and conſider, whether you can collect from them ſuch a Preſumption, as the Law calls a violent Preſumption, and from which you muſt conclude the Priſoner to be guilty: I would obſerve further, that where that Preſumption neceſſarily ariſes from Circumſtances, they are more convincing and ſatisfactory, than any other Kind of Evidence, becauſe Facts cannot lye.

I cannot now go through the Evidence again, but you will conſider the whole together, and from thence determine, what you think it amounts to. Thus far is undeniably true, and agreed on all Sides, that Mr. Blandy died by Poiſon; and that that Poiſon was adminiſtered to him by his Daughter, the Priſoner at the Bar. What you are to try, is reduced to this ſingle Queſtion, Whether the Priſoner, at the Time ſhe gave it to her Father, knew that it was Poiſon, and what Effect it would have?

If you believe, that ſhe knew it to be Poiſon, the other Part, viz. that ſhe knew the Effect, is conſequential, and you muſt find her guilty: On the other hand, if you are ſatisfied, from her general Character, from what has been ſaid by the Evidence on her Part, and from what ſhe has ſaid herſelf, that ſhe did not know it to be Poiſon, nor had any malicious Intention againſt her Father, you ought to acquit her. But if you think ſhe knowingly gave Poiſon to her Father, you can do no other than find her guilty.

The Jury conſulted together about five Minutes, and then turned to the Court.

Cl. of Arraigns. Gentlemen, are you all agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?—Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Mary Blandy, hold up thy Hand (Which ſhe did). Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner: How ſay you, is Mary Blandy Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof ſhe ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty?—Jury. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had ſhe at the Time of the ſame Felony and Murder committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge?

Jury. None.

Cl. of Arr. Hearken to your Verdict as the Court hath recorded it. You ſay that Mary Blandy is guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof ſhe ſtands indicted; and that ſhe had not any Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the Time of the ſaid Felony and Murder committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge; and ſo you ſay all.

Cl. of Arr. Mary Blandy, hold up thy Hand. You have been indicted of Felony and Murder. You have been thereupon arraigned, and pleaded thereto Not Guilty, and for your Trial you have put yourſelf upon God and your Country, which Country have found you Guilty. What have you now to ſay for yourſelf, why the Court ſhould not proceed to give Judgment of Death upon you according to Law?

Cryer. Oyez! My Lords the King's Juſtices do ſtrictly charge and command all Manner of Perſons to keep Silence, whilſt Sentence of Death is paſſing on the Priſoner at the Bar, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

Mr. Baron LEGGE.

Mary Blandy, you have been indicted for the Murder of your Father, and for your Trial have put yourſelf upon God and your Country: That Country has found you Guilty.

You have had a long and a fair Trial, and ſorry I am, that it falls to my Lot to acquaint you, that I am now no more at Liberty to ſuppoſe you innocent, than I was before to preſume you Guilty.

You are convicted of a Crime ſo dreadful, ſo horrid in itſelf, that human Nature ſhudders at it—The wilful Murder of your own Father!—A Father, by all Accounts, the moſt fond, the moſt tender, the moſt indulgent that ever lived:—That Father with his dying Breath forgave you:—May your heavenly Father do ſo too!

It is hard to conceive, that any Thing could induce you to perpetrate an Act ſo ſhocking, ſo impoſſible to reconcile to Nature or Reaſon. One ſhould have thought, your own Senſe, your Education, and even the natural Softneſs of your Sex, might have ſecured you from an Attempt ſo barbarous and ſo wicked.

What Views you had, or what was your Intention, is beſt known to yourſelf: With God and your own Conſcience be it. At this Bar, we can judge only from Appearances, and from the Evidence produced to us: But do not deceive yourſelf; remember you are very ſhortly to appear before a much more awful Tribunal, where no Subterfuge can avail; no Art, no Diſguiſe can ſcreen you from the Searcher of all Hearts: He revealeth the deep and ſecret Things, he knoweth what is in the Darkneſs, and the Light dwelleth with him.

Let me adviſe you to make the beſt and wiſeſt Uſe of the little Time you are likely to continue in this World: Apply to the Throne of Grace, and endeavour to make your Peace with that Power, whoſe Juſtice and Mercy are both infinite.

Nothing now remains but to pronounce the Sentence of the Law upon you; which is,

That you are to be carried to the Place of Execution, and there hanged by the Neck until you are dead: And may God of his infinite Mercy receive your Soul!

The Priſoner then addreſſed herſelf to the Judge in this Manner:

" My Lord, as your Lordſhip has been ſo good to ſhew ſo much Candour " and Impartiality in the Courſe of my Trial, I have one Favour more " to beg, which is, that your Lordſhip would pleaſe to allow me a little " Time, till I can ſettle my Affairs, and make my Peace with God."

To which his Lordſhip replied,

" To be ſure, you ſhall have a proper Time allowed you,"

Miſs Blandy having received Sentence of Death, was re-conducted to the Caſtle, from whence ſhe came. Many People believed, that ſhe behaved not only through the whole Courſe of her Trial, but afterwards, with ſuch a decent Reſolution, as does not often attend a Conſciouſneſs of Guilt; tho' great Part of Mankind (it muſt be owned) ſeem fully convinced of even her Intention to deſtroy her Father. Be that as it will, her Conduct before the Judges was not only uncenſured, but even applauded, by a Majority of the Spectators who were Witneſſes of it. Nor did any material Alteration diſcover itſelf in the Tenor of her Behaviour, tho' her Spirits ſometimes a little failed her, betwixt the Day of her Trial and that of her Execution.

It would be endleſs, however, notwithſtanding this undoubted Truth, to recite the palpable Falſhoods, and inhuman Calumnies, induſtriouſly propagated of her, and diſperſed throughout the Nation, in almoſt every Part of that Interval. Sometimes it was reported that ſhe had poiſoned herſelf, and ſometimes that ſhe had laid upon herſelf violent Hands in a different Manner; tho' ſhe diſcovered, on all Occaſions, to the Miniſter who attended her, the moſt perfect Abhorrence of Suicide, and of every Thing that had but even the leaſt Tendency to it. Several Perſons affirmed, that ſhe was ſo perfectly hardened, that ſhe would not acknowledge herſelf guilty of any Crime; the Reverſe of which is true, as can be atteſted both by the aforeſaid Miniſter, and other Perſons of Character and Reputation. She has frequently ſaid, that ſhe deſerved Death for deſtroying her Father, tho' ſhe did not think herſelf ſo guilty as if ſhe had deſignedly and intentionally perpetrated ſo black a Crime. This Declaration ſhe conſtantly perſiſted in; tho' that Point of Conduct gave uncommon Offence to vaſt Numbers of People.

During the aforeſaid Interval, Miſs Blandy attended Divine Service in the Chapel as often as her Health would permit; and the Crowds of People, who flocked thither to gaze upon her, did not drive her from thence; and when any thing of that Kind happened, as well as at all other proper Seaſons, the Miniſter of the Caſtle attended her in her own Apartment. She often profeſſed herſelf a ſincere Penitent, and ſaid ſhe was covered with Contrition for every Sin ſhe had committed, and particularly that which occaſioned the Loſs of her dear Father's Life. When ſuch Profeſſions as theſe were made, ſhe pretty frequently ſhed Tears, and diſcovered the moſt apparent Emotions of Grief. This can be atteſted by ſeveral, as well as the aforeſaid Miniſter, whoſe Teſtimony will be deemed authentic in all other Caſes. Notwithſtanding which, the contrary to this has been aſſerted by many Perſons; but then ſome of them have been ſuch as have not only had little Regard to Truth, but been incapable of all tender Sentiments.

She always profeſſed a full Perſuaſion of the Truth and Excellency of the Chriſtian Religion in general, and a cloſe Attachment to the Tenets, Doctrines, and Uſages of the Church of England in particular. Nor did any Thing, during the whole Courſe of her Confinement, ſo extremely ſhock her as the Charge of Infidelity, which ſome uncharitable Perſons, a little before her Death, brought againſt her, on Account of her Intimacy with Cranſtoun. That Cranſtoun was an Infidel, there may be Reaſon enough to believe; but that ſhe was ſo, becauſe ſhe had placed her Affections upon him, will by no means follow. It appears, that he was a Man of infinite Art and Deſign; and therefore may very naturally be ſuppoſed to have adapted himſelf entirely to her Genius and Diſpoſition, in order the more effectually to carry into Execution his wicked Deſigns: And that this was really the Caſe, with her dying Breath ſhe poſitively affirmed. He never, as to the Miniſter attending her a little before her Death ſhe declared, uttered any Thing in her Company, thro' the whole Courſe of her Acquaintance with him, that could be deemed ſhocking to pious Ears, or that in the leaſt favoured of Infidelity. On the contrary, if ſhe may be credited in ſome of her laſt Moments, he gave her many inſtructive Leſſons, and talked perfectly in the Style of a Chriſtian. And this he might do, becauſe he found it agreeable to her. 'Tis but charitable, therefore, conſidering her Education, to believe, that ſhe never openly profeſſed any Diſlike to the Principles of Chriſtianity.

She could diſcourſe pertinently and clearly upon all the common, and ſome other theological Topics: From whence it may be rationally inferred, that ſhe had not only been in a tolerable Degree converſant with the Scriptures; but likewiſe read, with ſome Attention, the Works of ſeveral of our moſt celebrated Divines. And this ſhe owned herſelf to have done. This Point would not have been ſo copiouſly inſiſted upon here, had ſhe not deſired it might be cleared up in a particular Manner; and had not the Imputation of Infidelity, in ſome of her laſt Moments, given her infinite Uneaſineſs and Concern.

She was viſited by ſeveral Clergymen, beſides the Miniſter of the Caſtle who conſtantly attended her, one of whom was a Perſon of ſuperior Rank and Character in the Univerſity. To all of theſe ſhe expreſſed herſelf much in the ſame Manner, and conſtantly perſiſted in her firſt Declaration. She was preſſed by them in the ſtrongeſt Terms, to confeſs the Truth, and not go out of the World with a Lie in her Mouth. But this ſhe ſaid ſhe ſhould do, if ſhe affirmed that ſhe had a Deſign to deſtroy her Father when ſhe gave him the fatal Powder, or that ſhe then knew there was any poiſonous Quality lodged in it. She talked in ſuch a plauſible, or rather pathetic Strain, and gave ſuch convincing Reaſons for the Truth of what ſhe affirmed, that ſome of her Enemies themſelves, after one or two Viſits, became greatly prejudiced in her Favour.

Some Attempts were made to procure her a ſhort Reſpite; for it was never believed, that a Pardon could be obtained, at leaſt before the Apprehenſion of the Villain Cranſtoun. But all the Avenues to the Royal Clemency were ſhut up; ſo that every Meaſure purſued on this Occaſion proved ineffectual. Nor did ſhe ever entertain any Hopes of Succeſs, tho' a Lady of great Intereſt and Diſtinction, whoſe innate Goodneſs renders her one of the brighteſt Ornaments of the preſent Age, made ſeveral Efforts in her Favour. The Prejudices ſhe had to ſtruggle with had taken too deep Root in ſome Men's Minds, to be effaced by any Sentiments of Tenderneſs and Compaſſion.

She herſelf obſerved, and ſpoke with great Commendation of them, that the Judges, as well as the worthy Sheriff and his Deputy, behaved towards her with great Candour and Moderation.

On Monday, April the 6th, 1752, the Day deſtined for her Execution, the Under-Sheriff, attended by one of Miſs Blandy's Friends, viſited her a little after Eight o'Clock in the Morning. She then diſcovered ſome Anxiety and Apprehenſions, in relation to her future State, that had never before appeared. She ſaid, that many Sins, both of Omiſſion and Commiſſion, which ſhe had formerly conſidered as Trifles, ſeemed at that Time to be very black and enormous to her. The Miniſter, who was then alſo preſent, took a freſh Opportunity from hence to preſs her once more to declare the Truth, in relation to her Intention and Knowledge of the noxious Quality of the fatal Powder, by urging that a Failure herein would be a Crime of a much deeper Dye, than thoſe which filled her with ſuch terrible Apprehenſions. But to this ſhe immediately replied, That ſhe ſhould perſiſt in her former Declaration to the Moment of her Death; and that this ſhe would impart to the People attending her Execution. The Under-Sheriff, and the Gentleman attending him, alſo begged, that ſhe would not impoſe upon herſelf, as well as upon the World, in theſe her laſt Moments. To which ſhe anſwered much in the ſame Terms as ſhe had done before. She likewiſe appeared after this to be ſomething more calm and compoſed. And the Miniſter, in order ſtill more to comfort her, told her, that the Devil frequently preſented former Sins as much more heinous than they really were, to even ſome of the beſt Chriſtians themſelves, when they were upon the Confines of Eternity, in order to ruffle and diſcompoſe them; and that therefore, probably, the Scene that at preſent ſeemed to diſturb her, was nothing more than one of his Illuſions: But however that might be, ſhe had no Reaſon to be afraid of any of her Sins, if ſhe ſincerely repented of them, as ſhe had always aſſured him ſhe did, and placed an unſhaken Confidence in the Mercy of God, through the Merits of Chriſt; and neither thoſe Merits, nor that Mercy, to ſincere Penitents, would admit of any Limits. This gave her great Conſolation, inſomuch that ſhe ſoon reſumed her former Calmneſs, and declared herſelf not only willing, but even inclinable to die.

About Nine o'Clock ſhe came out of her Bed-chamber, and was attended by the Miniſter to the Place of Execution. Here he read ſome of the Commendatory Forms of Prayer, and ſhe joined moſt fervently with him. After this was ended, he ſaid to her, "Madam, you may now, if "you think proper, and have a ſufficient Flow of Spirits, ſpeak to the "People." She then addreſſed herſelf to them, with a clear and audible Voice, in the following Terms: "Good People, give me Leave to "declare to you, that I am perfectly innocent, as to any Intention "to deſtroy, or even hurt my dear Father; that I did not know, or "even ſuſpect, that there was any poiſonous Quality in the fatal Powder "I gave him; tho' I can never be too much puniſhed for being even "the innocent Cauſe of his Death. As to my Mother's and Mrs. Po-"cock's Deaths, that have been unjuſtly laid to my Charge, I am not "even the innocent Cauſe of them, nor did I in the leaſt contribute to "them. So help me God in theſe my laſt Moments! And may I not "meet with eternal Salvation, nor be acquitted by Almighty God, in "whoſe awful Preſence I am inſtantly to appear, if the whole of what "is here aſſerted be not true! I from the Bottom of my Soul forgive all "thoſe concerned in my Proſecution; and particularly the Jury, not-"withſtanding their fatal Verdict." She then aſcended the Ladder, and ſpoke again to the following Effect: "Good People, take Warning by "me to be on your Guard againſt the Sallies of any irregular Paſſion; "and pray for me, that I may be accepted at the Throne of Grace."

After which, ſhe was turned off; and, in about Half an Hour's Time, cut down. The Body was then carried to a neighbouring Houſe, and put into a Coffin; from thence it was conducted, about Five o'Clock in the Afternoon, in a Hearſe, to Henley; and interred about Eleven o'Clock in the Chancel of the Church there, where the Bodies of her Father and Mother had been depoſited. Miſs Blandy ſuffered in a black Bombazine ſhort Sack and Petticoat, with a clean white Handkerchief drawn over her Face. Her Hands were tied together with a ſtrong black Ribband, and her Feet, at her own Requeſt, almoſt touched the Ground. The Number of People attending her Execution was computed at about 5000; many of whom, and particularly ſeveral Gentlemen of the Univerſity, were obſerved to ſhed Tears. She behaved with ſuch Serenity and Compoſure, and with ſuch a decent Reſolution, as greatly ſurpriſed many of the Spectators; and ſuch as ſome there preſent thought nothing but a Conſciouſneſs of the Truth of what ſhe had aſſerted, and a well-grounded Hope of future Felicity, could inſpire. Contrary to what is obſerved at other Executions, there was almoſt a profound Silence during the Time of this. In fine, the whole was ſo well conducted, and made ſuch a deep Impreſſion upon the Minds of the People preſent, that the Circumſtances attending Miſs Blandy's Execution will not ſoon be forgotten at Oxford.

Copy of Miſs Blandy's Declaration delivered at the Place of Execution in Oxford, April 6*th*, 1752.

I Mary Blandy do declare, that I die in a full Perſuaſion of the Truth and Excellency of the Chriſtian Religion, and a ſincere, tho' unworthy Member of the Church of England. I do likewiſe hope for a Pardon and Remiſſion of my Sins by the Mercy of God, through the Merits and Mediation of our moſt bleſſed Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. I do alſo farther declare, that I did not know or believe that the Powder, to which the Death of my dear Father has been aſcribed, had any noxious or poiſonous Quality lodged in it; and that I had no Intention to hurt, and much leſs to deſtroy him, by giving him that Powder. All this is true, as I hope for eternal Salvation, and Mercy from Almighty God, in whoſe moſt awful and immediate Preſence I muſt ſoon appear. I die in perfect Peace and Charity with all Mankind, and do from the Bottom of my Soul forgive all my Enemies, as alſo thoſe Perſons who have in any Manner contributed to, or been inſtrumental in bringing me to the ignominious Death I am ſoon to ſuffer. This is my laſt Declaration, as to the Points contained in it; and I do moſt earneſtly deſire that it may be publiſhed after my Death. Witneſs my Hand,

Mary Blandy.

XLVII. The CASE of John Swan and Elizabeth Jefferys, for the Murder of Joseph Jefferys.

Q. WHETHER the Priſoners ſhould be tried on the firſt or ſecond Indictment found againſt them?

The CASE.

John Swan, Servant to Mr. Joſeph Jefferys, of Walthamſtow in Eſſex, and Elizabeth Jefferys his Niece, were indicted at the Aſſizes held at Chelmsford in Eſſex, in the Summer 1751, for the Murder of the ſaid Joſeph Jefferys; Swan for giving the mortal Wound, and Elizabeth Jefferys for aiding and aſſiſting, &c. therein. To which Indictment they both pleaded Not Guilty: But their Trial was then put off to the following Aſſizes.

In March 1752, at the following Aſſizes held at Chelmsford, before the Hon. Sir Martin Wright and Sir Michael Foſter, the following Indictment was found againſt Swan for Petty Treaſon, and Elizabeth Jefferys for Murder, viz.

'John Swan, late of the Pariſh of Walthamſtow, in the County of 'Eſſex, Labourer, late Servant to Joſeph Jefferys in his Life-time, now 'deceaſed, was indicted, for that he, not having the Fear of God before 'his Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, 'on the 3d Day of July, in the 25th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign 'Lord George the Second, King of Great Britain, &c. with Force and 'Arms at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, in and upon the 'ſaid Joſeph Jefferys, then the Maſter of the ſaid John Swan, in the 'Peace of God, and of our ſaid Lord the King, then and there being, 'feloniouſly, traitorouſly, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did 'make an Aſſault; and that the ſaid John Swan a certain Piſtol, of the 'Value of Six-pence, then and there charged with Gunpowder and 'leaden Bullets, (which he the ſaid John Swan in his Hand then and 'there had and held) to, againſt, and upon the ſaid Joſeph Jefferys, his 'then Maſter, then and there feloniouſly, traitorouſly, wilfully, and of 'his Malice aforethought, did ſhoot and diſcharge; and that he the 'ſaid John Swan, with the leaden Bullets aforeſaid, out of the Piſtol 'aforeſaid, then and there by Force of the Gunpowder aforeſaid, ſhot 'and ſent forth, as aforeſaid, him the ſaid Joſeph Jefferys, his then 'Maſter, in and upon the left Side of his Head, then and there feloni-'ouſly, traitorouſly, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did ſtrike, 'penetrate, and wound, giving to the ſaid Joſeph Jefferys then and there, 'with the leaden Bullets aforeſaid, ſo as aforeſaid ſhot, diſcharged, and 'ſent forth out of the Piſtol aforeſaid, by the ſaid John Swan, in and 'upon the ſaid left Side of the Head of him the ſaid Joſeph Jefferys, one 'mortal Wound of the Width of half an Inch, and of the Depth of 'four Inches; of which ſaid mortal Wound the aforeſaid Joſeph Jefferys 'then and there inſtantly died. And Elizabeth Jefferys, late of the ſaid 'Pariſh, Spinſter, was indicted, for that ſhe, then and there feloniouſly, 'wilfully, and of her Malice aforethought, was preſent, aiding, help-'ing, abetting, comforting, aſſiſting, and maintaining the ſaid John 'Swan, the Felony and Murder aforeſaid, in Manner and Form afore-'ſaid, to do and commit; and that he the ſaid John Swan, then and 'there, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, feloniouſly, traitorouſly, wilfully, 'and of his Malice aforethought; and that ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Jef-'ferys, then and there, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, feloniouſly, 'wilfully, and of her Malice aforethought, did kill and murder the ſaid 'Joſeph Jefferys, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown 'and Dignity.'

When they were arraigned upon this Indictment, an Objection was taken by the Counſel for the Priſoners to their being tried on the above Indictment, as another had been found againſt them at the laſt Aſſizes; againſt Swan for the Murder of the ſaid Joſeph Jefferys, and Elizabeth Jefferys for aiding, aſſiſting, &c. the ſaid Swan in the ſaid Murder; and to which Indictment they had both pleaded Not Guilty: That if they were tried on this Indictment, and were acquitted, they muſt be a ſecond Time tried for their Lives on the former Indictment for the ſame Offence, which was contrary to Law.——After near three Hours Debate between the Counſel on both Sides, the Court were of Opinion, that the Priſoners muſt be tried on the laſt Indictment found againſt them, and the former Indictment quaſhed: whereupon they both pleaded Not Guilty. The Fact was plainly proved againſt them; and they making little or no Defence, Swan was found guilty of Petty Treaſon, and Jefferys of Murder.——The printed Trial contains nothing remarkable in it, no Arguments of the Counſel on either Side on the Point of Law, on which of the two Indictments the Priſoners ſhould be tried, nor any Speeches or Arguments, only the examining the Witneſſes, and is a plain Narrative of the Evidence, and how the Murder happened: The Subſtance of which is acknowledged, and contained in the Confeſſion of Elizabeth Jefferys and John Swan, as followeth.

The Confeſſion of Elizabeth Jefferys, concerning the Murder of her Uncle Joſeph Jefferys.

I Elizabeth Jefferys do freely and voluntarily confeſs, That I firſt enticed and perſuaded John Swan and Thomas Mathews to undertake and perpetrate the Murder of my deceaſed Uncle; which they both conſented to do the firſt Opportunity: That, on the 3d Day of July 1751, myſelf myself and John Swan (Mathews, to my Knowledge, not being in the Houſe) agreed to kill my ſaid Uncle; and accordingly, after the Maid was gone to Bed, I went into John Swan's Room, and called him, and we went down together into the Kitchen; and having aſſiſted Swan in putting ſome Pewter and other Things into a Sack, I ſaid I could do no more: And then I went up into my Room; and afterwards Swan came up, as I believe, and went into my Uncle's Room, and ſhot him; which done, he came to my Door, and rapped. Accordingly I went out in my Shift, and John Swan opened the Street-door and let me out: That done, I alarmed the Neighbourhood. And I do ſolemnly declare, That I do not know that any Perſon was concerned in the Murder of my deceaſed Uncle, but myſelf, and John Swan; for that Mathews did not come to my Uncle's Houſe the Day before, or Night in which the Murder was committed, as I know of.

ELIZABETH JEFFERYS.

Miſs Jefferys further confeſſed, That her Uncle took her from her Father when ſhe was five Years old; and that, when ſhe was ſixteen, her ſaid Uncle debauched her: That ſhe lived in a continued State of Inceſt with him (having had two Miſcarriages by him), till about a Year before his Death, when he ſlighted her in Favour of another Woman. His repeated Neglects of her, and his threatening to alter his Will, which ſhe knew had been made entirely in her Favour, were the Motives that induced her to perpetrate the Murder for which ſhe is ſentenced to die.

Swan confeſſed, That he alone murdered his Maſter Mr. Jefferys, by ſhooting him with a Piſtol loaded with Pieces of Bullets: That there was no Stab given; but that the ſeveral Wounds were given by the Pieces of the Bullets, and by the Splinters of the Piſtol, that burſt when it was fired off: And that Mathews was not at the Houſe for five Days before the Murder was committed: But owned, that both he and Miſs Jefferys had offered Mathews five or ſix hundred Pounds to ſhoot Mr. Jefferys, but that he refuſed to do it; and that they called him Villain for declining to commit the Murder: Upon which he reſolved to do it himſelf, and agreed with Miſs Jefferys what Time to commit it.

Thus much is inſerted to let the Reader into the Caſe, and as an Introduction to Mr. Juſtice Foſter's Opinion, upon which of the two Indictments the Priſoners ſhould be tried; with the Determination of the Court thereon, and his Lordſhip's Obſervations on Indictments for Murder and Petty Treaſon.

The Caſe of John Swan and Elizabeth Jefferys *.

"AT Chelmsford Aſſizes, in the Summer 1751, John Swan and Elizabeth Jefferys were indicted for the Murder of Joſeph Jefferys; Swan for giving the mortal Wound, and Jefferys for being preſent, aiding and abetting; and they both pleaded Not Guilty: But their Trial was poſtponed to the next Aſſizes.

"In the mean time the Attorney-General, who had received Orders to proſecute at the Expence of the Crown, was ſatisfied from the Evidence laid before him, that Swan was in the actual Service of the Deceaſed at the Time the Murder was committed, or at leaſt when the Deſign was firſt laid. He therefore thought it adviſeable to prefer another Bill againſt them for the Parts they reſpectively took in the ſame Murder, charging Swan with Petty Treaſon, and Jefferys with Murder. Accordingly at the next Aſſizes ſuch Bill was preferred and found, and the Priſoners were arraigned upon it.

"The Priſoners pleaded in Abatement Ore tenus, that another Indictment was depending for the ſame Offence; and pleaded over to the Treaſon and Felony. The Counſel for the Crown did not inſiſt upon drawing up the Plea in Form (as was done in Layer's Caſe, Vol. VI. p. 237.), but demurred Ore tenus; and the Counſel for the Priſoners joined in Demurrer.

"Mr. Juſtice Wright, who ſat on the Crown Side, deſiring the Company of Mr. Juſtice Foſter, who went that Circuit with him, at the arguing the Plea, he went into Court, and ſat there 'till that Matter was determined, and the Jury ſworn.

"The Priſoner's Counſel inſiſted, that they ought not to have been arraigned on this new Bill, pending the former Indictment, on which Iſſue is already joined: Becauſe, if they plead to Iſſue on this Indictment, they may be liable to be tried twice for one and the ſame Fact. It will be in the Option of the Crown, after Iſſue is joined upon both Indictments, to proceed to Trial upon either of them; and if the Priſoners ſhould be acquitted upon one, they may ſtill be tried upon the other. For though Auterfoits acquit of Murder may be a good Bar to an Indictment of Petty Treaſon for the ſame Fact, or Auterfoits acquit of Petty Treaſon, to an Indictment of Murder; yet the Priſoners having pleaded to Iſſue on both Indictments, they may be told they come too late with their Plea in Bar, Iſſue being already joined on the Fact.

"They therefore preſſed that the Trial on the firſt Indictment might go on, before the Priſoners ſhould be called upon to plead to the ſecond; for ſaid they, if the Priſoners ſhould be found guilty on that Indictment, the Ends of public Juſtice will be fully anſwered. And if they ſhould be acquitted, and the Counſel for the Crown ſhould think proper to proceed on this new Bill, the Priſoners ought to be left at Liberty to avail themſelves of that Acquittal, as they ſhall be adviſed.

"The Court was of Opinion, that the Charge in the Bill laſt found muſt be anſwered, notwithſtanding the Pendency of the former; for Auterfoits Arraign is no Plea in this Caſe. Pehaps the Bill laſt found is better adapted to the Nature of the Caſe than the former, and the King's Counſel muſt be at Liberty to proſecute in ſuch Manner as may beſt anſwer the Ends of public Juſtice. But at the ſame Time the Court muſt take Care, that the Priſoners be not expoſed to the Inconvenience of undergoing two Trials for one and the ſame Fact.

With regard to the Priſoner Jefferys, the Offence charged in both Indictments is exactly the ſame, as well in Conſideration of Law as in Point of Fact; with regard to Swan, the Fact in both is the ſame; and ſo is the ſubſtantial Part of the Charge, Wilful Murder of Malice prepenſe: But falling under a different Conſideration in the ſecond Indictment, mercy from the Relation the Priſoner is ſuppoſed to ſtand in to the Deceaſed. And if that Relation ſhould not be made out in Proof, yet ſtill he may be found guilty of Murder upon that Indictment.

"And therefore, as the Ends of public Juſtice would be fully anſwered with regard to both the Priſoners, by trying them on the Indictment for Petty Treaſon and Murder, the Court propoſed to the King's Counſel that the firſt Indictment ſhould be quaſhed by Conſent, to which they agreed; which was accordingly done, and the Court proceeded to the Trial of the Priſoners on the ſecond Indictment, on the Iſſue of Not Guilty.

"The Court in this Caſe followed the Precedent in Cro. Car. 147. Sir William Withypole's Caſe. Only they took in the Conſent of the King's Counſel, which I think they needed not to have aſked; the Juſtice of the Caſe was ſufficient Warrant for what they did.

"Before the Jury was called; the Judges agreed between themſelves, that if the Priſoners ſhould not think fit to challenge at all, they might be tried together; but if they ſhould inſiſt on their Challenges, they muſt be tried ſeparately †: Becauſe they cannot join in their Challenges, the Number of their peremptory Challenges being differently limited, Swan's to 35, and Jefferys's to 20.

"The Court informed them of this; and the Priſoner Swan declaring that for his Part he waved all Benefit of Challenging, the Priſoner Jefferys challenged (one) two or three, and a Jury was ſworn. The Priſoners were found guilty, Swan of Petty Treaſon, and Jefferys of Murder.

"While the Caſe of the King againſt Swan was depending, and before the ſecond Bill was preferred, a Queſtion was made, Whether Swan could be convicted on the Indictment for Murder, if it ſhould come out in Evidence that he was Servant to the Deceaſed at the Time the Fact was contrived or committed; and conſequently that his Offence was Petit Treaſon.

"There is a Caſe cited in the printed Trial of Coke and Woodburne, 6 St. Tr. 224. which, if ſuch Caſe there ever was, hath, as far as the Authority of it goeth, determined that Queſtion. "At the Summer Aſſizes "at Dorcheſter 1712, a Woman was indicted before Mr. Juſtice Eyre ‡ "for the Murder of another Woman; upon Evidence it appeared that the "Perſon murdered was her Miſtreſs, which made the Crime Petit Treaſon. The Judge directed this Matter to be ſpecially found; and upon "Conference with all the Judges it was held ſhe ought to be acquitted "upon this Indictment, as ſhe accordingly was, and was afterwards in-"dicted for Petit Treaſon, and convicted and executed." This Caſe is not to be found in any Report printed or MS. that I have met with, or heard of. Nor have I, upon a ſtrict Inquiry, met with any Footſteps of ſuch Caſe among the Minutes of Proceedings on the Crown Side in the County where the Caſe is ſuppoſed to have ariſen; though the Minutes from 1708 to 1722 have been carefully ſearched. For theſe Reaſons, and what is ſuggeſted in the Note, I conclude that no ſuch Caſe ever exiſted.

"Lord Chief Juſtice Hale, 1 Hale 378. is very full and expreſs on the other Side of the Queſtion. "A Perſon who is guilty of Petit Treaſon "may be indicted of Murder; for it is a Species of Murder, and a Pardon "of Murder pardoneth Petit Treaſon."

"Lord Chief Juſtice Coke having cited the Opinion in Dyer 235. ſaith, "That Petit Treaſon is Murder and more." 6 Co. 13. b. And from thence it hath been inferred that Petit Treaſon and Murder are in Conſideration of Law different Offences, or that the Crime of Murder is merged in Petit Treaſon. But this Inference will not hold, however true the Chief Juſtice's Doctrine may be. There is undoubtedly, in Conſideration of Law, a greater Degree of Malignity in the one than in the other, ariſing from that Degree of Allegiance, however low, which the Murderer owed to the Deceaſed at the Time the Fact was committed or conceived in his Heart. But certainly the Difference, in Point of Malignity, between Murder and Manſlaughter is infinitely greater; and conſequently in that reſpect it may with equal Propriety be ſaid, that Murder is Manſlaughter and more. And yet in Judgment of Law they are the ſame Offence, differing only in the Degree of Malignity, 4 R. 46. Keil. 103, 104. when conſidered in relation to one and the ſame Fact. And by a Parity of Reaſon Lord Chief Juſtice Hale, 2 Hale 251. concludeth, that Petit Treaſon and Murder are to be conſidered in the ſame Light, as one Offence, differing only in Degree.

"But though I am ſatisfied that the Law conſidereth Petit Treaſon and Murder as one Offence, differing only in Circumſtance and Degree; yet whether it may be adviſeable to proceed upon an Indictment for Murder againſt a Perſon plainly appearing to be guilty of Petit Treaſon, is a Matter that deſerveth great Conſideration; and probably determined the Attorney-General to prefer a freſh Bill for Petit Treaſon in Swan's Caſe. For though the Offences are to moſt Purpoſes conſidered as ſubſtantially the ſame, yet as there is ſome Difference between them with regard to the Judgment that is to be pronounced upon a Conviction, and a very material one with regard to the Trial, a Perſon indicted for Petit Treaſon being intitled to a peremptory Challenge of 35, I think if the Proſecutor be apprized of the true State of the Caſe, as he may be if he uſeth due Diligence, he ought to adapt the Indictment to the Truth of the Fact.

"But if, through a Miſtake on the Part of the Proſecutor, or through the Ignorance or Inattention of the Officer, a Bill be preferred as for Murder, and it ſhould come out in Evidence that the Priſoner ſtood in that Sort of Relation to the Deceaſed which rendereth the Offence Petit Treaſon, I do not think it by any Means adviſeable to direct the Jury to give a Verdict of Acquittal. For a Perſon charged with a Crime of ſo heinous a Nature ought not to have the Chance given him by the Court of availing himſelf of a Plea of Auterfoits Acquit. In ſuch a Caſe I ſhould make no Sort of Difficulty of diſcharging the Jury of that Indictment, and ordering a freſh Indictment for Petit Treaſon. In this Method the Priſoner will have Advantage of his peremptory Challenges, and the public Juſtice will not ſuffer. And on the other Hand, in Caſe of an Indictment for Petit Treaſon, if it be proved that the Defendant killed the Deceaſed with ſuch Circumſtances of Malice as amount to Murder, but the Relation of Servant, &c. is not proved, I have no Sort of Doubt that on ſuch an Indictment the Defendant may be found guilty of Murder, and acquitted of the Treaſon. For Murder, 1 Hale, 378. 2 Hale, 184. is included in every Charge of Petit Treaſon, Felonicè, Proditoriè, & ex Malitiâ præcogitatâ MURDRAVIT.

"The Treaſon is a Circumſtance of Aggravation, of which the Defendant may be acquitted, and yet found guilty of the ſubſtantial Part of the Charge; juſt as a Man, upon an Indictment of Murder, may be acquitted of that, and found guilty of Manſlaughter. "Becauſe," ſay the Books, "Manſlaughter is included in the Charge of Murder."

"I will go one Step further, I offer it as my private Opinion, which is ſubmitted to the Judgment of the Learned. Put the Caſe, that a Perſon is brought to his Trial upon an Indictment for Petit Treaſon, and that one Witneſs only can be produced, or that the Proſecutor is not furniſhed with any Evidence except the Depoſitions taken before the Coroner, or Informations taken on Oath before Juſtices of the Peace purſuant to the Statutes; and let it be ſuppoſed, that thoſe Witneſſes are living, but unable to travel, or kept out of the Way by the Procurement of the Defendant. 1, 2 Phil. and M. 13. 2, 3 Ph. and M. 10. Vid. Keil. 55. 1 Hale 305. 2 Hale, 284. What is to be done in this Caſe? Is the Defendant to be acquitted of the whole Charge? I think not. I think this Evidence, though not ſufficient to convict of Petit Treaſon, is ſtill admiſſible Evidence, and proper to be left to the Jury, as upon a Charge of Murder; and the Jury, if they are ſatisfied, may find the Defendant guilty of the Murder, and acquit him of the Treaſon, for the Reaſons juſt now given, 2 Hale, 184. Intereſt Reipublicæ ne Maleficia remaneant impunita."

The Priſoners were both executed March 28, 1752, at Bucket's-Hill, near the Bald-faced Stag, on Epping-Foreſt, near the Place where the Fact was committed; and Swan was hanged in Chains.

"At a Meeting of the Judges at the Lord Chief Juſtice Lee's Chambers, in June 1752, to conſider of the Act of the laſt Seſſion, for the better preventing the horrid Crime of Murder, it was agreed by much the greater Part of the Judges, that the Judgment for diſſecting and anatomizing, and touching the Time of Execution, ought to be pronounced in Caſes of Petty Treaſon, though Murder is only mentioned, except in the Caſe of Women *. And in that Caſe too, the Time of Execution may be a Part of the Judgment.

"There was ſome Doubt, whether Hanging in Chains might ever be made Part of the Judgment; but on Debate it was agreed by nine Judges, that in all Caſes within the Act, the Judgment for Diſſection and Anatomizing only ſhould be Part of the Sentence: And if it ſhould be thought adviſeable, the Judge might afterwards direct the Hanging in Chains by ſpecial Order to the Sheriff, purſuant to the Power given for that Purpoſe in the Proviſo †."

* Though the 1 E. VI. c. 12. enacteth, that wilful Poiſoning ſhall be deemed Murder of Malice prepenſed, and that the Offender ſhall ſuffer and forfeit as in other Caſes of wilful Murder; yet if the Wife or Servant poiſon Huſband or Maſter, they are conſtantly indicted for Petty Treaſon, and ſuffer the Pains peculiar to that Offence. Petty Treaſon is conſidered in no other Light than as an aggravated Murder.

† Before this Time, there was ſome Difficulty about Hanging in Chains.

For in the Year 1741, when James Hall pleaded Guilty to the Indictment of Petty Treaſon, for the Murder of his Maſter, John Penny, of Clement's-Inn, Gent. the Rev. Dr. Penny, Dean of Litchfield, his Brother, and the Relations, applied to the Court at the Old-Bailey, before Sentence was paſſed, that they would be pleaſed to make an Order, That James Hall might be hung in Chains.——Sir Daniel Lambert, then Lord Mayor, ſpoke to Sir John Strange, the Recorder of London, about it; when the Recorder told the Relations, "The Court never made any Order in ſuch Caſes; that they muſt apply to the King, the Body being at his Majeſty's Diſpoſal."——The King was then at Hanover; and the Relations applied by Petition to the Regency, at their firſt Sitting (at Whitehall) after the Seſſions, about it, when they were told by Mr. Sharpe, Clerk to the Council, "That the Regency, or the Council, never made any Order in ſuch Caſes; and that the Court who tried the Priſoner ſhould have done it." Under this Difficulty, Dean Penny, who was acquainted with the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and with his Grace the Duke of Newcaſtle, (to whom he had been Chaplain) ſent in to the Regency, and begged as a Favour to ſpeak to thoſe two Noble Lords; who were pleaſed to come out to the Dean, who then told them what the Court at the Old-Bailey had ſaid; whereupon their Graces went in, and acquainted the Regency with the Difficulty the Relations were in; upon which an Order was made for hanging him in Chains, and Mr. Sharpe came out and told them of it; but ſaid, it was inſerted therein, That it was on the Petition of the Relations of the deceaſed: And Hall was executed at the End of Catherine-Street, in the Strand, on Monday Sept. 14, 1741, and hanged in Chains at Sheppard's-Buſh, juſt beyond Kenſington Gravel-Pits, on the Acton Road, in Middleſex.

The Criminal Letters, Libel or Indictment.

GEORGE, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith: To our Lovits,——Macers of our Court of Juſticiary, Meſſengers at Arms, our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and ſeverally, ſpecially conſtitute, greeting: Foraſmuch it is humbly meant and complained to us, by our Right Truſty William Grant of Preſtongrange, Eſq; our Advocate, for our Intereſt, and alſo by our Lovit Janet Mackay, Daughter to the Honourable Hugh Mackay of Bighouſe, Eſq. and Relict of the deceaſed Colin Campbell of Glenure, for herſelf, and on Behalf of Elizabeth and Lucy Campbells, her infant Children, with Concourſe of our ſaid Advocate, for our Intereſt, upon James Stewart in Aucharn in Duror of Appin, commonly known or reputed to be the natural Brother of Charles Stewart of Ardſhiel, attainted, and preſent Priſoner in Fort-William; and upon Allan Stewart, commonly called Allan Breck Stewart, Son to Donald Stewart, alias Vic Ean Vic Allifter, ſometime in Inverchomrie in Rannoch; and ſince, or ſometime after the eighteenth Day of April, 1746, a Cadet or Soldier in the French King's Service, or reputed in this Country to have been ſuch.

That whereas, by the Law of God, and the Laws of this and all other well-governed Realms, Murder is a moſt heinous Crime, and ſeverely puniſhable, eſpecially when the ſame is committed deliberately, and by lying in wait, and from a Malice conceived againſt the Perſon ſo murdered, on Account of the faithful Diſcharge of the Duty of his Office.

Yet true it is, and of Verity, that the ſaid James Stewart and Allan Stewart, commonly called Allan Breck Stewart, complained upon, are guilty, Actors, or Art and Part of Murder, aggravated as aforeſaid, in ſo far as the Barons of our Court of Exchequer in Scotland having, by Commiſſion dated the twenty-third Day of February, 1748-9 Years, appointed the ſaid Colin Campbell of Glenure to be Factor upon the Lands and Eſtate of Ardſhiel, forfeited to us by the Attainder of the ſaid Charles Stewart, and lying within the Shire of Argyll, and in the Neighbourhood of Glenure, the Houſe of the ſaid Colin Campbell, and alſo appointed him Factor on that Part of the forfeited Eſtate of Lochiel, called Mamore, lying in the Shire of Inverneſs, and in the Neighbourhood of Fort-William, and upon the forfeited Eſtate of Allan Cameron of Callart, in the Shire of Inverneſs, adjoining to the ſaid Lands of Mamore, and lying betwixt Fort-William and Appin; he, the ſaid Colin, entered upon the ſaid Office, and proceeding in the faithful Execution thereof, did, among other Things, at Whitſunday 1751, cauſe to be removed the ſaid James Stewart from Glenduror, a Farm or Poſſeſſion that had been held by him on the ſaid Eſtate of Ardſhiel: And in the Month of April, in this preſent Year 1752, the ſaid Colin Campbell had taken Meaſures for cauſing to be removed at the Term of Whitſunday, or fifteenth Day of May, now laſt bypaſt, certain other Perſons who were Tenants or Poſſeſſors of Farms upon the ſaid Lands or Eſtate of Ardſhiel; which Proceeding was by the ſaid James Stewart, for Reaſons known to himſelf, ſo much reſented, that, without any Warrant or Authority from the Tenants, or Perſons themſelves, ſo intended to be removed, he the ſaid James Stewart, in the Month of April laſt, came in Perſon to Edinburgh, and cauſed to be preſented, in Name of the ſaid Tenants, to our Lords of Seſſion, a Bill of Suſpenſion of the ſaid intended Removing, upon divers affected Reaſons, that were either falſe or frivolous; and having procured an Order for anſwering the ſaid Bill, and a Siſt of Execution in the mean Time, he returned into the Country, and cauſed the Tenants intimate the Siſt to the ſaid Colin Campbell; who thereupon repaired to Edinburgh, where an Anſwer having been made to the ſaid Bill, the ſame was refuſed by the Lord Ordinary, and the ſaid Colin Campbell returned to his own Houſe at Glenure, where he might be in the Way to attend the Duty of his Office, and to cauſe the ſaid Removing to be put in Execution, and the new Tenants introduced to the Lands on the ſaid fifteenth Day of May laſt.——And on Account of the ſaid Colin Campbell's accepting of the ſaid Office, and of the above-mentioned and other other his Proceedings in the faithful Discharge of the Duty thereof, the said James Stewart, and Allan Breck Stewart, conceived a most groundless and unjust Resentment, Malice, and Enmity against him, and at length entered into a wicked Conspiracy, barbarously to murder the said Colin Campbell, and to bereave him of his Life by the Hands of the said Allan Breck Stewart, who had but then lately come back from foreign Parts into that Country, and intended soon to go again beyond Sea; and, during his said last Abode in the Country, had chiefly frequented the House and Company of the said James Stewart.——And, in Prosecution of this wicked Conspiracy, upon Monday the eleventh Day of May last, on the Morning of which Day the said Colin Campbell left his own House of Glenure, to go to Fort-William, in the Country of Lochaber, about the Distance of sixteen computed Miles Northward, in order to transact some Business relating to his Factory on the Estate of Lochiel, and from whence he was certainly expected to return to the Lands of Ardshiel before Friday in the same Week, being the fifteenth Day of the said Month, when certain Tenants on the Lands of Ardshiel were to be removed, as above-mentioned, and others introduced in their Room; the said Allan Breck Stewart went from the House of John Stewart of Fasnacloich, which lies near to Glenure, to the House of the said James Stewart at Aucharn, lying in the same Neighbourhood, at the Distance of about four Miles Northward; and there the said James Stewart was informed, either by the said Allan Breck Stewart, or by his own Son Charles Stewart, or by Stewart, Daughter to the said John Stewart of Fasnacloich, that they heard, or were informed, that the said Colin Campbell of Glenure was to go to Lochaber that Day, and that he was to persist or proceed in the intended Removing of the Tenants of Ardshiel (as the said James Stewart has, among other Things, acknowledged in his judicial Declaration taken before the Sheriff-substitute of Inverness); and there, after receiving such Advice, in the Evening of the same Day, the said Allan Breck Stewart laid aside his own Cloaths, which he had brought with him, being a blue Coat, scarlet Vest, and black Breeches of Shag or Velvet, which were believed to have been brought by him from France, and which was a remarkable or distinguishing Dress in that Part of the Country; and then and there the said James Stewart furnished him, the said Allan Breck Stewart, with a Suit of his, the said James's, own Cloaths, being a dark coloured short Coat, with silver Buttons, Trowsers, and a blue Bonnet, in which the said Allan dressed himself that Evening.—And also next Morning of Tuesday the twelfth of May last, when he left the said James Stewart's House, where the said Allan left behind him his own French Cloaths aforesaid, together with his Hat, and then set out, in order to lie in wait for the said Colin Campbell on his Way, when he should return from Fort-William to the Lands of Ardshiel, which Lands are bordered on the North-east with the Lands belonging to Alexander Stewart of Ballachelish, whose House stands near to the Ferry of Ballachelish, upon a narrow Arm of the Sea called Lochlevin, that separates the Country of Appin on the South, from that of Mamore, Part of Lochiel's Estate, on the North Side of it, and by which Ferry of Ballachelish it was known or expected, that the said Colin Campbell would pass, in his Return from Fort-William; and, to the said Place of Ballachelish, the said Allan Breck Stewart directly went from the House of the said James Stewart at Aucharn, on this Tuesday the twelfth of May last; and from thence, the same Day, accompanied by James Stewart the younger of Fasnacloich, went to Glenco's House in Carnoch, about three Miles farther Eastward, where the Dowager Lady of the House is Sister to the said Charles Stewart late of Ardshiel, and to her the said James Stewart is natural Brother; and, from thence, he went that same Day to the House of Callart, which sometime belonged to Allan Cameron of Callart, attainted, and was still inhabited by Helen Stewart his Widow, and also Sister to the said Charles Stewart of Ardshiel, and to the said James Stewart, at which House he lodged all that Tuesday Night;—and next Day, being Wednesday, the thirteenth of May last, the said Allan Breck Stewart came back, after calling again at Carnoch, to the House of Alexander Stewart of Ballachelish, near the Ferry aforesaid, where he remained the Night following;—and, upon Thursday the fourteenth of the said Month of May last, when it might be certainly expected, that the said Colin Campbell would return from Fort-William to the Lands of Ardshiel, and Country of Appin, by the said Ferry of Ballachelish, the said Allan Breck Stewart waited about the said House, till about Twelve of the Clock that Day; and then, under Pretence of going a-fishing, walked up along a Burn or Rivulet near to the said House to the higher Grounds, from whence he had a Prospect of the high Road leading from Fort-William to the Lands of Ardshiel, and Access by a short Passage into the Wood of Lettermore, standing upon the Lands of Ardshiel, and adjoining to the said Road on the South Side, about a Mile distant from the House and Ferry of Ballachelish; and, having posted himself in the said Wood, near to the high Road, by which the said Colin Campbell was to pass, at a convenient Station for his wicked Purpose, where he had brought, or caused to be brought and placed, one or two Guns, or Muskets, loaded, with which he continued some time concealed in the Wood; and, at length, about Five or Six o'Clock in the Afternoon of the said fourteenth Day of May last, the said Colin Campbell having passed the Ferry of Ballachelish, and been conveyed by the said Alexander Stewart of Ballachelish from the Ferry to the Entrance of the Wood of Lettermore, as he continued his Journey, passing on Horseback along, or through the said Wood, accompanied by Donald Kennedy, a Sheriff's Officer of Argyll-shire, who was on Foot, and had got some Space before him, the Road being bad for Horses, and by Mungo Campbell, Writer in Edinburgh, a young Man, who was then riding a little Way before him; and behind him, at some Distance, was John Mackenzie, Servant to the said Colin, and also on Horseback.

And then and there the said Allan Breck Stewart fired upon the said Colin Campbell from behind his Back, and shot him through the Body with two Balls, of which Wounds the said Colin Campbell died upon the Spot, in less than an Hour after.

Whereupon the said Allan Breck Stewart absconded, and, from that Time, appeared no longer openly in the Country; but, during the Night following, or about Three o'Clock in the Morning of Friday the fifteenth Day of May last, he came to Carnoch, the House of John Macdonald of Glenco above-mentioned, where he knocked at a Window when the Family were all in Bed; and the said John Macdonald of Glenco, and Isobel Stewart his Stepmother, got up, and went to the Door to the said Allan, who then told them, that the said Colin Campbell had been shot dead the Evening preceding, in the Wood of Lettermore, and that he, the said Allan, was leaving the Country, and going the Moor-road, and was come to take Leave of them, the said Lady, and Glenco her Son-in-law, which he immediately did, and went away, without entering the House, tho' he was invited by the Lady to come in, and take some Refreshment there.

That, in the mean Time, the said James Stewart, complained upon, remained at his own House at Aucharn, from which, on the Morning of Thursday, the fourteenth of May last, he sent a Letter by John Maccol his Servant, to Charles Stewart, Writer in Auchintour, in which, inter alia, he writes, "As I have no Time to write to William, "let him send down immediately 8 l. Sterling, to pay four Milk Cows I "bought for his Use at Ardshiel." And as he, the said James, hath judicially declared, (when examined at Fort-William, on the second of June last, in Presence of George Douglas, Sheriff-substitute of Invernesshire) he did not see the said Allan Breck Stewart after the Murder; but upon Notice being brought to the said James Stewart, complained on, at his own House at Aucharn, immediately after it happened, on the said Thursday Evening, by the said John Mackenzie, Servant to the said now deceased Colin Campbell, who, having left the said Mungo Campbell to attend the Corpse where it lay, rode away to get Help or Assistance for transporting the same to some fit House or Place; the said James Stewart, complained upon, appeared noways surprised or concerned at the News of the Murder; and neither he, nor any of his Family, went to look after the Corpse, or to assist in the carrying it, as others of the Neighbourhood did. And, upon the Morning, or about Noon of the Day following the Murder, being Friday the fifteenth of May last, the said James Stewart, complained upon, sent Alexander Stewart, travelling Packman in Appin, to William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh, with Directions to get from the said William five Pounds Sterling, or five Guineas; and then told the said Packman, that his Friend Allan Breck Stewart was going to leave the Country; and that it was incumbent on him, the said James, to supply him with Money; whereupon, the said Packman, that same Day, repaired to Fort-William, and delivered his said Message from the said James Stewart, to the said William Stewart, who immediately caused his Wife bring the Packman three Guineas,—with which the Packman returned the next Day, being Saturday, the sixteenth of May last, back to the said James Stewart's House at Aucharn; and, upon his Arrival there, found the said James Stewart Prisoner, in the Custody of a Party of Soldiers; and the said Packman being allowed to converse privately with the said James Stewart and his Wife; and having informed him, that he had only received three Guineas from William Stewart at Maryburgh, the said James Stewart took out of his Purse two Guineas, which he gave to his Wife, desiring her to give the same to the Packman; to go with these, and the three Guineas he already had, and also with Allan Breck Stewart's Cloaths, to him, the said Allan: And, accordingly, on the Evening of that same Saturday, after the said James Stewart had been carried off Prisoner to Fort-William, his Wife brought the said Allan Breck Stewart's Cloaths above-mentioned, to the Packman, and delivered the same tied up in a Bundle to him, containing a Pair of red Breeches, besides the black Breeches above-mentioned, that were the Property of the said Allan himself; and, at the same time, delivered to the Packman the two Guineas above mentioned, which she had received from her said Husband for that Purpose, and directed the Packman to go with the Cloaths and the five Guineas, and deliver the same to the said Allan Breck Stewart, whom he would find or hear of at the House of John Maccol, Bouman, having the Charge of Milk Cows upon a Farm or Shealing belonging to Dougal Stewart of Appin, at a remote or solitary Place called Koalisnacoan; and the said Packman, after getting his Supper at Aucharn, set out on this Errand accordingly that same Night:—That, in the mean Time, in the Afternoon of the said Saturday, the sixteenth of May last, the said Allan Breck Stewart was seen by the said John Maccol, Appin's Bouman, in the Heugh of Corrynakiegh, a Part of the Farm of Koalisnacoan; where, as the Bouman was cutting Fire-wood, he heard a Whittle, and, looking about, observed a Man, at a considerable Distance, beckon to him, whom, upon his going up to him, he found to be the said Allan Breck Stewart, who saluted him, by asking him how he did? And the Bouman returned the Salute, and told the said Allan, he was afraid it was no good Action occasioned his being in such a solitary Place; upon which the said Allan asked him, what he meant by that? And the Bouman answered, That he would, without doubt, be suspected of Glenure's Murder, who, he heard, was shot in the Wood of Lettermore; and that there were two Men seen go from the Place where the Action was committed; to which the said Allan replied, That, if he was rightly informed, there was but one Person concerned in the Murder; and, talking further of the Matter, said, he did not doubt the Family of Ardshiel would be suspected of the Murder; and that he believed James Stewart and his Son would be taken up, in consequence of their Difference with Glenure about the Lands; but that their being taken up, would not be of any Consequence to them, as there would be no Proof, unless their own Tongues betrayed them: And, upon the Bouman's saying, that he wished he, the said Allan, would leave his Neighbourhood, Allan told him he could not, till he was supplied with Money and Victuals; and insisted with the Bouman, that he should go to the Strath of Duror (where the said James Stewart's House of Aucharn lies) for Money, and to the Lady Glenco for a Peck of Meal; both which the Bouman appearing to decline, the said Allan added, that he, the Bouman, must go to Fort-William with a Letter, (which the said Allan then wrote with a Wood-Pigeon's Quill he had gathered among the Trees,) to William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh, who, he said, would give him Money upon Receipt of the Letter; and the Bouman having also refused to comply with this Proposition, giving for his Excuse, that he heard that all that went to Fort-William at that Time were taken into Custody, the said Allan further told him, that unless he should be supplied, from some other Quarter, before next Day, that he, the Bouman must go to Fort-William, notwithstanding these Difficulties, and that he, Allan, was surprised there was no Money sent him, though it was promised to be sent him to that Place.

——That very early in the Morning of Sunday, the ſeventeenth of May laſt, the ſaid John Maccol, Bouman, went out of his Houſe, to look after ſome Cattle that he apprehended were amongſt his Corns, and then obſerved, coming towards him from the Weſtward, a Man, whom, at a Diſtance, he took to be Allan Breck Stewart; but, upon his nearer Approach, found him to be the ſaid Alexander Stewart, Packman, who, upon his coming up to him, after the ordinary Salutations, aſked the Bouman, if he had ſeen Allan Breck Stewart? which the Bouman having denied, the ſaid Packman told him, that he had Money and Cloaths for the ſaid Allan, which he (Allan) had tryſted, (or agreed with ſome other Perſon) to receive at that Place from any one who ſhould be ſent after him with it; and then the Bouman owned he had ſeen him, the ſaid Allan, and that he was then in the Heugh of Corrynakiegh, and told the Packman, that if he went to an Eminence, which he pointed out to him, and whiſtled, that the ſaid Allan Breck would probably appear to him; but this the Packman declined, complaining that he was ſo fatigued with travelling the whole Night, that he would not go, having been lately upon his own Buſineſs at Fort-William, and having been obliged to go there again on the ſaid James Stewart's Errand above-mentioned; and therefore deſired the ſaid Bouman to deliver the five Guineas, which he then gave him, to the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart, together with a Bundle of Cloaths, which he, the Packman, had left at the Root of a Fir-tree then in their View, which he pointed out to the ſaid Bouman, who promiſed to deliver both to the ſaid Allan as deſired; whereupon the Packman, being much fatigued, went to Sleep in the Bouman's Houſe;—and in the Evening of the ſame Sunday, the ſeventeenth of May laſt, after the ſaid John Maccol, Bouman to Appin, was gone to Bed, he was awaked by the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart his knocking at the Window of his the ſaid Bouman's Houſe, whereby the Board or Shutter of his ſaid Window fell in; whereupon the ſaid Bouman got up from his Bed, and went out, when he found the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart retired at ſome Diſtance from his Houſe, who, firſt of all, told him, he ſtood in great need of a Drink; upon which the Bouman went into his Houſe, and returned with a Noggan or Diſh full of Milk and Water that had been boiled, which Noggan the Bouman carried in his Hand, in Company with the ſaid Allan, till they came together to the Brink of a Burn or Rivulet, not far from the Bouman's Houſe; and, at this Meeting, the ſaid Allan Breck aſked the Bouman, whether there had any Body come to that Place with a Meſſage for him? which the Bouman anſwered in the Affirmative, and then gave the ſaid Allan the five Guineas he had received from Alexander Stewart, the Packman; upon which the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart ſaid, he hoped that would do without his ſending to William Stewart at Fort-William, and enquired if any Thing elſe had been brought for him? whereupon the Bouman delivered to him the Bundle of Cloaths above-mentioned, that had been left by Alexander Stewart, the Packman, for that Purpoſe, at the Fir-tree; and then the ſaid Allan requeſted and intreated the Bouman to meet him at that Place next Morning early, that he might deliver to him the dark coloured Coat mounted with Silver Buttons, and a Pair of Trowſers, which the ſaid Allan then wore, and had upon him, and which he told the Bouman were the Property of the ſaid James Stewart in Aucharn, to the End that the Bouman might reſtore and deliver theſe Cloaths to the ſaid James, or to Margaret Stewart his Wife; and the ſaid Bouman promiſed to meet the ſaid Allan next Morning, as he deſired;—and accordingly the Bouman repaired next Morning before Sun-riſe to the Place appointed, at the Side of the Rivulet, for their Meeting, where he did not find or ſee the ſaid Allan himſelf, but found there the black or dark coloured Coat and Trowſers before deſcribed, together with his own Noggan or Diſh, in which he had brought the Milk and Water to the ſaid Allan; and, in one of the Pockets of the ſaid ſhort Coat, the ſaid Bouman found a ſmall Powderhorn, of a flat Make, with ſome Carving upon the Horn, and red Wax on the Inſide thereof, for mending a Slit or Hole:——That from this Place the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart withdrew from that Country a-croſs the Moors, as he propoſed, by going a-croſs Mountains and Deſarts, where there was no Dwelling-houſe for the Space of about eighteen computed Miles Eaſtward, to the Country called Rannoch, in the North-weſt Corner of Perth-ſhire, where the Mother of the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart, and other Friends or Relations of his live; amongſt whom he kept himſelf concealed for a few Days, and was there ſeen with the aforeſaid French Dreſs, and a Pair of red Breeches; after which he withdrew from that Country, and has not been ſince ſeen or heard of in this Kingdom, that the Complainers have been able to learn.——And in a Letter wrote by the ſaid James Stewart, ſince he was taken into Cuſtody on Account of the ſaid Murder, bearing Date at Fort-William the nineteenth Day of May laſt, and addreſſed, To Mr. John Macfarlane, Writer to the Signet; wherein the ſaid James profeſſes great Deteſtation of the Murder, and great Deſire that the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart might be apprehended, and, for that Purpoſe, deſcribes the Perſon and Dreſs of the ſaid Allan; he, inter alia, ſays, that he, the ſaid Allan, wore a Pair of red Breeches.

From all which, and other Facts and Circumſtances that will be proved againſt the ſaid Perſons complained upon, and particularly the Threatenings of Death and Deſtruction, which the ſaid James Stewart, and the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart, above complained upon, have been heard to utter againſt the ſaid Colin Campbell of Glenure, now bereaved of his Life, by the horrid Murder and Aſſaſſination aforeſaid, it will be made evident and proved, that the ſaid James Stewart, and Allan Breck Stewart, complained upon, and each of them, are guilty, Actors, or Art and Part of the ſaid horrid Murder.

And as a Part of this Proof, there will be produced certain Documents in Writing, and other Particulars enumerated and contained in an Inventory or Liſt thereof, ſigned by the Complainers, or either of them, Copies of which Liſt or Inventory will be delivered to, or ſerved upon, the Perſons complained upon, at the Time of executing this Libel; and the ſaid written Documents, and other Particulars themſelves, will, before Trial, be lodged in the Hands of the Clerk to the Circuit Court of Juſticiary, before which the Perſons complained upon are to be tried, that they may ſee the ſame.

At leaſt, at the Time and Place aforeſaid, the ſaid Colin Campbell of Glenure was barbarouſly murdered, and the ſaid James Stewart, and Allan Breck Stewart, above complained upon, are guilty, Actors, or Art and Part of the ſaid Murder.

All which, or Part thereof, being found proven by the Verdict of an Aſſize, before our Lords Juſtice-General, Juſtice-Clerk, and Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, in a Circuit Court of Juſticiary, to be holden by them, or any one or more of their Number, within the Burgh of Inverary, upon the twenty-firſt Day of September next to come, N. S. the ſaid James Stewart, and Allan Breck Stewart, complained upon, both, or one or other of them, who ſhall be ſo convicted, ought to be puniſhed with the Pains of Law, to the Terror of others to commit the like execrable Crime in Time coming. Our will is, &c.

Ex deliberatione Dominorum Commiſſionariarum Juſticiarii. ROBERT LEITH.

HIS Majeſty's Advocate moved, That the Criminal Letters at his Inſtance, for his Majeſty's Intereſt, and alſo at the Inſtance of Janet Mackay, Daughter to the Honourable Hugh Mackay of Bighouſe, Eſq. and Relict of the deceaſed Colin Campbell of Glenure, for herſelf, and on Behalf of Elizabeth and Lucy Campbells, her infant Children, with Concourſe of his ſaid Majeſty's Advocate, for his Majeſty's Intereſt, againſt James Stewart in Aucharn in Duror of Appin, commonly known or reputed to be the natural Brother of Charles Stewart, late of Ardſhiel, attainted; and Allan Stewart, commonly called Allan Breck Stewart, Son to Donald Stewart, alias Vic Ean Vic Alliſter, ſometime in Inverchomrie in Rannoch, and ſince, or ſometime after the eighteenth Day of April, 1746, a Cadet or Soldier in the French King's Service, or reputed in this Country to have been ſuch, might be called. And the ſame being accordingly done, and the above Allan Stewart, commonly called Allan Breck Stewart, being oft and divers Times called publickly by the Macer of Court, and thrice called at the outer Door of the Court-houſe, to have compeared and underlyen the Law for the Crime of Murder committed by him upon the ſaid deceaſed Colin Campbell of Glenure, in Manner at Length mentioned in the ſaid Criminal Letters, he having been lawfully cited for that Effect, but not compearing,—the Lord Juſtice-General, and Lords Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, Decern and Adjudge Allan Stewart, commonly called Allan Breck Stewart, Son to Donald Stewart, alias Vic Ean Vic Alliſter, ſometime in Inverchomrie in Rannoch, and ſince, or ſometime after the 18th Day of April, 1746, a Cadet or Soldier in the French King's Service, or reputed in this Country to have been ſuch, to be an Outlaw and Fugitive from his Majeſty's Laws; and ordain him to be put to the Horn, and all his moveable moveable Goods and Gear to be escheat and inbrought to his Majesty's Use, for his not compearing this Day and Place, to underly the Law for the Crime of Murder committed by him upon the deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure, as is more fully mentioned in the Criminal Letters raised against him thereanent, at the Instance of William Grant of Prestongrange, Esq. his Majesty's Advocate, for his Majesty's Interest, and also at the Instance of Janet Mackay, Daughter to the Honourable Hugh Mackay of Bighouse, Esq. and Relict of the said deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure, for herself, and on Behalf of Elizabeth and Lucy Campbells, her infant Children, with Concourse of his Majesty's Advocate, for his Majesty's Interest; the said Allan Stewart, commonly called Allan Breck Stewart, having been lawfully cited for that Effect, oft times called, and not compearing.

ARGYLL, I. P. D.

Intrat. James Stewart indicted and accused at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate, for his Majesty's Interest, and also at the Instance of Janet Mackay, Daughter to the Honourable Hugh Mackay of Bighouse, Esq. and Relict of the said deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure, for herself, and on Behalf of Elizabeth and Lucy Campbells, her infant Children, with Concourse of his Majesty's Advocate, for his Majesty's Interest, as guilty, Actor, or Art and Part of the Crime of Murder, committed in the Manner mentioned in the Criminal Letters raised thereanent, against him, and Allan Stewart, commonly called Allan Breck Stewart, Son to Donald Stewart, alias Vic Ean Vic Allister, sometime in Inverchomrie in Rannoch, and since, or sometime after the eighteenth Day of April, 1746, a Cadet or Soldier in the French King's Service, or reputed in this Country to have been such.

Mr. Robert Macintosh, Advocate.

His Majesty's Advocate moved, that the Criminal Letters against the Pannel, and the before-named Allan Breck Stewart, might be read. And the same was accordingly done.

Lord Justice-General. "James Stewart, you have heard the Criminal "Letters against you read. What have you to say to them?"

James Stewart, "My Lords, I am not guilty of the Crime of which I "am accused, and I refer to my Lawyers to make my Defence."

Mr. WALTER STEWART for the Pannel.

My Lord Justice-General,

I Appear as Counsel for this Prisoner, James Stewart, who now stands at your Lordship's Bar, charged as being accessary to one of the foulest and most barbarous Murders that has occurred in any Country; the Murder not only of an innocent Gentleman, but, as will be proved, the Pannel's own intimate Friend; and that without the smallest Provocation, save what greatly enhances his Guilt, viz. Glenure's being in the faithful Discharge of his Duty in an Office entrusted to him by the Public. He is charged with causing Allan Breck Stewart lie in wait for this unhappy Gentleman, and take him off by a base and inhuman Assassination. I am sensible, my Lord, that the Pannel, accused of a Murder attended with so many aggravating Circumstances, must appear before your Lordship, his Jury, and the World, in a very unfavourable View. A certain Indignation naturally arises in every humane Breast against one suspected of so horrid a Crime; and this must not be a little increased by the malicious Stories and Insinuations industriously spread, which the Pannel, from his close Confinement, has had no Opportunity of contradicting. But now, as he has put himself for his Trial upon God and his Country, by pleading not guilty, until that Country finds him guilty, the Presumption is for Innocence. This he has a Title to demand.—All I shall ask, however, is, that as I know his Judges, so I hope his Jury, and all who now hear me, will lay aside any Prejudice against him, and will form no Opinion, until the Circumstances of the Libel, the Defences which I am now to offer against it, and the Proof of both, be attentively considered. For myself, my Lord, I must say (and I believe I may say the same for all the Gentlemen on the same Side with me), did I, after the strictest Inquiry, suspect the Pannel to be accessary to this Murder, it would be the last Action in my Life to stand up in his Defence: But, my Lord, we have gone thro' this Libel with the greatest Attention, and have taken a View of the several Facts, which, after a Precognition of above a thousand Witnesses, are set forth to support the Charge against the Pannel; we have heard from the Pannel's own Mouth his Defences against this Charge, which he avers he can prove; we have heard, from the Unprejudiced, the general Character he bears in the World, and, from the whole, cannot help concluding, that he is not guilty. We look upon ourselves as standing up for Innocence, when defending this Pannel. It is therefore our Duty to defend him with that Warmth which Innocence claims as its Due.

In the Entry of this Trial, my Lord, I cannot help complaining of most intolerable Hardships, which this Pannel has undergone since May last, when he was first incarcerated. My Lord Advocate's Humanity, his Tenderness to Pannels, I can, from my own little Experience in Trials, subscribe to. The unjustifiable Steps I am now to complain of, I must therefore lay to the Charge of the private Prosecutors. I dare say my Lord Advocate as little knew of them, as he will now, when he hears, approve of them. The Pannel, since the Month of May last, has been kept in the closest Confinement. For the first six Weeks, no Mortal was allowed Access to him: After that, indeed, for some short Time, Admittance was given to his Wife, and one or two more; but any who could be thought proper Persons to prepare Defences for his Trial, were carefully denied Access to him. And again, for a considerable Time before his Trial, he was close confined, and all Admittance refused. When his Counsel came to this Place, and wanted to see him, we were told that none were to be admitted without a Warrant from the Duke of Argyll; and a Petition was actually drawn, to be presented to your Grace, when a Message came allowing us Access. His Sons and his Servants too have suffered the same close Imprisonment. And all this not only contrary to Humanity, but directly in the Face of the Act of Parliament 1701, which discharges close Imprisonment after eight Days, under the severest Penalties. By the Precaution of this private Prosecutor too, the Bar has been in a Manner shut up against this Pannel; all the old experienced Counsel, tho' not brought to maintain the Charge against him, have been retained from giving him their Assistance; otherways, in all Probability, I had not now been employed to open his Defence. The Pannel's House and his Repositories have been three several Times searched, and Papers carried off by near Relations of the Prosecutors, attended by a military Force, and without any Warrant. His Wife and his Sons, who by the Laws of God and Man cannot be called as Witnesses against him, have been examined upon Oath; some of them five different Times, to catch at any Discordance, had there been any, in their Declarations; and these very Declarations are now proposed to be brought in Proof against the Pannel, while the Declarants themselves are alive, and ought, by the fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, to be examined in Presence of the Pannel and Jury. These are Hardships, my Lord, which, Thanks be to God! meet with no Encouragement in this now a free Country. The Time was, indeed, when the feeble Law was unable to protect the Innocent, when the Rules of Justice were broke to pieces by the ruffian Hands of Power; then our unhappy Country groaned under the intolerable Yoke of arbitrary Power; then was scarce the Form of a Trial; the Best, the Greatest of our Country, even an Argyll, fell a Sacrifice to the Will of Tyranny. But now, my Lord, the Days which our Fathers wished to see, and did not see, we have the Happiness to enjoy. A fair Trial, which the Noblest could not obtain, the Meanest are now intitled to, under the Protection of Laws, guarded by a Government ever watchful for the Good of its Subjects, under which the Keenness of private Prosecutors will meet with no Countenance or Encouragement. The Pannel enjoying the Privileges of every free-born Briton, is now to stand Trial before the Judges and Jury of his Country; and as his Judges will shew the greatest Impartiality, he expects the same from the Gentlemen of the Jury. They will judge of the Proof brought before them, having in their Eye the Example of Almighty God, by whose holy Name they have sworn to do justly, before whose awful Tribunal there is no Judgment formed from Names or personal Prejudices, but every Man is judged according to his Works. They will consider, that as they are to answer to God, so they have to answer to the World, who will make a narrow and impartial Scrutiny into their Verdict. At the same Time I cannot help saying, that, amid all the Hardships this Pannel has suffered, I hope it is one Piece of good Fortune, that he is to be tried by Gentlemen of the same County with himself, who, from their more particular Knowledge of the Pannel, and his Character in the World, should be best Judges what Proof is necessary to fix upon him so black a Crime.

In order that your Lordships may more fully understand the Defences now to be offered for the Pannel, I will beg leave to lay before the Court an Account of the Facts, which have given rise to this Prosecution, as they really happened; and as we have got them from the Pannel's own Mouth, at a Time when it was little his Interest to hide the Truth from us. The Pannel, my Lord, was in Possession of a Farm in the Estate of Ardshiel called Glenduror, and was Tacksman of another called Lettermore, which he had subset for about 70*l. Scots* a Year, when Glenure was appointed Factor on the Estate of Ardshiel in February 1749. That Gentleman continued the Friendship which he had before entertained for the Pannel in a very particular Manner. He gave him the Management of the whole Estate of Ardshiel, Power to put in and remove Tenants, and to raise the Rents as he should think proper, and took yearly from the Pannel his Bill for the Rent of the Estate, at which it had been surveyed by the Barons of Exchequer, leaving him to apply the Overplus to the Use of Ardshiel's Children. This Agreement will be instructed by Discharges and Letters under Glenure's own Hand. Sometime before Whitsunday 1751, Glenure applied to the Pannel to yield the Farm of Glenduror, which he then possessed, to Mr. Campbell of Bolaveolan, a particular Friend of his, who offered an additional Rent. This the Pannel immediately complied with, without waiting a Warning, and took the Farm of Auchorn, where he now lives, from Mr. Campbell of Airds, but still continued to uplift the Rents of Ardshiel, in Terms of his Agreement with Glenure. Sometime in April last, Glenure executed a Warning against the Subtenant in Lettermore to remove from that Farm at Whitsunday 1752; and likeways against several other Tenants of the Lands of Ardshiel. The Pannel does acknowledge, that he did expostulate with Glenure upon this, telling him, he thought it hard to turn them out, since they offered to give more additional Rent than any others would, and likeways to take the Oaths to the Government. But Glenure still persisted in his Resolution; upon which the Pannel, being occasionally in Edinburgh, at the Desire of the Tenants, made out a short Memorial of the Fact, and presented it to one of the Barons of Exchequer, who disapproved greatly of Glenure's Procedure; but could do nothing towards putting a Stop to the Removing, as a Quorum of the Barons was not to be had until the next Exchequer Term. But he kept the Memorial, promising to represent the Case to the whole Barons; and added, that he had no doubt but they would give an Order to the Factor to continue the Tenants in their Possessions. The Pannel upon this advised with Counsel, how the Tenants might be kept in Possession until the Exchequer Term; and, by their Advice, applied for a Suspension of the Removing to the Court of Session: And a Bill of Suspension being accordingly presented, a Sist was obtained, and the Bill ordered to be answered; which Sist was intimated to

Glenure,

Glenure, upon the Pannel's returning into the Country; and he, not knowing the Forms, having carried with him the principal Bill of Suſpenſion, and Glenure immediately giving in Anſwers, the ſame were adviſed without the Bill, and it was refuſed. This Scheme of a Suſpenſion having failed, and Glenure perſiſting in his Reſolution of ejecting the Tenants upon the Term-day at which they were warned to remove, the Pannel, upon a ſecond Application from the Tenants, wrote to Alexander Stewart, Notary Public, to come, upon the 15th of May, that they might proteſt, and take an Inſtrument againſt Glenure, if he proceeded to Ejection; and when Alexander Stewart excuſed himſelf, the Pannel ſent a Letter, by Expreſs, on the 14th of May, to Charles Stewart, Notary in Auchintour, to come on the ſame Errand, and, in a Poſtſcript, bid him tell William Stewart to ſend down 8*l. Sterling*, to pay four Milk Cows which he had bought for his Uſe at Ardſhiel, and which the Tenants had refuſed to deliver until they got the Price, tho' William Stewart had wrote for them. This Poſtſcript is laid hold of by the Proſecutors, as a Circumſtance to fix this Murder upon the Pannel. But this, my Lord, I am not ſurpriſed at; other Letters of his ſhare the ſame Fate, tho', if poſſible, leſs criminal than this one: By what Conjuration, or what mighty Magic they can be made ſo, I own I cannot conjecture.

The Pannel, in further Proſecution of this Plan of taking a Proteſt, on Thurſday the 14th, had engaged James Stewart younger of Faſnacloich, and John Stewart younger of Ballacheliſh, to be preſent on the 15th, and witneſs his Proteſt. But, on the Thurſday Evening, the Pannel received the melancholy Accounts of Glenure's being murdered in the Wood of Lettermore. Theſe are the Facts which gave riſe to that inveterate Malice, which the Libel ſays induced the Pannel to conſpire the Death of Glenure. The Words are: "And, on Account of the ſaid Colin Campbell's accept-" ing the ſaid Office, and of the above-mentioned and other his Pro-" ceedings in the faithful Diſcharge of the Duty thereof, the ſaid James " conceived Reſentment," &c. How unjuſt this Concluſion is, I do humbly ſubmit to your Lordſhips. After Glenure was made Factor, your Lordſhip ſees, they continued in the greateſt Friendſhip: You ſee the Pannel managing the Eſtate of Ardſhiel under Glenure, removing from his Poſſeſſion of Glenduror, at Glenure's Deſire, without putting him to the Trouble of a Warning, and going and reſiding under Mr. Campbell of Airds. He had no Poſſeſſion in Ardſhiel Eſtate, as Lettermore was ſubſet; his Management of the Eſtate was not taken from him, and he was ſtill allowed to remit Part of the Rents to Ardſhiel's Family. He has no Connexion, by Blood or otherways, with the Tenants warned to remove; there is not ſo much as one of them of his Name. The Eſtate was annexed forever to the Crown, and was in a few Months to fall into the Hands of Commiſſioners, appointed by his Majeſty, who would probably reſtore the Tenants, as they offered more Rent than thoſe put in by Glenure. Can any Mortal believe, that the Pannel, becauſe Glenure was to execute a Removing againſt theſe Tenants, ſhould enter into ſo execrable a Deſign, as to aſſaſſinate that Gentleman by the Hands of Allan Breck, on the 14th, when we ſee him purſuing quite another Scheme, ſending for a Notary and Witneſſes to take a Proteſt againſt him on the 15th? In all Caſes of Murder, I do humbly apprehend, it is of Neceſſity, that there ſhould be Malice aforethought, which is the Eſſence of, and conſtitutes the Crime; and all Paſſions, particularly one of ſo extraordinary a Nature as this Malice, muſt have had ſome Cauſe. I do ſubmit to your Lordſhips, if there is the ſmalleſt Appearance of that Malice, or any Thing like a Cauſe aſſigned for it. But, even taking the Story as it ſtands in the Libel, it is a Tale that can gain Credit with no Mortal. What earthly Purpoſe could the Pannel ſerve by ſuch a deſperate Piece of Villainy? Would the Murder of Glenure prevent the Removal of the Tenants? Would not the Murder of Glenure deprive him of the Liberty which that Gentleman had given him to upliſt the Rents? Would it not put it out of his Power to help his Brother Ardſhiel's Family? The Pannel is allowed to be a judicious Man, prudent in his Actions beyond moſt Men of his Rank in the World. Can it be believed he would do a Thing ſo directly contrary to his Intereſt? Suppoſe him capable of the Crime, we muſt ſuppoſe him the greateſt Fool, as well as the greateſt Monſter that ever diſgraced Humanity. But, is this his Character? No, my Lord, as he is a ſenſible Man, ſo all who know him will ſay, he is a humane, peaceable, good-natured Man, looked upon as a Father where he lives; Strangers were happy to get their Children under his Care, as in Fact he is Tutor and Curator at this very Time to ſeveral Orphans, who have not the ſmalleſt Relation to him.

Here, my Lord, I will for a little leave the Pannel, and give an Account of Allan Breck Stewart, who is charged as the Committer of this Murder, having entered into a wicked Conſpiracy with the Pannel for that Purpoſe. Whether he was the actual Murderer or not, the Pannel knows not; neither is it my Buſineſs to ſay. I ſhall only point out what Connexions was betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck, leaving it to your Lordſhip, and the Jury, to judge, if the Circumſtances of theſe Connexions, as I ſhall now open them, or even as they are laid in the Libel, are ſufficient to fix upon the Pannel his being a Conſpirator in this execrable Plot. At the ſame Time, there is no Queſtion but the Proſecutors muſt fix the actual Murder upon Allan Breck, otherwiſe the Charge againſt the Pannel entirely flies off.

This Allan Breck Stewart, my Lord, was the Son of one Donald Stewart, a particular Friend, and diſtant Relation of the Pannel's. He died while his Children were Infants, and, upon his Death-bed, committed them to the Care of his Friend, naming him Tutor and Curator to them. The Pannel faithfully executed this Truſt, took Care of the Children's Education, and managed their Effects to the beſt Advantage. Allan turning extravagant, when he grew up to Man's Eſtate, and having ſpent what was left him by his Father, inliſted in his Majeſty's Service, without clearing Accounts with the Pannel, who uſed to ſupply him with Money, and pay little Debts for him, even after he became a Soldier, though he knew he had already given him more than his Patrimony. This the Pannel thought he owed to the Memory of his deceaſed Friend. Breck continued in his Majeſty's Service until the Battle of Preſton, where being taken Priſoner by the Rebels, he inliſted with them, continued with them during the Rebellion, and afterwards made his Eſcape into France, and inliſted in the French Service, where he ſtill continues. Since he firſt went over, he has been in uſe, now and then, of coming back to Scotland, and ſtaying a few Months with his Relations; he commonly landed firſt at Edinburgh, and lodged in the Houſe of one Hugh Stewart. There he ſeldom went out but in the Night, and more than once narrowly eſcaped being apprehended as a Deſerter. When he came up to Rannoch or Appin among his Relations, he uſed to ſtroll about without any ſettled Reſidence; and where-ever he came, he generally threw off his French Cloaths, as they were remarkable and improper for that hilly Country, and borrowed from any Acquaintance, where-ever he happened to be at the Time. Among others, he uſed to viſit at the Pannel's Houſe, though he came ſeldomer there than to other Places in the Neighbourhood, as the Pannel uſed to take a good deal of Freedom in blaming his Conduct and Extravagance. About the Beginning of March laſt he came over from France, was at the Houſes of Balachallan and Annat, and went from thence to Glenbucky's Houſe, where he continued until the End of March, and while there he threw aſide his French Cloaths, and wore Cloaths belonging to Glenbucky, or his Brother. In the Beginning of April he came to the Pannel's Houſe, immediately before the Pannel went to Edinburgh, and ſtaying a Day or two, went off with a dark coloured ſhort Coat with clear Buttons, and other Parts of the Country Dreſs, which he had picked up about the Pannel's Houſe, and continued ſtrolling about the Country in that Dreſs, until the latter End of April, when he returned to the Pannel's Houſe, and ſtaid a ſingle Night. On the 11th of May, about One o'Clock Afternoon, he returned, and found the Pannel upon a Field, where his Servants were covering Potatoes. They continued there about a Quarter of an Hour in the Hearing of the Servants, when an Expreſs came from Mr. Campbell of Airds to the Pannel, deſiring him to come to him at Keil upon Buſineſs; upon which the Pannel walked with Breck from the Field to the Houſe, at about fifty Yards Diſtance, and leaving him there without going in, went directly to Keil; continued there until betwixt Ten and Eleven at Night, when returning Home he found there ſeveral Strangers beſides Allan Breck. They ſupped all together, and continued in one Room until they went to Bed. Breck lay in the Barn with the Pannel's Sons, and one Archibald Cameron. The Pannel had no private Conferences with him; they were not one Moment by themſelves, nor ever in Company, but before the Family and the Strangers. Early in the Morning of Tueſday the 12th, before Breck was out of Bed, and without ſeeing or ſpeaking with him, the Pannel went to Appin's Houſe, and Breck was gone before he returned, and the Pannel has never ſeen him ſince. What Cloaths he carried off, he does not know; but he has authoriſed me to ſay, that what is laid in the Indictment may be true, that he went off in the ſhort Coat which he uſed before. That he went to Ballacheliſh, from that to Glenco's Houſe, and then to Callart, and, on Wedneſday, came back to Ballacheliſh, where he ſtaid all Night. On the Thurſday, in the Forenoon, he aſſiſted Ballacheliſh's Servants in carrying out Dung, and, after Dinner, he got a Rod, and went a-fiſhing, continued ſome Time in Sight of Ballacheliſh and his Servants, who were carrying out the Dung; but going a little up the Water, a riſing Ground intercepted their View, and they ſaw no more of him.

This, my Lord, is a true Account of the Connexion betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck preceding the Murder, as it will come out upon Proof. I will draw this Concluſion, that this horrid Conſpiracy muſt have been laid and concerted between them in a few Seconds, while the Pannel was walking from his Potatoe Ground to his Houſe, at fifty Yards Diſtance; for at no other Time had they any private Conference. The changing the Cloaths, your Lordſhip ſees, was altogether unknown to the Pannel, and what Breck was in uſe to do at the Pannel's Houſe, and over the whole Country. But taking the Story as it ſtands in the Libel, who can poſſibly believe that the Pannel would have given Breck his own Cloaths to diſguiſe himſelf for committing this Murder, or that Breck would have put on this Diſguiſe four Days before the Murder happened? The Libel ſays, Glenure was certainly expected on the Thurſday to return from Fort-William to Ardſhiel. Would Breck then have put on his Diſguiſe on the Monday, and gone about publickly in it? No, ſurely, my Lord; Children would have conducted a Plot better than this; and yet upon this Circumſtance of changing Cloaths, as incredible as it is falſly repreſented, ſtands one Half of the Proſecutor's Hopes (if the Libel contains them all) of fixing this Crime upon the Priſoner.

I proceed to lay before your Lordſhip the Sequel to Glenure's Murder. Betwixt Six and Seven on Thurſday Evening, Mackenzie, Glenure's Servant, called at the Pannel's Houſe, and informed him, that his Maſter was ſhot dead in the Wood of Lettermore. The Libel ſays, that the Pannel appeared nowiſe ſurpriſed or concerned at the News; and that neither he, or any of his Servants, went to look after the Corpſe. Mackenzie will not, dare not ſay ſo. The Pannel ſhewed that Surprize, that deep Concern, which every innocent Man muſt feel at ſo unexpected and melancholy an Accident. He directed Mackenzie the neareſt Road to Glenduror, to call Mr. Campbell of Bolaveolan, Glenure's Friend, and, in the mean Time, ſent ſuch of his Family as could be ſpared, and ſeveral of his Neighbours, to take Care of the Corpſe. On Friday Morning, the Day after the Murder, the Pannel received a Meſſage from Allan Breck, by Donald Stewart, Nephew to Ballacheliſh, who had ſeen him in the Fields about Nine o'Clock in the Evening before, when Breck told him, that as Glenure was killed, there would be a ſtrict Search for his Murderer; and he being a Deſerter, it was proper for him to keep out of the Way; he was therefore reſolved to leave the Country immediately; that he would hide himſelf for a Day or two in the Deſart of Koaliſnacoan; and as he had no Money, he begged of Donald Stewart to go to the Pannel, and inform him of this, and intreat him to ſend a little Money to him at Koaliſnacoan. Donold Stewart then ſaid to him, that he hoped he had no hand in Glenure's Murder himſelf: Upon which he took God to witneſs he had none; but his being a Deſerter to the Highland Army, was the only Cauſe of his abſconding, as he was ſure he would be hanged, without Mercy, if he was ſeized. Upon receiving this Meſſage, the Pannel ſent Alexander Stewart, Packman, to Fort-William, to one William Stewart, a Merchant there, to get five Guineas from him, him, telling him, at the ſame time, that it was for the Uſe of Allan Breck Stewart, who was going off the Country, as he was a Deſerter, to ſhun the Search which would be made for the Murderer of Glenure. Upon the Packman's Return, he found the Pannel in the Cuſtody of a Party of Soldiers; and as he had got but three Guineas from William Stewart at Fort-William, the Pannel gave him other two, and bid him go to Koaliſnacoan, where he would find Allan Breck, and give him the five Guineas. Upon which the Packman went home with the Pannel's Wife, who, he is ſince informed, gave him Breck's French Cloaths, which he had left at the Pannel's Houſe the Monday before, but which the Pannel knew nothing of. As to the long Epiſode in the Indictment, narrating the Converſations betwixt Allan Breck and the Bouman, as the Pannel knows nothing of them, they ſhall paſs unnoticed by me. Only I beg leave to make this ſingle Obſervation to the Gentlemen of the Jury, that when this Part of the Libel comes under their Conſideration, they will obſerve, that it can be proven by the Oath of but one Witneſs, and that Witneſs ſwearing only to what he heard Allan Breck ſay; conſequently the miſtaking one Word muſt be of the moſt fatal Conſequence, for this Reaſon, Hearſay Evidence is altogether rejected in Law. They will likewiſe conſider, that what Allan Breck ſays, is ſaid by one who wanted to clear himſelf to the Bouman of the Murder of Glenure, which the Bouman charged him with; for which Reaſon he might be tempted to throw out Inſinuations againſt others. Let the Jury keep theſe Hints in their Eye, and then let them give what Weight to this Part of the Libel their Conſciences can allow them. The Pannel was taken into Cuſtody on the 16th; on the 19th it was rumoured in Fort-William, where he was incarcerated, that Allan Breck was the Murderer of Glenure. No ſooner does the Pannel hear this, but he writes a Letter to Mr. Macfarlane, Writer to the Signet, expreſſing the greateſt Abhorrence and Deteſtation at the Murder; tells him that Allan Breck was ſuſpected to be the Committer of it, as he was that Day ſeen near the Place where Glenure was killed, and immediately diſappeared. He expreſſes his Deſire of having him brought to Juſtice; gives a particular Deſcription of his Looks and Dreſs; and further ſays, he was probably gone South, to take the firſt Opportunity of going abroad; and that he commonly lodged in the Houſe of Hugh Stewart at the Back of the Fountain-well, when he came to Edinburgh. This Letter too is brought as a Point of Dittay againſt the Pannel. What ſtrange and unaccountable Torturing of the moſt upright Actions muſt there be, to make this criminal? This Pupil, this Relation, this Friend's Son of his, whom he had ſupplied with a little Money, to keep him out of the Hands of the military Law as a Deſerter, no ſooner does he hear him named as being guilty of this horrid Murder, but he does all in his Power to have him brought to Juſtice: Strange it is indeed to make this a Crime! What ſhould the Pannel have done? Should he have concealed the ſuſpected Murderer? No, my Lord, he acted a more honourable Part, ſuch a Part as this Court will approve of; ſuch a Part as every Member of it would have acted himſelf.

As I have taken up too much of your Lordſhip's Time already, I ſhall but juſt mention ſuch Defences as occur in Point of Law, leaving them to be inſiſted on by the Gentlemen who are to ſupport me.

And, in the firſt Place, however willing the Pannel may be to ſtand the Iſſue of his Trial, it is our Buſineſs, as Counſel for him, to lay hold of every Handle againſt it. I therefore ſubmit to the Court, whether this Pannel, who is only charged as Acceſſary, can be tried before the Principal, Allan Breck, be firſt diſcuſſed. I do moſt humbly contend, he cannot; 1*mo*, Becauſe, if the contrary Practice were allowed, Probation might be led againſt the Principal, tho' abſent, contrary to the fundamental Law of this Nation; and it muſt firſt be proven he, the Principal, committed the Crime, primo debet conſtare de corpore delicti, before the Acceſſary can be convicted. 2*do*, If the Acceſſary muſt defend the abſent Principal, it may be of the moſt fatal Conſequence to both, tho' innocent. The Principal's greateſt Enemies may be led as Witneſſes, and ſuch Defences as would have been ſufficient to exculpate him entirely, may be omitted. 3*tio*, Theſe Principles are followed by the Opinions of all Lawyers who write upon the Criminal Law, and likeways by the Practice of neighbouring Nations, particularly that of England; where the Principal muſt be attainted after Verdict or Confeſſion, before any Judgment can be given againſt the Acceſſary. But, 4*to*, What I now plead, I humbly apprehend to be the Law of Scotland; for ſo it is expreſly ſaid, Reg. Mag. ch. 26. b. 4. Quon. Attach. ch. 83. and 29 ſtat. David. II. And, agreeable to theſe, is the Opinion of our great Criminal Lawyer Sir George Mackenzie, laid down in the ſtrongeſt Terms in his Title Art. Part. Paragraph 9th. 5*to*, I muſt object for the Pannel to the Relevancy of this Libel, that the Facts and Circumſtances mentioned in it, though they ſhould be fully proven, are not ſufficient to infer his being acceſſary to this Murder. Every Libel is a Syllogiſm: The major Propoſition contains the Crime, and the Laws againſt that Crime; the minor contains the Facts charged againſt the Pannel; and the Concluſion is, that, from theſe Facts, he is guilty of the Crime, and deſerves to ſuffer the Pains of Law. Now, if the Facts charged do not amount to the Crime, the Concluſion muſt be falſe, and the Libel irrelevant. This, I humbly apprehend, is the preſent Caſe. From the above Narration of the Facts, and what Obſervations I have already made upon them, I hope your Lordſhips will be of Opinion, that the Circumſtances charged in the Libel are ſo extremely vague and trivial, that they are not ſufficient to bring the Pannel under ſo much as a Suſpicion of being guilty of this horrid Crime laid to his Charge.

If your Lordſhips ſhall think proper to repel theſe Defences, and to remit the Pannel on this Indictment to the Knowledge of an Aſſize, we humbly hope you will allow us a Proof of all Facts and Circumſtances that can tend to his Exculpation; particularly of his Friendſhip with Glenure; of Allan Breck's being a Deſerter, and being in uſe to put off his French Cloaths, and put on Cloaths belonging to the Family where he happened to be at the Time; of the Pannel's having no private Conference with him preceding the Murder; of the Meſſage which the Pannel got from him after the Murder, bidding him ſend him a little Money to Koaliſnacoan, where he was going; and, in general, of all other Defences that may occur as neceſſary to the Pannel in the Courſe of his Trial. I will conclude, my Lords, with a ſingle Word to the Gentlemen of the Jury, that the more flagrant, the more atrocious any Crime is, the more clearly and diſtinctly they will require it to be made out to them: That as the Crime is propoſed to be fixed upon the Pannel by preſumptive Evidence alone, they will be cautious in diſtinguiſhing betwixt ſuch Preſumptions as are concluſive, and ſuch as are not ſo; between ſuch Preſumptions as can ariſe from no other Cauſe but the Pannel's being in a Conſpiracy to Murder Glenure, and ſuch as are more naturally conſtrued to have ariſen from other Cauſes. If they find ſuch Preſumptions; as that they can, before Almighty God, bring in a Verdict guilty, it is their Duty to do ſo, and the Law will have its Vengeance. But let them have this always in their Eye, that better twenty guilty eſcape, than that one innocent Man ſhould ſuffer Death by their Verdict.

Mr. Robert Mackintosh for the Pannel.

My Lord Juſtice-General, and Lords Commiſſioners of Juſticiary,

I Appear alſo to contribute my ſmall Mite towards the Defence of this Pannel, who has the Misfortune to be accuſed of a Crime, which every body muſt admit to be of the deepeſt Dye; and, as laid in the Indictment, attended with the moſt aggravating Circumſtances; and I do it, my Lords, not out of an Opinion of my being in any Degree equal to the Taſk, a Share of which I have undertaken; but rather that a poor Man, ſtanding Trial for his Life, may not not be abſolutely deſtitute of Aſſiſtance, when uncommon Endeavours have been uſed to deprive him of abler Help.

My Lords, I dare ſay, every one who ſpeaks in this Cauſe, on whatever Side, will begin with expreſſing a Deteſtation of the Crime now charged againſt the Pannel; if not in accuſing the Pannel, yet in this we ſhall all agree, to condemn the miſerable Perſon, whoſe Conſcience accuſes himſelf of it; whether he now ſtands at the Bar, or whether he flies from the avenging Sword of Juſtice. I muſt acknowledge, that if the Pannel has been guilty of, or acceſſary to this Murder, beyond all Controverſy it conſtitutes him one of the greateſt Criminals that this or any other Country can afford. Murder is a heinous Crime, whether it is the Fate of the Eminent or the Obſcure. But this Murder ſeems to be a Complication of all Guilt; and as my Duty calls me to plead in Defence of one labouring under ſuch an Accuſation, I cannot do it but with the utmoſt Concern. The very Mention of ſuch Barbarity and Iniquity, as was juſt now rehearſed, could not fail to move every humane Breaſt; but the reading of an Indictment, ſuch as we have a little while ago heard, is enough to inſpire Horror even in the Innocent. It is ſtill harder upon me, when I conſider the unhappy Sufferer in that dreadful Scene, which is now to be the Subject of Trial; one, againſt whoſe Life I ſhould be the laſt Man to excuſe the ſmalleſt Attempt; one whom I knew, whom I regarded, whom I had the Honour to be in Friendſhip with: His Death, had it been common, would have affected me; but his Murder afflicts me. I ſincerely regret it, for his own ſake, for the ſake of his Friends, for the ſake of the poor diſconſolate Lady, who now weeps over her own Widowity, and the orphan State of her infant Children; I regret it for the ſake of the whole Land, that ſtands polluted by the cruel Shedding of innocent Blood; and, in a particular Manner, do I regret it for the ſake of the Highlands of Scotland, for which I own, from private Connexions, I cannot help having a Regard, and which I am afraid have, by this unlucky Accident, ſuffered a deep political Wound, that it may take Time to rub off the Effects of; as being able to furniſh ſo eminent an Inſtance of Barbariſm, in ſpite of the noble Attempt of the Legiſlature, and of all in the Adminiſtration, to poliſh and civilize them, to reduce them to the righteous Plan of the Government of this Country, and to a conſtitutional Equality with the reſt of the united Kingdom.

My Lords, for theſe Reaſons do I moſt heartily join in deploring this fatal Cataſtrophe. At the ſame Time, my Lords, the Defence I am now to plead, fixes my Attention upon a more agreeable Proſpect; that of Innocence, and not of Guilt; and the Importance of the Iſſue juſtly challenges my moſt ſanguine Efforts. We have before us the Life and Fortune of a Man, a Countryman, I believe an innocent, tho' accuſed one: I muſt believe him innocent, not only as I am yet ignorant of any Proof that I think ſhould convict him, but more, as I have not been able, in a very ſtrict Inveſtigation, to diſcover from himſelf any Symptom of Guilt; and as the Perſuaſion of Innocence may give Courage to defend, ſo I perſuade myſelf I need make no Apology, if I am able to ſpeak with that Earneſtneſs and Freedom that becomes the Conſequence of what is at Stake. And, on the other hand, I hope to be excuſed, if I fail in that Accuracy and Diſtinctneſs, which I could wiſh to obſerve, from a juſt Regard to the Dignity of this High Court, and to the Preſence of a crouded, and I dare ſay, an intereſted Audience, who are ready to ſwallow with Greedineſs every Word that ſhall be ſpoke on this Subject.

My Lords, before I go farther, I cannot omit obſerving, what I am extremely ſenſible of, and that is, the Diſadvantages under which this Pannel enters upon a Trial for himſelf, and all that is dear to him in this World, for what concerns all that is precious to him in another; Diſadvantages which we ſhare in, who appear as his Counſel. But when I ſay ſo, I would not be underſtood as meaning to inſinuate any Reflexion upon the Conduct of the honourable Gentleman who proſecutes for his Majeſty: He does the Duty of his Office, the Duty which he owes to his King and Country; and gave an early Proof in this Matter of that Candour for which he is remarkable on all Occaſions, by turning a general Indictment into a ſpecial and circumſtantiate Charge. But, to uſe his own Words, when hindered from doing what his humane Inclination equally led him to, his Lordſhip is here but half a Purſuer: There are others concerned in carrying on this Proſecution; and I am afraid their juſt Reſentment of a Murder, which they had all the Reaſon in the World to be zealous in ſearching out the Committers of, has made them unguarded to Meaſures which I ſhould be ſorry to ſee retaliate; and puſhed them beyond the Bounds of what I would call Humanity, perhaps think Juſtice; and yet, while I cannot approve of their Conduct, I am loth, if I could avoid it, to be ſevere againſt it, not knowing, whatever I now think, how far Rage might have got the Aſcendant of Reaſon with myſelf, if in their Place. One Thing is obvious, that though it is true, that the Juſtice of our Law agrees with the common Law of Reaſon, in preſuming every Man innocent till he is proved guilty, yet we have Reaſon to fear we come here oppreſſed with Prejudice, to create and propagate which, againſt this unfortunate Pannel, no Pains, no Expence has been ſpared, with manifeſt Intent to prejudge him in his Trial; and in this have ſome People been wiſe in their Generation; well knowing, that as preſumed Innocence is a great Advantage in a Trial, ſo believed Guilt is no ſmall Step to Conviction, and often anticipates the juſt Foundations of it, which can ariſe only in Proof. When I ſee, and am ſorry for this, my Lords, in one View, yet do I moſt rejoice at it in another, as it ſhews the Weakneſs of the Cauſe that has needed ſuch artificial Feet to ſupport it, even in the Beginning, and which being removed, as I hope they ſoon will be, the Superſtructure built upon the falſe Baſis will alſo fail. There are other Things too, which the Law of the Land would intitle us to complain of, and which a few Years more Experience might make it better become me to exclaim againſt: A cloſe Confinement of the Pannel, contrary to the ſacred Charter of Liberty, which this Nation boaſts of; and which illegal Proceeding was only removed of late by the Interpoſition of this Court; Impriſonment of Witneſſes to be adduced againſt him, where none had Acceſs to them but the private Proſecutors, or their Agents, removed at a Diſtance from the Check of my Lord Advocate's Superintendance, whoſe Office, though it intitles him to inveſtigate the Proof of public Offences, yet renders a Privilege, dangerous to be indulged to every injured Party, ſafe in his Hands. The Pannel has had but ſhort Warning to prepare for his Trial, tho' he was at great Diſtance from the Capital, from which only he could have Counſel and Aſſiſtance: And it is but very lately ſince his Counſel had Acceſs to ſee himſelf; not for ſome Time after we were in this Place. Theſe Things I only mention, as my Brother his already fully opened them; and I mention them, my Lords, as what may have ſome Weight with the Jury, who are to try the Pannel, (and whom I now conſider myſelf as addreſſing) to remove the Prejudices that are ſo naturally, tho' inſenſibly, imbibed without Doors, and which eſpecially ariſe in the Mind from the unavoidable, tho' inconvenient Situation, in which a ſuppoſed Criminal muſt appear, even when as yet the Law preſumes him not guilty, loaded with Irons, and ſurrounded with Guards.

My Lords, I do not mention, as a Diſadvantage to the Pannel, the Place of his Trial. I think it can be none: There are Reaſons why this Place may be more proper for the Trial than any other, whether the Pannel be guilty or innocent; that he may be either acquit or condemned, and Juſtice may take place where the Crime was committed. And one Advantage the Pannel moſt ſurely profits of by the Trial being here, viz. the Preſence of the Prince who preſides in it, and who, in a ſpecial Manner, is the Father of his own Country, as he juſtly appears to be of this Part of the Kingdom. This of itſelf is more than ſufficient to balance a Diſadvantage, were it poſſible to ſuppoſe any could ariſe from the Opportunity that affords it: At the ſame Time, I would, with great Deference, obſerve (and I hope I may do it without giving Offence, which I am ſure I do not mean to do), that there may be ſomething in this, which calls upon the Jury to be cautious; and I hope an Attention to it will have the Effect to make them rather lean to the favourable Side, than be diſpoſed to make any Stretch againſt the Pannel. It is the Privilege of the Subjects of this Country to be tried by one another: Yet, when we have this Advantage, and it is an ineſtimable one, ſtill it is to be tried by Men of like Paſſions, i. e. like Infirmities with ourſelves; and all Men are more or leſs ſuſceptible of Prejudice. I hope, however, I may ſafely truſt to the Honour of ſuch a Jury as will be put upon the Pannel's Trial, that they will, if any ſuch there are, lay aſide all Regard to Country Alliances or Connexions, diveſt themſelves of all Prejudices, and ſit down to the Trial with a candid Reſolution to yield only to the Force of Truth; deſiring rather to ſee Innocence thereby vindicated, than Guilt, unwiſhed-for Guilt condemned, and inclined to give the Caſt of Favour on the favourable Side, unleſs the Proof ſhall come out very clear and convincing. Trials in this Country are open and public, and the Eyes of the World are a Check both upon Judges and Jury; and as this Murder has been, and juſtly, the Subject of an extended Speculation, ſo will the Trial for it: I hope, be the Iſſue of it what it will, it ſhall be ſo conducted, as to reflect nothing on any concerned in it; and, I ſhall only add, that, could I ſuſpect that the Law of my Country, or the Court, could put any on the Pannel's Jury, who would overlook their Obligations to Impartiality, which I dare ſay is impoſſible in this preſent Caſe, I would put ſuch in Mind, that, if they have no Regard to the Pannel, they ſhould regard themſelves; for, as the old Philoſopher ſaid, Nobody is happy before he die; what is the Pannel's Fate To-day, may be ours To-morrow, and what is Proof againſt him, may be againſt another long after this. Every Trial, therefore, tho' it preſently affects only thoſe who are under it, is in a material Senſe the Cauſe of thoſe who do try, of the Public, and of Poſterity.

My Lords, having ſaid ſo much in general, (and I think I could ſay no leſs) it ſhould be my Province now to ſtate what has occured to me for the Defence of the Pannel againſt this Indictment.

And here, my Lords, we have a moſt barbarous, indeed a ſhocking Murder, charged againſt two Perſons; but with this material Diſtinction between the two, that the one is by the Indictment charged as the actual Murderer, by himſelf; the other Mortal along with him at the Perpetration of it; and the other is only alledged acceſſary thereto, as having been in a previous Conſpiracy with the Murderer: And the Pannel now to be tried, is this Conſpirator.

My Lords, I do not diſtinctly ſee, from the Indictment as laid againſt Brack, what Proof there will be of his being the actual Murderer. I ſhould at preſent imagine, from the Way in which the Story is told, that there can be no Proof, at leaſt no direct, no ſatisfying Proof. But be that as it will, one Thing I am ſure of, from the Nature of the Thing; it is impoſſible there can be any direct Proof of a Conſpiracy, to which only the two Perſons accuſed were privy: And therefore it is, we ſee my Lord Advocate has very properly, and, I think, very candidly, as I ſaid before, ſpecified his Charge of Accemon againſt the Pannel, into theſe Circumſtances, from which his Lordſhip infers the Acceſſion or Conſpiracy. And it is upon the Relevancy, or Import of theſe Circumſtances, that I fall to ſpeak to your Lordſhips. For it is not to be imagined, that, by diſputing the Relevancy of the Indictment, we mean to call in Queſtion that Murder is a Crime: And, for my own Part, I as little contend, that, as the Law now ſtands, the Charge againſt the Pannel in the general Propoſition of the Libel is relevant, that he is guilty, Actor, Art and Part of the Murder of Gleware. And I do farther admit, that, if the Pannel has been acceſſary to, or the Former or Contriver of a Conſpiracy for perpetrating this horrid Murder, he is truly as much Art and Part thereof, as the actual Murderer: Nay, were that the Caſe, I ſhould not heſitate to pronounce him, if poſſible, a greater Criminal than the Miſcreant by whoſe Hands he accompliſhed the wicked Aſſaſſination. But it is my Buſineſs now to endeavour to ſhew, that the Circumſtances condeſcended upon in the Libel, and on which I muſt ſuppoſe the Proof is to reſt, are not tantamount to the general Charge; or, in other Words, that the Premiſſes of the Indictment, ſuppoſing them true, do not infer the Concluſion, much leſs will they ſupport it, when they appear in that Light which I hope the Proof will place them in, diveſted of the romantic Dreſs of Exaggeration, in which Fancy has dreſſed them. And when I attempt this, I own, my Lords, it is not with Deſign to influence your Lordſhips Interlocutor; for, as I have already admitted the general Propoſition of the Libel to be a relevant Charge, I ſuppoſe the Interlocutor of the Court will be confined to that. It was the Cuſtom, not many Years ago, for the Court to pronounce ſpecial Interlocutors upon ſuch Indictments as the one now under Conſideration, finding what Facts or Circumſtances, if proven, would infer the Charge: But your Lordſhips later, and, I think, better Practice, has been to evade that, as what, if it had any Effect to influence the Judgment of the Jury, did in ſo far deprive the Pannel of his rightful Privilege to be tried by the Jury, and not by the Court; or as, what indeed was more likely to happen, being a Thing that had no Effect at all, as the Jury would judge over again for themſelves, what the Court had ineptly judged of for them. I ſay, therefore, my Lords, I do not ſpeak ſo much for your Lordſhips, as for the Jury; willing, ſo far as I can, to guide their Attention to where I apprehend it ought chiefly to be fixed, in the Proof they are to hear; and to help them, if I can, to judge on what Part of it they ought to lay Streſs in forming an Opinion of this Cauſe.

There is only one Thing which I muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhips, and I which I ſhall but mention, as my Brother, who opened the Defence, has already offered it, and your Lordſhips may hear more of it in the Reply to my Lord Advocate; and that is, the prejudicial Queſtion how far the Pannel, charged with an Acceſſion to the Crime of another, can be tried for it, till the Principal is firſt diſcuſſed. Your Lordſhips well know, that an Acceſſary does of its own Nature follow a Principal; till, then, there be a Principal, there can be no Acceſſary, and the Principal being removed, the Acceſſary is alſo taken away; and therefore, till the one is convicted, there is no Room for trying the other; in like manner as the Principal being acquit, the Accomplices cannot be condemned. That the Law ſtood formerly ſo, is moſt certain; as appears from many Authorities, which I forbear citing. How far this is altered by the Act of Parliament, introducing the Law of Art and Part, will be ſubject to the Judgment of the Court, where I leave it. But I muſt at leaſt inform the Jury, that, however the Law ſtands in this Matter, it is undoubtedly certain, that they, or any Jury, cannot convict an Acceſſary, but upon this Suppoſition, that, if the Principal were under Trial before them, they would convict him, Quando proceditur contra aliquem tanquam qui præſtiterit auxilium, debet conſtare principalem delinquiſſe. And the Gentlemen of the Jury will take heed to this, that if they ſhall find Cauſe to convict the Pannel upon the Evidence that ſhall be brought before them, they do, in the moſt expreſs Manner, declare their Opinion, that Brack, and no other, was the Murderer of Gleware. Nor muſt they hold ſufficient for this Purpoſe the preſumptive Conviction, which ariſes from his flying Juſtice, and being fugitate and outlawed by the Sentence we heard this Day pronounced. The Law ſays expreſsly, That no Fugitation of a Principal is to be held for a Conviction againſt an Acceſſary; and indeed, why ſhould it? For the Confeſſion of the Principal, were he now here, would not be Evidence againſt the Pannel, and much leſs muſt his Abſence or Run-away have that Effect. So that the Jury muſt here conſider, that, before they can convict the Pannel, they muſt have ſuch Evidence againſt Brack, as would condemn him, were he on Trial. And ſo, leaving Mr. Brack till we ſee what Proof comes out againſt him, the Queſtion is at preſent, Upon what is the Charge of the Pannel's Guilt founded? or, Are the Circumſtances alledged in the Indictment ſufficient to ſupport the Accuſation of Art and Part againſt the Pannel?

And here, my Lords, I do not propoſe to entertain your Lordſhips with a nice Diſquiſition on the Law of Art and Part; ſuffer me only, in three Words, to mention that, ſo far as I can comprehend by the Law of Scotland, Art and Part is inferred from Circumſtances antecedent to, concomitant with, or ſubſequent upon the actual Commiſſion of a Crime. Now, my Lords, when I look to the Indictment before me, I am able only to perceive two Facts condeſcended upon, from which the Pannel's Acceſſion to this Murder is to be inferred; the Cloaths alledged to be furniſhed by the Pannel to Brack before the Murder, as a Diſguiſe to commit it in, and the Money ſent him after the Action, to enable him to go off the Country. Theſe, I ſay, my Lords, are, ſo far as it appears to me, the only two conſiderable Circumſtances to infer Acceſſion: For your Lordſhips will obſerve, there is an abſolute Blank as to the principal Period in which Guilt ought to appear, the actual Commiſſion of the Crime; at leaſt, ſo far as I can gather, there is not one concomitant Circumſtance alledged againſt the Pannel, which connects with the actual Murder. And, as for the Circumſtance of the Pannel's ſending the Money to a certain Place, where, as would appear from the Indictment, he had no Acceſs to know that Brack was; as to that, I ſay, and ſome other ones of leſſer Moment, which I likewiſe take Notice of, I take them to be deſigned as a Key to explain into a Connexion with the Murder, the two Facts already mentioned, by ſhewing a previous Knowledge of the Murder, which the Facts themſelves do not import, and yet without which they have no Weight. Upon theſe two cardinal Facts, then, attempted to be supported by the other leſſer Circumſtances, in my Apprehenſion, lies the Burden of the Proſecutors Charge. And I will beg leave to ſay a few Words to each of them.

But, before Particulars, give me leave, my Lords, as ſhortly as I can, to make an Obſervation or two upon the Nature of Proof in general.

And, my Lords, I think it is a common, but a well-founded Maxim, derived from better Authority than mine, that, in proportion to the Greatneſs of a Crime, ought the Strength of the Proof of it to be. The higher a Crime is, and the deeper it draws in its Conſequences, ſo much the clearer and ſtronger ought the Evidence of it to be: And indeed juſtly; for, I hope, bad as Men are, corrupted as human Nature is, it is not come that Length, that Vice is natural to Mankind. I rather perſuade myſelf, that it coſts ſome Pains, by rooted Habits, to extinguiſh the Sparks of Reaſon, which are the Seeds of Virtue. Here then, my Lords, is a Crime of ſo enormous a Size, that it is almoſt too big to believe; Murder, deliberate Murder, Aſſaſſination in Face of the Sun, in Defiance of all Law and Government. What Proof ſhould then be expected of ſo monſtrous an Offence? That one ſhould ſit down deliberately and coolly to form a Conſpiracy of bereaving another of his Life, in ſo horrid and barbarous a Manner; what Degree of Flagitioſity muſt not be proved to ſuppoſe one capable of it? Sure, though many Circumſtances be brought to eſtabliſh a Preſumption of Guilt, yet to believe it is no eaſy Matter. Muſt it then depend upon Gueſs-work? Is it to be tried upon queſtionable Evidence? or, Is a Jury to be perſuaded into it by Art? No, there muſt be the moſt palpable and inconteſtable Proof; and, unleſs the Evidence is full and plain, no Credit, I will venture to ſay, can be given to ſo black, ſo deteſtable, and ſo unnatural a Charge. It would almoſt require to ſee the Blood of the Innocent reeking on the Hands of the Guilty. But what have we here? Preſumptions built upon Preſumptions; Suſpicions, and theſe Suſpicions ſupported by others; Suſpicions without Proof, nay diſproved. We have firſt to get over the Belly of a good fair Character, which this Pannel had the Happineſs to poſſeſs, a blameleſs, moral Life in private. And, ſhould he all at once have deviated ſo far from the Paths of Virtue? Could he ſo ſuddenly ſhake off a Regard to all that is ſacred? I ſhould have expected to have heard urged againſt this Pannel, the abandoned Diſſoluteneſs of his Manners, the Barbarity of his Nature, that his Life was one continued Courſe of Wickedneſs; in ſhort, every Part of his Character devoted to Murder; that he was one inured to the Practice of it, and diſtinguiſhed by the moſt conſummated Guilt: Yet not one of theſe Circumſtances ſo much as alledged in all this aggravated Charge; and for a good Reaſon, viz. That the contrary is well known to be true by the Proſecutors themſelves. Next, my Lords, when we ſeek for a Cauſe of ſuch a Malice as could produce this Crime, we find a Cauſe that never ſubſiſted; a Cauſe noways adequate to the Effect: Reſentment; for what? For accepting an Office which ſomebody muſt have got; and none could have made a more favourable Uſe of, for the Friends of the Pannel, than this Gentleman did: (For which Reaſon they will be proved to have been in good Friendſhip long after that) Reſentment for turning out ſome Tenants from an Eſtate forfeit to the Crown; irrecoverably loſt to the Family with which the Pannel was connected. This is the Foundation; and what is the Superſtructure? Of a Piece with it truly. Why, the Murderer had on a Coat of the Pannel's when he committed the brutal Action, and got Money from him after it. Here is the Proof; a circumſtantiate Proof it is called.

My Lords, I have no Objection to circumſtantiate Proof; what the Law calls argumentative Evidence. I do admit, that it is a legal and proper Sort of Evidence, as much as direct Proof by Witneſſes. Every thing is legal Evidence, that is ſuch real and certain Proof as ought, in natural Juſtice and Equity, to be received: For what is Evidence of a Fact, but ſuch Teſtimony as the Nature of the Caſe requires to induce a moral Certainty of the Thing teſtified? And an Argument is nothing elſe than what gives Faith or Credit to a Thing in itſelf doubtful, which perfectly agrees with the Law-Definition of Proof or Proving, which is fidem facere. I will admit further, that circumſtantiate Evidence, when clear, is perhaps the moſt ſatisfying and convincing Proof of any. Circumſtances are inflexible Proofs: They will not bend to the Inclination of Parties: Witneſſes may be miſtaken, may be corrupted: Things can be neither; and therefore, ſo far as they go, deſerve unlimited, unreſerved Faith.

But then, my Lords, the Circumſtances muſt be clear, certain, and well connected: No Blank in the Chain, elſe all goes for nothing: The Arguments muſt be perſpicuous, nervous, and concluſive. The ſame Law that has ſaid, crimina poſſe probari, vel teſtibus, vel documentis aut indiciis, as it requires idonei teſtes, ſo does it documenta apertiſſima, indicia indubitata, lucs meridiana clariora. We muſt therefore, my Lords, carefully diſtinguiſh between circumſtantiate or argumentative Evidence, and bare Preſumption or even Probability; much more Suſpicion and Conjecture, with all which it has a near Affinity, and is therefore apt to be confounded with them; for they all depend on Facts or Circumſtances. But, ſays our great Criminal Lawyer, Sir George Mackenzie, Crimes cannot be proved by Preſumptions; for Preſumptions are only founded on Veriſimilitude, and what may be, may not be; whereas all Probations, eſpecially in Criminals, ſhould be infallible and certain; concluſio ſemper debet ſequi debiliorem partem: If otherways, ſays he, Judges (or Juries now) would be arbitrary. Probabilities, again, ſays a good Reaſoner, twenty of them allowed to be ſuch, are not equal to one Matter of Fact well atteſted; They may ſtrengthen the Fact, but cannot ſupply it: They cannot be Evidence themſelves, becauſe one Probability may be ſet againſt another, and ſo mutually deſtroy the Force of each other: And as for Suſpicions and Conjectures, who will pretend a Right to indulge them, where Life and Fortune are concerned?

Guarding then, my Lords, againſt theſe Things which are ready to miſlead, let us, and let the Jury, my Lords, examine cautiouſly and candidly the Circumſtances I mentioned, on which the Burden of the Indictment lies: Let us ſee if they approach a Proof; if they do not more participate of the Nature hardly of Preſumption, not at all Probability, rather Suſpicion and Conjecture; or if they amount to a ſolid and ſubſtantial circumſtantiate or argumentative Evidence.

My Lords, I mentioned firſt the Cloaths: And permit me, my Lords, once more in general to obſerve upon this Circumſtance, as well as the others that follow, That I do, with great Submiſſion, apprehend they derive their whole Weight from a Belief of the Pannel's Guilt, which it is indeed very natural to entertain from ſuch Circumſtances as he now appears in. The Indictment ſets out with laying down this Crime in the moſt ugly Colours, as indeed it juſtly does deſerve; and then ſubſumes, that the Pannel is guilty of it; and I venture to ſay, that, take away the Influence which too eaſy a Credit to this firſt Poſition gives to what comes after, all the Circumſtances brought to ſupport the Charge will in a great Meaſure loſe their Force; ſo that the Aſſertion of the Charge is the very Thing which ſupports the Circumſtances adduced to prove it, than which nothing can be a more falſe Circle of Probation. Prejudice, my Lords, is like a jaundiced Eye, or a magnifying Glaſs: To the firſt, every Thing it looks at appears yellow; and the laſt, to Appearance, increaſes the Bulk of every Object to which it is applied. Juſt ſo Prejudice diſcolours every Circumſtance, turns the moſt trivial into ſomething of Importance, and makes what is in itſelf indifferent, a Proof of Guilt. Can the Truth of this appear more verified in any, than it is in the preſent Caſe?

My Lords, I will not repeat the true Fact, as your Lordſhips have already heard it opened, with reſpect to the Cloaths: Had it been that Breck had really received them from the Pannel, ſure that of itſelf would not have proved the Pannel's Acceſſion to a Murder committed by Breck at the Diſtance of ſo many Days. But has it any Weight at all, this Circumſtance, as it has been told your Lordſhips, and as it will be proved to have in Fact happened? A Man comes to my Houſe, and, without my Knowledge, puts on, and goes away with my Cloaths; and when wearing theſe, a Murder is committed: Muſt I be acceſſary to this Murder? or, muſt I be preſumed acceſſary to it? Breck, your Lordſhips hear, was in uſe of changing his Dreſs: He had been ſix Weeks at one Time in Rannoch with theſe very Cloaths; and becauſe he has them upon him again at the unlucky Period, muſt the Pannel for that be guilty with him? My Lords, we have heard of Villains borrowing, ſtealing Cloaths, aſſuming Characters, feigning Voices, and ſuch like Things, when about to commit Crimes, of purpoſe to deceive, and to throw the Suſpicion of Guilt off from themſelves upon the Innocent. But ſurely theſe are dangerous Circumſtances, and would need to be ſupported by better Proof, before the Life of any Man was taken away upon them; or indeed what Man is ſafe? It will not avail that we keep ourſelves ſafe, ſo long as it is in the Power of others thus to bring us into Danger. Every Man muſt ſo be at the Mercy of others, and thoſe of the vileſt of Mankind. The Libel indeed ſays, the Pannel furniſhed Breck with his Cloaths; but how is that to be proved? Did the Pannel give him them? No, my Lords, we ſhall prove he took them, and went with them from the Pannel's Houſe, when he was not there, when he knew nothing of it. But tho' he had known, as he did on former Occaſions, or though he had with his own Hands given them to Breck, would it have been Proof againſt the Pannel? I cannot imagine it. I might admit, that had Breck never before changed his Dreſs at the Pannel's Houſe, had this been the firſt Time, it might have been a Circumſtance, and but a weak one too, from which to preſume Guilt againſt the Pannel: But when he had been in uſe of doing it, does there from thence ariſe ſo much as a diſtant Suſpicion againſt the Pannel? Whatever Effect it may have againſt Breck to preſume that wicked Deſign, which I ſhall at preſent take for granted he ſoon thereafter executed, (to preſume it, I ſay, againſt him) that he changed, at ſo critical a Conjuncture, his Dreſs; yet ſure it can have no Influence againſt the Pannel, who, till 'tis better proved, cannot be ſuppoſed privy to ſo horrid an Undertaking in Breck. And this, my Lords, puts me in mind to make a Diſtinction, which I ſhould have made ſooner, that is, betwixt Breck and the Pannel. And I muſt call upon the Jury carefully to ſeparate the Parts of this Indictment, which refer to the one and to the other; for, when they are confounded together, one, in reading or hearing it, is extremely apt equally to apply the Effect of all the Circumſtances to both. The Indictment has ſo checquered them thro' other, that it coſts ſome Pains to diſtinguiſh them, and lay to the Door of Breck, and of the Pannel, what ſeparately applies to each, and ſeems to ſupport the different Charges againſt them. To ſhew the Neceſſity of this, I will but mention one Paragraph of the Libel, where this Confuſion manifeſtly prevails. It is there firſt ſaid, that Breck having come to the Pannel's Houſe on the Monday Evening, James Stewart the Pannel was informed by him, (Breck) or by his Son Charles Stewart, or by Faſnacloich's Daughter, of Glenure's Motions and Reſolutions. And then it immediately follows, "And there, after receiving ſuch Advice, in the Evening "of the ſame Day, the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart laid aſide his own Cloaths, "&c." So your Lordſhips ſee, that firſt Breck is ſaid to inform the Pannel, and then Breck's receiving ſuch Advice or Information from the Pannel, (juſt inverting the Thing) is laid down as the Spring of Breck's Actions, with a Deſign, as is plain, to extract Guilt againſt the Pannel, from his giving Information to Breck, which produced his Action, when it was truly Breck himſelf that informed the Pannel, as the Indictment firſt aſſerts. This, my Lords, may be an Inaccuracy in wording the Indictment; but it is not for that I obſerve it: I mention it, that the Jury may ſee how carefully they muſt conſider and weigh every Branch of this complex Charge, as being heedleſs to one Branch or Circumſtance may have bad Effect. And ſurely it is evident in this Particular, that the Weight of the Circumſtance, as laid againſt the Pannel, wholly flies off by a juſt Attention to the erroneous Connexion of the Fact as narrated.

There is another Circumſtance of the Indictment, which, though it does not fall ſo directly within my preſent View, I cannot omit taking Notice of it, as it comes a-croſs my Thought; it is as to the Pannel's Behaviour when the Murder of Glenure was firſt notified to him by Glenure's Servant. It is ſaid the Pannel appeared noways ſurpriſed or concerned. Alas, my Lords, what ſuch Proof of Guilt is this? We have ſeen doubtful Actions by the Help of Innuendoes conſtrued criminally; but to give that in Evidence which was neither ſaid nor done, to conſtrue Silence into Guilt, is entirely new; and the Author of this Invention will deſerve the Glory of the Diſcovery: This is, indeed, to conjure one into a Crime. My Lords, I could venture to invert the Propoſition, if the Gentlemen pleaſe, and maintain, that a contrary Behaviour, to any remarkable Degree, would have been more ſuſpicious, Tremor eſt ſignum cædis, or in the Words of the Proverb of our own Country, The greateſt Thief cries firſt, fy. But, my Lords, the Fact is different from what is in the Libel. It will be proved to your Lordſhips and the Jury, that the Pannel, upon receiving this Piece of, I muſt call it melancholy News, expreſſed to the Meſſenger a decent Concern and Regret, tho' little did he think at that Time, that his Behaviour then would now be brought into Judgment againſt him.

Of the ſame Kind with this, my Lords, is another Circumſtance, which I remember in the Indictment (for I cannot go thro' them all); and that is, a Letter of the Pannel's to one Charles Stewart, relating to the Price of Milk-Cows.——I confeſs, my Lords, it is to me myſterious yet, what Import this Letter is of as a Proof againſt the Pannel. If it is, that the Subject of it is ſuſpected to be fictitious, that we ſhall be able to prove real. But what Connexion has it with the Charge? I own I cannot find it out. It would appear to me that this Letter muſt ſuffer Torture, and not a little of it, before any thing can be ſqueezed out of it againſt the Pannel. It puts me in mind of a Saying of a great but very wicked Politician, Cardinal Mazarine, who is ſaid to have boaſted, that, if he had but two Lines of a Man's Writing, with a few Circumſtances atteſted by Witneſſes, he would cut off any Man's Head when he pleaſed. Thank God, we breathe in a Climate different from the one that Pontiff ruled in: And I hope we do not delight in Blood ſo much as to adopt his cruel Scheme.

Theſe Things, my Lords, I have thrown out by the Way; but as to what I was upon, the Circumſtance of the Cloaths, I ſhall only add, that as it is in Truth, it appears of no Weight at all; and had it been as in the Indictment, I ſhould have thought it a Circumſtance greatly too thin and ſlender to build any thing upon.

There only then remains the other Circumſtance of the Money, which is poſterior to the Murder: For, as I have already had occaſion to obſerve, I do not diſcover a concomitant Circumſtance alledged, unleſs the Arms be pointed at for this Purpoſe; as I obſerve, there are two Guns mentioned in the Liſt of Evidence, as found concealed near the Pannel's Houſe, and which poſſibly the Proſecutors will attempt to prove to have been thoſe which the Indictment ſays Breck had brought, or cauſed to be brought to the Place of the Murder. Were any thing of this to be proved, I ſhall fairly admit it would be a ſtrong Circumſtance, as it is one of theſe very Things which the Law points out; Opem fert qui, cum crimini patrato non interfuerit, ferramenta tamen, tela, venena commodaverit, ſciens cujus rei cauſa commodaret. But I cannot ſee where the Proof of any thing like this can ariſe. It does not appear, that any Guns were found at the Place of Murder. I think 'tis preſumable the Murderer would carry his Arms with him, after uſing them to his wicked Purpoſe. And as for theſe found concealed near the Pannel's Houſe, we are inſtructed to ſay, they were in the Pannel's Houſe at the Time of the Murder, and were hid after it for fear of an apprehended Search for Arms, by the Military that was expected to come into the Country.

This therefore I leave upon the Proof, and ſhall now, in a Word or two, take notice of the Money ſent by the Pannel to Breck after the Murder. And here, my Lords, I muſt be allowed to obſerve, in the firſt Place, what Sir George Mackenzie's Doctrine upon this Point is. His Words are, ſect. 7. (Tit. Art and Part) "Aſſiſtance given after the "Crime is committed, ſcarce deſerves the Name of Aſſiſtance." And cites an Authority for this Opinion. I will admit, my Lords, that, if this Pannel did, knowing Breck to be the Murderer of Glenure, adminiſter Help to his Eſcape, by furniſhing him with Money, he did a very wrong Thing; perhaps was guilty of an Offence, which the Law would puniſh.——But it is an Offence quite different from that of Acceſſion to the Murder. It is a Species of Crime by itſelf; and, as my Lord Advocate has not laid his Proſecution for that, we have nothing to do with it. At the ſame Time, my Lords, however wrong ſuch a Conduct might have been, yet it could admit of an Excuſe. Your Lordſhips have heard this Breck was the Pannel's Relation. He had been his Pupil, brought up in his Family till he went into the King's Service as a Soldier; and we all know, my Lords, the Strength of Compaſſion on ſuch Occaſions, eſpecially to our Friends, it would perhaps be hard to puniſh for it. The worthleſſneſs of our Relations does not at once diſſolve the Ties of Nature; none of us can be ſure, but we may have a wicked Son or a Brother; and, in a Caſe of this Sort, it would be natural to wiſh to help him out of the Way; perhaps it would be wrong, but ſuch is the known Force of natural Ties, and it, at leaſt, leſſens the Crime. However, here, my Lords, the Caſe does not apply; for we abſolutely deny, that the Pannel knew any thing of Breck's Guilt; and ſuch Knowledge can never be preſumed; he knew the Situation he was in as a Deſerter, and the Hazard of it, when the Military were coming into the Country to make a Search: and to be ſure, had he been catched by the Military, they would have ſaved your Lordſhips the Trouble of trying him, ſuppoſing him to be guilty: A Court-Martial would have made ſhort Work with him, unleſs it had been (as likely it might) thought more for the End of public Juſtice, to make him ſuffer for ſo flagrant an Offence as this, than to hang him as a Deſerter. It was for this Reaſon, my Lords, and not from any Knowledge of his Guilt, that the Pannel, upon Breck's Meſſage to that Purpoſe, as your Lordſhips have heard, ſent him the Money to enable him to get off the Country, and go where his Buſineſs called him; his Buſineſs, I ſay, my Lords; but at the ſame Time I call it his illegal, his unnatural Buſineſs, as an Enemy to his Country, and a Traitor to his King. And as to the Circumſtance which I formerly noticed, as tending to point out the Pannel's previous Knowledge of Breck's Motions, by his knowing where to ſend the Money, though he had no Acceſs to ſee Breck after the Murder; as to this, I ſay, my Lords, your Lordſhips ſee no Streſs can be laid upon it, when you have heard that it was by a Meſſage from Breck that the Pannel learned his Motions: So that ſtill ſomething is deſiderate here, whereon to fix that Circumſtance, upon which alone depends the Pannel's Acceſſion, to wit, his Foreknowledge of the Murder.

My Lords, I have finiſhed what occurred to me on the Circumſtances of the Indictment; and I am unwilling to weary your Lordſhips.

I forbear entering upon the Bouman's Converſation with Breck; that is but one Man's Story of what another ſaid. It is but hearing a Hear-ſay, or rather leſs; and I know no Law, no Rule, it rather ſeems contrary to all Rule of Evidence, that one ſhould ſuffer for what another ſaid of him; and that the very guilty Perſon, as is here ſuppoſed. If he did ſay ſo, it might be to throw the Suſpicion off himſelf with the better Grace: But, be it as it will, it can be no Evidence againſt the Pannel.

There is but one other Thing in the Indictment, which we have to finiſh this doubtful Evidence, if it can be called ſo much, and that is, the Threatenings; but, as they are libelled in general, I cannot argue upon them; nor has the Pannel any Opportunity to diſprove them: They muſt therefore be left, till the Evidence is concluded.

My Lords, I have ſaid what I could, from ſuch Helps as were in my Way, upon the Nature and Import of this Sort of Evidence which is now before us. I ſhall only ſay further on it, that this Sort of Evidence, when imprudently handled, may be reſembled to the monſtrous Machine for making havock of Enemies, which, when invented by a Subject, was wiſely ſmothered in the Birth by the Governor, leſt, however convenient it might be when uſed for him, he might come one Day to regret the Invention, when he found it applied againſt himſelf. And as to this particular Caſe, I take it, that every individual Circumſtance, as laid in the Indictment, ſo far as we know of it, will be unſupported with Evidence; that all put together do not amount to the Charge. I think there are no Grounds for any private Opinion of the Pannel's Guilt, but what ariſe from Prejudice only. I think Prejudice, or even Opinion, has nothing to do with judicial Proceedings. It is the Judgment that muſt acquit or condemn; and that muſt, can only be founded on Evidence, on Proof, not on Suſpicion or Preſumption.

I ſhall now take the Liberty to read to your Lordſhips, and the Jury, the Words of a great Criminal Writer on the Common Law, when treating on the Subject of argumentative Evidence: Math. de Crim. ad Tit. 15. Cap. 6. He is ſpeaking of Arguments, and ſays, Argumentum eſt neceſſarium, cujus conſequentia eſt neceſſaria, veluti coiviſſe eam quæ peperit; contingens, cujus conſequentia eſt probabilis, veluti cædem feciſſe qui cruentatus eſt. Then he adds, Contingentia argumenta, quamvis ſingula fidem non faciant, plura tamen conjuncta crimen manifeſtare poſſunt. Hæc appellantur præſumptiones; præſumptio enim nihil aliud eſt, quam argumentum veriſimile communi ſenſu perceptum, ex eo quod plerumque fit, aut fieri intelligitur: And he gives the following Example of an argumentative Evidence which may condemn, which I beg the Jury will attend to, Occiſus eſt kallendis Mævius; Titius perempti inimicus fuit eidem ſæpius non ſolum interminatus, ſed et inſidiatus eſt: cum deprehenderetur iiſdem kallendis in loco cædis cruentatus cum gladio cruento, ad menſuram vulneris facto, toto vultu expalluit, interrogatus, nil reſpondit, trepide fugit. Hic ſingula (ſays our Author) quidem argumenta infirmiora ſunt, univerſa tamen cædis auctorem Titium evidenter deſignant. And I moſt heartily agree with the Doctrine, and ſhall leave it to the Jury to judge, how far the Proof brought againſt the Pannel comes up to this Standard.

I ſhall conclude with laying before the Jury the Words of a great Judge and Lawyer of our own Country, on an Occaſion ſomewhat ſimilar to this. It is Part of my Lord Cowper's Speech upon the Biſhop of Rocheſter's Trial, where the Evidence depended on Circumſtances, as it does here. His Lordſhip ſays, "The Wiſdom and Goodneſs of our "Law appears in nothing more remarkably, than in the Perſpicuity, "Certainty, and Clearneſs of the Evidence it requires to fix a Crime "upon any Man, whereby his Life, his Liberty, or his Property, can "be concerned: Herein we glory and pride ourſelves, and are juſtly "the Envy of all our neighbour Nations. Our Law, in ſuch Caſes, "requires Evidence ſo clear and convincing, that every By-ſtander, the "Inſtant he hears it, muſt be fully ſatisfied of the Truth (and Certainty) "of it. It admits of no Surmiſes, Innuendoes, forced Conſequences, "or harſh Conſtructions *, nor any thing elſe to be offered as Evidence, "but what is real and ſubſtantial, according to the Rules of natural "Juſtice and Equity."

Theſe are my Lord Cowper's Words as we have them given us (It is very true, the Judgment of the Houſe of Lords went againſt his Lordſhip's Opinion in that Queſtion; but I muſt preſume that the Judgment of that auguſt Aſſembly, tho' againſt his Opinion, proceeded upon the Principles eſtabliſhed by himſelf; and tho' it had been otherwiſe, the Argument would ſtill be good, as Reaſoning is not always bad, when it fails in Succeſs). I think I may with great Propriety adopt what that ſame Noble Lord farther ſaid on that Occaſion, as follows; "In the Caſe before you, the whole Charge is "built upon Circumſtances, and theſe are ſaid to be ſupported by other "Circumſtances; but all of them are ſo remote, ſo general, and I may "ſay ſo inoffenſive, that they might ſuit any Lord here." I think the Circumſtances charged againſt the Pannel might ſuit any one here.

My Lords, I beg Pardon for ſaying ſo much; I hope your Lordſhips will excuſe it, for the Reaſons I gave in the Entry. I ſhall only further add, that the Pannel is now on Trial for his Life; he aſſerts his own Innocence; he pleads Not Guilty to the Charge. I hope it is the Anſwer of every one preſent, God give him a good Deliverance! And if he falls, let it be as a Sacrifice to Juſtice, to expiate Guilt, and purge the Land of Blood, not as a Victim to the blind Fury of his Enemies, or the Rage of the Deceaſed's Friends, to appeaſe popular Prejudices, or ill-founded Clamour and Outcry.

Mr. FRASER, againſt the Pannel.

My Lord Juſtice-General,

I Appear as Counſel for Mrs. Campbell of Glenure, and her infant Children, againſt James Stewart, now in the Pannel, accuſed as guilty, Actor, Art and Part of the Murder of Colin Campbell of Glenure; a Murder aggravated by its being committed from a malicious Hatred and Reſent-

* Lord Bacon ſays, "Judges muſt beware of hard Conſtructions and ſtrained Inferences; for there is no worſe Torture than the Torture of Laws." Fo. Edit. Vol. I. p. 440, 441.

ment conceived againſt Mr. Campbell, on account of the faithful Diſcharge of his Duty in an Office intruſted to him by his Majeſty.

This Crime, my Lord, is in itſelf ſo horrid, and in the preſent Inſtance is attended with aggravating Circumſtances of ſuch an extraordinary Nature, as muſt rouze the Indignation of every worthy Member of Society, and call loudly for the moſt ſevere and exemplary Puniſhment. Murder has always been looked upon as one of the moſt heinous Crimes; but in all civilized Countries, at all Times, that baſe, that treacherous Species of Murder, Aſſaſſination, has been held in ſtill greater, as more deſerved Abhorrence:——What then muſt be the Degree of that Man's Guilt, who deliberately, unprovoked, in cold Blood, during Times of full Peace, and in the moſt contemptuous Deſpite of Government, commits this moſt treacherous and moſt abhorred of all Murders! Heavy as that Load of Guilt is, I am ſorry to ſay, my Lord, it lies with its utmoſt Weight upon the Priſoner now before you; which renders this Trial of great Importance to every Individual, but of ſtill greater to this Country in general. If Aſſaſſins, capable, my Lord, of lying in wait with premeditated Malice, with Malice concealed in their Hearts, for Hours, for Days; if ſuch are ſuffered to go unpuniſhed, who of us all is ſafe, what Individual, however innocent, however brave, however particularly intitled to the public Protection! But what, I hope, my Lord, we all hold of greater Importance than the Safety of Individuals, the Intereſt, the Honour of this Country is very nearly concerned, not to ſuffer the moſt daring and bare-faced Inſult to be offered to his Majeſty's Authority and Government; and offered at a Time when we, in common with his Majeſty's other Subjects, are reaping the Fruits of his moſt benign Reign: I ſay, my Lord, our Intereſt, our Honour is concerned, not to ſuffer this without endeavouring to wipe off the Stain from the Country, to ſhew the King, and to ſhew the World, that this is the bloody Deed of one or two wicked and deſperate Men; a Deed which the Country abhors, and which it will not ſuffer to go unpuniſhed.

The Gentleman who opened the Defence, my Lord, has been as good as his Word, and has given indeed a plauſible Account of this Affair; which makes me think it neceſſary to lay before the Court, as diſtinctly and as conciſely as I can, that State of the Facts which there is the greateſt Reaſon to believe the Proof will eſtabliſh. And, in doing ſo, I hope to give your Lordſhips a more juſt View of this extraordinary Caſe; and, at the ſame Time, to be of ſome Uſe in leading the Gentlemen of the Jury to thoſe Parts of the Proof which deſerve moſt their Attention.

The Pannel, James Stewart, my Lord, is natural brother to Mr. Stewart of Ardſhiel, who commanded the Men of that Name that were engaged in the late Rebellion, and, by means of that, he acquired their Affections and Attachment. When Ardſhiel was obliged to leave the Country, his Brother (the Pannel) ſet himſelf at the Head of the Family Intereſt; and it not appearing in that Part of the World a forced Tranſition, he was allowed to take this Authority upon him. In a ſhort time, therefore, he came to be a leading Man, and to have the chief Influence over the common People. Such, my Lord, was the State of that Corner of the Country in the Year 1749, when Mr. Campbell of Glenure was appointed Factor for his Majeſty upon the Eſtate of Ardſhiel, and ſome other forfeited Eſtates in that Neighbourhood. James Stewart ſoon foreſaw how much this Factory muſt interfere with the Plan which he had laid, and with the Intereſt which he wanted to eſtabliſh; Glenure, therefore, very early became the Object of his Ill-will. But it did not long reſt there; for in the Year 1751, Glenure having, in Conſequence of Orders from the Barons of Exchequer, cauſed Mr. Stewart to be removed from the Farm which he poſſeſſed upon the Ardſhiel Eſtate, what was before but Ill-will, was now turned into Hatred and Reſentment. This led him to oppoſe all Glenure's Meaſures, and particularly to play the Volunteer in the Service of ſome other Tenants upon the ſame Eſtate, whom Glenure was about to remove at the enſuing Term: For this Purpoſe, he repaired in Perſon to Edinburgh, and, in Name of thoſe Tenants, tho' without the ſmalleſt Commiſſion or Authority from them, made be preſented to the Lords of Seſſion, a Bill of Suſpenſion of the intended Removal, and obtained a Siſt of Execution; this Siſt he prevailed upon the Tenants to intimate to Glenure, who was put to the Trouble and Expence of a Journey to Edinburgh, before he could have the groundleſs Bill of Suſpenſion anſwered; which was indeed all that was neceſſary in order to make it be refuſed.

Mr. Stewart, my Lord, little ſatisfied with this unſucceſsful Attempt, which confirmed Glenure's Influence at the Expence of his own, and finding himſelf forced to quit the Country, and to abandon his favourite Plan of Popularity, formed a moſt deſperate Scheme of Revenge, no leſs than a Plot to take away the Life of Glenure in the baſeſt Manner. In purſuance of this Scheme, he was at Pains, over all the Country, to repreſent Glenure's Conduct in the moſt diſadvantageous Light; and, when he thought there was a general Odium raiſed, he had recourſe, in a more particular Manner, to thoſe in whom he could moſt certainly confide, to thoſe who were moſt eaſy to be ſtirred up, and moſt inclined to any deſperate Deed. Different Setts of ſuch Men, my Lord, he aſſembled at different Times, and, after expatiating againſt Glenure's ill Conduct, he uſed all his Art to convince them, that it was their Duty to free the Country of what he was pleaſed to call Glenure's Oppreſſion; telling them, that he had once ſeen Commoners in Appin, who would, long ere then, have ſtopped his Career; and that he could aſſure any of them, who was hardy enough to undertake it, a certain Eſcape to France, and a handſome Penſion afterwards! By thoſe Methods, my Lord, Mr. Stewart uſed his utmoſt Endeavours to ſtir up ſome hot-headed Ruffian to the Execution of his Plot; but his Endeavours were long uſed in vain, till at length Allan Breck Stewart was thrown in his Way, a Man marked out for ſuch a Purpoſe; a Deſerter from our Service to that of the French; one who, in both Countries, was a Man of deſperate Fortune, but who, in this, had not only loſt all Title to the Protection of the Law, but was become obnoxious to its ſevereſt Penalties. This Man James Stewart immediately laid hold of and cheriſhed. It was eaſy to ſtir him up to Reſentment. To him therefore he communicated the whole of his Deſign, and with him he concerted the Execution of it. Allan had nothing to loſe; therefore it was determined he ſhould be the Actor, whilſt James ſhould lie by to protect him, and to turn the Miſchief as much as poſſible to his own Advantage. Happily, my Lord, Keenneſs and Reſentment, as uſual in Crimes, got here the better of Caution, not only with Allan, but even with the more ſagacious James; for, in the midſt of their moſt cunning Contrivances, they could not refrain from uttering ſuch ſtrong and particular Threats againſt Glenure, as immediately pointed them out for the Objects of general Suſpicion. Both of them have many Times threatened him with Death, and both of them have even gone beyond general Terms; for Allan declared he would, on the firſt Occaſion, ſhoot him as he would a black Cock; an Expreſſion very applicable to the baſe Manner which he afterwards made uſe of: And James, ſtill more inveterate, ſwore, in the Fullneſs of his Heart, That he would ſhoot Glenure, even if he himſelf was ſo diſabled, as to be obliged to go upon his Knees to a Window in order to do it. Theſe are Inſtances of the Threats which they made uſe of; which firſt pointed them out, and which muſt ſtill go a great way in convincing every thinking Man that they, and they only, were his Murderers.

In conſequence of their laſt Reſolution, that Allan ſhould act whilſt James ſtood at the Helm, Allan laid himſelf out to get particular Information of Glenure's Motions; and, for that Purpoſe, he contrived to make a Viſit at Faſnacloich, the very next Houſe to Glenure, and within a Mile of it; there he remained upon the Look-out till Monday the 11th, when Glenure ſet out from his own Houſe for Fort-William. Upon which Allan immediately repaired to his Aſſociate James, to communicate the Intelligence he had got, viz: That Glenure was gone to Lochaber; that he was reſolved to perſiſt in removing the Tenants of Ardſhiel, and was certainly to return for that Purpoſe before the Term-Day, the 15th. Having upon this Information conſulted together, and ſettled the Plan of Operations, the Pannel furniſhed his Friend with a Dreſs more proper for what he was going about, giving him a Suit of his own Cloaths, a black ſhort Coat, Trowſers, and a blue Bonnet; and, thus equipped, he ſet out the next Morning, Tueſday the 12th; but, knowing that Glenure might poſſibly not return for a Day or two, in order to avoid Suſpicion, he made a Tour among his Relations, going firſt to Ballachelliſh, from thence to Glenco, from thence to Callart, where he ſtaid Tueſday Night, and on Wedneſday the 13th he went back, by the ſame Route, to Ballachelliſh; in all which Circuit, he was at hand to lay wait for Glenure, at whatever Time he ſhould return from Lochaber. On Thurſday the 14th, when there was a moral Certainty that Glenure would return, (he having appointed a Meeting with ſeveral Gentlemen in the Country of Appin that Evening) Allan left Ballachelliſh's Houſe under Pretence of fiſhing, and, very ſoon after, appeared at the Ferry of Ballachelliſh, by which Glenure muſt neceſſarily paſs, in his Way from Lochaber to Appin: There he met the Ferry-man, and, haſtily calling him aſide, inquired, with more than ordinary Earneſtneſs and Anxiety, if Glenure had paſſed there that Day; and, being anſwered that he had not, Allan immediately ran up the Hill, towards the high Grounds above the Houſe; from whence he had a View of the Country around, on both Sides of the Loch, and a ſhort Paſſage into the Wood of Lettermore. In this Wood, my Lord, it was, that he marked out a moſt proper Station for the Execution of his deſperate Deſign; a little Thicket, on a riſing Ground, within a few Paces of the High-way, along which every Traveller muſt neceſſarily paſs; from whence, himſelf unſeen, he could diſtinctly ſee the Road leading to the Ferry of Ballachelliſh on the Lochaber Side, and the Road on the Appin Side, leading from thence to the Wood of Lettermore. Here, my Lord, he poſted himſelf with one or two loaded Guns provided for the Purpoſe; and here he lay in wait till Mr. Campbell of Glenure had paſſed the Ferry, and was riding along the Road through the Wood. It was then, my Lord, that Allan Breck ſeized this long wiſh'd-for Opportunity, and when Glenure was come within convenient Diſtance, this abandoned Aſſaſſin ſhot him dead with two Balls from behind: A Deed as cowardly, as it was barbarous and inhuman! a Deed of which there is hardly an Example in this Part of the Kingdom, whoſe Inhabitants, however raſh they may be to brave Dangers in an open Manner, have never, till this atrocious Crime of their unworthy Countrymen, been branded with the Ignominy of baſe and cowardly Aſſaſſination!

Allan having thus executed his deadly Purpoſe, immediately diſappeared, in order to betake himſelf to the Concealment provided for him, calling in his Way, after a hidden Manner, and at Midnight, at Glenco's Houſe, where he informed the Lady and her Son that Glenure was murdered, and, without any more Converſation of either Side, added, as a Conſequence of what he ſuppoſed known, that he himſelf was immediately to leave the Country. Soon after this, he arrived at his allotted Retreat, the Shealing of Koaliſnaccan, the Habitation of the truſty Bouman; and, in a Converſation which he and the Bouman had there, he talked of the Murder in a more remarkable Manner than he had even done to Lady Glenco; for, after faintly enough denying his own Concern in it, he told his Friend that he was ſure the Family of Ardſhiel would be ſuſpected, particularly James Stewart and his Son Allan; uſing this remarkable Expreſſion, That there would be no Fear of them if their own Tongues did not betray them, eſpecially Allan's, who, he feared, was more open-mouthed than his Father.

All this while, my Lord, the Pannel remained at Home undiſturbed; and when the Accounts came of Glenure's Murder, and every body elſe in the Neighbourhood was haſtening to go to look after the Corpſe, he never offered to ſtir, nay, he would not ſuffer any one of his Family to go near it. He, my Lord, had other Things to mind; not the unhappy Murdered, but the barbarous Murderer was the Object of his Attention; his own Preſervation was ſo cloſely linked with Allan Breck's, that there was a Neceſſity for Allan's being kept out of the Way at any Rate; James therefore immediately diſpatched Alexander Stewart Packman, his Relation, and a Perſon in whom he had entire Confidence, to Fort-William, with a moſt preſſing Demand, as he himſelf acknowledges, for Money to ſupply his Friend Allan, and to enable him to make his Eſcape from Juſtice; and when the Packman returned with a leſs Sum than was expected, James, in the moſt critical Juncture of his own Affairs, added Two-thirds of the Money which he had for his own Support to the Sum brought from Fort-William, and ſent away the faithful Packman, with this

Money, and his French Cloaths, to Allan Breck, giving particular Directions with regard to the Place of his Concealment; a Circumſtance no one can well be ſuppoſed to have known who was not in the Secret, who was not originally privy to the Crime for which he was obliged to have Recourſe to that Concealment.

Theſe, my Lord, are the Facts which, I have Reaſon to believe, will ſoon be proved to your Lordſhip. The Gentleman has been pleaſed to expreſs his Surprize, that, after ſo ſtrict an Enquiry, this ſhould be all that is made appear; and to ſay that theſe Facts are trivial, and not relevant to infer the Crime: But I cannot think any impartial Man who has read the Indictment now in my Hand, will join in the Gentleman's Surprize; on the contrary, I believe every ſuch Perſon muſt join with me, in thinking no ſmall Praiſe due to the very proper Encouragement and Aſſiſtance of the Crown, and to the very uncommon Diligence and Activity of the private Proſecutors which together have been able to throw ſo much Light upon ſo dark a Scene. Your Lordſhip has been told, that the Facts mentioned are not ſufficient to infer the Crime libelled. I need hardly obſerve, my Lord, that ſuch Crimes are particularly villainous and deſtructive, from the hidden and concealed Manner in which they are committed, which allows of no Defence, and too often ſcreens from Puniſhment: Their very Nature does not admit of ſuch a Proof as may be expected in other Caſes; a Proof by Circumſtances is all that can be looked for; indeed, when that is concluſive, it is of all others the moſt convincing. Witneſſes may be partial, they may be perjured; but a cloſely connected Chain of Circumſtances is liable to none of thoſe Objections. Now, my Lord, I humbly apprehend, no Chain of Circumſtances can be ſtronger, nor more cloſely connected, than that which I have juſt laid before your Lordſhip. You ſee a Diſcontent rationally, nay probably accounted for; the ſtrongeſt and moſt particular Threats following that Diſcontent, and the Commiſſion of the Crime as immediately following theſe Threats; the cleareſt Inſtance of the malum minatum, & damnum ſecutum. But it does not reſt here; you ſee, my Lord, the Murderer traced from Day to Day, from Hour to Hour, from Place to Place, to the very Day, the very Hour, almoſt to the very Spot in which the Murder was committed; and you ſee his Aſſociate in the ſtricteſt Connexion and Intimacy with him, caballing in private, and furniſhing him with a proper Dreſs, before the Murder, and, after it, furniſhing him with Cloaths and Money, to enable him to fly from Juſtice; and what deſerves particular Attention, you ſee his Aſſociate minutely acquainted with the Place of his Concealment, the Place previouſly pointed out for his Retreat, and the Murderer, in that Retreat where he thought himſelf in Safety, expreſſing his Concern for his Friend in very remarkable Terms, in Terms which carry a ſtrong Conviction of their guilty Conſpiracy, but, at the ſame Time, ſhew the Cunning with which they were conſcious of having contrived it. I cannot doubt, but your Lordſhip will think this a Chain of Circumſtances, more than ſufficient to infer the Crime libelled: At the ſame Time, I muſt beg leave to obſerve, that, in ſuch an Indictment as this, there was no Neceſſity of mentioning any one Circumſtance; it would have been ſufficient in Law, and the Gentlemen acknowledge it, to have libelled Art and Part in general Terms; that is, that Time and Place libelled, the Crime was committed, and that the Pannel was guilty Art or Part of that Crime. Now, if my Lord Advocate, from the Humanity of his Diſpoſition, from a Deſire that every Offender, however heinous his Offence, ſhould have the faireſt Trial, and every Opportunity of making his Defence; if, from theſe Motives, he has given a very long and particular Indictment, when only a very ſhort and general one was neceſſary, 'tis ſomewhat invidious in the Gentlemen of the other Side, to turn this into an Objection to the Relevancy. But let them, my Lord; the Point is fixed, as well by Law, as by uniform Practice; and therefore, whilſt we contend that the Circumſtances, as particularized in the Indictment, are fully relevant, we at the ſame Time humbly hope, from your Lordſhip, an Interlocutor upon the general Point of Art and Part, independent of theſe Circumſtances.

It has been objected to this Indictment, that an Acceſſary is here brought to Trial before the Principal is convicted, which is attended with theſe bad Conſequences; that Proof muſt be led againſt the Principal in Abſence; that his greateſt Enemies may be produced as Witneſſes, and the proper exculpatory Defences may be omitted. And further your Lordſhip has been told, that this is contrary to the Laws of neighbouring Nations, particularly that of England, and contrary to the Law of Scotland, as handed down to us in the Books of Reg. Maj. Quon. Attach. ſtat. Dav. II. and Sir Geo. Mackenzie. There might, my Lord, have been ſome Room for ſuch an Objection, if no former Notice had been taken of the Principal; but I can hardly think any Objection will be admitted in the preſent Caſe; when the Principal is indicted, when every legal Step is taken by the Proſecutors for bringing him to Juſtice, and when the only Conviction which our Law admits of in ſuch Caſes, is gone againſt him. The Inconveniencies which it was ſaid might follow from the preſent Practice, are trifling, compared to thoſe which muſt be the neceſſary Conſequence, if the Laws allowed not an Acceſſary to be tried, whilſt the Principal, conſcious of his own Guilt, dared not to appear. 'Tis but finding out ſome deſperate Fellow for the Execution who can afterwards be eaſily kept out of the Way; and the moſt inhuman Acts muſt go unpuniſhed, the moſt abandoned Villains may laugh at Juſtice. The Authorities produced in Point of Law are, no doubt, great; but Times and Circumſtances derogate from the greateſt Authorities. If what Sir George Mackenzie has given us as his Opinion was once Law, it is beyond all Doubt, by later Practice, no longer held as ſuch; and it ſignifies as little what is the Law of neighbouring Nations, as what was once our own Law, if Cuſtom, the juſteſt of all Legiſlators, directed by common Senſe and Equity, has now enacted the contrary.

The Hardſhips, my Lord, which it is pretended the Pannel underwent, can never be admitted as Objections to this Indictment. That they may not, however, leave any Impreſſion upon the Gentlemen of the Jury, or even upon this Audience, I ſhall give your Lordſhips the true Account of what are called Hardſhips; and they will no longer appear to be ſuch. That upon which moſt Streſs ſeems to be laid is, that the Pannel's Wife and his Children, who, by Law, cannot be called as Witneſſes againſt him, have been precognoſced, or judicially examined, and that their Declarations are propoſed to be produced in this Trial. The Fact is true; and nothing is more eaſily accounted for. When this Murder was committed, all was Confuſion and Ignorance; and every Method that could be imagined was found neceſſary, in order to get to the Bottom of the deep-laid Plot. It was at that Time that James Stewart's Family, in common with all in that Neighbourhood, were called before a Judge, and examined upon what they knew of Glenure's Murder: It was more than probable, that ſome one of that Country committed the Murder, and that many in that Country were in the Secret of it: But when theſe People were examined, neither of theſe Acts of Guilt was charged upon any particular Perſon: Allan Breck was not then accuſed of the actual Murder, nor James Stewart of being acceſſary to it. So that his Wife and Children were really not examined with any View to him; they were examined, to diſcover the Truth in general, before it was known upon what particular Perſon the Accuſation would fall. Whether their Declarations will be produced in this Trial, may be a Queſtion afterwards; but, in the mean while, it appears not contrary to Law or Equity, that they ſhould be produced: It is confounding Things to ſay that this is making the Pannel's Wife and Children Witneſſes againſt him: The Declarations will not be produced to prove the Truth of any Thing contained in them, of which they would not be legal Evidence; they are only to prove, that the Perſons who emitted the Declarations, averred theſe Things; and if any Words of theirs could give Cauſe of Suſpicion againſt the Pannel, it would be ſurely competent to prove ſuch Words by the Teſtimony of Third Parties. Does it not then come altogether to the ſame Purpoſe, to prove them by Production of the Words themſelves judicially committed to Writing? The cloſe Confinement of the Pannel, as well as that of ſome others, who were then taken up upon Suſpicion of Guilt, but are now to be produced as Witneſſes, was owing to the Rules of the Place where they were confined. His Majeſty's Garriſons have been uſed as Priſons, more for the Cuſtody of State Priſoners than of common Criminals: It is not to be wondered at, then, if military Officers, unacquainted with the Diſtinctions of Law, applied to the latter the Orders which they were in uſe to receive for the former: As ſoon as the Law was explained, it was obeyed; nor is it pretended, that the Pannel, or any other, was cloſely confined one Hour after the commanding Officer was informed that the Law forbade it. 'Tis true, a new commanding Officer came, to whom the Law was not immediately explained, which occaſioned the ſecond cloſe Confinement complained of; but he, as well as his Predeceſſor, paid Obedience to the Law, as ſoon as it was made known to him. That it was not therefore made known to both, as ſoon as might have been, the Pannel's Counſel muſt account for. That it was altogether their Buſineſs; and the Conſequence, whatever it be, which may ariſe from the Neglect of it, ought not to fall upon the Proſecutors, far leſs upon the Gentlemen of the Army, who the Pannel himſelf acknowledges, have all, in any Charge they had of him, done their Duty with the utmoſt Humanity, always like Soldiers, and like Men. It is ſurpriſing, the Gentlemen ſhould mention, as a Hardſhip, their being refuſed Acceſs to the Pannel, after they came to Inverary; they muſt be conſcious that this was a Hardſhip of not an Hour's Duration. They required Admittance from the chief Magiſtrate, who not caring, as the Duke of Argyll was upon the Spot, to take any Step without his Grace's Approbation, ſent directly to acquaint him of the Demand; and his Grace gave immediate Orders for their Admittance. The Gentleman who ſpoke firſt, mentioned one Thing, which, I dare to ſay, he alone will think a Hardſhip upon the Pannel; I mean, my Lord, its having fallen to that Gentleman's Share to open his Defence; and I cannot help thinking the Complaint of the Pannel's Want of able Aſſiſtance, coming from that Side to this, looks like Banter: For, ſetting aſide my Lord Advocate, whoſe Office obliges him to aſſiſt the Proſecutors; I need only beg your Lordſhip will caſt your Eye firſt to the one Side of this Table, and then to the other, in order to judge where the Advantage lies in Age and Experience.

Upon the whole, my Lord, I cannot doubt but your Lordſhip will find this Libel relevant to infer the moſt ſevere Pains of Law, as the Crime libelled is of the moſt heinous Nature; and that you will remit the Pannel to the Knowledge of an Aſſize, who, I find, from the Liſt in my Hand, muſt be Men above the Imputation of any other Prejudice, but what every good Man muſt feel againſt ſo horrid a Crime; a Prejudice, which, I am ſure, they will carefully diſtinguiſh, as I hope we all do, from any perſonal Prejudice againſt the Pannel, who has an undoubted Right to demand their moſt impartial Attention to the Proof, by which alone his Innocence muſt ſtand confeſſed, or his Guilt meet with its deſerved Puniſhment.

Mr. Erskine againſt the Pannel.

My Lords,

I HAVE likewiſe the Honour to be of Counſel for the Proſecutors on this Trial, and, as ſuch, it is my Duty to ſupport the Charge exhibited in the Libel; which has been juſt now very fully and diſtinctly opened.

The Importance of the Trial, the Reſpect I have for the Honourable Court, and this Audience, were alone ſufficient to have laid me under great Uneaſineſs: But that Uneaſineſs is greatly increaſed, when I find myſelf engaged in a Taſk, which I am at preſent but ill prepared to execute.

Tho' I early and willingly engaged to take a Part in this Trial, an unexpected Diſtreſs, which has, for ſome Days, diſſipated my Attention to Buſineſs, made me hope the Proſecutors would have relieved me of an Engagement which I was unfit to perform, and diſpenſed with my Attendance, which, I apprehended, could not be material to them; but in this I have been diſappointed by the Indiſpoſition of a Gentleman of great Abilities and Experience, which has unhappily deprived them of his abler Aſſiſtance.

For this Reaſon I will beg leave to confine myſelf entirely to make the proper Anſwers to the Arguments which have been urged by the learned Gentlemen in Defence of the Priſoner.

I ſhall forbear to enlarge upon the many aggravating Circumſtances that appear in the horrid Scene juſt now opened to your Lordſhips.

I will not attempt to inflame the Jury, by giving looſe Reins to an Imagination, warmed by a real Regard for the Gentleman deceaſed, Compaſſion

Compaſſion for the Widow and the Fatherleſs, under peculiar Circumſtances of Diſtreſs, a high Concern for the Intereſt of this Country, and the Preſervation of our preſent happy Conſtitution; all which appear to have been ſtruck at by the Hand that gave this Wound.

Theſe Conſiderations cannot fail to kindle Indignation in every Breaſt; and I am confident they have already had the Effect to rouze the Attention of the Court, and balance a miſplaced Compaſſion, not unnatural to humane Minds, which ſometimes blunts even the Sword of Juſtice: But the Proſecutors do not expect to obtain a Judgment againſt the Priſoner in this Court, upon any other Foundation than a real Conviction of his Guilt, ariſing from Evidence clear, unexceptionable, and agreeable to the Laws of this Country.

The Laws of this Country are favourable, particularly favourable to Perſons under Trial for their Life; and the Proſecutors are willing to allow the Priſoner the full Benefit of every Advantage that theſe Laws, or the Practice of the Court, can give him a Title to.

This being the Caſe, I cannot omit obſerving how improperly the Priſoner has reſted the greateſt Weight of his Defence upon clamorous Aſſertions of unfair Advantages, and unlawful Oppreſſion upon the Part of the Proſecutors.

For, 1*mo*, Tho' they were founded on Truth, they would not amount to a Defence againſt the Libel: One Crime cannot compenſate another, nor an Injury received from the Proſecutor wipe away the Guilt of the Priſoner.

But, 2*do*, Theſe are Meaſures ſo inconſiſtent with that glorious Spirit of Liberty that reigns even among the Rulers in this Age and Nation, ſo inconſiſtent with the known Mildneſs and Clemency of his Majeſty's Government, and the unfortunate Circumſtances of the private Proſecutors in this Trial, that I can hardly perſuade myſelf it would be neceſſary to make a more particular Anſwer to theſe Complaints.

Nevertheleſs, as I am ſenſible that nothing is more inſeparable from noble and generous Minds, than a Deſire to throw every Atom into the Balance on the Side of the Diſtreſſed, while there remains a Poſſibility of their Innocence; and that a ſimple Suſpicion that the Priſoner had ſuffered any unneceſſary Hardſhip, or been deprived of any Means of defending himſelf, might avail him more in the Event of this Trial, than the beſt Defence in the Mouth of the ableſt Advocate; for that Reaſon, I will beg Leave, in a few Words, to ſhew the Court what Foundation there is for ſuch Complaints.

The firſt was, that the Proſecutors had deprived him of the Benefit of Counſel, by retaining moſt of the ableſt Lawyers at the Bar.

To this I can make no ſtronger Anſwer, than what the Court has juſt now heard from the very Gentlemen who make the Complaint, and will be confirmed by theſe who are to ſupport them. I am confident they will convince the Court, and all who hear them, of the Abſurdity of ſuch a Complaint, when urged by four Gentlemen of ſuch Abilities.

In the ſecond Place, it has been ſaid, that the Priſoner had been deprived of his Liberty, and kept in cloſe Confinemnt contrary to Law, debarred the Converſation of his Family and Friends, and denied Acceſs to ſpeak either to his Agents or Witneſſes.

To all which it may be anſwered in the general, that the Laws of every well-governed Realm certainly allow the Confinement of Perſons charged with capital Offences, in ſuch Manner as they may be ſecured, till they can be brought to Trial. That no Limitation of this Rule has been introduced, either by Law or Practice, in Scotland, other than what is contained in that valuable and ſalutary Statute of Parl. 1. Seſſ. 9. of King William, for preventing wrongous Impriſonment. No Part of which has been infringed in the preſent Caſe.——That the Priſoner has been, ſince he came to this Place, ſtrictly confined, cannot appear unreaſonable or oppreſſive to thoſe who know that of late, in ſpite of the Vigilance of the Magiſtrates, ſeveral Criminals have eſcaped from their Gaol, whoſe Caſes were leſs deſperate than his, and who had no formidable Tribe of Friends or Accomplices to aſſiſt their Eſcape.

It will not appear ſurpriſing or unjuſt, that the Magiſtrates were cautious to give Acceſs to any Perſons, under the Colour of their being Agents or Witneſſes, without a proper Warrant, when it appears from the Proof to be brought in the Trial, that, during the Priſoner's Confinement in the Garriſon at Fort-William, he found Means to tamper with the principal Evidences, (though alſo in Cuſtody, in order to prevent ſuch undue Influence) by Emiſſaries, who carried repeated Meſſages in his Name.

This, I think, might likewiſe appear to be a good Reaſon for the Officer commanding at Fort-William, to be particularly careful to interrupt and prevent theſe Practices, by denying Acceſs to the Perſons by whoſe means they were known to be carried on.

But as the Priſoner's Complaint has been loud upon this Head, I muſt beg Leave to recal the Attention of your Lordſhips and the Jury to one of the Facts libelled, from which the Acceſſion to the Murder is inferred; it is the ſupplying the Murderer with Money to enable him to fly from Juſtice; let it be remembered in what Manner it was executed; the Priſoner was indulged by the Officer commanding the Party that apprehended him, to ſpeak with his Wife apart, before he was carried off: The Uſe he made of that Indulgence, was to give her the greateſt Part of the Money in his Pocket, with Inſtructions to ſend it, and the Murderer's Cloaths, to the Place where it had been concerted he ſhould wait for them.

The Indulgence upon the Part of the Officer was natural and humane; from the Circumſtances that were then known, there was no Reaſon to ſuſpect, that ſuch Uſe would have been made of it; and by God's good Providence it is become a material Circumſtance in the Inveſtigation of the Source of the horrid Scene of Iniquity before the Court.

Now, as this Fact is admitted to be true, I muſt ſubmit what Foundation there is to complain of Severity: Whether the commanding Officer had reaſon to repeat ſuch Indulgences, or to give unlimited Acceſs to his Family and Relations? Nevertheleſs, I am well authoriſed to ſay, that, at Fort-William, the Priſoner had many and great Indulgences of this Kind; that he was allowed to take the Air in the Garriſon, and to converſe with his Friends and Relations, in ſuch Manner as was conſiſtent with the ſafe Cuſtody of his Perſon, and the Inquiries which were then carrying on by the proper Officers: And both before and ſince he was brought to this Place, his Agent and Lawyers have had Acceſs to be with him as often as applied for in a proper Way. He was not indeed allowed Acceſs to ſome of his Servants and Dependants, from whom material Evidence was expected, with whom he had been tampering, and who had declared, they were over-awed by his Authority: But for that I apprehend no Apology is neceſſary.

In the laſt Place, your Lordſhips have heard much from the Counſel for the Priſoner, of unfair Means that have been uſed to traduce his Character in the Country, and to prepoſſeſs the World with an Opinion of his Guilt, by which he is ſaid to be, in ſome Meaſure, condemned before he is brought to Trial.

I muſt beg your Lordſhips and the Jury to conſider the Circumſtances of the Proſecutors who are charged with theſe Practices. Has the diſconſolate Widow, who has no Relation, and ſcarce an Acquaintance in this Corner of the Iſland, been ſo ſucceſsful in prepoſſeſſing the Country with an Opinion of the Priſoner's Guilt? or, are her Children, as yet uncapable of Speech, fit to aſſiſt her in traducing his Character?

If the Relations of the Deceaſed had attempted it without Foundation, they would have gained no Credit with the impartial World; or would have been counterbalanced by the numerous Relations of the Priſoner, at leaſt in this Country. Nevertheleſs, my Lords, I will admit that he labours under great Diſadvantages upon this Head; a general Opinion of his Guilt has prevailed; and I am ſorry to ſay, that he has many and ſtrong Adverſaries, who have been buſy to eſtabliſh it. Magna eſt veritas, et prævalebit. The Horror of the Crime with which he is charged, has raiſed the Attention of every impartial Perſon, and made them induſtrious to diſcover the Authors of it.

The Blood of the Innocent has called aloud to Heaven for Juſtice; and, by a remarkable Concurrence of many Circumſtances, brought to Light by the Declarations of a Cloud of Witneſſes, the Priſoner is clearly pointed out, not indeed as the Executioner, but the Contriver of the Murder, and the Aider and Abettor of the Murderer.

I will not ſay, that his Character in private Life concurs againſt him; I have no Authority from my Employers to aſſert it; nor will I aſſert what is not ſupported by Evidence. But I muſt ſay, that his Family and Connexions, his Character and Conduct in publick Life, are ſo many Circumſtances forming a Preſumption almoſt equal to a Proof, in Support of the Charge brought againſt him. Theſe are the moſt powerful Adverſaries he has to ſtruggle with, and from them that general Opinion of his Guilt has taken its Riſe, which is unjuſtly aſcribed to the Proſecutors.

What has been ſaid, my Lords, would naturally lead me, in the next Place, to lay open, to the Conſideration of the Court, the particular Circumſtances ſet forth in the Libel, from which the Priſoner's Guilt is inferred; and to take Notice of what has been ſaid in his Defence upon that Head: But in this I have been well prevented by the Gentleman who ſpoke laſt; and therefore I ſhall only beg Leave to add a few Obſervations to what has been ſaid by him.

The Court has been informed that Mr. Campbell of Glenure was appointed Factor on the forfeited Eſtate of Ardſhiel; that the Priſoner is natural Brother to the forfeiting Perſon, in whoſe Abſence he fell to have the Leading of his Dependents, and the Protection of his Family: Under that Character, as he had an Intereſt, ſo he had Opportunities of oppoſing the Factor in the Execution of his Office: That this Oppoſition grew by Degrees to the Height of premeditated Malice, which ſoon after broke out in repeated Threatening, and at laſt ended in Aſſaſſination and Murder.

On the other Hand, the Counſel for the Priſoner have aſſerted, that there was no Enmity or Malice between Glenure and him; but contrarywiſe, a Confidence and Friendſhip, which they offer to ſupport by Letters written by Glenure to him. Now, as this muſt appear to be inconſiſtent with the Charge in the Libel, I muſt beg Leave, in a few Words, to reconcile them.

When Glenure was appointed Factor on the Eſtate of Ardſhiel, he was ſo far from ſhewing any Diſpoſition to be ſevere upon the Tenants, or to put Hardſhips on the Family and Friends of the forfeiting Perſon, that he treated them with the utmoſt Humanity: And the Priſoner in particular had the Addreſs to inſinuate himſelf ſo far into his Confidence, as to be employed in collecting the Rents, and adviſed with in the letting of the Farms; and, during this Period, the Letters referred to were written. But as the Priſoner undoubtedly took Advantage of this Confidence, to bring Tenants into the Eſtate that were entirely under his Influence, and to make ſeparate Agreements with them in Favour of the forfeited Perſon and his Family, in Defraud of his Majeſty and the Publick; the Barons of Exchequer juſtly took Exception againſt this Part of Glenure's Conduct; and, to prevent ſuch Abuſes for the future, gave him particular Inſtructions in Writing, to remove the Priſoner from a beneficial Farm which he poſſeſſed, and alſo any other of the Tenants who were connected with, or under the Influence of, the forfeiting Perſon and his Family.

Theſe Inſtructions were executed in Part at Whitſunday 1751, by the Removal of the Priſoner from his Farm; but as he eaſily procured another in the Neighbourhood, and retained his Influence over the Eſtate by the Means of the Tenants he had placed there, he diſcovered no Reſentment at that Time.

But ſo ſoon as the Factor, in the further Execution of his Inſtructions, began to take the proper Meaſures for removing, at Whitſunday 1752, ſome of theſe Tenants, he then took the Alarm: That was to pluck up his Intereſt by the Root, and entirely to put an End to his Influence. He therefore made the Cauſe of the Tenants his own, and every Method of Oppoſition was tried to prevent their Removal.

He no longer affected any Intimacy or Friendſhip with Glenure, but took every Occaſion to raiſe Diſcontent and Jealouſies againſt him, and repreſent him as an Oppreſſor in the Country. At laſt, without any Authority from the Tenants who were to be removed, he took a Journey to Edinburgh, on his own Expence, and applied, by a Bill of Suſpenſion, to the Court of Seſſion in their Names; in which the Factor's Conduct was ſet forth in ſuch falſe and odious Colours, as procured a Siſt or Stop of Execution of the Decree of removing, pronounced by the Sheriff, at the Factor's Suit; and, by the ſame falſe Suggeſtions, he ſo far impoſed upon ſuch of the Barons, as were then in Town, as to make them liſten to his Complaints againſt Glenure.

When Glenure was informed of all this, he went directly to Edinburgh by great Journies; and, as ſoon as he had an Opportunity of being heard, he obtained a Removal of the Siſt from the Court of Seſſion; and ſatisfied the Barons, that he had conducted himſelf entirely by their Inſtructions. And, having been only two Days in Town, he returned with Expedition to the Country, Whitſunday being then near at Hand.

This Scheme being fruſtrated by the Diligence and Activity of the Factor, Meaſures of a different Nature became neceſſary.

The Priſoner had no Hopes of being able to keep up his Influence and Intereſt in the Eſtate, while Glenure continued to have the Management of it; and if he ſhould be able to get the better of him, he had Reaſon to think no other would be ſo hardy as to undertake it. It was therefore reſolved to take him off, and that before he ſhould remove the Tenants.

For the Execution of this Scheme, a very proper Aſſiſtant was at Hand; Allan Breck Stewart, a Perſon in deſperate Circumſtances, who had already forfeited his Life to the Laws, and inliſted himſelf an Enemy to the Liberties of his Country; a Dependant of the Family of Ardſhiel; brought up from his Infancy under the Care and Authority of the Priſoner.

With this Aſſiſtance, no Method was left unattempted to ſtir up the Populace, or ſome of the hardieſt among them, to cut off Glenure by Violence. Their Attachment to their Chief was made Uſe of for that Purpoſe. The Preſervation of his Family, the Welfare of their Country, and even the very Being of the Clan, were repreſented as inconſiſtent with allowing Glenure to live. Reproaches were uſed to ſome, Rewards offered to others, and ſtrong Inſinuations made by the Priſoner to his own domeſtic Servants: But all this had not the deſired Effect.

Wherefore, on Monday the 11th of May, Allan Breck, who had no other Occupation but wandering from Houſe to Houſe amongſt his Friends, and was thereby well able to trace all Glenure's Motions, came to the Priſoner's Houſe, when the Reſolution appears to have been taken, that Allan himſelf ſhould ſet out early next Morning to way-lay Glenure, and take the firſt Opportunity to perpetrate the Murder.

This was no difficult Taſk to one who knew the Country. There were but three Days to run to the Term for the Removing. In that Period, it was known that Glenure was to go from his own Houſe, to the Sheriff's Court at Fort-William, and return to the Lands from whence the Tenants were to be removed. The Nature of the Country, and the ſeveral Ferries which he could not avoid, made it certain what Road he muſt take; and a Wood near the Lands afforded a proper Place for the bloody Deed. But Allan's Dreſs, being the French Uniform, was too remarkable for an Executioner of the Works of Darkneſs: He was therefore ſupplied with another, of the uſual Colour and Faſhion of the Country, by the Priſoner. The Court has heard how he then took his Station at a Place within Sight of Glenure's Houſe, till he ſaw him ſet out for Fort-William, and then how he retired towards a Ferry, where it was known Glenure muſt paſs in his Return.

In the mean Time, Meſſenger after Meſſenger is ſent to Fort-William by the Priſoner, to get more particular Intelligence of Glenure's Motions. On the Night of the 13th, Allan came to a Place adjacent to the Ferry, and retired in the Morning into the Wood, from which he only came out to inquire if Glenure was paſt. About this very Time a Gun, belonging to the Priſoner, was a-miſſing; and, in the Evening, Glenure was ſhot in the Wood.

When the Horror of the Murder threw all the Neighbourhood into Confuſion and Conſternation, no Surprize appeared upon the Priſoner, or in his Family. Their Attention was entirely fixed upon the Execution of the Meaſures that had been concerted for facilitating the Murderer's Eſcape: For that Purpoſe, a Meſſenger was diſpatched to procure Money: Upon the Return of that Meſſenger (tho' the Priſoner was then in Cuſtody) the Money he brought, with what more the Priſoner could afford and alſo the French Cloaths, were, by the Priſoner's Direction, carried to a remote Place in the Mountains, where Allan Breck had for ſome Time waited in Expectation of them. At the ſame Time the Priſoner's Arms, which had been concealed near his Houſe, were diſcovered; and the very Gun, which had been miſſing on the Day of the Murder, was found amongſt them, with ſuch Marks as ſhewed that it had been lately diſcharged.

Thus, my Lords, as I had Occaſion to mention ſome of the Facts to be proved, I could not reſiſt ſhortly running over the whole, in order to lay them in one View before your Lordſhips and the Jury.

And, from this View, I apprehend it will now appear, 1*mo*, That the Friendſhip mentioned by the Counſel for the Priſoner, does not derogate from the Probability of his Guilt. It is a natural, and even a neceſſary Link of the Chain upon which the whole depends.

2*do*, It muſt occur to every one who hears theſe Facts, that tho' it is poſſible, barely poſſible, that ſeveral of them might have happened, tho' the Priſoner had been innocent of the Crime that is charged upon him; yet it is impoſſible to conceive, that ſuch a long Series of Circumſtances, connected and correſponding with one another, all concurring to anſwer the ſame End, ſhould be the mere Effect of Chance, and not the Conſequence of Intention and Deſign.

To take an Inſtance, it is very eaſy to believe, that Allan Breck might have changed his Cloaths, tho' he had not intended to murder Glenure; and that he might have lodged for ſome Nights near Glenure's Houſe, tho' he had not intended to lie in wait for his Life: But when we find the ſame Allan Breck himſelf threatening to murder Glenure, and inſtigating others to do it; afterwards changing his Cloaths, lying in wait at different Times and in ſecret Places, appearing and anxiouſly inquiring for Glenure near the Time and Place of the Murder, and, as ſoon as it was committed, flying with Terror and Precipitation, who can doubt that he was the Murderer?

In the ſame Manner it may be well ſuppoſed, that the Priſoner might have lent Allan Breck a Suit of Cloaths, or given him Entertainment in his Houſe, tho' he had not inſtigated him to commit the Murder. But if it is conſidered, that Allan Breck had no Quarrel with Glenure, other than what he was engaged in by the Influence and Authority of the Priſoner; that he carried the Reſentment, on the Priſoner's Account, to ſuch a Height, as to threaten to ſhoot Glenure, and joined the Priſoner in prompting others to do it; that when Glenure returned unexpectedly from Edinburgh, Allan Breck went immediately with the Intelligence to the Priſoner; that when he ſet out to lie in wait for Glenure, it was after a Conſultation with, and being accoutred, for that Purpoſe, by the Priſoner; that the Gun with which he ſhot Glenure, appears to have been the Property of the Priſoner; that, after the Murder was committed, the Murderer relied for Money and Cloaths for his Eſcape, and actually did receive them from the Priſoner; I ſay, let all theſe concurring Circumſtances be laid together, and who will doubt that he was inſtigated, aided and abetted by the Priſoner?

It is therefore in vain to urge, that one or more of theſe Facts, when taken ſeparately, are not relevant to infer the Concluſion of his Guilt. It is from the Connexion and Concurrence of the whole, that the Conviction of his Guilt does ariſe: And it is only from a Proof of the whole, that the Proſecutors expect a Judgment againſt him.

In the laſt Place, the Counſel for the Priſoner have urged a Point of Law in his Defence, viz. That ſuppoſing the Facts which have been ſet forth, to be relevant to infer his Guilt; as he is only charged as an Acceſſary, he cannot be brought to Trial for the Crime, until the Principal be firſt convicted. In ſupporting of this, Texts have been quoted from the old Law-Books, Quoniam Attachiamenta and Regiam Majeſtatem. It has been ſaid that this is the Law of England at this Day, and that Sir George Mackenzie, in his Treatiſe of Crimes, has laid it down to be the Law of this Country.

As the Word Acceſſary is a Relative, which cannot be without a Principal to which it relates; it muſt be admitted, that no Evidence will be ſufficient to convict an Acceſſary, which does not prove that the Crime was committed by the Principal, who is thereby convicted, to the Effect that Juſtice may be executed againſt the Acceſſary.

In this Senſe the Maxim is juſt; but in the Senſe in which it is pleaded for the Priſoner, I will take upon me to ſay, it is not ſupported by the Law of this Country: It is inconſiſtent with the Principles of public Policy, and ſubverſive of all civil Society.

It is indeed a Maxim, and a good one, in the Law of Scotland, That no Perſon can be condemned, ſo as to ſuffer the Puniſhment appointed by Law for any Crime, unleſs he be preſent in Court, and have Opportunity to object to the Evidence by which it is to be proved againſt him. But, in the preſent Caſe, it is not alledged, that Allan Breck could be condemned, and brought to Juſtice, upon the Evidence that is to be brought in his Abſence againſt the Priſoner. If he ſhall afterwards appear, and ſtand his Trial, the Proof, in ſo far as it relates to him, muſt again be repeated in his Preſence, and it will be competent to him to object to every Part of it. But at preſent, as the Evidence is brought only to the Effect that the Priſoner may be puniſhed, it is he only that can plead the Benefit of this Maxim; and it is competent to him to object, as well to that Part of the Evidence which fixes the Crime upon the Principal, as to that which proves his Acceſſion.

As to the Law of England, I will not take upon me to argue from it; I do not pretend to be verſant in it; nor do I apprehend it will be deciſive in this Caſe. Nevertheleſs I have Reaſon to believe, That it is the Practice in that Part of the Kingdom to proceed to the Trial of the Acceſſary, after the Outlawry of the Principal; from which I would infer, that, in our Practice, either the Fugitation has the Effect of the Outlawry, or there is no Argument to be drawn from the one Law to the other.

With regard to the old Law-Books mentioned, it is well known to your Lordſhips, that they are generally believed to have been tranſcribed from the Laws of England, at a Time, indeed, when many ſalutary Alterations are thought to have been introduced into our Practice from thence; but that it is by no Means admitted, that they were ever ingroſſed into the Body of our Laws, or that every Part of them has been confirmed by our Practice; many Inſtances of the contrary might be mentioned. But I forbear to conſume the Time of the Court upon this Queſtion, becauſe the only Ground I can find to ſuſpect, that it ever was held to be a Doubt in our Practice, is the 153 Act, 12 Parl. Ja. VI. which appears to have been made with a View to take away all Doubt for the future. The Words of this Statute are, That in all Time cumming, all criminal Libells ſall conteine, that Perſones compleined on are Airt and Pairt of the Crimes libelled; quhilk ſall be relevant to accuſe them thereof; ſwa that na Exception or Objection take awaie that Part of the Libell in Time cumming. Which, in more modern Language, imports, that, for the future, no Objection ſhall be ſuſtained againſt a Libel, which charges the Perſon accuſed of being Contriver, Adviſer, Aiding, Abetting or Aſſiſting, in a Crime that is otherwiſe relevant

And Sir Geo. Mackenzie, in that very Paſſage of his Treatiſe on Crimes, which has been quoted in behalf of the Priſoner, tho' he lays down the Arguments which have been ſuggeſted on both Sides by the Authors who have treated this Queſtion, he concludes with obſerving, that, in Robertſon's Caſe, the Court found upon this Act, that an Accomplice might be tried, tho' the Principal had not been convicted nor fugitated.

Upon theſe Principles, the Practice has been uniform for many Years; and the preſent Circumſtances of the Caſe do not ſeem to afford any Reaſon to deviate from it. For your Lordſhips and the Jury muſt be convinced, from the Facts which have been opened, that as the Murder was committed with the Advice, and at the Inſtigation of the Priſoner; ſo, but for his Aiding, Abetting and Aſſiſting, the Murderer had been now alſo Priſoner at your Bar.

Lord Advocate.

My Lord Juſtice General,

I Stand up at this Time, to ſupport the Reply that hath been made by the learned and ingenious Gentlemen on the ſame Side with me, to the Defences that have been offered for this Pannel; but as it hath not been frequently practiſed by my Predeceſſors in Office to attend in Perſon at Circuit Courts of Juſticiary, I beg leave, firſt of all, to ſay a few Words for myſelf, to give the Reaſon of my being now here: And I am perſuaded that every one who now hears me, will believe me, when I declare, that, negatively, that hath not proceeded from any particular Animosity against this unhappy Man in the Pannel, whom I never saw until this Day when he appeared there; neither is it singly because it is a horrid and atrocious Murder that is to be now tried; or that the Trial is to proceed upon indirect and circumstantial Evidence, because such Cases have often occurred: But the Truth is, that upon my first hearing of this Murder, in the Month of May last, of a Gentleman of this Country, the King's Factor upon certain of the forfeited Estates that had been but a few Weeks before annexed to the Crown unalienably, and the Produce of them appropriated by Law to the most salutary and beneficial Purposes, for the future Tranquillity of the united Kingdom in general, and for the immediate Advantage and Improvement of these Highland Parts of Scotland in particular; I was greatly shocked, and considered the Murderers, whoever they were, as having been guilty not only of a most horrid Crime against the Laws of God and Humanity, but, together with this, of a most audacious Insult against the most gracious and beneficent Acts of the King's Government, and of the whole Legislature; and, as far as in them lay, had endeavoured to make the World or the Publick believe, that the civilizing of the Highlands of Scotland was a vain and impracticable Attempt; and under this Impression, I then resolved, whenever a Discovery should be made of any Persons concerned in this Wickedness, to attend at the Trial where-ever it should be, and to do all that in me lay, consistently with Law and Justice, to convince the disaffected Part of the Highlands of Scotland, that they must submit to this Government, which they have several Times in vain endeavoured to subvert.

And now, as to this Trial itself, your Lordships have heard the Libel read, and some Parts of the Evidence which we expect to bring in Support of it, more particularly opened by the Gentlemen who spoke of the same Side with me; and none of these Things shall I now repeat; but only make a few Observations upon what hath been offered by the Counsel for the Pannel by Way of Defence.

And, first of all, in order to lay out of the Case what is foreign to the Merits of the Trial, the Pannel's Counsel have been pleased to take Notice of certain Hardships, or Grievances, that he has laid under, during his Confinement in the Garrison of Fort-William; and that, by the Precaution of the private Prosecutor, all the old experienced Counsel have been retained from giving him their Assistance. As to the former of which supposed Grievances, I am truly ignorant of the particular Facts upon which the Complaint is founded; but if it be true, that the Pannel was longer kept in close Confinement than he should have been, or until the commanding Officer was informed how the Law stood, the Pannel can be under no real Disadvantage on that Account in his present Trial; because he was first taken into Custody on Saturday the 16th of May, that is, about four Months ago: And supposing it true, that for some few Days of so long a Period, People had not Access to him whom he had a mind to see, he has had full Time, when all these are deducted, to make the necessary Provision for his Defence.

As for the other alledged Grievance, I myself know certainly the Foundation of that; and so far is true, that after I had expected, for some Time, to receive from the Sheriff-depute of this County the Result of his Inquiries concerning the Murder of Glenure, and the Examinations he had taken on that Subject; these were, at length, brought to me at Edinburgh by certain of the Family of the Deceased, who had taken upon them, as it was very just and natural, to be Managers and Conductors of the Inquiry, and to cause to be brought before the Sheriff to be examined, all Persons, who, according to their Information, could give any Light in the Affair; and, with the Examinations so taken, they brought along with them to me three learned Counsel, which was also very reasonable and usual, and, as in all other Cases, was to myself most acceptable, that we might jointly consult and deliberate, whether from these Examinations, and the Discoveries thereby made, there was Matter sufficient for bringing this Pannel to Trial, upon which Question we all agreed in the Affirmative: But these three Gentlemen, though very able in their Profession, were not all the experienced Counsel. And as it is my constant Wish to see every Pannel as ably defended as his Cause will bear, it is with Pleasure that I now see this Pannel attended by four of my Brethren, who I am sure will omit nothing material for his Service.

Upon the Cause itself, there is, in reality, no Place for a Debate on the Relevancy of the Libel; nor does there appear to me to be any Difference betwixt us concerning the Interlocutor that we desire or expect to receive from your Lordships; for the Gentlemen of Counsel for the Pannel have admitted the Atrocity of the Crime charged upon him as strongly as I am able to express it: And they farther admitted, as they must have done, that the charging the Pannel as being guilty, or Art and Part of that Crime, is relevant to infer the Conclusion, and necessarily requires his being remitted to the Knowledge of an Assize, whether he is so guilty or not.

And, on the other Hand, I readily admit to them, that the laudable and just Practice of this Court, of later Years, hath been, not to find or determine a particular Relevancy upon certain Facts or Circumstances set forth in the Subsumption, or minor Proposition of the Libel, which is indeed, in some Measure, to pre-occupy the Province of the Jury, who are the Judges of the Fact, and is also dangerous to the Course of Justice; because, when a Number of Facts and Circumstances were found jointly relevant to infer the Pannel's Guilt, if the least material of these should not be proved, although a more pregnant Circumstance, that was not specially libelled or expressed in the Interlocutor, should come out upon the Evidence, if the Jury followed the Directions of that Interlocutor, and adapted their Verdict to it, the Pannel behoved to be acquitted, tho' in Reality, and in their Opinion, he was guilty.

It was not, therefore, with Intent that your Lordships should give your Opinion upon the Relevancy and Sufficiency of the Facts and Circumstances set forth in this Libel, that these were so particularly there inserted; but this was done agreeably to some of the best Precedents in the Records of this Court, for the Furtherance of Justice, both in respect of the Prosecutors and of the Pannel: For the former, that as the Evidence to be brought is circumstantial, the Jury may be the better enabled to ponder the several Circumstances, and connect them together, and attend to the Evidence that shall be brought for Proof of them; and for the Sake of the Pannel, that he, knowing the principal Facts that were to be proved in Support of the Charge against him, might prepare the Evidence for his Vindication, and for explaining those Appearances of Guilt with which he was loaded, in the best Manner he should be able.

Another Thing concerning the Interlocutor to be pronounced by your Lordships, in which I most readily agree with the Pannel's Counsel, is, that he should be allowed to prove the several Facts alledged for his Defence, and every pertinent Fact or Circumstance, that he or his Counsel think, may be available for proving his Innocence.

And thus far we seem to be agreed on the Terms of the Interlocutor, if the Trial is at all to proceed; against which one previous Objection hath been made, namely, That this Pannel, who is only said to be charged as Accessary, cannot be tried before the Principal, Allan Breck, be first discussed: In Support of which Objection, they have alledged certain Passages in the old Books of the Law, and Sir Geo. Mackenzie in his Criminals, Title Art and Part, Parag. 9.

But to this I answer, first of all, that Sir George Mackenzie himself, in the Passage referred to, furnishes an Answer to the Objection; for, after stating the Question, whether Accessaries can be sued till the chief Actors be first discussed, and quoting the Passages in the Regiam Majestatem, and other old Books that favour the negative, he adds a Decision of that Question in this Court in these Words: "Notwithstanding all which, Charles "Robertson being pursued as Accessary to the casting down of a House, which "was libelled to have been cast down by his Sons and Servants at his "Command, the Justices found, that he might be put to the Knowledge "of an Inquest, although the Children and Servants were not first "discussed; because the Act appointing a Libel to be relevant, "bearing Art and Part, did abrogate the foresaid; 4th Verse, 26th "Chap. L. 4. R. M. since such as are pursued, as Art and Part, are "all Principals." This was the Decision of the Court and the Reason of it, founded on the Act 1592, Chap. 153, which enacts, "That, in "Time coming, all criminal Libels shall contain, that Persons com-"plained on are Art and Part of the Crimes libelled; which shall be re-"levant to accuse them thereof; so that no Exception or Objection take "away that Part of the Libel in Time coming."

The Author proceeds in the same Passage to recite some Part of the Argument previous to this Decision; and says, "That the Advocate al-"ledged, it were absurd, that the King should be prejudged by the Ab-"sence of the principal Party; to which it was answered, That the King "was not prejudged, seeing, if the principal Party were discussed and "denounced fugitive, the Accessary might be proceeded against."

Now this is what hath been done in the present Case: Allan Breck Stewart hath been called upon to stand Trial for his Part in the same Offence; and hath been denounced fugitive for not appearing to abide his Trial; which is discussing him as far as the Laws of this Land admit of, when his Person is not in Custody.

But further, it is to be observed, that Allan Breck is not charged in this Libel with being the Principal, and this Pannel as only Accessary to the Murder of the deceased Glenure; they are both charged in the same Words with being guilty, Actors, or Art and Part of the said heinous Crime; that is, in the Terms of the Statute of K. Ja. VI. just mentioned: And though it be true, that, in the Subsumption or Recital of the Facts, it is said, that the actual Murder, or Firing upon the Deceased, was committed by Allan Breck, it is also said, that this was done in Revenge of the Quarrel which this Pannel took up against the Deceased, and in pursuance of a Concert or Conspiracy betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck, to take away the Life of Glenure; and such being the Case, they are in Reality both Principals. By the Law itself (L. 15. ad legem Corneliam de sicariis) mandator cædis pro homicida habetur: And the learned Matheus, de criminibus, in his prolegomena, c. 1. § 12. qui mandant scelus, quique mandatum exequuntur, utrique rei sunt, & ordinariæ quidem pœnæ subjugandi; and for Proof of this, brings many Arguments and Authorities; and, inter alia, cum quis alicui mandat scelus, mandantem quidem caput esse; mandatarium vero manum, & instrumentum mandantis. Hinc sacro quoque oraculo cædes Uriæ Davidi impingitur, 2 Sam. xii. 9. in which Text the Words of Nathan the Prophet to David are, Thou hast killed Uriah the Hittite with the Sword.

And indeed it seems not to be agreeable to Reason or natural Justice, to hold, that, if this Allan Breck, for Instance, the actual Manslayer in the present Case, instead of making his Escape beyond Sea, as probably he hath, had died a natural Death, and so become out of the Reach of all human Laws, before this Trial could be brought on; and supposing the most direct and positive Evidence could be brought, that Breck committed the Murder libelled, by the Counsel, Command, or Direction of this Pannel, or, as our old Laws express it, out-bounded by him, that yet this Pannel could not be brought to Justice, because truly, though the Author, he was not the very actor cædis.

But that such is not the Law of Scotland at this Day, besides the Case mentioned by Sir George Mackenie, I need only remind your Lordships of the very last Trial in the Court of Justiciary at Edinburgh, of James Drummond Macgregor, for being guilty, or Art and Part of the Crimes of Hamesucken, forcible Marriage, and Rape: For all which the Trial proceeded against him; and though, in the Crime of Hamesucken, he and his Accomplices might be all equally Principals; yet, in the forcible Marriage and Rape, Robert his younger Brother, to provide whom with a Wife and a Fortune that Wickedness was committed, was no Doubt the principal Party and Actor; and yet Robert had been no otherwise discussed than Allan Breck has been in the present Case, that is, called upon to abide his Trial for these Offences, and pronounced a Fugitive for not so doing.

As for the Argument which the Counsel for the Pannel have chiefly insisted upon, and which they have professedly, and I think not improperly, calculated for the Jurors who now hear us, namely, to impugn the Relevancy or Sufficiency of the several Facts and Circumstances libelled to infer the Pannel's being guilty, or Art and Part of the Murder in Question; I do not chuse at present to enter particularly into that Argument, but to reserve that till we come to sum up the Evidence to the Jury, such as it shall come out in their Presence; which may possibly in some Articles be weaker, and in others stronger, than what is set forth in the Libel from the Materials that we then had before us; but, in order to shorten our Work at the End of a long Trial, and to engage the Attention of the Jury to the Evidence that ſhall be brought before them, in Support of this Libel, I beg Leave now to make a general Obſervation or two for their Sake.

It hath been admitted by the Counſel for the Pannel, that even in the Trial of Crimes, circumſtantial Evidence, when clear, is not only competent, but perhaps the moſt ſatisfying and convincing Proof of any; and it was well ſaid, 'that Circumſtances are inflexible Proofs; that Witneſſes may be miſtaken or corrupted; but Things can be neither:' To which I will add, that the Competency of ſuch Evidence, for inferring the ordinary capital Puniſhment for Murder, was ſolemnly decided in the Court of Juſticiary at Edinburgh, in February 1718, in the Trial of Stewart Abercrombie, for the Murder of Alexander Hay, Son to Mr. Robert Hay of Naughton; in which the Argument was treated with great Learning, and full Informations on the Debate written by the now Lord Preſident of the Court of Seſſion, who was the Proſecutor, and by the now Lord Juſtice-Clerk, who was of Counſel for the Pannel. And I mention that Caſe, which I have lately peruſed in the Record, to give your Lordſhips and the Jury a Specimen of a circumſtantial Evidence of Murder, that, in its general Nature or Complexion, was very ſimilar to the preſent: The Caſe there, in ſhort, was, that ſome Days before the Murder, Mr. Hay the Deceaſed, and Stewart Abercrombie the Pannel, had been in Company, when Hay complained of an Affront given him by Abercrombie; upon which nothing then enſued: But, juſt before the Murder, which happened about Nine at Night of the 6th of December 1717, Abercrombie was drinking in a Tavern near the Head of Black-Friars Wynd, when Mr. Hay came into the Houſe, and made one of the Servants call him out into another Room; Abercrombie went to Hay, leaving his Hat in the Room where his Company were; they went out together near to a Lamp at the Head of the Wynd, where a Scuffle enſued betwixt them, without either of them drawing, tho' they had both Swords; and, during this Scuffle, Abercrombie drew his Sword, and run Hay through the Body, who was heard cry, He was murdered, and had got foul Play, his Sword not having been drawn; and ſoon after dropt down dead: Abercrombie was ſtill without his Hat, and was ſeen by no Perſon who knew him during the Scuffle; they only ſaw the Man without the Hat ſtab the other who had one; and, after he had given the Wound, inſtead of returning to his Company where he had left his Hat, called at another Tavern, where he borrowed a Hat, and went directly to his own Houſe, and to Bed, where he was, that ſame Night, apprehended.

In the Libel againſt him, all the Circumſtances are particularly ſet forth; and, in the Information for the Proſecutor, there is the following Paſſage, which I have extracted, and beg Leave here to read: "The "Pannel truſted to the Darkneſs of the Night, and Secrecy in which "he had committed this Crime, as ſufficient to cover him from the Eye "of Juſtice, and prevent his Puniſhment; but that ſame wiſe Provi"dence, which ſometimes leaves Men to execute their wicked Deſigns "in ſuch a Manner, and under ſuch Circumſtances, as emboldens them "to go on with Hopes of Impunity, frequently brings thoſe very "Crimes to Light, by a wonderful Diſcovery of unforeſeen Incidents "and Circumſtances, concurring to fix the Guilt upon the Criminal, "with more Force of Conviction and Strength of Evidence, than two "concurring Witneſſes could give, on purpoſe to convince the World "how little Darkneſs or Secrecy are to be relied on, either as Covers or "Encouragements to Wickedneſs.

"Such is the Caſe of this Pannel: Had it not been by the ſmall "Chance of his leaving his Hat in the Room with the Company where "he was, when he came forth to perpetrate this Crime, he might "have gone off undiſcovered.—But that ſmall Accident, firſt indeed "taken Notice of by a Child, who obſerved the Hat in the Cellar, and "knew it to be Mr. Abercrombie's, led thoſe concerned to a full Diſ"covery of ſuch other concurring Circumſtances, as ſuppoſing no poſi"tive Proof of the Fact ſhould appear, are more than ſufficient to con"demn the Pannel in the Eyes of every Judge and Jury, and of every "Perſon elſe who will lay himſelf open to receive Impreſſions from "Truth."

The Jury in his Caſe were of that Diſpoſition; he was convicted of the Murder, and ſuffered for it.

Another remarkable Inſtance of this Nature, was the Caſe of Alexander Maccowan, who was tried by two of your Lordſhips here preſent, at the Circuit held at Perth in May 1750, for the moſt horrid Murder of Margaret Maclean, and of Margaret his own Child by her, an Infant of about three or four Years of Age, committed in Auguſt 1749, not far from Crief, in the Shire of Perth, in a Thicket of Wood, where he left their Bodies, after having carried away the Money and Cloaths which the ſaid Margaret had along with her in a Bundle. Before the Bodies were diſcovered, they were ſo mangled, that they could not be known, otherwiſe than by the Cloaths which were on the Body of the Woman, which her Relations could ſwear to: The Evidence againſt the Pannel was wholly circumſtantial, and conſiſted chiefly of there being found in his Poſſeſſion, after the Murder, a Pair of Stockings, a linnen Shirt, and a muſlin Stock, that were proved to have been in Poſſeſſion of the Deceaſed when ſhe ſet out for Edinburgh, where ſhe had told her Relations, ſhe had been invited by the Pannel to go along with him, in order to their being married together; and, upon this Evidence, he was convicted of this double Murder and Robbery; and, upon your Lordſhips Sentence, ſuffered the Puniſhment that he ſo well deſerved.

My Lords, it appears to me, that the preſent Caſe affords a freſh Inſtance, ſimilar to theſe I have mentioned, of a providential Diſcovery of Circumſtances, ſerving to fix the Guilt of Acceſſion to this Murder upon the now Pannel, notwithſtanding all the Precautions by him uſed to conceal it: His Enmity againſt Glenure, for removing him from his own Poſſeſſion in May 1751, and diſcontinuing to employ him in the Management of the Ardſhiel Eſtate, was well known; as likewiſe the various Efforts he made to prevent the Removing of certain Tenants of Ardſhiel in the Month of May laſt; and alſo his Intimacy and cloſe Connexion with Allan Breck Stewart, who diſappeared abruptly immediately after the Murder, and to whom the Voice of the whole Country imputed the actual Murder itſelf: But as, when that happened, this Pannel was at his own Houſe, at the Diſtance of one Mile from the Place of the Murder, the more direct and immediate Evidence of his Acceſſion to it was long concealed: His Wife and his Daughter being examined upon Oath before the Sheriff-depute of this County, on the 22d and 25th of May laſt, touching what they knew concerning the Murder, depoſed, That Breck Stewart left the Pannel's Houſe on the Morning of Tueſday the 13th of May, dreſſed in his French Cloaths, and that the Pannel had no ſuch black or dark-coloured ſhort Coat, as Breck had truly left his Houſe dreſſed in, for three Quarters of a Year before that Time; but at length, above a Month after this Examination, namely, on the 30th of June laſt, Alexander Stewart the Packman, being examined before the Sheriff-ſubſtitute at Fort-William, and after being confronted with a Friend of his own, to whom he had been muttering ſome Part of the Truth, ſpoke out the whole Truth, as it is ſet forth in the Libel; and particularly, that from this very Wife of the Pannel he received, on the Evening of Saturday the 16th, at the Pannel's Houſe, Allan Breck's French Cloaths, to be carried to him at the Place of his Retreat, together with the five Guineas, which the Pannel had been at great Pains to ſcrape together, after ſending the Packman Expreſs, for that Purpoſe, to his Friend William Stewart at Fort-William, and which he ſent to Breck at the Place of his Retreat, with a declared Intent to put him in Condition to make his Eſcape, for that he muſt be ſuſpected of the Murder: This Diſcovery was the firſt Thread which the Kindred of the Deceaſed got hold of to lead them to a more full Detection; and was afterwards confirmed by the Examination of the Bouman, who told the Particulars in the Libel recited, and about whoſe Houſe the very Cloaths were found, the Property of the Pannel, which Breck had brought from the Pannel's, and left with the Bouman.

And as for the Importance of theſe particular Diſcoveries, which the Pannel's Counſel have endeavoured to diminiſh in the Manner that circumſtantial Evidence is always impugned, by obſerving that each Article taken by itſelf is inconcluſive; I may readily admit this; and yet, from the Reſult of the whole Circumſtances, there may be convincing and irreſiſtible Evidence. And to mention, at preſent, only theſe two material ones, of the Cloaths furniſhed, and the Money ſent to Breck Stewart, before and after the Murder reſpectively; I do not ſay, that if a Man lends his Neighbour a Coat, in which the Borrower being dreſſed, two or three Days after commits a Murder of a Perſon who was his own Enemy in Time paſt, that this will afford any Evidence of Privity, or Acceſſion to that Murder in the Lender of the Coat; neither do I ſay, that if a Man's Friend or Relation has unfortunately committed a Murder, and one ſhall aid him, by Money, or otherwiſe, to make his Eſcape, that this will render ſuch Friend acceſſary to, or chargeable with the Crime of Murder, tho' he is doubtleſs guilty of an Offence or Miſdemeanor in its own Kind; but the Force of theſe united Circumſtances in the preſent Caſe, with the others charged in the Libel againſt this Pannel, conſiſts in the Connexion of the whole together. It was the Pannel's proper Quarrel that rendered the Deceaſed obnoxious to Breck Stewart; the Pannel had diſcovered and expreſſed his Enmity againſt the Deceaſed, and had uttered Threatenings againſt his Life; Breck Stewart, his intimate Friend, was a fit Inſtrument for ſuch wicked Purpoſe; he had eſpouſed all the Pannel's Opinions and Diſpoſitions towards Glenure; he was, himſelf, not in Condition to remain in this Country, and was already provided with the Means of Subſiſtence in foreign Service; and to this Man it was, in the very Heat of a Conteſt with the Deceaſed about removing certain Tenants which this Pannel had put in, that he furniſhed the Dreſs, and, as we likewiſe believe, the Arms wherewith he perpetrated this foul Murder; immediately after which he retires to a deſert Place, not far off, there to wait for a Supply of Money that was to be ſent him; and it is eſpecially to be remarked by your Lordſhips, and the Jury, that, as the Libel bears, at this Place, Breck told the Bouman, that he muſt go to Fort-William with a Letter to William Stewart, Merchant there, who he ſaid would give him Money upon Receipt of the Letter; and this William Stewart was another intimate Friend of the Pannel's, and the very Perſon to whom, the Day after the Murder, the Pannel ſent the Packman Expreſs to get five Guineas for the Uſe of Breck, who was about to leave the Country. This Circumſtance affords a Demonſtration of a Concert betwixt the Pannel and Breck before they laſt parted at the Pannel's Houſe on the Monday Night, or Tueſday Morning preceding; after which the Pannel allows he never ſaw Breck; for how otherwiſe could Breck have known, that, for ſuch a ſmall Sum as he wanted, the Pannel was to have Recourſe to this William Stewart, who lived twenty Miles diſtant from him? And this Circumſtance ſerves to connect the Facts which immediately preceded the Murder, with thoſe which immediately enſued it.

But I am going too far at preſent, on the Conſiderations that will be proper for the Jury after the Proof ſhall have been brought before them; and ſhall now conclude, hoping it will appear to your Lordſhips, that no ſufficient Objection hath been offered on the Part of the Pannel, why his Trial ſhould not proceed; and that you will make ſuch Interlocutors, upon that Suppoſition, the Counſel on both Sides appear to be agreed in.

Mr. MILLAR for the Pannel.

My Lord Juſtice-General,

I Appear as Counſel for the Priſoner at the Bar: And, as I am ſenſible this Trial muſt draw out to a very great Length, and occaſion a great deal of neceſſary Trouble to your Lordſhips, and the Jury, I ſhall endeavour, in what I am to offer, to avoid Repetition; and I ſhall confine myſelf to ſuch Obſervations as moſt affected my own Mind upon reading the Indictment, which is the only Rule by which I can judge of their Importance. And, 2*dly*, I ſhall offer a few Conſiderations by Way of Reply to what has been ſaid by my Lord Advocate and his Aſſiſtants, in Support of the Indictment.

The Priſoner is charged before your Lordſhips as Acceſſary, Art and Part of the Murder of the late Mr. Campbell of Glenure; a Crime of ſo foul and black a Nature, and attended with ſuch particular Circumſtances, as has not only juſtly excited the Attention of the Public, but alſo a more than ordinary Keenneſs and Ardour in the numerous Friends and Relations of the Deceaſed, in carrying on this Proſecution.

I would not chuſe to make any Reflections upon their Conduct. I ſincerely ſympathize with them for their Loſs, and feel the full Force of their juſt

Revenge

Revenge againſt the guilty Perſon, whoever he is. But, my Lord, in ſuch a Caſe, the Paſſion which we at firſt cheriſh as juſt and honourable, may get the better of us; and if the Reſtraints of Reaſon and ſtrict Honour are not applied, will inſenſibly riſe into Rage, and precipitate us into Meaſures inconſiſtent with Law, and the Dictates of cool Humanity.

My Lord, it is in ſuch Circumſtances as theſe, that even the Innocent may ſometimes be brought into Danger. And in ſuch Circumſtances it becomes the Duty, and an honourable Part of the Duty of one of my Profeſſion, to appear for the Accuſed, to aſſiſt him in his juſt Defence, and to obviate, by all the Remedies which the Law has provided for the Security of Innocence, any Diſadvantage he may be brought under, by public Prejudice, or by the Number, Power, or ſuperior Addreſs of his private Proſecutors.

This Conſideration determined me to appear in this Trial, and to give my poor Aſſiſtance in the Defence of the Priſoner; to which I was further prompted by my Lord Advocate himſelf, who had the Generoſity ſo far to intereſt himſelf for the Pannel, as to recommend it to me, amongſt others, to appear in his Defence.

And firſt, I obſerve, that it is admitted by the Proſecutors in their Indictment, that the barbarous Murder therein charged was perpetrated by one Perſon, to wit, by Allan Breck Stewart: And taking him to be the guilty Perſon, his Life is, no doubt, juſtly forfeited to public Juſtice, tho' in the mean Time he may have eſcaped from the Execution of the Law. The firſt Queſtion therefore that muſt naturally occur, is, what are the Circumſtances in this Caſe, which ſhould lead your Lordſhips or the Jury to believe, that any other Perſon than Allan Breck, and particularly the Priſoner at the Bar, was alſo guilty of this foul and deteſtable Murder?

It is a Rule in Philoſophy, in all our Inquiries into natural Cauſes and Effects, to reſt ſatisfied ſo ſoon as one Cauſe or Principle is diſcovered, ſufficient for anſwering and ſolving all Appearances in the Effect. This Rule, I am ſure, with great Propriety may, and ought to be applied to any moral or judicial Inquiry, ſuch as the preſent. If a Crime is committed, there muſt, no doubt, be a Criminal; and if the Crime itſelf, or the Circumſtances which attended the Commiſſion of it, are of ſuch a Nature, as muſt neceſſarily infer the Aid and Aſſiſtance of others towards the Commiſſion of it; as the Appearances in ſuch Caſe will not be anſwered by the Diſcovery of one guilty Perſon, the Mind will remain unſatisfied till further Diſcovery is made of the ſuppoſed Partners of the Crime.

But, my Lord, where the Guilt of one will account for the whole Appearances, for every Circumſtance connected with the Crime, I apprehend it is a Rule in Morals, it is a Rule in Law, and in ſound Reaſon, to preſume, that no other but that one Perſon was concerned in the Commiſſion of the Crime.

This Preſumption is founded in the Reſpect which we owe to human Nature. For, my Lord, wicked and corrupted as Mankind are, thank God, a Murderer, a wilful deliberate Murderer is ſtill a Monſter in the Species; and it is undutiful in us, and againſt all the Rules of right Reaſon, to carry our Suſpicions, far more our Prejudices, further than the corpus delicti, and the Circumſtances attending it, do neceſſarily point out.

From this Conſideration, I hope, the Priſoner comes to your Lordſhips Bar, attended and aided not only by the general, legal Preſumption of Innocence, but with this other more ſpecial Preſumption, that no other Perſon was concerned in this horrid Murder but that one Perſon, whoever he was, who gave the fatal Shot by which Glenure died. And this Preſumption, I flatter myſelf, will be preſent with your Lordſhips, and in the Mind of every Juryman, till contrary Proof and Evidence ſhall beat it out: Which we flatter ourſelves will be ſo far from happening, that, on the contrary, in the Courſe of the Evidence, it will gather Strength, and at laſt terminate in that Iſſue, which, from the holy Providence of God, the Innocent may with Confidence expect.

My Lord, it is not my Intention to anticipate, or to argue upon Evidence which has not yet been brought: But, as my Lord Advocate has ſet forth, in his printed Indictment, a Variety of Circumſtances, from which he would infer the Priſoner's Acceſſion to this Murder; I muſt beg leave to take Notice of ſome of them, in order, if poſſible, to diſpel that popular and illegal Prejudice, which I obſerve in moſt Caſes, eſpecially in the more atrocious Crimes, does attend the unhappy Perſon who is brought to your Lordſhips Bar.

When the Mind is enraged to a high Degree, it naturally ſeeks after, and is impatient to find, an Object for its Reſentment. The Priſoner firſt occurs, and there we are too apt to fix our Opinion of Guilt, and alongſt with it our Reſentment; eſpecially when our Confidence in the public Proſecutor is ſo great, as it juſtly is at preſent in the honourable Gentleman who fills that Office.

This, if I miſtake not, is the Source of popular Prejudice againſt the unhappy Priſoner. All of us are ſubject to it, becauſe it ariſes from, or at leaſt is incident to human Nature; but however innocent it may be in the Crowd that ſurrounds us, it is dangerous, it is criminal, if received and entertained in the Mind of a Juryman. For their Sakes, therefore, I will beg leave to make a few Obſervations upon the Facts charged in the Indictment, that ſo the Jury, who for ſome Time have had the printed Indictment in their Hands, may, before they proceed to Trial, be alſo poſſeſſed of ſuch Facts and Obſervations for the Pannel, as will, if attended to, entirely take off the Force of the Circumſtances which are charged againſt him.

And firſt, it will be obſerved, that the Murder is not ſaid to have been committed from ſudden Paſſion, or chaud melle, as the Law expreſſes it, but to have been premeditated and reſolved upon for ſome Days before it was committed. Now, to render Malice of ſo high a Nature probable, ſome very ſtrong Ground or Cauſe ought to have been aſſigned for it; and what Cauſe is here mentioned? Why, 1ſt, becauſe Glenure had accepted of a Factory from the Crown upon the forfeited Eſtate of Ardſhiel. 2dly, Becauſe Glenure had removed the Pannel from the Farm of Glenduror at Whitſunday 1751. And laſtly, Becauſe he was proceeding to remove certain other of the Tenants of Ardſhiel, at the Whitſunday 1752.

The firſt of theſe could not be the Ground of the Reſentment which gave Occaſion to the Murder; becauſe Glenure had been in that Office for more than three Years before the Murder; during the greateſt Part of which Time, the Pannel and he lived in Friendſhip and Intimacy together; as will be clearly proved by a long Courſe of Letters which paſſed betwixt them. The Pannel's own Removal from Glenduror could as little be the Cauſe of ſuch prepenſe Malice; for the Removal was voluntary, and the Poſſeſſion yielded to the ſucceeding Tenant, in conſequence of a previous Concert between the Pannel and Glenure. And far leſs could the intended Removal of the other Tenants at Whitſunday laſt, give Occaſion to the Conſpiracy and Murder charged againſt the Pannel. Such deep Reſentment could not have ariſen from ſo trifling a Cauſe in the Mind even of a wicked Man, much leſs one of the Pannel's Diſpoſition and Character.

2dly, The Circumſtance of Allan Breck's having changed his Cloaths at the Pannel's Houſe before the Murder, tho' it has been chiefly inſiſted on for inferring the Pannel's Acceſſion to the Murder, is equally inconcluſive. Allan Breck's Situation, as a Deſerter from his Majeſty's Service to the Rebels, and afterwards to the Service of France, made it neceſſary, ſo often as he came into this Country, to ſculk amongſt his Friends, of which the Pannel unfortunately happened to be one. It will be proven, that for this Purpoſe, he uſed to lay aſide his French Dreſs, and borrow the Dreſs of the Country, ſuch as is deſcribed in the Indictment, from any of his Friends, where he happened to viſit or reſide; and that he had gone about from Houſe to Houſe, changing his Dreſs in this Manner, ſince the Beginning of March laſt, and particularly had been furniſhed with ſuch Change of Dreſs at the Pannel's Houſe, about the Beginning of April, where he happened to be for a Night or two, in the Courſe of his Viſits through the Country.

My Lord, if theſe Facts are proven, it is impoſſible any Weight can be laid upon the Circumſtance of his having alſo changed his Dreſs at the Pannel's Houſe, upon the Monday and Tueſday before the Murder happened. If a Diſguiſe had been intended, would the Pannel, who is admitted to be a Man of more than ordinary Diſcernment, have furniſhed his own Cloaths, which were known to the whole Neighbourhood, and by which, if the Murderer was apprehended, he himſelf behoved infallibly to be diſcovered? Would he have dreſſed up the Aſſaſſin before his numerous Family and Servants, in the very Dreſs which was to ſerve for his Diſguiſe, two different Days before the Plot was to be executed? Or would he have allowed him to traverſe the Country for ſome Miles round, from Tueſday, when he left the Pannel's, till Thurſday when the Murder was committed, in the very Dreſs which was intended to diſguiſe and conceal him? Such a Conduct is unaccountable, and cannot be aſcribed to the Pannel, whom the Proſecutors themſelves repreſent as a Man of the deepeſt Deſign and Artifice.

My Lord, the next material Circumſtance in the Indictment, which I would beg leave to take Notice of for the ſake of the Jury, is the Correſpondence which paſſed betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck the ſuppoſed Murderer, after his Retreat to Koaliſnacoan.

This Circumſtance, I own, at firſt Sight, ſeems to carry great Weight againſt the Pannel, becauſe it imports not only Aid and Aſſiſtance given by the Pannel to the ſuppoſed Murderer in order to enable him to make his Eſcape, but alſo a previous Knowledge of the Place to which he retired immediately after committing the Murder. But your Lordſhips and the Jury have heard how the Force of this Circumſtance is taken off. The Pannel knew nothing of the Place of Allan Breck's Retreat till the Day after the Murder, when he received a Meſſage from him by Donald Stewart, giving him Notice of the Place to which he had retired, and beſeeching the Pannel to ſend him a ſmall Supply of Money, in order to carry him off the Country. This Meſſage the Pannel has undertaken, and hopes to prove by a Train of unqueſtionable Evidence; and if he ſhall be able to bring a ſatisfying Proof of the Fact, it will at once ſtrip the Indictment of the only Circumſtance in it, which points at a previous Conſpiracy betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck the ſuppoſed Murderer.

And indeed, my Lord, independent of the Proof which is propoſed to be brought by the Pannel, it cannot but appear unaccountable to your Lordſhips and the Jury, that a Perſon of the Pannel's Sagacity, if he had been in Concert with Allan Breck for ſeveral Days before the Commiſſion of the Murder, ſhould not have provided the neceſſary Means of Breck's Eſcape till after the Crime was committed, when he could no longer correſpond with him, without the Interpoſition of others, and conſequently without the Hazard of a Diſcovery. The Pannel could have had no Difficulty to have furniſhed Allan Breck with a little Money before the Commiſſion of the Murder, in order to make his Eſcape immediately. He knew Breck's Circumſtances, and that he had nothing to carry him off the Country, and Breck would not have engaged in ſuch a Service without receiving from his Employer the neceſſary Supplies for his own Safety; and ſuppoſing the Pannel had not been in Caſh upon the Monday, when they laſt parted, yet he would have taken care before the Friday to have been ſufficiently provided for anſwering Breck's Demands. And yet, upon the Friday after the Murder, when the Meſſage came from Breck, we find from the Indictment, that the Pannel was obliged to ſend in to Fort William, at a conſiderable Diſtance from his own Houſe, in order to borrow the Trifle of Money which was wanted, and ſent the Day following to Allan Breck.

How far the Pannel was to blame in ſending Money to Allan Breck, who was his Relation, and had been his Ward, in order to enable him to make his Eſcape, depends upon the Opinion he then had of his being guilty or innocent of the Murder. If he believed him guilty, it was no doubt a very great Crime in the Eye of Law; but ſuch Aſſiſtance furniſhed for the Eſcape of a Murderer, tho' knowingly, will not, in Law, or in the Nature of the Thing, infer Acceſſion to the Murder, unleſs it had been previouſly promiſed as an Encouragement to the Commiſſion of the Murder, which, from what has been ſaid, appears could not have been the Caſe.

With regard to the Threatenings, which is the only remaining Branch of the Indictment of any Weight againſt the Pannel, I could have wiſhed my Lord Advocate had been ſo good, as to have condeſcended upon the particular Expreſſions, and upon the Times and Places when and where theſe were uttered. As that is not done, it is impoſſible the Pannel can make any other Anſwer but a general Denial of this Part of the Charge:

charge: And as he is conſcious he never entertained the barbarous Reſolution, he hopes, and is perſuaded, no Proof will be brought of any Expreſſion uttered by him, which could import a deliberate Threatening to take away the Life of an innocent Gentleman.

My Lord, having touched upon a few of the moſt material Circumſtances in the Indictment, which I thought material for the Jury to have in their View, in order to direct their Attention, during the Courſe of the Evidence, to the Plan of the Pannel's Defence, I ſhall next proceed to what at preſent falls more immediately under your Lordſhips Conſideration, and that is, the Objection which has been moved to the Competency of this Proſecution.

It has been objected, that the Indictment does not charge the Pannel as a Principal in the Murder of Glenure, but only as a remote Acceſſary, by previous Counſel, and ſubſequent Aid and Aſſiſtance given to the Murderer in his Eſcape; and that tho' ſuch Acceſſary is equally criminal and puniſhable with the Principal, yet that he cannot be brought to Trial, till the Principal be firſt tried and convicted.

This Objection was ſtated to your Lordſhips upon the Authority of the old Books of our Law, Sir George Mackenzie, our only Author upon Crimes, and of ſeveral of the foreign Doctors who treat of this Subject; and, with your Lordſhips Permiſſion, I will read ſome of the Paſſages upon which the Objection is founded, as I have taken them down from the Books.

Reg. Maj. lib. 4. cap. 26. de ordine cognitionis in criminibus.

Si duo homines fuerint implacitati, unus de principali furto, et alter de præcepto, primò debet ille qui defamatur de facto, quam ille qui factum illud committi præcepit, implacitari.

To which the learned Sir John Skeene ſubjoins the following Annotation: Complices criminis non poſſunt accuſari ante principalem malefactorem, nam ſicut remoto principali removetur acceſſorium, ita abſoluto malefactore abſolvuntur complices et conſentientes.

Quoniam attachiamenta, cap. 83. de receptatione latrocinii.

Nullus defamatus tanquam receptator latrocinii debet puniri, antequam malefactor fuerit convictus vel attayntus de latrocinio illo; et hinc fiet ut dicitur conſentientes et agentes pari pœna puniuntur.

Statuta Davidis IIdi, cap. 19. Complices non debent puniri ante principalem malefactorem.

Ordinatum fuit coram rege in pleno parliamento apud Sconam per regem et communitatem regni, quod ſuperſedendum eſt de receptatore alicujus malefactoris judicandi ſive appellandi, quouſque receptatus judicetur. Et ſi receptatus quietus fuerit, receptator quietus ſit ſine aliqua alia aſſiſa. Si autem receptatus damnatus fuerit, receptator habet aſſiſam.

And, agreeable to the Doctrine laid down in theſe old Statutes, Sir George Mackenzie, in his Criminals, Tit. Art and Part, § 9. gives it as his Opinion, "That the chief Actor muſt be firſt diſcuſſed, and either "found guilty or aſſoilzied, before ſuch as are acceſſary can be purſued." Which he ſupports not only by the Authority of the old Books of our Law, already quoted, but alſo of many of the foreign Doctors.

'Tis true, he adds, that notwithſtanding what is there laid down, Charles Robertſon was tried before the Juſtices, as Acceſſary to the caſting down a Houſe, tho' his Sons and Servants who caſt down the ſame, eſcaped, and were not tried. But Sir George is far from approving of that Deciſion, and urges many ſtrong Reaſons againſt it, and in Support of the Doctrine he had formerly laid down.

The foreign Doctors alſo have generally gone into this Diſtinction, with reſpect to the Order of trying the Principal and Acceſſary. I ſhall only quote the Words of Julius Clarus, quæſt. 90. n. 6. who lays it down as a Rule, Quando proceditur contra aliquem tanquam quod præſtiterit auxilium delicto, debet primo in proceſſu conſtare principalem deliquiſſe.

To all theſe allow me to add the Authority of the Law of England, which, upon a Point of this Nature, ſuppoſing it not fixed by any Statute or Cuſtom of our own, will, no doubt, have greater Weight with your Lordſhips than the Opinions of any private Lawyers.

Thus Sir Matthew Hale, in his Pleas of the Crown, ch. 57. concerning the Order of Proceeding againſt Acceſſaries, lays down the following Propoſitions, as fixed Rules in the Law of England: "The Acceſſary "may be indicted in the ſame Indictment with the Principal, and that "is the beſt and moſt uſual Way.

"The Acceſſary ſhall not be conſtrained to anſwer to his Indictment, "till the Principal be tried, unleſs he wave that Benefit; in which Caſe, "his Acquittal or Conviction upon ſuch Trial is good. But it ſeems "neceſſary in ſuch Caſe to reſpite Judgment, till the Principal be con"victed and attainted: For if the Principal be afterwards acquitted, "that Conviction of the Acceſſary is annulled.

"If A be indicted as Principal, and B as Acceſſary, they may be "both arraigned together, and plead together, and tried by the ſame "Jury; and the Jury ſhall be charged, firſt to inquire of the Principal; "and if they find him not guilty, then to acquit the Acceſſary; and if "they find him guilty, then to inquire of the Acceſſary."

The Reaſon of this Diſtinction in the Order of trying Principals and Acceſſaries, is very well laid down by Sir George Mackenzie, in the Place above quoted, and will no doubt occur to your Lordſhips: For Guilt in the Acceſſary neceſſarily preſuppoſes, that the Crime was committed by the Principal, which can only be made appear by the Trial and Conviction of the Principal. Neither is it ſufficient to ſay, that, in the Trial of the Acceſſary, ſuch Evidence may be brought of the Guiltineſs of the Principal, as would be ſufficient to convict him, if he were preſent. For, as no Man can, by the Law of Scotland, be convicted of any Felony in Abſence, it is impoſſible to ſay or determine from Evidence, adduced in Abſence of the ſuppoſed Criminal, what would have been ſufficient to have convicted him, if he had been preſent. He might have had Defences againſt the Indictment, Objections againſt the Witneſſes adduced for the Proſecutor, and Witneſſes to adduce for his own Exculpation, which the Acceſſary doth not know, or cannot prove.

The Anſwers made by my Lord Advocate to this preliminary Objection to the Order of the Trial, have been three. Firſt, That it is againſt the Intereſt of Society, that Crimes ſhould paſs unpuniſhed; which often muſt be the Caſe, if the Eſcape or Death of the principal Actor ſhall be underſtood to be a perpetual Bar to the Trial and Puniſhment of thoſe who are acceſſary, and no leſs guilty in the Commiſſion of the Crime. 2dly, That Allan Breck Stewart hath been called upon to ſtand Trial for this Crime, and hath been denounced a Fugitive and Outlaw for not appearing to abide his Trial, which is diſcuſſing him, as far as the Laws of the Land admit. And, 3dly, That both Allan Breck and the Pannel are charged by the Indictment in the ſame Words, as being guilty, Actors, or Art and Part of the ſame heinous Crimes; which being in the preciſe Terms of the Act 153, Parl. 12th of James VI. nothing can be objected to the Relevancy of that Part of the Libel.

To theſe I will offer but a Word or two in Reply. As to the firſt, founded upon the public Expediency, and the dangerous Conſequences which may reſult from this Diſtinction in the Order of Trial of Principals and Acceſſaries, it is ſufficient for me to ſay, Incommodum non ſolvit argumentum. The Law has been more anxious in providing for the Defence and Safety of the Lives of the Subjects, in the Trial of Crimes, than for the Conviction and Puniſhment of the Guilty. And hence it has become an Axiom in the Law, Better that ten guilty Perſons ſhould eſcape, than that one innocent Perſon ſhould ſuffer.

To the ſecond, with regard to the Fugitation of Allan Breck, I anſwer, That ſuch Fugitation does not imply a Conviction of the Crime, which, by the Law of Scotland, can only proceed upon Evidence brought againſt the Criminal preſent in Court upon his Trial. An Act of Fugitation is no more than a Judgment of the Court, awarding the Eſcheat of Moveables againſt the Defender, for his Contempt in not appearing to ſtand Trial upon his Indictment; and neither proceeds upon, nor implies the abſent Perſon's Guiltineſs of the Crimes charged againſt him. If he were preſent, his voluntary Confeſſion would be no Probation of his having committed the Crime, ſo far as concerned the Acceſſary; and far leſs can his Abſence imply or amount to ſuch Conviction. And this is agreeable to the Opinion of Sir George Mackenzie and Julius Clarus, in the Places above quoted.

As to the third Anſwer to the Objection, founded upon the Statute of James VI. it will occur to your Lordſhips, as it did to Sir John Skeene and Sir George Mackenzie, who both wrote after the Date of that Act, That it could not be the Intention of that Law to aboliſh the Diſtinction betwixt Principals and Acceſſaries, and the Order of Proceeding in their Trials: All that was meant by that Statute was, to allow a Defender, whether Principal or Acceſſary in a Crime, to be charged under the general Words of Art and Part, without obliging the Proſecutor to condeſcend upon the whole particular Acts from which the Crime was to be inferred. But if a Proſecutor, as in the preſent Caſe, has brought a ſpecial Indictment, charging a Pannel, not as actor cædis, but as a remote Acceſſary thereto, the general Words of Art and Part, ſubjoined to the minor Propoſition of the Libel, can never be underſtood to imply a Charge againſt the Pannel, as Principal Actor, in Contradiction to the ſpecial Facts charged in the Indictment, but only as Acceſſary; and conſequently, in the Senſe of Law, Actor, Art and Part in the Commiſſion of the Crime.

What is laid down by the learned Sir Matthew Hale in his fifty-fifth Chapter of Principals and Acceſſaries in Felony, is applicable to the preſent Subject. "In Treaſon, ſays he, all are Principals; but yet, as "to the Courſe of Proceeding, it hath been, and indeed ought to be the "Courſe, that thoſe who did actually commit the very Fact of Treaſon "ſhould be firſt tried, before thoſe that are Principals in the ſecond "Degree; becauſe otherwiſe, this Inconvenience might follow, that the "Principals in the ſecond Degree might be convicted, and yet the Prin"cipals in the firſt Degree might be acquitted, which would be abſurd." And it is humbly thought, that this Abſurdity would be much greater in the Caſe of a remote Acceſſary.

Nor does the Deciſion in the Caſe of James Drummond Macgregor apply to the Point in Hand; for though the Crime was, in that Caſe, committed with a View to procure a Marriage for Robert the younger Brother; yet, as James was preſent, and aiding and aſſiſting in the Hamefucken and forcible Abduction, conſequently he was a Principal in the firſt Degree, being an immediate Actor in the whole Crimes libelled; and, therefore, could not be intitled to plead the Defence which has been offered for this Pannel.

What we therefore humbly ſubmit to your Lordſhips Conſideration is, that tho' an Acceſſary is equally guilty and puniſhable with the Principal, yet, as the Law hath laid down a certain Order, in Point of Time, as to the Trials of Principals and Acceſſaries in Crimes, and as this Order is not aboliſhed by the Statute of James VI. therefore the Trial of this Pannel cannot proceed, until Allan Breck Stewart, the ſole Actor in the Commiſſion of the Murder, is firſt tried and convicted.

But, if your Lordſhips ſhall find Reaſon for over-ruling this Objection, the Pannel hopes and expects, from your Lordſhips Juſtice, that he will be allowed, by the Interlocutor, a Proof, at large, of all Facts and Circumſtances that may tend to exculpate him from the Charge exhibited againſt him in this Indictment.

The Lords, upon hearing the Criminal Letters read, and the Debate thereupon, pronounced the following Interlocutor:

"—— The Lord Juſtice-General, and Lords Commiſſioners of Juſti"ciary, having conſidered the criminal Libel, purſued at the Inſtance of "William Grant of Preſtongrange, Eſq; his Majeſty's Advocate, for his "Majeſty's Intereſt; and alſo at the Inſtance of Janet Mackay, daughter "to the Honourable Hugh Mackay of Bighouſe, Eſq; and Relict of the "deceaſed Colin Campbell of Glenure, for herſelf, and on Behalf of Eliza"beth and Lucy Campbells, her infant Children, with Concourſe of his "Majeſty's Advocate, for his Majeſty's Intereſt, againſt James Stewart "Pannel, with the foregoing Debate thereupon, repel the Objections to "the Libel, and find the Libel relevant to infer the Pains of Law: "That, Time and Place libelled, the deceaſed Colin Campbell of Glenure "was murdered, and that the Pannel James Stewart was guilty, Actor, "or Art and Part thereof; but allow the Pannel to prove all Facts and "Circumſtances that may tend to exculpate him; and remit the Pannel, "with the Libel as found relevant, to the Knowledge of an Aſſize."

ARGYLL, I. P. D.

Thereafter the Lords continued the Diet againſt the above James Stewart Pannel, till To-morrow Morning at Six o'Clock preciſely, and ordained ordained the Parties, Witneſſes, Aſſizers, and others concerned, to attend at that Time, and the Pannel to be carried back to Priſon.

Curia itineris Juſticiarii, S. D. N. Regis, tenta apud burgum de Inverarii, viceſimo ſecundo die menſis Septembris, anno Domini milleſimo ſeptingenteſimo quinquageſimo ſecundo, N. S. per nobilem et præpotentem Principem Archibaldum Ducem de Argyll, Dominum Juſticiarium Generalem, et Patricium Grant de Elchies, armigerum, et Dominum Jacobum Ferguſon de Kilkerran, Dominos Commiſſionarios Juſticiarii dicti, S. D. N. Regis.

Curia legitime affirmata.

Intrat. James Stewart Pannel, indicted and accuſed as in the former Sederunt.

Thereafter the Lords proceeded to make Choice of the following Perſons, to paſs upon the Aſſize of the ſaid James Stewart, Pannel:

1 Colin Campbell of Carwhin.
2 Dougal Macdougal of Gallanah.
3 Alexander Duncanſon of Kiles.
4 Duncan Campbell of South-Hall.
5 Hector Macneil of Ardmeaniſh.
6 James Campbell, late Bailie of Inverary.
7 James Campbell of Raſhetlly.
8 James Campbell of Rudale.
9 Colin Gilleſpie of Balimore.
10 Colin Campbell of Skipniſh.
11 Duncan Campbell of Glendaroul.
12 Colin Campbell of Ederline.
13 Niel Campbell of Duntroon.
14 Archibald Campbell of Dale in Craigniſh.
15 Niel Campbell of Dunſtaffniſh *.

The above Aſſize all lawfully ſworn, and no Objection to the contrary.

Thereafter the Proſecutors, for proving the criminal Libel, called the Witneſſes cited by them; and the Pannel, for proving his Defences, called the Witneſſes cited by him; and the Proſecutors cauſed to be read, in Preſence of the Jury, the Writings produced by Way of Evidence for them; and the Pannel's Counſel cauſed to be read, in Preſence of the Jury, the Writings produced for him; all which Depoſitions and Writings are as follows;

The whole Proof brought both on the Part of the Proſecutors, and on the Part of the Pannel.

JAMES STEWART, Pannel, does admit the Truth of all the Writings contained in the Inventory of Writings ſubjoined to the Criminal Letters, and which Inventory was delivered to him at executing the ſaid Letters againſt him, excepting two of the ſaid Writings which he does not admit, viz. the Writing, Number 7. intitled, Principal Holograph Letter by Allan Stewart, Son to the ſaid James Stewart, addreſſed to Duncan Stewart of Glenbuckie, dated at Auchairn, the 1ſt of April 1752; and the Writing, Number 12. intitled, Draught, Letter by the ſaid James Stewart, and of an Inſtrument of Proteſt at the Tenants Inſtance, relative to the ſaid Decreet of Removing and Suſpenſion thereof: But the ſaid Draught Letter and Inſtrument being again ſhewn to the Pannel in Court, the Pannel admits the Truth and Authenticity of theſe alſo; and therefore admits the Truth of the whole Writings, except the Writing before-mentioned, Number 7; but does not admit the Writings ſubjoined to the ſaid Inventory, being two principal Declarations by Allan Stewart, Son to the ſaid James Stewart, five principal Declarations by Charles Stewart, alſo Son to the ſaid James Stewart, three principal Declarations by Margaret Stewart, Spouſe to the ſaid James Stewart, and two by Elizabeth Stewart, his Daughter.

(Signed) JAMES STEWART. P. GRANT.

Thereafter the Proſecutors, for proving the above criminal Libel, adduced the following Witneſſes:

Mr. Archibald Campbell of Stonefield, Sheriff-Depute of the Shire of Argyll, aged fifty-ſix Years, married, being ſolemnly ſworn, purged of Malice, partial Counſel, examined and interrogate, and being ſhewn the Writings following, viz. four principal Declarations by Charles Stewart, Son to the Pannel, bearing to have been emitted in the Deponent's Preſence, and dated the 22d, 23d, and 25th Days of May laſt, and three Declarations by Margaret Stewart, Spouſe to the Pannel, and two Declarations by Elizabeth Stewart, his Daughter, all of them bearing to have been emitted in the Deponent's Preſence, as Sheriff of Argyll-ſhire, and dated the 22d and 25th Days of May laſt; depones, That all theſe Declarations were emitted by the reſpective Perſons therein mentioned, in Preſence of the Deponent, and of the reſpective Dates therein contained, and were all ſubſcribed by the reſpective Declarants in the Deponent's Preſence, excepting only, that the Declarations by the ſaid Margaret Stewart and Elizabeth Stewart were not ſigned by them, but were ſigned by the Deponent for them, becauſe they declared they could not write. And there being alſo ſhewn to the Deponent two Declarations by Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel, bearing to have been emitted in Preſence of George Douglas, Sheriff-Subſtitute of Inverneſs, dated the 3d of June laſt, and a Declaration bearing to be emitted by the ſaid Charles Stewart, Son to the Pannel, in Preſence of the ſaid George Douglas, Sheriff-Subſtitute, dated the 4th of June laſt, depones, That the Deponent was preſent, and ſaw and heard the ſaid Declarations by the ſaid Allan and Charles Stewarts, emitted in Preſence of, and taken down in Writing by the Sheriff-Subſtitute; and they were, at the Sheriff-Subſtitute's Deſire, dictated by the Deponent to the Clerk; and the Deponent ſaw the ſaid Declarations ſubſcribed by the ſaid Allan and Charles Stewarts reſpective, of the ſeveral Dates therein contained, voluntarily and freely, without any Compulſion or Coaction. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

After emitting of the above Depoſition by Mr. Archibald Campbell of Stonefield, to ſave the Time of the Court, in bringing further Proof of the Declarations therein mentioned, the Pannel judicially declared, that he admitted the Truth of all the ſeveral Declarations contained in the ſaid Oath, that is, that theſe Declarations were emitted by the reſpective Perſons therein mentioned, and in Preſence of the reſpective Judges, and at the reſpective Times therein contained, voluntarily and freely; but does not admit the Truth of the Facts as declared by the ſaid Declarants.

(Signed) JAMES STEWART. P. GRANT.

Mungo Campbell, Writer in Edinburgh, aged twenty-four Years, unmarried, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That, in the Beginning of May laſt, the deceaſed Colin Campbell of Glenure applied to the Deponent, to go with him to Lochaber, to aſſiſt him in conducting the Ejecting of ſome of the Tenants of the Eſtate of Stewart of Ardſhiel, and of the Tenants of Mamore, Part of the Eſtate of Lochiel, over which the ſaid Colin Campbell was Factor, and which Tenants, he apprehended, would not voluntarily remove, without being legally ejected: That they ſet out from Edinburgh together, upon the 7th of May laſt, and arrived at Glenure upon Saturday the 9th of that Month; That they ſet out together for Fort-William upon Monday the 11th, about Ten o'Clock Forenoon, and remained at Fort-William till Thurſday the 14th, when they returned, in order to execute the next Day the Ejection againſt ſome of the Tenants of Ardſhiel: That, when they came to the Ferry of Ballachelish, the Defunct waited there about an Hour, communing with ſome of the Tenants, and croſſed the Ferry betwixt Four and Five in the Afternoon: That, after croſſing the Ferry, Alexander Stewart of Ballachelish, elder, met with the Defunct, and they travelled together on Foot about the Space of Half a Mile, till they came to the Skirts of the Wood of Lettermore: That, while they were communing together on Foot, the Deponent was at ſome little Diſtance before them on Horſeback, and the Sheriff-Officer, Donald Kennedy, was on Foot before the Deponent, and Glenure's Servant, John Mackenzie, was on Horſeback a little before Glenure; and, the Servant happening to drop a Coat, Ballachelish called to him, and the Servant returned, and thereby fell behind Glenure and Ballachelish: That Ballachelish parted from Glenure at their entering into the Wood of Lettermore, or the Wood of Ballachelish, a Part of the Wood being called by that Name; and Glenure mounted his Horſe, and came up to the Deponent: That the Deponent aſked Glenure, whether Ballachelish had ſaid any thing to him touching removing the Tenants? And Glenure ſaid, that nothing paſſed betwixt them on that Subject: That coming to a Part of the Road that was rough and narrow, ſo as they could not ride conveniently two Horſes a-Breaſt, the Deponent and Glenure ſeparated, and the Deponent went before, and might have been about twice the Length of the Room where the Court now ſits before Glenure, when the Deponent heard a Shot behind him, and heard Glenure ſeveral Times repeat theſe Words, Oh! I am dead. Depones, That the Deponent thereupon returned to Glenure, and heard him repeat the ſame Words; and thinks, but is not poſitive, that he added, Take Care of yourſelf, for he's going to ſhoot you: That the Deponent immediately lighted, and run up the Hill from the Road, to ſee who had ſhot Glenure, and ſaw, at ſome Diſtance from him, a Man, with a ſhort dark-coloured Coat, and a Gun in his Hand, going away from him; and, as the Deponent came nearer him, he mended his Pace, and diſappeared by high Ground interjected betwixt him and the Deponent; and he was at ſo great a Diſtance, that the Deponent thinks he could not have known him, tho' he had ſeen his Face: That the Deponent thereupon returned to Glenure; and either at that Time, or before the Deponent run up the Hill as above deponed, (the Deponent cannot be poſitive which) he took Glenure from off his Horſe. Depones, That, after taking Glenure from his Horſe, he leaned a little upon the Deponent's Shoulder, and endeavoured to have opened his Breaſt, to ſee where the Bullets, wherewith he was ſhot, came out of his Body, but was not able; but ſaw, in his Waiſtcoat, two Holes in his Belly where the Bullets had come out. Depones, That Glenure intended to have been that Night at Kintalline, where he expected Mr. Campbell of Ballieveolan was to meet him; wherefore the Deponent ſent Mackenzie, the Servant above-mentioned, forward to Kintalline, to acquaint Ballieveolan what had happened, and to bring him to his Aſſiſtance: That Glenure continued in Agonies for about Half an Hour, or a little more, after ſending off Mackenzie, and then died; and Night coming on, and no Appearance of Mackenzie's Returning, the Deponent ſent back the Sheriff-Officer above-named to Ballachelish, to deſire Mr. Stewart's Aſſiſtance, and ſome of his People: That in a little more than an Hour, Ballachelish, and ſome of his People, with the Sheriff-Officer, came to the Deponent's Aſſiſtance, and carried Glenure's Corpſe that Night to Kintalline, by Sea; and next Day carried it to Glenure, where ſome Surgeons came, and inſpected his Body; and the Deponent ſaw there the two Wounds in his Belly made by the Balls coming out of his Body. Depones, That when the Deponent laid Glenure upon the Ground, a great deal of Blood iſſued from his Body, and his Cloaths were all ſtained with Blood, particularly the Small of his Back, having been laid on his Back upon the Ground: That Mackenzie the Servant alſo returned, before they carried the Corpſe off the Ground, and ſome People with him, particularly Ballieveolan's Sons; and, being ſhewn a Coat and Waiſtcoat, and a Shirt, depones, That theſe are the Coat and Veſt that Glenure had on when he was murdered; and believes alſo, it is the ſame Shirt. Depones, That, at the Place where Glenure was ſhot, the Wood is pretty thick on both Sides, and, on the Side from which he was ſhot, very rugged and ſtony, and Buſhes in which the Murderer could have eaſily hid and concealed himſelf: That the Ground there riſes up-hill towards the South, though there are Places in it where the Murderer might be pretty nearly upon a Level with Glenure; and there are alſo Places there ſo ſituate, as a Perſon ſtanding there might ſee the moſt Part of the Road from the Ferry to the Wood, and even a Part of the Road betwixt Fort-William and the Ferry; and which Place is not a Muſket-ſhot from the Spot where Glenure was murdered. Depones, That neither the Defunct, nor the Deponent, nor any of their Company, had any Sort of Arms with them. Depones, That it was betwixt Five and Six o'Clock in the Afternoon, as he thinks, when Glenure was murdered as aforeſaid; and remembers, when Glenure was dying, the Deponent looked at his own Watch, and found it was then about Six o'Clock. And depones, That, upon Recollection, he cannot be poſitive whether he obſerved both the Wounds in the Defunct's Belly, or only one of them. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That, ſome Days after the Murder, the Deponent ſent a Serjeant and a Party of Soldiers to the Pannel's Houſe at Auchairn, with Orders to ſearch, and particularly to ſearch for Writings: That the Serjeant reported to the Deponent, that he had ſearched, and delivered to the Deponent one Paper which he found there, being a Scroll of a Letter by the Pannel, and of an Inſtrument of Proteſt, being the Number 12. of the Inventory ſubjoined to the Libel, and which is now in the Clerk's Hands; and being ſhewn to the Deponent, depones, That it is the ſame Writing that was delivered to him by the Serjeant. Depones, That the Serjeant gave him no more Papers but that one; and ſaid that he had brought away no more. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

* What is ſomewhat remarkable in this Trial, is, that the Priſoner was tried by a CAMPBELL, had eleven Campbells out of Fifteen upon his Jury, and for the Murder of a Campbell.

(Signed) MUNGO CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

John Mackenzie, late Servant to Glenure, unmarried, aged nineteen Years, Witneſs cited, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That, upon the 14th of May laſt, he came, with his Maſter the deceaſed Colin Campbell of Glenure, from Fort-William, by the Horſe-Road leading to the Ferry of Ballacheliſh, which Road coincides, a little Way next to Fort-William, with the new Road commonly called the King's Road: That they paſſed the Ferry of Ballacheliſh, and came along the high Road, which leads to Kintalline thro' the Wood of Lettermore: That, coming up with Alexander Stewart elder of Ballacheliſh, who was on Foot, Glenure alighted from his Horſe to walk a little with Ballacheliſh, and deſired Mungo Campbell, Writer in Edinburgh, who was in Company with Glenure, as alſo the Deponent, to ſtep on, which accordingly they did; but coming up to a Place where they were ſtopt by the Tide, they were obliged to alight, and lead their Horſes acroſs a Rock; and, upon that Occaſion, and by which Means it happened that the Deponent dropt a great Coat belonging to Donald Kennedy, Sheriff-Officer, who was alſo along on Foot, and which he had got from him to carry when they paſſed the Ferry of Ballacheliſh; and Glenure and Ballacheliſh coming up, and finding the great Coat lying on the Road, one or other of them cried out, To whom this Coat belonged? which the Deponent, being within Diſtance to hear, ſaid, it belonged to Donald Kennedy, and that he had been carrying it, and had dropt it; whereupon he returned to fetch the Coat, by which means Glenure, who had parted with Ballacheliſh at the Rock that has been juſt mentioned, got before the Deponent, and, when about a Muſket-ſhot before him in the Wood of Lettermore, he heard a Shot which he took to be from a Firelock, which he did not much mind, nor know from what Quarter it had come; but when he came up, he ſaw Mungo Campbell wringing his Hands, and his Maſter lying on the Ground with a great deal of Blood about him, juſt breathing, and not able to ſpeak; and Donald Kennedy, the Sheriff-Officer, was at that Time ſtanding by him; and, as near as the Deponent could gueſs, this was about Five o'Clock in the Afternoon. Depones, That Mungo Campbell directed the Deponent to ride forward with all Speed to Kintalline, and to ſee if John Campbell of Ballieveolan, or his Sons, were there; and, if they were, to acquaint them what had happened, and to come up immediately. Accordingly he went, but found neither Ballieveolan nor his Sons there: But being told by one of the Tenants of Achindarroch, that probably James Stewart in Auchairn, who is now the Pannel, might give him ſome Account of Ballieveolan; that accordingly he went to James Stewart's Houſe in Duror; and James ſeeing him weeping, aſked what the Matter was? The Deponent told him, his Maſter was killed; whereupon James Stewart aſked him, by whom and how it was done? To which he, the Deponent, anſwered, That he did not know by whom, and believed it to be by a Shot from a Gun or Piſtol: That the Deponent then aſked him, what was the neareſt Road to Glenduror, where he expected to find Ballieveolan? Which accordingly James Stewart having pointed out to him, he followed; and meeting with one Allan Dow, whom he had ſeen ſeveral Times before, he prevailed with him to go to Glenduror, and acquaint Ballieveolan of what had happened, and to deſire him to come up where his Maſter was, and which the ſaid Allan Dow could do more expeditiouſly on Foot, than the Deponent could do in that Croſs-way on Horſeback; and the Deponent immediately returned where his Maſter lay, and brought no Perſon along with him: That his Maſter was then dead, and that the People of Ballacheliſh were at this Time come up, and were ſtanding about him. Depones, That he was then ſent off a ſecond Time with a Horſe by the Road Ballieveolan was expected to come, in order to haſten him; and having accordingly met Ballieveolan, he, at Ballieveolan's Deſire, went and acquainted Captain Campbell, younger, of Barcaldine, of what had happened. Depones, That when his Maſter and he came, as has been ſaid, from Fort-William, on the 14th of May laſt, they met the foreſaid John Maccoll going to Fort-William at the Foot of the Three-mile Water, which is about three Miles from Fort-William; and that the ſaid Maccoll came to the Ferry of Ballacheliſh much about the ſame Time with the Deponent, but before Glenure, who had ſtayed ſome time talking with the Tenants of Ballacheliſh; and further adds, that his Maſter had ſtayed at Corrychorrachan, which is about five Miles from Fort-William, about an Hour and a Half, or two Hours. Depones, That when Maccoll deſired the Ferryman to carry him over, the Ferryman begged to be excuſed till Glenure's Horſes ſhould go over; and that he was then employed in gathering Wreck: But Maccoll would not delay; and accordingly was ferryed over, as he thinks, about Half an Hour before Glenure, whoſe Horſes were firſt ferryed over, and along with them the Sheriff-Officer, and afterwards Glenure and Mungo Campbell. And depones, That neither Glenure, nor any in his Company, had Arms of any Sort along with them. And a Coat, Waiſtcoat, and bloody Shirt, referred to in the Liſt of Evidence, being ſhewn to the Deponent, depones, That they were the very Cloaths and Shirt Glenure had on when he was killed as aforeſaid. And further depones, That, when he ſaw the Pannel at his Houſe in Auchairn as aforeſaid, the Pannel wrung his Hands, expreſſed great Concern at what had happened, as what might bring innocent People to Trouble; and prayed that innocent People might not be brought to Trouble. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That beſide that Road by which he and his Maſter came from Fort-William to Ballacheliſh, there is another Road by which People travel, both by Horſeback and on Foot, which is computed to be the ſhorteſt by a Mile, and by which he ſuppoſes Maccoll came. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

(Signed) JOHN MACKENZIE. JA. FERGUSON.

Donald Kennedy, Sheriff-Officer in Inverary, married, aged forty-eight Years, Witneſs cited, ſworn, purged, and examined ut ſupra, depones, That, upon the 11th Day of May laſt, he was employed by James Campbell, Writer in Inverary, to carry a Pacquet to Glenure, then at Fort-William; and when he delivered the Pacquet to him, told him, that it contained a Warrant for ejecting certain Poſſeſſors of the Lands of Ardſhiel: That, upon the 13th Day of May, he came to Maryburgh or Fort-William, where he found the deceaſed Glenure, and delivered the Pacquet to him, who told him, as James Campbell had before done, what the Pacquet contained; and that he, the Deponent, was to be employed in executing the Ejection: That, upon the 14th Day of May, Glenure, as alſo the Deponent, left Fort-William, and, at Glenure's Deſire, the Deponent went before, being on Foot, and waited at the Ferry of Ballacheliſh till Glenure came up to him: That Glenure croſſed the Ferry from the North to the South of Appin Side, and along with him a young Gentleman Mungo Campbell, ſaid to be a Writer in Edinburgh, and his own Servant John Mackenzie: That Mackenzie and the Horſes went firſt over: That the Boat again returned, and brought over Glenure, Mungo Campbell, and the Deponent: That the Deponent being on Foot, as has been ſaid, went on the high Road leading to Kintalline, where he underſtood Glenure intended to quarter that Night; but was paſt on the Road by Glenure, Mungo Campbell, and Glenure's Servant, whom the Deponent could not keep up with; but as Glenure happened to find, upon the Road, Alexander Stewart elder of Ballacheliſh on Foot, he lighted from his Horſe, and walked a little on the Way with Ballacheliſh, whereby the Deponent got the Start of Glenure, and the two Riders that were in Company with him; and the Deponent walking on thro' the Wood of Lettermore, and after he was about half a Mile or ſo within the Wood, he heard a Shot, and at the ſame Time heard the aforeſaid Mungo Campbell make a great Noiſe as of one weeping, the Deponent being at that Time but about two-penny Stone-caſt before the ſaid Mungo, who was riding foremoſt, as he afterwards told the Deponent. The Deponent immediately upon hearing the Noiſe returned, for he had gone a little without minding the Shot, till once he heard the Noiſe, and when he came back to Mungo Campbell, Mungo ſaid to him, The Villain has killed my dear Uncle, adding, that he had only ſeen one Man; and that he, the Deponent, aſked no Queſtions, being in Confuſion, and dreading for the ſame Fate himſelf. Depones, That he ſaw Glenure lying upon the Ground, with great Plenty of Blood about him, and, as the Breaſt of his Waiſtcoat had been opened before the Deponent came up, he ſaw a Hole in his Shirt, thro' which he ſuppoſed a Bullet had come; and that the Deponent ſtayed at the Place till Glenure expired. Depones, That John Mackenzie, Glenure's Servant, was diſpatched by Mungo Campbell to the Houſe of Kintalline, where Glenure was to lodge that Night, and Ballieveolan along with him, with Orders to bring Ballieveolan, and ſome other Gentlemen that were expected to be there; Mungo Campbell alſo deſired the Deponent to go for other People, which the Deponent at firſt declined, giving this Reaſon for it, that he would ſtay and run the ſame Riſque with Mungo Campbell; but at laſt was prevailed upon to go by Mungo Campbell, whom he left alone with the Corpſe, and the Deponent brought Alexander Stewart elder of Ballacheliſh, and ſeveral other People of the Town of Ballacheliſh. Depones, That while Glenure and his Company were at the Ferry of Ballacheliſh, as aforeſaid, he ſaw a Man, who ſeemed to be in a Hurry to get over the Ferry, who proved to be John Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel; to whom Glenure ſaid, in the Deponent's Hearing, Sir, you travel better than I do. To which he anſwered, I am in a Haſte, and ſo went over the Ferry about an Hour before Glenure paſſed it, who had ſome Buſineſs to do with Tenants there. Depones, That, when the People were gathered about the Corpſe, as aforeſaid, the ſaid John Maccoll was among them. And Mungo Campbell then told the Deponent, that when Glenure and he were come three Miles from Fort-William, they met the ſaid John Maccoll going to Fort-William, and that he was back at the Ferry of Ballacheliſh, tho' on Foot, as ſoon as they. Depones, That Glenure was ſhot about Half an Hour after Five in the Evening, and died, as he thinks, about Six, Mungo Campbell having then looked at his Watch. Depones, That this John Maccoll was none of the People that this Deponent had called upon: That the Corpſe was carried that Night to Kintalline by Water, the Place where they lay being but a ſhort Diſtance down thro' a rugged Part of the Road towards the Loch. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That there are two Roads leading from Fort-William to the Ferry of Ballacheliſh, one of them being a Horſe-Road, by which Glenure came, the other a Foot-Road, which is the ſhorteſt of the two by about a Mile. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God. And being further interrogate for the Purſuers, depones, That neither Glenure, nor any in his Company, had Arms along with them of any Kind. And being alſo further interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That John Maccoll was at the Ferry before Glenure came up. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

(Signed) DONALD KENNEDY. JA. FERGUSON.

John Roy Livingſtone, alias Macanure, in Ballacheliſh, married, aged forty, who being ſworn by Archibald Campbell, Sheriff-Subſtitute of Argyll-ſhire, ſworn Interpreter, purged of Malice and partial Counſel, depones, That, upon Thurſday the 14th Day of May laſt, he ſaw Allan Breck Stewart in Ballacheliſh, in the Forenoon, dreſſed in a dunniſh big Coat; but had no Converſation with him: That, upon the Evening of the ſaid Day, he ſaw John Beg Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, travelling at a good Rate from the Ferry of Ballacheliſh, towards his Maſter's Houſe. The Deponent joined him upon the high Road, and aſked him where he had been? To which John Maccoll replied, That he had been at Maryburgh for Charles Stewart, Notary Public, but did not find him at home: That, during this Converſation, the Deponent travelled the Road along with the ſaid John Maccoll, and only ſtopped for a very ſhort Time; and that the ſaid John Maccoll told the Deponent, that Glenure that Night was to be at Kintalline. Depones, That, about an Hour and a Half, or two Hours

Hours thereafter, the Deponent went to the Wood of Ballachelish, adjoining to Lettermore, to cut some Sticks he wanted: That, while he was in the Wood, he saw Donald Kennedy, Sheriff-Officer at Inverary, passing along the high Road below him, and a little after him Mungo Campbell, and John Mackenzie, Glenure's Servant, and a little after them Glenure on Horseback, and Alexander Stewart elder of Ballachelish along with him; and, as the Deponent observed Glenure and Ballachelish, they found a big Coat upon the high Road, and called to the said John Mackenzie the Servant, and the Servant came back for the big Coat, and Glenure and Ballachelish parted: That the Deponent came down to the Road, and entered into Conversation with the said John Mackenzie, and, after a few Questions, the said John Mackenzie went on after his Master; and immediately thereafter the Deponent heard a Noise, which he imagined to be a Shot, but was not sure. Depones, That, some Time thereafter, he went along with Ballachelish to the Wood of Lettermore, where he found Glenure dead, and was one of the People that assisted to carry the Corpse to Kintalline. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God. And depones he cannot write.

Alexander Campbell, Surgeon in Lorn, aged fifty Years, unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That he was called to the House of Glenure, upon the 15th Day of May last, to inspect the Body of the then deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure, who, the Deponent was informed, had been shot the Day before; and, having accordingly inspected the Body, he found, that he had been shot by two Bullets entering at his Back, one on each Side of the Back-bone; one of which had come out about Half an Inch below the Navel, and the other about two Inches from it, towards the right Side. And depones, That they were mortal Wounds, of which the Deponent believes Glenure died. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) Alex. Campbell. Ja. Ferguson.

Angus Macdonald, Walk-miller in Auchosragan, married, aged sixty-three, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, in April last, Allan Breck Stewart, and John Stewart in Auchnacoan, came into the Deponent's House, and sat down; and, at the same Time, Duncan Campbell (the succeeding Witness) came in, and sat down also; and which Allan asked John Stewart, who that was? And John answered, That he was an honest Man in the Neighbourhood, Duncan Campbell naming him; to which Allan answered, That he did not like any of the Sort or Name: For that Glenure had wrote to Colonel Crawfurd, that he had come from France, and to take him up as a Deserter; but that he was not in his Reverence; for he had General Churchill's Pass: That John Stewart said, that he did not so much blame Glenure for turning out the Possessors of Ardshiel; for that he was but doing the King's Service; and that, if he had not the Factory, another would, who would do the same Thing; to which Allan answered, That he rather the meikle Devil had it than Glenure. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That Allan was then dressed in a blue side Coat, a red Vest, and feathered Hat. Depones, That the Deponent saw him again about the 8th of May in the same Dress: That, at that Time, the Deponent, and the foresaid Duncan Campbell and Malcolm Maccoll, were travelling together, and met Allan on the Road: That Allan gave Duncan the common Salutation; and said, that the last Time he had been in Duncan's House, he was bad Company, tho' it was not he that was so much the bad Company, as the Drink. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) Angus Macdonald. P. Grant.

Duncan Campbell, Change-keeper at Annat, aged thirty-five Years, married, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, in the Month of April last, the Deponent met with Allan Breck Stewart, with whom he was not before acquainted, and John Stewart in Auchnacoan, at the House of the Walk-miller of Auchosragan, and went on with them to the House: That Allan Breck Stewart said, that he hated all the Name of Campbell; and the Deponent said, he had no Reason for doing so; but Allan said, he had very good Reason for it: That thereafter they left that House; and, after drinking a Dram at another House, came to the Deponent's House, where they went in, and drunk some Drams, and Allan Breck renewed the former Conversation; and the Deponent making the same Answer, Allan said, that, if the Deponent had any Respect for his Friends, he would tell them, that if they offered to turn out the Possessors of Ardshiel's Estate, he would make black Cocks of them before they entered into Possession; by which the Deponent understood shooting them, it being a common Phrase in the Country: That John Stewart said, he did not blame Glenure so much as Ballieveelan for taking these Possessions, whereas Glenure was doing the King's Service; and Allan Breck replied, That besides that, he had another Ground of Quarrel against Glenure, for his writing to Colonel Crawfurd, that he, Allan, was come home from France; but that he was too cunning for him; for that, when at Edinburgh, he had made up his Peace with General Churchill, and had got his Pass, which he had in his Pocket-book: That the Deponent asked a Sight of it: That he searched his Pocket-book, but could not find it; upon which he tore a Leaf out of the Book, and said, there it was. And depones, That he said twenty Times over he would be fit-sides with Glenure, where-ever he met him; and wanted nothing more than to meet him at a convenient Place. Depones, That, at this Time, Allan Breck was not drunk, for he could walk and talk as well as any Man; but it could easily be observed, he had been drinking. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) Duncan Campbell. P. Grant.

Anne Maclaren, Servitrix to Duncan Campbell, Change-keeper at Annat, unmarried, aged twenty-one, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined by the sworn Interpreter above-named, depones, That, some Time after the 17th Day of March last, before the first of May, she saw Allan Breck Stewart in Company with John Breck Stewart in Auchnacoan, and Robert Stewart, in the Mill of Duror, in her Master's House; and that she heard Allan Breck then say, that he would not shun Glenure wherever he met him; by which she understood that he was to do Hurt or Harm to Glenure wherever he saw him. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as she shall answer to God; and declares she cannot write.

(Signed) Arch. Campbell. P. Grant.

Robert Stewart, Son to Robert Stewart, Miller in Cuil, aged about twenty, unmarried, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, by the sworn Interpreter, depones, That, some Time in April last, the Deponent was in Company with Allan Breck Stewart, John Stewart in Auchnacoan, Duncan Campbell, Change-keeper in Annat, in the said Duncan Campbell's House: That Allan Breck complained of Colin Roy, meaning Glenure, and Mr. Campbell of Ballieveolan; and said particularly of Glenure, that he had sent Notice to Fort-William, that he was in the Country, that he might be apprehended: But said, he was not in his Reverence, as he had the King of France's Commission in his Pocket; and said, he would be even with him; and that he would take his Opportunity to dispatch or murder either Glenure or Ballieveolan, before he left the Country. Depones, That Allan Breck was much in Drink at the Time of uttering the above Expressions; and was then dressed in his long blue Coat. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God; and declares he cannot write.

(Signed) Arch. Campbell. P. Grant.

Malcolm Bane Maccoll, Change-keeper at Portnacrosh, aged fifty Years, married, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined by the Interpreter ut supra, depones, That, some Time in April last, Allan Breck Stewart and John Stewart in Auchnacoan came to the Deponent's House after Night-fall, and sat up all Night drinking: That, next Morning, John Maccoll, then Servant to the Deponent, now in Shuna, came into the Company, in a shabby Condition: That Allan Breck asked who he was? That the said John Stewart answered, That he was an honest poor Man, with a numerous Family of small Children; and that it would be great Charity in any body to assist him: Upon which Allan Breck desired the said John Stewart to give the said John Maccoll a Stone of Meal, and he would pay for it; which the said John Stewart promised to do: That the said Allan then gave the said John Maccoll a Dram, and told him, if he would fetch him the Red Fox's Skin he would give him what was much better; to which the said John Maccoll answered, that he was no Sportsman; and that he was much better skilled in Ploughing or Delving. Depones, That the Deponent gave no great Notice to these Expressions at the Time; but, after he heard of Glenure's Murder, believed he meant Glenure, as he was commonly called Colin Roy, which means Red Colin, in the Country. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God; and declares he cannot write.

(Signed) Arch. Campbell. P. Grant.

Anne Maccoll, Spouse to Malcolm Bane Maccoll, the preceding Witness, aged about forty, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, by the Interpreter, depones, conform to the said Malcolm Bane Maccoll, the preceding Witness, in omnibus, except that the said Allan Breck and John Stewart in Auchnacoan went to Bed for a short Time; but, whether they slept, or not, the Deponent knows not. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as she shall answer to God; and declares she cannot write.

(Signed) Arch. Campbell. P. Grant.

John Stewart elder of Fasnacloich, aged sixty-five Years, married, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, upon the Monday before the Murder of Glenure was committed, Allan Breck Stewart was then at the Deponent's House, having been three Nights there, accompanied by Charles Stewart, Son to the Pannel: That he told Allan Breck, that Glenure was come from Edinburgh with a Warrant to remove the Tenants; to which Allan Breck said, that, if there was a Warrant, there was no more to be said; but that, if he had no Warrant, he would not be allowed to remove them: That the Deponent told Allan Breck, that a Plea with Glenure, concerning the Removing of these Tenants, would be costly for James Stewart in Aucharn to support: That the Reason he named James Stewart, was, that he was the Person who acted in Behalf of the Tenants: That the Distance between the Deponent's House and the late Glenure's is about a Mile: That he heard, on Sunday the 10th of May, that Glenure was going to Fort-William; and Allan Breck left his House about Nine o'Clock Monday Morning. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) Jo. Stewart. Argyll.

James Stewart younger of Fasnacloich, aged twenty-nine Years, unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That Allan Breck Stewart came to Fasnacloich about the 8th of May, and stayed three Days: That he went away on Monday the 11th, about Nine in the Morning: That he was going to leave the Country soon, but would see them again at Fasnacloich before he went away: That he was then dressed in a long blue Coat, red Waistcoat, black Breeches, and a feathered Hat: That he saw Allan Breck the next Day, being Tuesday the 12th, at Ballachelish: That he was then dressed in a black short Coat with round white Buttons, and a dark great Coat over it, with Trowsers on, and a blue Bonnet: That the Deponent took Notice to Allan Breck that he had changed his Dress; who answered, That he did it because the Day was warm: That the Deponent was informed at Ballachelish, in Company with Allan Breck, that Glenure was gone to Fort-William: That when he parted with Allan Breck at Glenco's House, Allan Breck told the Deponent that he was going to Callart, and would return the next Day, and did not see him since: That on Sunday the 10th of May, he heard, being in Company with Allan Breck, that Glenure had got an Order from Edinburgh to remove the Tenants, and was gone to Fort-William; and that this was at Fasnacloich. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) James Stewart. Argyll.

John Stewart younger of Ballachelish, aged twenty-six Years, unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, upon Tuesday the 12th of May last, he saw Allan Breck Stewart at his Father's House of Ballachelish, and heard him ask Questions about Glenure's travelling to Lochaber: That, on Thursday the 14th, late at Night, Donald Macintyre, a Servant of the Pannel's, told the Deponent of the Murder; and that that he was going with a Meſſage to Appin from James Stewart his Maſter, to give him an Account of the Murder: That he arrived at Appin's Houſe before the ſaid Servant came there: That he returned to Appin's Houſe, inſtead of going to the Pannel's Houſe, where he had intended to be: That he told Appin of the Murder, at which he expreſſed great Surprize and Concern. Depones, That, in the Time of the Spring Circuit in this Place in May laſt, he was ſummoned to be of the Jury; but, at the earneſt Requeſt of the Pannel, that he, the Deponent, ſhould be preſent with a Notary at the removing of the Tenants from the Eſtate of Ardſhiel, he was a-going on that Errand to the Pannel's Houſe; but returned to Appin, upon hearing of the Murder committed that Day. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

(Signed) JOHN STEWART. ARGYLL.

Katharine Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, aged ſixteen Years and upwards, who being ſolemnly ſworn, by the forenamed ſworn Interpreter, purged of Malice and partial Counſel, and examined and interrogate, depones, That ſhe ſaw Allan Breck Stewart at the Pannel's Houſe, upon Monday the 11th Day of May laſt, in the Afternoon, dreſſed in a blue ſide Coat, red Waiſtcoat, and black Breeches; and does not remember to have ſeen him in any other Dreſs that Day. Depones, That the Pannel went, in the Afternoon of that Day, to Keels, to meet Mr. Campbell of Airds, and that it was late at Night before he came Home; but that the Family had not ſupped when the Pannel came Home; and that the Pannel ſupped in Company with Allan Breck Stewart, Faſnacloich's Daughter, and Archibald Cameron, Nephew to Faſnacloich, and the Pannel's Family. Depones, That ſhe ſaw the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart, on the Morning of Tueſday the 12th of May laſt, dreſſed in a dunniſh-coloured great Coat, in the Pannel's Houſe; and that ſhe ſaw him go out at the Door dreſſed in the ſaid dunniſh-coloured great Coat. Depones, That, upon the Evening of Friday the 15th of May laſt, as the Deponent came in at the Door, Margaret Stewart, Spouſe to the Pannel, being then in the Cellar, called upon the Deponent, who then ſaw the ſaid Margaret Stewart put a ſide blue Coat, a red Waiſtcoat, with ſomething elſe that the Deponent did not obſerve, into a Sack, and delivered them to the Deponent, deſiring her to hide them ſome way without. Depones, That the ſaid Margaret Stewart did not tell the Deponent to whom the Cloaths belonged; but that the Deponent thought the ſaid Coat and Waiſtcoat were Allan Breck's. Depones, That ſhe went away with the ſaid Sack, containing the ſaid Cloaths; and, as ſhe was going up the Brae, in order to hide them, was overtaken by Dugald and John Beg Maccolls, Servants to the Pannel, who had ſome Guns and Swords; and the ſaid Dugald Maccoll aſked the Deponent, what ſhe had got in the Sack? The Deponent anſwered, it was Allan Breck's Cloaths; and that ſhe was going to hide them; and that accordingly the ſaid Sack, containing the above Cloaths, was hid in the Moor above the Pannel's Houſe, by the ſaid Dugald Maccoll, in Preſence of the Deponent. Depones, That upon Saturday the 16th of May laſt, in the Evening, the ſaid Mrs. Stewart, Spouſe to the Pannel, deſired the Deponent to carry back what ſhe had hid, and leave it at the Back of the Brew-houſe; which the Deponent accordingly did; and has not ſeen them ſince. Depones, That Alexander Bane Stewart was ſeen by the Deponent about the Houſe that Evening. Depones, That ſome Time in Summer laſt, after the above Period, Solomon Bane Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, told the Deponent, that the ſaid Mrs. Stewart, Spouſe to the Pannel, deſired her to conceal what ſhe knew about the above Cloaths, in Caſe ſhe ſhould be aſked or examined about them. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That Allan Breck Stewart did not lie in the Pannel's Houſe upon Monday Night, the 11th Day of May laſt, but lay in the Barn, as the Deponent thinks. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as ſhe ſhall anſwer to God; and depones ſhe cannot write.

Archibald Cameron, Son to Allan Dow Cameron, ſome time Change-keeper in Maryburgh, aged twenty-two Years, unmarried, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, by Mr. Archibald Campbell, Sheriff-Subſtitute of Argyll-ſhire, depones, being interrogate for the Pannel, That, upon Monday the 11th Day of May laſt, the Deponent came from Faſnacloich's Houſe to the Pannel's Houſe after Mid-day: That, ſome little Time after he came there, he ſaw Allan Breck Stewart there: That the Pannel was not at Home when the Deponent came firſt there, but came Home before Night-fall: That the Deponent, Pannel, Allan Breck, and the Family, ſat in one Room, and ſupped together: That he did not obſerve Allan Breck and the Pannel ſpeak in private that Night: That the Deponent and Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, lay in one Bed, Allan Breck and Charles Stewart, Son to the Pannel, in another Bed, in the ſame Barn: That, to the beſt of his Remembrance, they all went to Bed much about one Time, and got up together next Morning: That the Deponent did not obſerve the Pannel about the Houſe next Morning when he got up. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

John Breck Maccombich, Change-keeper at Kintalline, aged about forty, married, Witneſs cited, ſworn and purged by the forenamed ſworn Interpreter, ut ſupra, depones, That, in the Beginning of Summer laſt, before Whitſunday, Duncan Campbell, Sheriff-Subſtitute of Killin, told the Deponent, that if he could, with Truth and Honeſty, make any Diſcovery, tending to diſcover the Murderers of Glenure, it was probable he would not be turned out of his Poſſeſſion. Depones, That, upon the 14th Day of May laſt, John Beg Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, came to the Deponent's Houſe about Seven o'Clock in the Morning, and told, that the Pannel had deſired the Deponent and John More Maccoll, another Servant of the Pannel's, to ferry the ſaid John Beg Maccoll from his Houſe to Lochaber, that being the ſhorteſt Road from Aucharn to Fort-William: That the Deponent at the firſt declined it; but upon John Beg's telling, that it was the Pannel's Deſire that he ſhould be ferryed there, they carried him over accordingly. Depones, That, in the Afternoon of the ſame Day, before Sun-ſet, the ſaid John Beg Maccoll came back to the Deponent's Houſe, and called for half a Mutchkin of Aquavitæ, but did not ſit down: That, during the Drinking of the Dram, the Deponent aſked the ſaid John Beg Maccoll, if he had been at Fort-William? and if he had got Charles Stewart, Notary? (which he told in the Morning was his Errand to Fort-William) John Beg Maccoll anſwered, That he had been at Maryburgh, but Charles Stewart was not at Home. Depones, That, upon Tueſday the 12th of May laſt, Glenure ſent Notice to the Deponent, that he and ſome other Company was to be at his Houſe upon Thurſday then next, and deſired that he might be prepared for entertaining them; and that he accordingly made Proviſion for them. Depones, That he told that Glenure was to be at his Houſe that Night; and that the whole Neighbourhood knew of it; and, upon the Pannel's Interrogatory, depones, That Glenure frequently went to Lochaber by Mamuckie, being a ſhorter Road to the Ferry of Ballachelish than the Strath of Appin; and he once coming from Lochaber, landed at Kintalline; and that a Perſon paſſing from Glenerearan to the Ferry of Ballachelish by Mamuckie, does not go through the Wood of Lettermore, nor by Kintalline. Depones, That he was warned to remove from his Poſſeſſion, being a Part of Ardſhiel Eſtate, at Whitſunday laſt, and employed no Perſon to keep him in Poſſeſſion. Depones, That, ſome Time after he had got his Citation of Warning, the Pannel paſs'd by his Houſe on Horſeback, and aſked if he had his Copy of Citation in the Removing? The Deponent anſwered he had; the Pannel called for a Sight of it; and, upon the Deponent's producing it, the Pannel ſaid he would keep it. And being interrogate if the Pannel informed him that he was going to Edinburgh, and was to produce his Copy of Citation there? depones, Not; but only that he was going Southward. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God; and declares he cannot write.

Alexander Stewart of Ballachelish elder, aged ſixty-eight Years, Widower, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That Allan Breck Stewart called at the Deponent's Houſe upon the 12th of May laſt, and that James Stewart younger of Faſnacloich was then at the Deponent's Houſe: That upon the 13th, about Seven or Eight in the Afternoon, he came again to the Deponent's Houſe, and lodged with him all Night, ſtayed the next Day, being Thurſday the 14th, till Eleven or Twelve, when he went out with a Fiſhing-rod in his Hand, and was fiſhing in the Burn near the Deponent's Houſe, but he did not ſee him take any: That he did not take leave of the Deponent; and did not return; and he knows nothing of him ſince: That the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart was dreſſed in a great Coat, and under it a ſhort black Coat with white Buttons: That, when the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart was fiſhing, he ſaw a great Coat lying upon the Bank, which he took to be Allan Breck Stewart's: That, that Evening on the 14th, he was in Company with Glenure, and left him very near the Wood of Lettermore: That, the Morning after the Murder was committed, the Deponent really thought, that Allan Breck Stewart might be the Actor in this Murder, becauſe he did not return to this Deponent again. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God. (Signed) ALEX. STEWART. ARGYLL.

Donald Rankine, Herd to Ballachelish, unmarried, aged about eighteen, Witneſs cited, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, by the ſaid Archibald Campbell, ſworn Interpreter, depones, That on the 14th Day of May laſt, he ſaw Allan Breck Stewart at the Houſe of Ballachelish, his Maſter; and that the ſaid Allan Breck was dreſſed in a great dun Coat, under which he had on a black ſhort Coat, with ſilver or white Buttons on it: That before Mid-day he went up with a Fiſhing-rod to the Water-ſide, where he ſaw him fiſhing up the Water: That he has not ſeen him ſince. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God; and declares he cannot write.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

Archibald Macinnes, Ferryman at Ballachelish, Witneſs cited, aged ſixty-five Years, married, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That he met Allan Breck Stewart near the Ferry of Ballachelish, upon the Evening of Wedneſday the 13th of May laſt, as the ſaid Allan returned from Glenco. Depones, That, after Mid-day, upon Thurſday the 14th Day of May laſt, as the Deponent was ſitting near the Ferry of Ballachelish, with the Son of John Campbell in Stronmellachan in Glenorchie, Allan Breck came behind them and hoaſted, and, upon the Deponent's looking about, deſired him to come to him; which the Deponent did; and the ſaid Allan inquired of him, if Glenure had croſs'd the Ferry from Lochaber to Appin? The Deponent told him, he was ſure he did not: That, upon this, Allan Breck went away towards the high Road; had on a dun-coloured big Coat, and had no Fiſhing-rod; and the Deponent has not ſeen him ſince. Depones, That he is Ferryer upon the Appin Side, where this Converſation happened. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God; and declares he cannot write. And further depones, That he heard Nobody ſuſpected for the Murder of Glenure, but the ſaid Allan Breck. Depones, That Glenure was expected back upon the Wedneſday; and the Deponent was ſure he muſt be back the Thurſday, as it was currently reported in the Country, he was to have a Meeting with ſome Gentlemen at Kintalline, Thurſday Night. And this is alſo Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Donald Stewart in Ballachelish, aged about thirty, married, ſolemnly ſworn by Archibald Campbell, Writer in Inverary, ſworn Interpreter, who, being purged of Malice and partial Counſel, examined and interrogate, depones, That upon the 15th Day of May laſt, he met the Pannel in Duror, upon the Marches of Auchindarroch, oppoſite to the Pannel's Houſe. Upon the Deponent's regretting that ſuch an Accident as Glenure's Murder ſhould happen in the Country, the Pannel joined with him, and ſaid, that he was informed that one Serjeant More, alias John Cameron, had been threatning Harm to Glenure in France, but did not inform the Deponent who told him ſo. Depones, That, to his Knowledge, Serjeant More has not been in Appin theſe ten years paſt. Depones, That upon the Evening of Thurſday the 14th of May laſt, about Night-fall, Katharine Macinſh, then in Ballachelish, now in Larich, came to the Deponent, and told him that one without wanted to ſpeak with him: That this Meſſage came to him in

Ballachelish's

Ballacheliſh's own Houſe: That, when he went out, the ſaid Katharine Maciniſh informed him, that it was Allan Breck that wanted him; and that he was a little above the Houſe in the Brae: That the Deponent went up the Brae, and met Allan Breck, who was then dreſſed in a great Coat, and a dark ſhort Coat under it with white metal Buttons; the Deponent told him of the Murder, and ſaid it could not be but that he, Allan Breck, was about it; to which Allan Breck anſwered, that he heard of the Murder, but had no Hand in it; to which the Deponent replied, he did not believe him. Depones, That the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart told the Deponent, he was going immediately to leave the Kingdom, was very ſcarce of Money, and was going then for Koaliſnacoan; and deſired the Deponent to acquaint the Pannel, that he was gone to Koaliſnacoan; and deſired him, if poſſible, to ſend him Money there; and the Deponent then promiſed to acquaint James Stewart of the above Meſſage. Depones, That the ſaid Allan Breck ſaid, he believed he would be ſuſpected of the Murder, and upon that Account, and as he was a Deſerter formerly from the Army, it was neceſſary for him to leave the Kingdom. Depones, That, before he had the above Converſation with Allan Breck, he aſſiſted in carrying the Corpſe of Glenure to the Boat. Depones, That, after the Converſation with the Pannel about Serjeant More, he delivered the above Meſſage from Allan Breck to the Pannel; and that the Pannel did not ſay whether he was to ſend the Money or not: That this Converſation happened about Ten o'Clock in the Forenoon of Friday the 15th of May laſt; and that there was nobody preſent. Depones, That, upon Sunday the 17th of May laſt, he met Alexander Bane Stewart, Packman in Appin, near the Houſes of Larich in Glenco, who told the Deponent, that he had been at John Breck Maccoll, Bouman to Appin in Koaliſnacoan, with either three or five Guineas, the Deponent is not poſitive which, that he had got at Aucharn, to be left with the ſaid John Breck for the ſaid Allan Breck's Uſe, if he called there; and told the Deponent, that he left the Money with the ſaid John Breck Macoll, but did not ſee the ſaid Allan Breck. And, upon an Interrogatory put for the Pannel, depones, That, upon the Deponent's delivering the above Meſſage from Allan Breck to the Pannel, the Pannel aſked why Allan Breck himſelf did not come for Money, if he wanted it? To which the Deponent, to the beſt of his Remembrance, replied, That Allan told him he would be ſuſpected for the Murder, and was a Deſerter; to which the Pannel anſwered, that he hoped in God Allan Breck was not guilty of the Murder. Depones, That, during the above Converſation with the Pannel, Alexander Stewart, Duncan Maccombich, and ſeveral other Poſſeſſors of Auchindarroch, were in the adjoining Field delving, but at ſuch a Diſtance that the Deponent cannot think they could hear the above Converſation. And, being ſhewn the ſhort black Coat, with clear white Buttons on the Breaſt and Pockets, and the blue ſtriped Trowſers, now lying in the Clerk's Hands, depones, That the ſaid Allan Breck wore ſuch a Coat and Trowſers upon Thurſday the 14th of May laſt; and ſaw him in it the Forenoon of that Day at Ballacheliſh. And further depones, That he, the Deponent, is married to a Daughter of Stewart of Ballechaliſh, and ſtays in the Houſe with him: That her Mother was Daughter to Stewart of Annat, in Perthſhire. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God; and depones he cannot write.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

John Macdonald of Glenco, aged twenty-ſix Years, unmarried, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That on the 12th of May laſt, Allan Breck Stewart came to Carnock, the Houſe of the Deponent: That he ſtaid there but a very little Time, viz. not above a Quarter of an Hour: That the Deponent had no Converſation with him; and the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart went away: That, on Friday the 15th of May laſt, the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart came again to the ſaid Houſe at Three or Four o'Clock in the Morning, and knocked at the Window of the ſaid Houſe, when the Family were all in Bed: That the Deponent went to the Door of his Houſe, and there ſaw Allan Breck Stewart, who gave him the firſt Notice he had of Glenure's being murdered the Evening before in the Wood of Lettermore; and told him, that he was to leave the Country; and came to take leave of the Deponent and his Step-mother, who is a Siſter of Ardſhiel's: That his Cloaths were then a dun or brown great Jockey-coat: That the Deponent did not aſk Allan Breck Stewart any Queſtions about the ſaid Murder: nor did he ſay any Thing upon the Subject to Allan Breck Stewart, as far as the Deponent can remember: Allan Breck Stewart told him he was to go the Moor-road leading to Rannoch: That, upon the Tueſday above-mentioned, James Stewart of Faſnacloich was along with the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart; and that he was dreſſed in a black ſhort Coat with white Buttons. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

(Signed) JOHN MACDONALD. ARGYLL.

Iſobel Stewart, Relict of Alexander Macdonald of Glenco, aged forty-two Years, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That upon Tueſday the 12th Day of May laſt, Allan Breck Stewart, deſcribed in the Libel, came to her Houſe at Carnock, in the Afternoon, accompanied by young Faſnacloich, dreſſed in a black ſhort Coat with white clear Buttons: That he ſtaid about an Hour: and then went away to the Deponent's Siſter's Houſe at Callart: That Allan Breck Stewart came again to the Deponent's Houſe on Wedneſday the 13th of May laſt, in the Afternoon, and ſtaid about a Quarter of an Hour; and then went to Ballacheliſh: That, on Friday the 15th of May, the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart came again to the ſaid Houſe, at Four o'Clock in the Morning, and knocked at the Window of the Houſe, and all the Family was in Bed; upon which the Deponent went out with her Step-ſon; and ſhe aſked him, what News up the Country? To which he anſwered, A good deal of News, that Glenure was killed the Evening before in the Wood of Lettermore; that he was come to take farewell of the Deponent; for he was to leave the Country: That ſhe aſked him no more Queſtions about the Murder: That ſhe aſked him to come into the Houſe; but he anſwered he would not ſtay: That to the beſt of her Remembrance, Allan Breck Stewart told her, that Glenure was killed or ſhot: That, when he knocked at the Window, one of the Deponent's Children told her, that he heard Allan Breck Stewart's Voice. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as ſhe ſhall anſwer to God.

Mary Macdonald, Spouſe to Donald Maxinnes in Leckintium, aged about forty, Witneſs cited, ſolemnly ſworn by Archibald Campbell of Knockbuy, ſworn Interpreter, purged of Malice and partial Counſel, examined and interrogate, depones, That a little before Sun-ſetting, on Sunday the 17th of May laſt, ſhe ſaw Allan Breck Stewart ſitting in the Wood of Koaliſnacoan, leſs than a Mile's Diſtance from the Houſes: That, upon her Approach, he ſtarted to his Feet: That ſhe gave and received the common Salutation from him; and then ſhe paſſed away on her own Buſineſs: That he was dreſſed in a long dun Jockey-coat and Bonnet. And depones, ſhe was alarmed at meeting a Man in a Place ſo remote. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as ſhe ſhall anſwer to God; and declares ſhe cannot write.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

Duncan Stewart, travelling Packman in Arlarich in Rannoch, aged thirty-two Years, married, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That he met with Allan Breck Stewart upon a Monday or Tueſday, about the 18th or 20th of May laſt, at a Place in Rannoch called Leckinſtrenſineir; and, having aſked Allan whence he had come, and whither he was going? he anſwered, he had come from Ballacheliſh or Callart, he does not remember which; and that he was going to a Shealing, where his Uncle Allan Cameron lived; and, as the Deponent had at that Time heard nothing of the Murder of Glenure, he ſaid nothing to him about it: That, two or three Days thereafter, the Deponent's Siſter told him, there were two Gentlemen wanting him out-by: And after he had got his Breakfaſt, he went out, and firſt ſaw Allan Breck, and afterwards Allan Breck and Allan Cameron together at a Know; and that, how ſoon the Deponent went up to the two, Allan Cameron went back, and the Deponent proceeded with Allan Breck down the Country, about ſix Miles, where he had occaſion to be going about his own Buſineſs; and parted with him at a Place called Inching; and, after he parted with the ſaid Allan Breck, he was apprehended by a Gentleman called Alexander Campbell, who ſuppoſed the Deponent to be Allan Breck Stewart; and, having aſked the Deponent, if he had ſeen Allan Breck? he then denied his having ſeen him. Depones, That Allan Breck was, at this Time, dreſſed in a long blue Coat, and blue Bonnet. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God; and depones he cannot write.

(Signed) JA. FERGUSON.

Allan Oig Cameron, in Arlarich in Rannoch, aged thirty-eight, Widower, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That on Monday, he thinks the 18th of May laſt, Allan Breck Stewart, the Deponent's Nephew, came to the Deponent's Houſe in Rannoch, who having told the Deponent, he had come from Appin or Glenco, the Deponent, who by that Time had heard a Rumour of Glenure's Murder, ſaid to the ſaid Allan, that he doubted not he might be ſuſpected of it, as he was a looſe idle Man in the Country; to which the ſaid Allan anſwered, That he made no doubt himſelf that he would be ſuſpected of it: And the Deponent having preſſed him earneſtly to make a clean Breaſt, and tell him all he knew of the Matter, he declared with an Oath, he had never ſeen Glenure, dead or alive; and the ſaid Allan having ſtaid with the Deponent till the Wedneſday thereafter, the Deponent frequently repeated his Inſtances, to tell him what he knew of the Murder; at which Allan Breck became angry; and the Deponent deſiſted further Inquiry: That the ſaid Allan Breck left the Deponent's Houſe upon the Wedneſday, whom the Deponent conveyed little more than two Gun-ſhots from his own Houſe; but Duncan Stewart, Chapman, the preceding Witneſs, who had come to the Deponent's Houſe that Morning, went along with them; and he ſaw them take a little bye Road through Corn, which might have led them to the high Road; but what Road they afterwards took, he does not know: And depones, That at this Time, Allan Breck Stewart was dreſſed in a big Coat of a browniſh Colour, and had under it a long blue Coat lined with red, red Waiſtcoat, and a Bonnet: That, upon the 24th of May, as the Deponent thinks, having occaſion to go to his Maſter Sir Robert Menzies, when about fourteen Miles from his own Houſe, and at the Side of a Wood, he heard a Whiſtle from the Wood, and, looking about, ſaw it to be the ſaid Allan Breck; and the Converſation he then had with him, was to the following Purpoſe: That Allan Breck having told him, his only Fear was to be apprehended by the Military, which might prove very fatal to him, as he had been a Deſerter; which led the Deponent to ſay, that he was very ſure, the Friends of the Deceaſed would procure him his Diſcharge, if he could diſcover the Murderer; to which Breck anſwered, that they were at this Time in ſuch Fury and Rage, he was very ſure, were he apprehended, he would be hanged. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

(Signed) ALLAN CAMERON. JA. FERGUSON.

James Man, Change-keeper at Innerhadden, aged thirty-two, married, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, by the above Mr. Archibald Campbell of Stonefield, ſworn Interpreter, depones, That Allan Breck Stewart came to the Door of the Deponent's Houſe at Innerhadden, the lower Part of Rannoch, about Twilight, towards the End of May laſt, and aſked the Deponent, who was then ſtanding at his own Door, if that was his Houſe? which the Deponent anſwered it was; and then Allan Breck told him, that he was directed by John Stewart in Bohallie to come there for ſome Supply of Proviſions: That the Deponent deſired him to come into his Houſe, and that he would give him Part of ſuch Fare as he had; but that Allan Breck declined to come in, being in a Hurry, and ſtood in need of ſome Proviſion; whereupon the Deponent brought him ſome Bread and Cheeſe, and after he gave him the ſame, conveyed him as far as his Barn, where the ſaid Allan Breck deſired the Deponent to return; and that he, the ſaid Allan Breck, intended to go farther down the Country that Night: That the ſaid Allan Breck was dreſſed in a great dun Coat and Bonnet, and ſhort Hoſe; what Cloaths he had under the great Coat, he did not ſee; that he ſaw a Holſter under his left Arm: That he aſked him whence he had come; but he did not tell him. Depones, That before Allan Breck came, as aforeſaid, it was reported in that Country, that he was concerned in Glenure's Murder; and that he himſelf ſuſpected him at the Time, as he came unſeaſonably, and was wanting Proviſions. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God. And further depones, That he has been acquainted with Allan Breck theſe twelve Years. And his is alſo Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

ARCH. CAMPBELL.
JA. FERGUSON.

John Crawfurd, Eſq. Lieutenant-Colonel of General Pulteney's Regiment of Foot, aged thirty Years, unmarried, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That he knows the Paper now put in his Hands, being Number 11. of the Inventory of Writings in the Clerk's Hands: That it was ſent open to him, before it was ſent away. Being aſked, whether the Deponent had any preceding Converſation with the Pannel on the Subject of this Letter? he anſwers he does not remember he had any. And being aſked, whether the deceaſed Colin Campbell of Glenure ever told the Deponent, that Allan Breck Stewart was a Deſerter, and in this Country? the Deponent anſwers negative. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

(Signed) JOHN CRAWFURD. ARGYLL.

Alexander Stewart of Innernahyle, aged forty-four Years, married, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That the Pannel was a great many Years ago Tenant to his Brother Ardſhiel in the Farm of Glenduror, and was removed alſo ſeveral Years ago, the Deponent does not remember how many, by his Brother: That he again became Tenant in the ſame Lands in 1749, or perhaps 1748, and was again removed by the deceaſed Glenure, the Factor, at Whitſunday 1751, and the Lands ſet to Mr. Campbell of Ballieveolan. Depones, That, as the Pannel is the Deponent's near Neighbour, the Deponent had frequent Opportunities of converſing with him touching his ſaid Removal: That the Pannel did not expect to have been removed, and ſeemed diſſatisfied that he was; and ſaid, he believed Glenure would not have removed him, if Ballieveolan had not ſought theſe Lands from him. Depones, That the Pannel further ſaid, that the Tenants generally allowed ſome Gratuity to Ardſhiel's Children; and that theſe Lands were the beſt Farms on the Eſtate, and moſt of the Benefits accreſced from them; and though he himſelf could be provided of a Farm elſewhere, yet the Children would be deprived of that Benefit. Depones, That, about the End of April, or Beginning of May laſt, the Deponent thinks about the Beginning of May, he caſually met on the Highway with Allan Breck Stewart, and quarrelled with him for not making him, the Deponent, a Viſit; and Allan Breck Stewart promiſed to ſee the Deponent before he left the Country; but the Deponent has never ſeen him ſince that Time. Depones, That, upon the Saturday and Sunday after Glenure's Murder, it was the general Opinion of the People in the Country, that he had been murdered by Allan Breck Stewart. Depones, That the Place where Glenure was ſaid to be murdered, and where the Deponent obſerved Marks and Symptoms of the Murder, is a very bad Road through a Wood, interſperſed with Rocks and Stones upon a hanging Brae, from which a Perſon may deſcry the Road on the North Side of the Ferry of Ballachelish, and where a Perſon may eaſily conceal himſelf, ſo as not to be ſeen from the Road. Depones, That the Deponent is acquainted with the Hand-writing of Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel, and has frequently ſeen him write. And being ſhewn a Letter ſigned Allan Stewart, and addreſſed to Duncan Stewart of Glenbuckie, dated at Aucharn the 1ſt of April 1751, being the Writing Number 7. in the Inventory of Writings ſubjoined to the Libel, depones, That it is like Allan Stewart's Hand-writing, and the Deponent would take it to be his, but cannot be poſitive that it is his. Depones, That after the Attainder of Stewart of Ardſhiel, the Factor gave the Pannel the Opportunity of having the greateſt Influence with the Tenants of Ardſhiel more than any other Perſon, by allowing the Pannel to ſet the Lands, which he continued down to Whitſunday 1751, if not at that Term alſo; but depones, That the Pannel's Connexion with the Family of Ardſhiel gave him alſo a natural Influence over the Tenants, even before Glenure's Factory. Depones, That, before that Time, the Tenants, the Deponent believes, paid their Rent to the Lady of Ardſhiel, and ſhe again employed the Pannel to deal with them. And being interrogate for the Pannel, whether he, the Pannel, removed voluntarily from Glenduror without any Warning? depones, That he did not hear of any Warning, but that he removed voluntarily. Depones, That Allan Breck Stewart, as the Deponent has been informed, was a Soldier in the King's Army, and was taken Priſoner by the Rebels at the Battle of Preſton; and that he was told ſo by a Man who took him from among the Priſoners. And depones, That he afterwards joined with the Rebels, where the Deponent ſaw him. Depones, That, after the Battle of Culloden, he left this Country, and, as he told the Deponent, went over to France, and entered into the French King's Service. Depones, That the Deponent had no Occaſion of ſeeing Allan Breck Stewart laſt Time he was in the Country, but at the Time before deponed upon, and one Time before that; and both theſe Times he was dreſſed in a blue long Coat, a red Veſt, and a feathered Hat, and black Breeches. Depones, That he remembers that Allan Breck Stewart came over to this Country a Year or two ago, and ſtaid ſome Weeks among his Friends; but neither at that Time, nor the laſt Time, did he ſeem, ſo far as the Deponent obſerved, to be in any Apprehenſion of being taken; only, as he had been once in the Army, he did not chuſe to meet with any of the King's Troops. Depones, That, at the Time the Pannel removed from Glenduror, he told the Deponent, that he had had a Meeting with Ballieveolan; and that there was a Compromiſe betwixt them, but does not remember the Particulars. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Donald Campbell of Airds, aged forty-ſeven Years, married, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That the Pannel was employed by the deceaſed Glenure for ſome Time as his Sub-factor in levying the Rents of Ardſhiel, and ſetting the Lands; and the Pannel told the Deponent, that whatever was made of theſe Rents over what was paid into the Exchequer, was accounted for to the Children of Ardſhiel: And when he removed from Glenduror, he told the Deponent that he had Reaſon to believe, that the ſaid Excreſcence of the Rents of that Farm would ſtill be accounted for to them; and, in that Caſe, he would be eaſy as to his own Removal. And depones, That Ardſhiel's Children, at the Time of the Rebellion, were all young; his eldeſt Son being now, as the Deponent believes, about eighteen. Depones, That, in Spring laſt, the Deponent had a Letter from Colonel Crawfurd, telling him that he heard Allan Breck Stewart was come to the Country, and inliſting Men for the French King's Service, and deſired the Deponent to inquire if it was ſo: That the Deponent did inquire, and wrote the Colonel for Anſwer, that he heard he had been in the Country, but that he was then gone away: That this was in the Month of April, to the beſt of the Deponent's Remembrance; and it ſeems about that Time, Allan Breck Stewart had gone to Rannoch, which gave Occaſion to the Deponent's being informed that he was gone away; and did not hear of his having returned to the Country till after Glenure's Murder; and thinks he wrote alſo to Colonel Crawfurd, according to the Information he had got, that Allan Breck Stewart was in uſe of coming every Year to the Country, ſince Ardſhiel went to France. Depones, That, upon the Afternoon of Monday the 11th of May laſt, the Deponent ſent to the Pannel, deſiring him to come to him to Keills, a Farm belonging to the Deponent, at about a Mile's Diſtance from the Pannel's Houſe: That the Pannel accordingly came there to him that Afternoon, as ſoon as he expected him: That the Deponent's Buſineſs with him was for his Aſſiſtance in ſetting that Farm: That the Farm was accordingly ſet; and the Pannel himſelf took Part of it, and conveyed the Deponent a Part of his Way home; and then they parted: That, before parting, he deſired the Pannel to go next Morning to Appin's Houſe: That the Pannel accordingly did ſo; and the Deponent had a Letter from him, from that Place. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Charles Stewart, Writer and Notar at Bannavie, aged thirty-eight Years, married, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That James Stewart the Pannel wrote a Letter to the Deponent, deſiring him to go with the Tenants of the Lands of Ardſhiel, to intimate to Glenure a Siſt on a Bill of Suſpenſion: That accordingly the Deponent went to Aucharn that Night; and the next Morning the Tenants came there; and he then went along with the Tenants to Glenure's Houſe, and there intimated the Siſt; and a Proteſt was alſo taken againſt the ſaid Glenure: That this was on the 1ſt of May. Depones, That the Pannel told the Tenants at the Pannel's Houſe, that there was a Siſt come of the Removing; that he did not deſire them to go with the Siſt, unleſs they had a mind themſelves; and they choſe to go; but the Pannel himſelf did not go along. Depones, That he received a ſecond Letter from the Pannel of Date the 14th of May, deſiring him to attend next Day at the Ejection; but that he declined the ſame, becauſe he did not care to diſoblige Glenure. Depones, That he ſaw Allan Breck Stewart at Aucharn the 1ſt of May; and when the Deponent left Aucharn next Day, he left him there: That he heard Allan Breck ſay, that he thought it hard that Glenure ſhould remove the Tenants upon the Eſtate of Ardſhiel; when he did not remove thoſe of Mamore. Depones, That, in the Beginning of April having met Allan Breck Stewart, he told the Deponent, That he heard that Colonel Crawfurd was endeavouring to take him up as a Deſerter; but that he, Allan Breck, had ſurrendered himſelf in 1746 to Sir Robert Menzies, as a Juſtice of Peace. Depones, That, in the Beginning of April, the Deponent ſaw Allan Breck Stewart at Callart: That he did not appear to be ſculking: That when he ſaw him firſt, he was dreſſed in a French Habit: That on the 1ſt Day of May, when he ſaw him at Aucharn, he was in a ſhort black Highland Coat with white Buttons and Trowſers, and ſaid he had come from Rannoch. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Duncan Maccoll in Ardſhiel, aged thirty Years and upwards, married, being ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, by Mr. Alexander Campbell, Miniſter at Inverary, ſworn Interpreter, depones, That, on his and others being warned to remove from the Lands of Ardſhiel, as at Whitſunday laſt, he, for his Part, had no Intention other than to ſubmit to the Warning, till a Paper was procured from Edinburgh, which he heard read by Charles Stewart, Notar at Aucharn, as on a Day he was there, being along with his Neighbours advertiſed to meet there: That, when the Notice was given for this Meeting, he was not at his own Houſe; but, on his Return, his Wife told him ſuch a Meſſage was ſent, and that Advice was come from Edinburgh to direct thoſe who were warned to remove, to continue in their Poſſeſſion: That, on his coming to Aucharn, he does not remember whether the Paper was read in his Preſence, but is poſitive he and his Neighbours were told by Charles Stewart, Notar, and the Pannel, that the Paper contained Advice, as above, on which they ſhould go to aſk the Lands from Glenure; and to be cautious in their Conduct, as they were to ſwear about their being faithful and peaceable Tenants. Depones, That he gave no Allowance or Mandate to the Pannel to make any Application at Edinburgh againſt the Removing: That, before he heard any thing of this Paper from Edinburgh, he had engaged to ſerve as Bouman to the Tenants Glenure was to introduce; but that, on hearing of the Paper from Edinburgh, he preferred keeping by his Neighbours, as he conſidered the being continued in Poſſeſſion, did the Law ſupport him in it, more beneficial to him. Depones, That the procuring the Paper at Edinburgh coſt him no Money. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That it was in Company with the reſt of his Neighbours, he went to Aucharn, and went along with them likewiſe in Company from Aucharn to Glenure, along with the Notar; and that he remembers, before they left Aucharn, the Pannel, in general, told them, they might follow the Advice given them, or not, as they ſhould ſee Cauſe; and that, upon their Arrival at Glenure, all that he remembers was, that they took Proteſts with Money, in the Notar's Hands, againſt Glenure. And this is alſo Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

John Maccombich in Ardſhiel, aged forty-three Years, married, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, by the above Mr. Alexander Campbell, ſworn Interpreter, depones, That he was warned with the reſt of the Tenants to remove, as at laſt Whitſunday, and meant to ſubmit to it, and therefore agreed with the Tenants to be introduced to ſerve them as Bouman; but on his being called to Aucharn, by a Meſſage in Charles Stewart the Notary's Name, and hearing the Advice from Edinburgh explained there, and

and that there were ſome Hopes the Government would allow them to ſit ſtill, if they continued peaceable, he chuſed to keep by this Chance with his Neighbours; upon which he went along with them to Glenure, and aſked to be continued; and got for Anſwer, that the Application was too late, the Lands being ſet to others; upon which he joined with his Neighbours in taking a Proteſt in the Hands of the Notary. Depones, That, as to the Agreement betwixt him and the incoming Tenants, when he undertook to be their Bouman, he heard both Glenure and theſe Tenants ſay, that it was by Glenure's Advice that this was done. Depones, That, as Duncan Maccoll and he agreed at the ſame Time to be Boumen to the incoming Tenants, ſo he heard Glenure ſay, that it was his Advice to the Perſon who was to employ Duncan Maccoll, to take him as his Bouman. Depones, That, on his being warned, he adviſed with the Pannel how to behave: That he did not pretend to direct: That an Advice in Law ſhould be aſked: That he hoped the King, and thoſe employed by him, would continue the former Poſſeſſors, they behaving dutifully; and that, on his being adviſed by the Pannel to have Patience, he reſolved to wait the Iſſue: That likewiſe the Pannel adviſed him, if better could not be made of it, to endeavour to get a Sub-ſet from the incoming Tenant; and that the Pannel adviſed him, and others concerned, to qualify to the Government. Depones, That he told the Pannel, that if the Law countenanced the continuing them in their Poſſeſſion, he would rather chuſe it. Depones, That, on the Day he and his Neighbours went to Glenure, the Pannel left them to the Freedom of their own Choice, whether to follow the Purpoſe of the Advice from Edinburgh, or not; only it was his Opinion, that they had a Chance of being continued in their Poſſeſſions, they behaving themſelves in all Reſpects dutifully, and go and aſk the Lands of Glenure. Depones, That he does not remember that the Advice from Edinburgh coſt him any Money, or that any was aſked of him; but that ſome Accounts were at that Time betwixt him and the Pannel. Depones, That he continued with the reſt of the Tenants about the Pannel, till they were deſired by him to leave him, as he could take care of himſelf, and was to go Home; and that he does not remember to have heard Glenure's Name mentioned all the while; and that this happened on Occaſion of Glenure and the Pannel's meeting at Kintalline: That he is not poſitive as to the Time; but thinks it was the laſt Night of the old Year. Depones, That he heard Glenure went next Day to the Pannel's Houſe, and dined there. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

John Maccorquodale, late in Lettermore, now in Ballachelish, aged twenty and upwards, married, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, by the ſaid Mr. Alexander Campbell, ſworn Interpreter, depones, That the laſt Night of December laſt, he was preſent at Kintalline, as Glenure and the Pannel, with ſome other Company, met; when, after drinking a while, from loud Words it was apprehended a Quarrel would enſue; to prevent which, the Deponent, with ſome others, carried out the Pannel, who ſeemed unwilling to part with Glenure, as he expected Glenure would go that Night to his Houſe: That the Deponent heard that Glenure, though he declined to go with the Pannel that Night, yet he propoſed to breakfaſt with him next Morning: That the Deponent was in Company with the Pannel, and followed him at ſome Diſtance from the Houſe of Kintalline; and that all the while he was in the Pannel's Company, he heard nothing of Glenure; only the Pannel was diſobliged at being ſeparated from him, and ſaid, that if they about him had kept off, Glenure and he would be good Friends before they would part. Depones, That, when he was warned, and conſequently like to want Lands, he was talking of his Situation to the Pannel, being poor, and, in his own Apprehenſion, unable to bear the Expence of a Law-ſuit, did not propoſe to follow the Matter in that Way: That being aſked a Sight of the Warning, he gave it to the Pannel, but did not deſire any Advice in Law ſhould be aſked about it, having ſome Dependence on his Innocence, and not being concerned in any of the Troubles in that Country. And being interrogate for the Pannel, whether the Pannel had adviſed him, the Deponent, to engage as Bouman in Lettermore, if better could not be provided for him, depones negative. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Ewan Macintyre in Duchelly, late Herd in Glenduror, aged twenty Years and upwards, unmarried, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, by Mr. Archibald Campbell of Stonefield, ſworn Interpreter, depones, That he engaged to be Herd to Mr. Campbell of Ballieveolan, in the Farm of Glenduror, for the Year 1751; and that the Day after he entered into his Service there, the Pannel challenged him for accepting thereof, and told him, that he would be fit-ſides with him, ſooner or later, for doing it; and that if he did not meet with Reſentment himſelf in his Life-time, others, ſuch as his Friends, might meet with it after his Death. Depones, He never was in the Pannel's Service. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God; and depones he cannot write.

(Signed) Arch. Campbell. Argyll.

Alexander Campbell in Tynaluib, aged fifty Years, married, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That, in the End of April laſt, the Pannel called at the Deponent's Houſe in the Morning, to have his Horſe corned; and having called for, and got a Dram, which was afterwards ſet down upon the Table, one Maclaren, a Merchant in Stirling, who had lodged with the Deponent the Night before, being preſent, aſked the Pannel, if he would not help the Deponent to a Dram? And the Pannel anſwered, he did not know any thing that he would help the Deponent or any of his Name to, if it was not to the Gibbet. The Deponent anſwered, that that was not a comfortable Expreſſion to him, that it ſeems if any of them were at the Gibbet, the Pannel would draw down their Feet; and the Pannel replied, that of ſome of them he would, and ſome of them he would not: That then the Deponent ſaid, that Glenure, as he ſuppoſed, was the Man of the Name with whom the Pannel had the greateſt Quarrel, and the Deponent did not know any good Cauſe the Pannel had for it: Upon which the Pannel anſwered, That if Glenure had uſed the Deponent as ill as he had uſed him, the Pannel, by turning him out of his Poſſeſſion, he would have no leſs Quarrel with him than he had: And the Deponent replied, That that was no juſt Cauſe of Quarrel; for that if the Pannel had a Tack of his Farm, Glenure could not turn him out; and the Deponent's Wife was alſo preſent at this Converſation. And being interrogate for the Pannel, whether the Deponent then thought him ſerious, and in earneſt, or that it was only a Joke? depones, That, at that Time, he thought it proceeded from Malice. And being further interrogate for the Pannel, depones, He was at that Time perfectly ſober. Depones, That all they drank was a Gill of Aquavitæ, of which the Deponent got a Part. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

(Signed) Alex. Campbell. P. Grant.

Ewan Murray, Vintner, at Weſt End of Lochearn, aged thirty-four Years, married, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That, in April laſt, the Pannel and Colin Maclaren, Merchant in Stirling, came to the Deponent's Houſe, and the Pannel told the Deponent, that Glenure had warned away ſeveral Families in Ardſhiel's Eſtate to remove; and that he was informed, that none of the Factors on the forfeited Eſtates had Power to remove the Tenants; and that he was going to Edinburgh to take Advice of Lawyers about it; and, if he had not that Power, that the Pannel would apply for Suſpenſion in his own Name, and in Name of the reſt of the Tenants; and, the Converſation turning upon an Officer of the Army, that was branded with Cowardice, and had been broke on that Account, the Pannel ſaid, that he had Reaſon to ſay that Glenure was as great a Coward as that Officer; for that he, the Pannel, had challenged him to fight him, which Glenure declined; and deſired the Deponent to tell Glenure, that he had told him ſo; but the Deponent anſwered, That he would not carry any ſuch Meſſage from one Gentleman to another; and, from the Converſation, the Deponent underſtood, that the Arms with which the Pannel had challenged Glenure to fight, was with Piſtols. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That he thought the Pannel was a little concerned with Drink. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

(Signed) Ewan Murray. P. Grant.

Colin Maclaren, Merchant in Stirling, aged twenty-two Years, unmarried, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That, in the Month of April laſt, the Deponent happened to lodge in the Houſe of Alexander Campbell in Tynaluib a Night, and in the Morning about Nine o'Clock the Pannel alighted there; and having breakfaſted and got a Dram, the Deponent underſtanding that the Pannel was going the ſame Road with him towards Stirling, deſired the Pannel to give the Landlord a Dram, that they might go on their Journey; that the Pannel anſwered, That he did not think he ſhould help the Landlord, or any of his Name, to a Dram, or any Thing elſe, if it was not to the Gibbet: That he had mentioned to the Landlord, that Glenure had warned him to remove from his Poſſeſſion in Ardſhiel; therefore the Landlord anſwered, that it ſeemed, if they were on the Gibbet, the Pannel would draw down their Feet; and he ſuppoſed it was on Glenure's Account; to which the Pannel anſwered, he could not ſay but it was; upon which the Pannel and Landlord entered into an Altercation together touching the Juſtice of that Removing; and, as the Deponent had no Concern in the Matter, he took little Notice to what paſſed. Depones, That, upon the Landlord's uſing the above Expreſſion, that, if they were on the Gibbet, the Pannel would draw down their Feet, the Pannel's Anſwer was in theſe Words, That he did not chuſe to be an Executioner, but he could draw down ſome of them. Depones, That from Tynaluib the Pannel and Deponent proceeded on their Journey, and about Eleven o'Clock, or Mid-day, came to the Houſe of Ewan Murray, the preceding Witneſs: That there the Pannel again complained of Glenure's removing him; told him, it was one Campbell that was to ſucceed in his Room: That he did not know any Reaſon for Glenure's uſing him ſo, for that they were Couſins: And, upon the Deponent's ſaying, that poſſibly it was none of Glenure's Fault, and that he could not help it, the Pannel ſaid, he did not know any Buſineſs that either the Exchequer or the Factors had to turn out Tenants, while they paid their Rent; and ſaid, that he was going to Edinburgh to get a Suſpenſion of the Decreet of Removing. Depones, That, having left Ewan Murray's Houſe together, and the ſaid Ewan in Company with them, the Converſation turned upon an Officer in the Army, who had been broke for Cowardice; and the Deponent ſaid, he was ſurpriſed with it; for that that Officer, as the Deponent heard, had not declined to accept of a Challenge to fight from Glenure; that thereupon the Pannel ſaid, that he eſteemed that Officer a better Man than Glenure: And Ewan Murray having contradicted his being ſo good a Man as Glenure, the Pannel ſaid, that he knew the contrary; for that he himſelf had given Glenure a Challenge to fight him, which Glenure declined; and deſired Ewan Murray to tell Glenure, that he would fight him when he would; but Ewan Murray declined to carry ſuch a Meſſage. Depones, That, after parting with Ewan Murray, in the Courſe of their Journey the Deponent found that the Removing was much at the Pannel's Heart; and the Deponent endeavoured all he could to divert the Converſation to another Subject: That the Pannel told him, that, if he failed in his Suſpenſion at Edinburgh, he would carry it to the Britiſh Parliament; and, if he failed there, told him, after a little Pauſe, and with an Emphaſis, that he behoved to take the only other Remedy that remained. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That, during the Converſation in Campbell's Houſe, above deponed upon, the Deponent at firſt thought that the Pannel had been in Joke; but afterwards it was like to become very ſerious; for the Landlord and he came to pretty high Words together: And being further interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That he did not think the Pannel drunk, either in Campbell's Houſe, or in Ewan Murray's Houſe; but, after leaving Murray's Houſe, they drank two or three Drams at a Dramhouſe; and after that the Deponent thought him much concerned with Liquor; and it was after taking theſe Drams that the Converſation between Murray and the Pannel, with reſpect to challenging Glenure, happened. And depones, That they had rode ſeveral Miles together, before the Converſation about the Britiſh Parliament; and the Deponent thought him even then ſtill concerned with Drink. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

(Signed) Colin Maclaren. P. Grant.

John

John More Maccoll, late Servant to the Pannel, aged thirty-seven, married, Witneſs cited, ſolemnly ſworn, purged and examined by the ſworn Interpreter above-named, depones, That he was preſent at a Converſation that happened betwixt the Pannel, John Beg and Dugald Maccolls, both Servants to the Pannel, in the Pannel's Brewhouſe at Aucharn, before Day-light upon a Morning, about Yule laſt, as the Deponent beſt remembers: That the Deponent was then employed in diſtilling the ſecond Draught of a Brewing of Aquavitæ; and the Pannel ordered the Deponent to give him and the People preſent a Dram, which the Deponent did: That the Pannel ſaid, Glenure would not take the Rent from the Tenants of Aucharn, Part of the Ardſhiel Eſtate, becauſe they had given the Pannel ſome Bear, which Glenure alledged they ought to have paid him: That the Pannel complained it was hard to refuſe the Rent in Money from the Tenants in a ſcarce Year; and obſerved, that it would be of no great Conſequence to him, the Pannel, though he ſhould pay back the Bear, in Compariſon to what it would be to the Tenants for ſubſequent Years, in caſe they were obliged to pay their Farm Bear and Meal; and ſaid, the Tenants or Commoners were likely to be very ill off; for if Glenure went on in the Way he then did, it was likely he would be Laird of Appin in a very ſhort Time; and that he knew once a Sett of Commoners in Appin, who would not allow Glenure to go on at ſuch a Rate: To which the Deponent and the reſt anſwered, that they knew no Commoners in the Country that could ſtrive or contend with Glenure in that Manner. Depones, That he had no Converſation with the ſaid John or Dugald Maccolls that Day, nor any Time thereafter, about the Import of the above Communing. Depones, That in Seed-Time laſt, when they were harrowing the Tath-field in Aucharn, being the very Day that James Stewart went for Edinburgh, Allan Breck Stewart came to the Deponent, and the ſaid Dugald Maccoll, as they were yoking the Horſes; and the Deponent, having aſked him ſome Queſtions about France, ſaid, he did not ſee any of the People that went over there, come back in ſo good a Way as they went over: To which Allan Breck replied, That they came back better than they went; and that they, meaning the People of Appin, might be much better, if they were worth themſelves: Upon the Deponent's anſwering, that he did not ſee how that could happen, Allan Breck anſwered, if they, the Commoners, were worth themſelves, they could keep out Glenure, and hinder him from oppreſſing them; in which Caſe, they would not be baniſhed from their natural Poſſeſſions; and, upon the Deponent's anſwering, he did not ſee how any body could pretend to ſtrive or ſtruggle with Glenure in that Way, as he had the Laws of the King and Country for him, and nobody to ſupport or take them by the Hand, after their ſo doing; Allan ſaid, he had it in his Power to ſave or protect any body that would put Glenure from trampling upon the Country in the Manner he then did. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, what Dreſs the ſaid Allan Breck uſed to wear, when he ſaw him at Aucharn? depones, That he always ſaw him wear a blue ſide Coat, red Waiſtcoat, and black Breeches, with a Hat and Feather, except twice that he ſaw him in a black ſhort Coat, with white metal Buttons. The firſt Time he ſaw him with the ſaid ſhort Coat, was, when the Pannel was at Edinburgh; and the ſaid Allan Breck told, he was going to Rannoch, and actually went away, and ſtaid ſeveral Days; and the other was upon Monday the 11th Day of May laſt, when he ſaw the ſaid Allan Breck come to Aucharn dreſſed in his long Cloaths, and came directly where the Pannel, Allan his Son, John Beg Maccoll, and the Deponent, were covering Potatoes: That, when Allan came up, they were reſting themſelves, and ſitting by one another; That Allan Breck ſat with them; and all the Converſation that the Deponent noticed was, ſome Queſtions about the Welfare of the People of Glencrearan: And that he did not obſerve the Pannel have any private Converſation with the ſaid Allan Breck; for that, a very little Time after Allan Breck's Arrival, the Pannel had a Meſſage to meet Mr. Campbell of Airds at Keel; and that this happened after Mid-day: That the Pannel immediately, upon receiving the above Meſſage, went away in order to meet Airds: And that nobody went along with the Pannel, Allan Breck having ſtaid with them: That a little thereafter, the Deponent, Allan Stewart the Pannel's Son, and John Beg Maccoll, went to cover Potatoes at a greater Diſtance from the Pannel's Houſe; that Allan Breck ſtaid behind; and, ſome Time thereafter, Allan Breck came where they were working, dreſſed in a black ſhort Coat with white metal Buttons and black Breeches, and wrought with them in covering Potatoes. Depones, That the Deponent came very early upon Tueſday Morning to the Pannel's Son, and found the Servants getting up: That the Deponent went to Aucharn, at about a Quarter of a Mile's Diſtance, for a Slaughter-ſpade; and, as he was returning from thence, he met the Pannel going for Appin's Houſe; and, when he came to the Pannel's Houſe, he ſaw Allan Breck ſitting in a Room, dreſſed in the black ſhort Coat, combing his Hair. Depones, He never ſaw the ſaid Allan Breck at Work any of the Times he ſaw him at Aucharn, except covering the Potatoes upon the Monday Evening as aforeſaid. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. JA. FERGUSON.

Dugald Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, unmarried, aged twenty-four Years, Witneſs cited, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, by the forenamed ſworn Interpreter, depones, That, in the latter End of Winter laſt, about Day-break, the Deponent was alongſt with the Pannel, in his Brewhouſe at Aucharn, in Company with John More Maccoll, and John Beg Maccoll, both Servants to the Pannel: That, after taking a Dram of Whiſky, the Converſation fell upon the Tenants of Aucharn, a Part of the forfeited Eſtate of Ardſhiel; and that it was then mentioned, that they were in uſe to pay ſome Bear and Meal as Part of their Rent: That the Tenants of the ſaid Town of Aucharn had paid the Bear to the Pannel they were in uſe to pay, and made Offer of Money for that and the reſt of the Rent to Glenure, the Factor; and that Glenure refuſed to take the Money, inſiſting to have the Victual paid in Kind as formerly: Upon which the Pannel ſaid, that Glenure was like to hurt him, the ſaid James Stewart, as much as was in his Power; for, as the Tenants had paid him the Bear in uſe to be paid out of that Farm, and turned it to his own Uſe, he would be obliged to anſwer to Glenure for that Article of the Rent; but added, that that was not the worſt of it, and that, if he, Glenure, went on in the ſame Way, it was likely he would in five Years be Laird of Appin; and, upon the Deponent and the ſaid John More and John Beg Maccoll's ſaying, that that was likely to happen, the ſaid James Stewart, the Pannel, anſwered, That that was the Fault of the Commoners or Followers; for however he, or People in Circumſtances like him, would ſhift for themſelves, they, the Commoners, would be very badly off: And added, that he knew Commoners once in Appin, who would not allow Glenure to go on at ſuch a Rate; to which the Deponent and the others preſent anſwered, That they believed that there might be Commoners once in Appin who would do ſo. Depones, That he does not remember that he and John Beg Maccoll had, at any Time that Day, or thereafter, any Communing about the Senſe or Meaning of this Converſation that happened in the Brew-houſe. Depones, That, upon the laſt Night of December laſt, Glenure and John Campbell of Ballieveolan were in Company with the Pannel, John Stewart younger of Ballachelish, and James Stewart in Ardnamurchan, Uncle to the Pannel, in the Houſe of John Breck Maccombie, Change-keeper at Kintalline; and, after Night-fall, by the Deſire of his Miſtreſs, the Deponent went there to attend his Maſter Home: That, after he came there, Glenure, the Pannel, and his Company, drank till it was late at Night, and the Deponent heard them ſpeaking together; but as it was in Engliſh, he did not underſtand what they ſaid: That at laſt they began to ſpeak very loud, and got up upon their Feet: That the Deponent, and ſeveral other Commoners, who happened to be at the Houſe at the Time, apprehending they were going to quarrel, went into the Room in order to prevent it: That they ſtill ſpoke loud, and in Engliſh; and the Deponent, with the Aſſiſtance of John Maccombie, alias John the Son of Duncan and Grandſon of Malcolm, and another John Maccombie, alias the Son of Duncan and Grandſon of Duncan, both then Tenants in Ardſhiel, and John Roy Maccorquodale, then in Lettermore, now in Ballachelish, carried the Pannel, and the ſaid James Stewart his Uncle, out of the Room: That they inſiſted for being back to the Company; but that young Ballachelish came to them, and told them that they muſt not go back, and that they ought to be good Friends: Upon which the Pannel ſaid, he would not ſtir from the Place, till he was told by Glenure if he would go to his Houſe next Day; that Ballachelish ſaid he would go and get Notice, and accordingly went into the Room, and returned back in a little Time, and told the Pannel that Glenure promiſed to ſee him at his Houſe next Day: That the Pannel aſked if Glenure had promiſed ſo upon his Honour; and, upon Ballachelish anſwering he did, the Deponent and the ſaid John Roy Maccorquodale carried the Pannel over a Burn adjoining to the ſaid Houſe of Kintalline in the Road to Aucharn; upon which the Pannel told them, they were better at that than in doing what they ought to do, and that it was to ſide with Glenure, not with him, that they were there; and aſked the Tenants then preſent, what kept them there ſo late, and why they did not go Home in proper Time of Night? And, they anſwering that they were there waiting upon him, the Pannel replied, That it was not waiting upon him they were, but upon Glenure, to ſee what they could get by him: That he continued at ſuch Converſation as this, till they came to the Fields of Auchindarroch, hard by Aucharn, when the ſaid John Maccombie, alias the Son of Duncan Macilchallum, ſaid, that he was told that Glenure had a drawn Hanger in the Room where they had been drinking, after the Pannel and his Uncle were carried out, declaring that he would not allow them to return to his Company any more that Night; upon which the Pannel aſked them, why he did not tell him that before he came away from the Houſe, that he might ſee if it was true, and what Glenure meant by it? and inſiſted then on going back to know the Truth of it; but the Deponent and the other Tenants declaring they would not allow him to go back, he bid them go about their Buſineſs and leave him, which they accordingly did; and the Pannel, and the ſaid James Stewart his Uncle, went to Aucharn, attended only, as he remembers, by the Deponent and a Boy-herd named Duncan Maccannanich: That, when this happened, the Pannel James Stewart and his Uncle were very drunk. Depones, That, ſome Time in March laſt, when the Deponent and John More Maccoll were harrowing the Tath-field at Aucharn, being the ſame Day, or the Day after the Pannel went for Edinburgh, Allan Breck Stewart walked for a good Time about the Field; and as they were looſing their Horſes, the ſaid Allan Breck and they entered into Converſation about France, and People from this Country there; and John More Maccoll aſked if there was any Proſpect of any of them's coming back? Upon Allan Breck's anſwering he was afraid they would not, John More ſaid, he wiſhed that none had ever come from that Country; in which the ſaid Allan joined him, ſaying, it had diſperſed the Friends he moſt regarded; and that it was a particular Misfortune that the Management of any Concerns they left behind them, fell into the Hands of one that was about to ſhew them no manner of Favour; and declared that he meant Glenure; and told that the Commoners of Appin were little worth, when they did not take him out of the Way before now; and upon their ſaying nobody would run that Riſque, not knowing who would ſtand by them, Allan anſwered, That he knew a Way to convey out of the Way any Perſon that would do ſo, in a Way that he would never be catched; and alſo ſaid, that they, and the Tribe they were of, (meaning the Maccolls) were not like to be the leaſt Sufferers by Glenure's Proceedings. Depones, That the firſt Time he ſaw Allan Breck Stewart at Aucharn, was about the Beginning of the Oat-ſowing, which was pretty far advanced in the Month of March: That he was then dreſſed in a ſide blue Coat, red Waiſtcoat, and black Breeches, with a Hat and Feather: That, while he was in the Country of Appin, he was for the moſt Part at the Pannel's Houſe; but that he was abſent once for a conſiderable Time, when he ſaid he was at Rannoch: That the Deponent ſaw him when he ſaid he was going to Rannoch: That he was then dreſſed in a black ſhort Coat with ſilver Buttons belonging to the Pannel, blue Trowſers ſtriped with white, and a dun great Coat, which the Deponent thinks belonged to Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son; and, being now ſhewn the two black ſhort Coats in the Clerk's Hands, depones, That the Coat with the ſilver Buttons on the Pockets belonged to the Pannel, and is the ſame the ſaid Allan Breck had on when he ſaid he was going to Rannoch as aforeſaid; and the other Coat, with no Buttons upon the Pocket, belonged to Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son.

Son. Depones, That he saw him have on the same Dress when he came back from Rannoch. Depones, That he does not mind to have seen the said Allan Breck wear the said short Coat at any other Time, except upon Monday and Tuesday the 11th and 12th of May last. Depones, That upon Monday the 11th Day of May last, he went to the Wood for Firewood; and, upon his coming Home in the Afternoon, he found the said Allan Breck dressed in the said black short Coat, working at Potatoes along with John More Maccoll and John Beg Maccoll, two of the Pannel's Servants, having on his own black Breeches. Depones, That he saw the said Allan Breck, upon Tuesday Morning, the 12th of May last, in the Pannel's House, dressed in the said black Coat belonging to the Pannel, and blue Trowsers striped with white, such as now shewn to him in the Clerk's Hands, and a blue Bonnet. Depones, That the Deponent was told the said Allan Breck left Aucharn early upon the Tuesday, and the Deponent has not seen him since. Depones, That upon Friday Evening the 15th of May last, the Deponent and John Beg Maccoll overtook Katharine Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, in the Brae above the House of Aucharn, with a Pock or Sack, and something in it, under her Arm; the Deponent asked her, what she had got in the Sack? To which she answered, That it was Allan Breck's Cloaths, and that she was going to hide them; and the Deponent and the said John Beg Maccoll saw her hide the Sack in which the said Cloaths were; and that this happened about Four o'Clock in the said Afternoon. Depones, That upon Thursday Evening the 14th Day of May last, after Notice of Glenure's Murder came to Aucharn, Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel, desired the Deponent and John Beg Maccoll to hide a large Spanish Gun that used to stand in the Brew-House; and told them, that he himself had concealed a lesser Gun that used to stand at the End of the Girnel in the Barn, under the said Girnel, where he thought it would be safe. Depones, That the Deponent, and the said John Beg Maccoll, on the said Thursday Evening, hid the large or Spanish Gun that used to stand in the Brew-house, under the Thatch of the Sheep-house, and three Swords they took out of the Barn, and a fourth that was brought by John Beg Maccoll, the Deponent does not know from whence, under the Thatch of the Back of the Barn. Depones, That about Four o'Clock, Friday the 15th of May last, the Pannel desired the Deponent to carry the above Arms from the Houses, and hide them in the Moor: That accordingly the Deponent and John Beg Maccoll took the aforesaid large Gun from the Back of the Sheep-house under the Thatch, and the said four Swords from under the Thatch of the Barn, and found the Gun that used to stand in the Barn under the Girnel, where the said Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, said he hid it, and carried them to the Moor; and hid them in the Hole of a Rock, above the Peat-Moss: And that it was told at Aucharn, that there were Soldiers coming to the Country, before these Arms were hid in the Hill, as above. Depones, That the said John Beg Maccoll, and the Deponent, had the above Arms, when they overtook Katharine Maccoll, as aforesaid, with the Cloaths. Depones, That the large or Spanish Gun, that stood in the Brew-house, was charged with Powder and small Drops; and that there was no Shot in the small or lesser Gun, that used to stand at the End of the Girnel in the Barn; but Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, carried out the said Gun two or three Mornings, in order to shoot black Cocks in the latter End of March or Beginning of April last. Depones, That Allan Breck Stewart was also in use to carry out the said large or Spanish Gun two or three Mornings, in order to shoot black Cocks; and about that Time saw him endeavour to help the Lock of the said Gun with a File. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That he, the Deponent, has no Skill about Guns; but heard the said Allan Breck and Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, more than once complain, that the Guns were in bad Order. Depones, That when the Deponent came Home from the Wood, upon Monday the 11th Day of May last, the Pannel was not at Home; and the Deponent was told he was gone to Keels to meet the Laird of Airds: And that the Deponent had gone to Bed before the Pannel came Home that Night: And that early upon Tuesday Morning, when the Deponent got up, he saw the Pannel without, who told him that he was going to Appin's House: And that, to the Deponent's Knowledge, Allan Breck, or the Pannel's Sons, were not then up: That he saw the Pannel go towards Letterfhuna, where Appin lives. Depones, That Allan Breck Stewart left Aucharn before the Pannel returned from Letterfhuna: And, upon an Interrogatory put for the Pannel, if the Pannel had given the short black Coat the Deponent saw the said Allan Breck wear, and which he has deponed belonged to the Pannel, was given by the Pannel to the Deponent, or any other of his Servants, before the said 11th of May, depones, That the said black Coat was not given to him, the Deponent, nor to any other of the Servants, to his Knowledge. And, being interrogate for the Pursuers, after shewing him the Powder-horn, now in the Clerk's Hands, and which had been formerly shewn him when he was examined upon the Precognition, Whether he had ever seen it before the Time of taking the said Precognition? depones, He never did. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That Glenure and Ballieveolan dined at the Pannel's House, in company with the Pannel, the Day after they were like to have quarrelled at Kintalline as aforesaid. Depones, That it was ordinary for the Pannel to give a Dram to his Servants every Time he distilled a double Draught of Whisky. Depones, That the double Draught was a distilling, when the Deponent and the other Servants got the Dram mentioned in the first Part of this Deposition. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God. And declares he cannot write.

John Beg Maccoll, Servant to James Stewart Pannel, aged twenty-seven Years, unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, by the sworn Interpreter, depones, That the latter End of Winter, or Beginning of Spring last, early in a Morning, the Pannel gave a Dram to the Deponent, Dougal Maccoll, and John More Maccoll, both Servants to the Pannel, in the Pannel's Brew-house: That the Conversation falling upon Glenure, the Pannel complained that Glenure was no Friend of his: but that that was not the worst of it; but that, if he was to go on as he did, it was likely in five Years he would be Laird of Appin; and the Deponent and the other two Maccolls answering, that that was likely to happen, the Pannel replied, That he knew once a Sett of Commoners in Appin, who would not allow Glenure to carry Matters with such a high Hand; and to which the Deponent and the other two Maccolls answered, That they did not believe there was any Commoner in Appin, that durst contend or strive with Glenure in such a Way: That, immediately thereafter, the Deponent and Dougal Maccoll went out of the Brew-house, leaving the Pannel and John More Maccoll there. Depones, That, after they went out of the Brew-house, either that Day, or some Time thereafter, the Deponent and Dougal Maccoll talked together, what the Import of this Conversation might be; and that the Deponent was at a Loss whether to consider it as an Encouragement to destroy Glenure, or as a Complaint against the Commoners of Appin, as not being so faithful to the Pannel as he expected them to be. Depones, That, in March last, Allan Breck Stewart came to the Pannel's House, late in the Evening, dressed in a blue side Coat, red Waistcoat, and black Shag Breeches, and a feathered Hat: That he looked into the Kitchen, and went immediately to the Room where the Pannel and his Family were: That afterwards he used to go to the Country to different Places, and come frequently back to the Pannel's House: That once he remained there a Week, which is the longest Time he staid there at one Time. Depones, That the said Allan Breck Stewart came to the Pannel's House from Fasnacloich upon Monday the 11th of May last, about Mid-day, dressed as above: That, upon the Evening of the said Day, the Deponent saw the said Allan Breck dressed in a black short Coat with silver Buttons. Depones, That there was two short black Coats with silver Buttons in the Pannel's House; the one belonging to the Pannel, and the other to Allan Stewart, his Son; the Deponent does not know which of them the said Allan Breck had on. And depones, That the Coats were so like, that he could not distinguish the one from the other. And depones, That it was one of these black Coats he had on, the Deponent having seen him; the said Allan Breck, near the Houses, in his side Cloaths; and, some Time thereafter, coming from the House, dressed in the said short Coat, in the Evening of the said Monday the 11th of May, and came where the Deponent and John More Maccoll were covering Potatoes, and wrought with them for some Time. Depones, That, some Time thereafter, a young Lad, Brother to Glenco, by Name Donald, as the Deponent thinks, came to them, and told that Glenure was come Home from Edinburgh, and was to go to Lochaber; upon which, some Conversation happening about removing the Tenants, Allan Breck said, Devil a Bit of the new Tenants would get Possession, unless they had a Warrant to shew, or come in by Force. Depones, That, when the said Allan Breck came, upon the 11th of May last, to Aucharn, the Pannel was seeing the Deponent, John More Maccoll, and Dougal Maccoll, working at Potatoes; and that Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, was likewise there: That, when Allan Breck came, they were sitting all together; and that he seated himself by the Pannel, and had some Conversation in English, which the Deponent does not understand. Depones, That Charles Stewart, Son to the Pannel, and Stewart, Daughter to Fasnacloich, came to Aucharn from Fasnacloich, a little after the said Allan Breck. Depones, That upon Thursday the 14th of May last, the Pannel gave a Letter to the Deponent, to be delivered to Charles Stewart, Notary Public at Maryburgh; and told the Deponent, that the Letter was to make or cause the said Charles Stewart come to the Country of Appin to protest against Glenure, in case he had not a sufficient Warrant to remove the Tenants of Ardshiel. Depones, That the Pannel desired the Deponent to make all possible Dispatch, and desire John Breck Maccombie at Kintalline, and the said John More Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, who was then at Kintalline, to ferry the Deponent from Kintalline to Onich, being much shorter than the Ferry of Ballachelish. Depones, That the Pannel also told him, that he was to get some Money from William Stewart, Merchant at Maryburgh, to pay for Milk-Cows that were bought for him in the Country; and that, if the Money was not sent, he would not get the Cows. Depones, That he was ferryed from Kintalline to Onich, and went on to Fort-William, and met Glenure at the Three-mile Water, who asked the Deponent from whence he came? To which the Deponent answered, That he had come over Keilis. Depones, That, being acquainted with Glenure's Servant, he had some Conversation with him, and told him he was going to Fort-William. Depones, That he set out from Aucharn about Seven or Eight o'Clock in the Morning, and made all the Dispatch he could to Fort-William, where he arrived about Twelve o'Clock. Depones, That, when he came to Fort-William, he delivered the Letter he got from the Pannel to William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh, who told him, that Charles Stewart, the Notary, was not at Home, he having gone to the Braes of Lochaber in the Morning; and told the Deponent, that he, the said William, had wrote to the Pannel in the Morning; and that there was a Notary along with Glenure, who would serve the Pannel as well as Glenure. Depones, That he does not remember that he asked for any Money from William Stewart, nor did he give him any, but said, he would send Servants for the Cattle. Depones, That he staid a very short Time at Fort-William: That the said William Stewart asked him, if he wanted Victuals? Upon the Deponent's answering he did not, the said William brought him into his House, and gave him a Dram; and the Deponent immediately returned back by the short Road to the Ferry of Ballachelish, and found Glenure at the Ferry before him: That the Deponent required of the Ferry-man to ferry him immediately, and the Ferry-man desired him to stay till he would be ferryed with Glenure's Horses; but the Deponent observed to him that the Stream was rapid, and might draw some Time before they would ferry the Horses, he ought to ferry him immediately, which he accordingly did; and that this might be about Four o'Clock: That, upon his crossing the Ferry, he met Archibald Maciniish, Ferryer upon the Appin Side, to whom he told where he had been, and his Errand; and that the said Ferryer told the Deponent, that he was informed by a Man, that he was going to meet Glenure: That the new Tenants, that were to come to Ardshiel, had come to Glenaurer with their Cattle; and were to take Possession next Day; and the Deponent told him, that he did not believe they would get Possession till their Warrants were seen. Depones, That, a little thereafter, he met Alexander Stewart elder of Ballachelish, to whom he told where he had been, and his Errand, and the Conversation he had with the Ferry-man; and Ballachelish desired him to tell his Master, if he would send for him, he would go along with him to see Glenure's Warrant. Depones,

That he paſſed through the Wood of Lettermore, and met or ſaw nobody there: That he went then Home, and gave the Pannel an Account of his Errand. That he was hardly an Hour there, when John Mackenzie, Glenure's Servant, came to the Door calling for the Pannel: That the Pannel went immediately to the Door, and aſked the Servant, what was the Matter, and what News he had? To which the Servant replied, The worſt I ever had; my Maſter is murdered in the Wood of Lettermore: Upon which James Stewart ſaid, Lord bleſs me! was he ſhot? To which the Servant anſwered, that he was ſhot, and ſaid the Pannel ought to go and take Care of his Corpſe: That the Servant immediately went off, but neither the Pannel nor any of his Family went near the Corpſe; and the Pannel ſaid, that, as he and Glenure were not in good Terms, and ſome of the People that were to meet Glenure had Arms, he did not care to go near them, not knowing what might happen. Depones, That his Maſter ſaid, that it was a dreadful Accident, and was afraid would bring Trouble on the Country; and appeared to be ſorry for what had happened. Depones, That, upon the Evening of Friday the 15th of May laſt, the Deponent and the ſaid Dougal Maccoll overtook Katharine Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, going up the Brae above the Houſe with a Sack, and ſomething in it, under her Arm; and the ſaid Dougal Maccoll aſked her, what ſhe had got there? To which ſhe anſwered, That it was Allan Breck's Cloaths, which ſhe was going to hide; and ſhe hid them accordingly in the Deponent's Preſence. Depones, That, when the ſaid Allan Breck came firſt to Aucharn, he uſed to lie in a Room in the lower End of the Houſe; but afterwards he, and the Pannel's Sons, and any young People that came about the Houſe, when the Seaſon was more advanced, uſed to lie in the Barn. Depones, That, upon the ſaid Friday Evening the 15th of May laſt, Margaret Stewart, the Pannel's Wife, deſired the Deponent and the ſaid Dougal Maccoll to hide all the Arms that were about the Houſe, as there was a Party of Soldiers coming to the Country: That accordingly they took two Guns and three Swords, and a fourth Sword was delivered to the Deponent by Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel; which two Guns and four Swords the Deponent and the ſaid Dougal Maccoll hid in the Brae a good Way above the Pannel's Houſe; and the two Guns in the Clerk's Hands being ſhewn to the Deponent, depones, That theſe were the ſame two Guns that were hid as above. Depones, That the largeſt of the Guns, now ſhewn the Deponent, was loaded, and lay in the Brew-houſe; and the Deponent believes, that either Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, or Allan Breck Stewart, charged the ſaid Gun; for the Deponent ſaw Allan Breck Stewart have the ſaid Gun ſome time before, and go with it in order to ſhoot black Cocks: That, late on Thurſday Evening the 14th of May laſt, after Notice came of Glenure's Murder, the ſaid Dougal Maccoll told the Deponent, that the Pannel's Wife had deſired to hide all the Arms about the Houſe, not knowing but that ſome Soldiers might come to the Country; upon which the Deponent and the ſaid Dougal carried the ſaid loaded Gun from the Brew-houſe, and hid it under the Thatch upon the Out-ſide of the Sheep-houſe, and carried three Swords out of the Barn, and hid them under the Thatch upon the Out-ſide of the ſaid Barn, being that Barn where the Pannel's Children and Allan Breck uſed to lie: That, upon their being deſired by the ſaid Margaret Stewart next Day to hide the Arms better, they took the foreſaid loaded Gun and three Swords out of the Places where they had hid them; and upon their inquiring for the other Gun that uſed to lie in the ſaid Barn, Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, told them, he had hid it under the large Girnel in the Barn, and told them they need not ſtir it, as it was ſafe enough there; but they anſwered, as they were hiding the reſt, they would hide that likewiſe; and accordingly the Deponent went and took the ſaid Gun from the Girnel, where the ſaid Allan told him he had hid it, and concealed them all together as above: Upon Recollection depones, That it was upon the Thurſday Evening the Deponent and the ſaid Dougal Maccoll inquired about the little Gun which lay at the End of the Girnel in the Barn, and that the ſaid Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel, told them he had hid it, as above, under the Girnel. Depones, ſo far as he can remember, he did not ſee the ſaid little Gun upon Thurſday, but ſaw it ſtand as above, either upon Tueſday or Wedneſday preceding, and uſed for ſome Time preceding to ſee it ſtand in the ſame Place. Depones, That it was upon Friday Evening the Deponent took the ſaid Gun from under the Girnel, where the ſaid Allan had hid it; and adds, that the Reaſon he did not ſee it on the Thurſday was, that he was from Home almoſt that Day. Depones, That he did not ſee the ſaid little Gun loaded ſince March laſt, when the black Cocks were crouding; that then there was a Shot of Drops in it, and the ſaid Allan Breck carried it out one Morning, and told that it miſgave with him thrice at a black Cock, and ſhot with it the fourth Time without killing the black Cock. Depones, That the Brew-houſe, where the ſaid large Gun uſed to lie, was always locked, but when People were in it: That the Barn, where the ſaid little Gun ſtood, had a Lock and Key, but was not in uſe to be locked ſince the Crop was removed out of it, which was at the Time they were done with their Oat-ſeed, which was ſome Time before May-Day. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That neither of the Guns were in good Order: That the large or loaded Gun was in uſe, when going to be ſnapped, to ſtand at Half-cock, and the little Gun was in uſe to ſnap or miſfire. Depones, That the little Gun had an old wore Flint in it; and that he obſerved this Flint in the ſaid Gun, when he was in uſe to ſee it ſtand at the End of the Girnel as above; but did not obſerve whether it had a Flint or no, when he took it from under the Girnel as above. Depones, That he knows no Fault the Lock of the little Gun had, but its being in uſe to miſfire; and that the Lock was on the ſaid Gun when he hid it the Friday Evening as above. Depones, That when Allan Breck came, upon Monday the 11th of May laſt, to the Place where the Pannel, Deponent, and others, were covering Potatoes as above, they had ſit together but for about a Quarter of an Hour; the Deponent went to work at Potatoes at a greater Diſtance, and, before he went away, heard a Meſſage had come for his Maſter, to meet Airds at Keil, and heard his Maſter ſpeak of going there; but when he went, or who went along with him, the Deponent does not know: That the Deponent continued working at the Potatoes till the Evening, and the Pannel was not come Home when he came from his Work: That the Pannel came Home at Bed-time, accompanied with John More Macilichattan, who lay with the Deponent that night. Depones, That it was a while after (the Deponent cannot ſay how long) the Pannel parted from the Deponent, and the other People that wrought at the Potatoe-Ground: That Allan Breck came dreſſed in the black ſhort Coat as above, and wrought with them at the Potatoes. Depones, That they all got up together, after the ſaid Allan Breck came to them, and ſat with them as above; and he thinks the Pannel went then towards the Houſe. Depones, That Allan Breck and the Pannel were in uſe to converſe together, ſometimes in Engliſh, and ſometimes in the Iriſh Language. Depones, That, when he went to Fort-William, with the above Letter, to Charles Stewart, the Notary, he had no Orders from his Maſter to inquire after the Motions of Glenure, or to acquaint any body thereof. Depones, That he never ſaw the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart change his Cloaths, and put on ſhort Cloaths, at any Time, at the ſaid James Stewart's Houſe, before the ſaid 11th of May; but that, as the Deponent beſt remembers, at the Time the ſaid James Stewart was at Edinburgh, he ſaw the ſaid Allan Breck dreſſed in a black ſhort Coat, a dun big Coat which the Deponent thinks belonged to Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son; and he heard the ſaid Allan Breck, or others about the Houſe ſay, that he was then going to Rannoch. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God; and depones he cannot write.

Captain David Chapeau, in General Pulteney's Regiment of Foot, married, aged fifty-two, Witneſs cited, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That, upon the 23d of May laſt, he was informed by Mr. Campbell of Barcaldine, that there were ſome Arms hid among the Rocks near the Pannel's Houſe; and was, at the ſame Time, ſhewn the Paragraph of a Letter from Colonel Crawfurd, who commands the Regiment to which the Deponent belongs, addreſſed to Barcaldine, wherein the Colonel deſired the Deponent to go in Search of ſuch Arms. Accordingly the Deponent went that Day with a Party, and took along with him Mr. Patrick Campbell of Auchinſicallan, to direct him the Road; and, when they came to a Hill above the Pannel's Houſe, Mr. Campbell found concealed in a Hill above the Pannel's Houſe two Muſkets and four Broad-ſwords, whereof having informed the Deponent, the Deponent went and ſaw them taken out. And the Muſkets or Fuzees, now in the Clerk's Hands, being ſhewn to the Deponent, depones, That they are the very ſame Fuzees he ſaw taken out as aforeſaid: And depones, That the largeſt of the two Fuzees was loaded, and the other not; and that, having drawn the Shot of the loaded Piece, found it to be loaded with Small-ſhot, by which he means Drops and ſmall Slug mixed together: And it appeared to the Deponent, that the ſaid unloaded Piece had been lately fired, having put his Finger in the Muzzle, which he brought out black. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, whether a Piece which is laid by foul, will not, after a Month's Time, file one's Finger, when put in the Muzzle of it, as well as when it has been lately fired? depones, He cannot tell, not being accuſtomed to ſee Arms uſed ſo. And depones, That the ſaid unloaded Piece had a Lock upon it at the Time; but which had only one Screw-nail in it. But depones, That a Gun, having a Lock with one Screw-nail, may be fit enough to be fired with; and adds, That that End of the Lock wanting the Nail, was tied to the Stock by a String. Depones, That the Pieces, or Fuzees, were carried along to Fort-William, where the Deponent delivered them over to the Adjutant at Fort-William; and does not know by what Means the ſaid Lock upon the ſmall Piece, now amiſſing, was loſt; but believes it to have been by Accident. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Patrick Campbell in Auchinſicallan, married, aged thirty-three Years, Witneſs cited, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That ſome Time in May laſt, he thinks on the 23d, he was called by Captain Chapeau to go along with him to Aucharn in Search of Arms; and, having come to a Moſs, above the Pannel's Houſe of Aucharn, the Deponent diſcovered two Guns in a Cove; whereupon he immediately called to the Captain, who was with him, when they were taken out of the Cove; as alſo, there was alſo there three or four Broad-ſwords. Depones, That one of the Guns was heavier than the other; and the lighteſt Gun had a Stick laid along the Lock tied by a String about the Stock: But, whether the ſaid Lock had any Screw-nail, or not, he does not remember; and that theſe Arms were carried away by Captain Chapeau. Depones, That the lighteſt of the ſaid two Guns was unloaded, and the heavieſt loaded: That he ſaw the Shot of the loaded Gun drawn, which conſiſted of Drops, with ſome ſmall Slug among them. Depones, That, in order to know whether the unloaded Piece had been lately fired, ſeverals put their Finger in the Muzzle of it; and particularly the Deponent; and the Finger coming out black, he, and the reſt with him, from thence concluded, that it had been lately fired. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, whether a Muſket that has been laid by foul, after firing, will not, in like Manner, file a Man's Finger put in the Muzzle of it, after it has been fired a Month or longer before? depones, that he never made that Trial upon a Gun that he knew to have been ſo long before fired. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh, aged thirty-ſix Years, married, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra; and, being ſhewn a Letter, dated at Maryburgh the 14th of May laſt, ſigned William Stewart, and addreſſed on the Back to the Pannel, being the Writing Number 10. in the Inventory ſubjoined to the Libel; depones, That the Letter is of his Hand-writing, and was ſubſcribed by him, and ſent to the Pannel, of the Date it bears, by Ewan Mackenzie, a common Carrier in Maryburgh. And, being alſo ſhewn a Letter dated at Aucharn the 14th of May laſt, Eight o'Clock in the Morning, ſigned James Stewart, and addreſſed on the Back to Mr. Charles Stewart, Writer at Auchintour, depones, That the ſaid Letter was wrote by the Pannel, and ſent, of the Date it bears, by John Beg Maccoll, and in Abſence of the ſaid Charles Stewart, who was not then at Maryburgh, was delivered by the ſaid Maccoll to the Deponent, who broke it open, and told Maccoll, that Charles Stewart was not then in Maryburgh, but that he expected him that Night, but thought that he could not go along with Maccoll: That Maccoll aſked the Deponent, if he ſhould wait for him, or go after him? The Deponent anſwered, it was needleſs; for, if Charles Stewart could could go, he would take a Boat. And, being interrogate whether he wrote any Answer by John Maccell, or if he gave him any verbal Answer to the Postscript, wherein the Pannel wrote to Charles Stewart, to tell the Deponent to send him eight Pounds Sterling? depones, He gave no Answer in Writing; and thinks he did not give any verbal Answer, if it was not, that he bid him tell his Master he was not in Cash, which was the Case. And depones, That the Deponent was himself intended by the William in the Postscript. Depones, That Maccoll did not stay three Minutes with the Deponent, when he went away. Depones, That the next Day, being Friday, or the Day thereafter, the Deponent had a Message from the Pannel about Ten o'Clock Forenoon, or betwixt Ten and Twelve, by Alexander Stewart, Packman, who told the Deponent, that he was sent by the Pannel to Glenevis, and was ordered in his Way to call at the Deponent to send the Pannel five Pounds Sterling; and that his Errand to Glenevis was, to desire him to send for a Horse that he had bought from the Pannel: That the Deponent told the Packman, that he was not in Cash, and could not send the five Pounds; upon which the Packman said, that the five Pounds was to relieve some Cows that the Pannel had bought for the Deponent at Ardshiel; and, if the Deponent did not send the Money, he could not get the Cows: That the Deponent said, he was indifferent, but had not the Money to send; upon which the Deponent's Wife desired the Packman to go forward to Glenevis, and to call there in his Return, and he would get the Money, because they could not conveniently want the Cows: That the Packman accordingly went away; and the Deponent's Wife, as she afterwards told him, for he was not present, gave him three Guineas: That the Deponent is sure the Money was not given on a Sunday, and thinks it was on a Saturday; and therefore believes it was upon Friday the 15th that the Packman first called the Deponent, being certain that a Night intervened betwixt his calling and getting the Money. Depones, That he had no Conversation with the Packman touching Allan Breck Stewart, whose Name was not mentioned by either of them; but the Deponent asked him, if he had come by the Road where that unlucky Murder of Glenure had happened? And the Packman told him, he did; but the Deponent did not ask him who was suspected for it; nor had any other Conversation on that Subject, there being a great many People present in the Shop at the Time. Depones, That the Deponent received two of the Cows about eight or ten Days after, and other two he did not get at all. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That, upon Allan Breck Stewart's first coming to this Country, which was in the Month of February or March last, the Deponent saw him at Edinburgh: That thereafter, upon the 1st of May last, the Deponent happening to be at the Pannel's House, Allan Breck Stewart came there from Rannoch, and was dressed in a short black Coat with clear Buttons, such as these now lying in the Court. Depones, That when the Deponent saw Allan Breck Stewart at Edinburgh, which, he thinks, was in February, he told the Deponent, that it was then but three or four Days since he arrived from France. Depones, That, at that Time, Allan Breck Stewart was dressed in long Cloaths, a blue Coat, and, as the Deponent thinks, a red Vest, a Hat feathered in the Inside. Depones, That, when the Deponent was at the Pannel's, the 1st of May, Charles Stewart was there also, in order to go to Glenure, and intimate a Sist that had been obtained in Name of the Tenants of Ardshiel, upon a Bill of Suspension of a Removing against them. Depones, That Allan Breck Stewart told the Deponent, that he had been a Soldier in the King's Troops at the Battle of Preston; and he thinks, he said, it was in Lascelles' Regiment, but is not positive, whether it was Lascelles' or Murray's. And depones, That thereafter he was in the Rebellion. Depones, That, when he was at the Pannel's House, the 1st of May, as aforesaid, he did not sleep within the Pannel's House, and seemed to be on the Watch, lest he should be searched for. And, being interrogate, whether Allan Breck Stewart did not then lie in the Barn, and some of the Pannel's Children with him? he says, it is very probable he might; but the Deponent knows nothing of it; for the Deponent saw him next Morning, and, he thinks, breakfasted with him at the Pannel's House. Depones, That the Deponent is First-Cousin to the Pannel, and also his Brother-in-law. Depones, That, before Charles Stewart went with the Tenants to Glenure's House, upon the 1st of May, the Deponent heard the Pannel say to the Tenants, that they might go, or not, as they thought proper; but he would be far from advising them. Causa Scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) WILLIAM STEWART. P. GRANT.

Barbara Watt, Spouse to William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh, aged twenty-eight Years, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That the Day immediately after the Murder of Glenure, about Mid-day, Alexander Stewart, Packman, brought the Deponent's Husband, the preceding Witness, a Message from the Pannel, to send him five Pounds Sterling, to pay for some Cows that the Pannel had bought for him: That the Deponent's Husband was angry at the Message, and said, that he had not then the Money to give, having given away some Money that Morning; but that though he had it, he would not send it; and the Packman answered, that he was a sufficient but himself for all the Sum, though the Pannel had not sent for it: That the Packman told at the same Time, that he was going to Glenevis on some Message from the Pannel touching a Horse; therefore the Deponent interposed, and desired the Packman to call there in his Return from Glenevis, and he would get the Money; for that they behoved to have the Cows to stock a Farm they had: That this Conversation happened in the Deponent's Shop, where several other Persons were present. Depones, That, next Day in the Afternoon, the Deponent's Husband not being then at Home, the Deponent met the Packman in the Street of Maryburgh, and happening to have three Guineas then in her Purse, she gave them to him there in the Street, and called her Servant-Maid to be Witness, because there was no Letter from the Pannel, nor Receipt to be given by the Packman. Causa Scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as she shall answer to God.

(Signed) BARBARA WATT. P. GRANT.

Alexander Stewart, travelling Packman in Appin, aged thirty, unmarried, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, by Archibald Campbell, Writer in Inverary, sworn Interpreter foresaid, depones, That, upon Friday the 15th Day of May last, about Twelve o'Clock, the Pannel desired the Deponent to go to Fort William, to William Stewart, Merchant there, and get from him five Pounds, or five Guineas; and told the Deponent, that his Friend Allan Breck was about to leave the Country, as there were Troops coming into it, and that he might be suspected of Glenure's Murder; and that it was incumbent upon him, the Pannel, to supply the said Allan Breck in Money; and the Pannel desired the Deponent to tell the said William Stewart, that he must send him Money, though he should borrow it from twenty Purses; and desired him also to tell the said William to give Credit in five Pounds Sterling to John Breck Maccoll, Bouman to Appin at Koalisnacoan, in case he came to demand such a Sum; and the Pannel desired the Deponent to demand four Pounds Sterling more from the said William, as the Price of a Couple of Milk-Cows bought for him. Depones, That, in consequence of the above Message, he went to Fort-William, where he arrived early in the Evening: That he met the said William Stewart, and demanded from him, for the Use of the Pannel, the two Sums above-mentioned: That the said William told him he had not Money, but desired the Deponent to go to Glenevis, and that he, the said William, had Business to Glenevis, would meet the Deponent there in the Morning, and give him his Errand. Depones, That the Pannel desired the Deponent to tell the said William Stewart to send Notice to Glenevis, that he should send for a stoned Horse Glenevis had bought from the Pannel. Depones, That he went to Glenevis, where he arrived about Sun-set, and staid there the said Friday's Night: That, as the said William did not come there Saturday Morning, the 16th Day of May last, the Deponent went back to Fort-William, and met the said William Stewart upon the Street, and asked him if his Answer was ready? That the said William said, that he would let him go immediately, and went into his own House, and immediately thereafter Mrs. Stewart, Spouse to the said William, came to the Door, and gave the Deponent three Guineas, with which the Deponent went back immediately to Aucharn, and arrived there in the Evening of the said Saturday the 16th of May: That when he came to Aucharn, the Pannel was not at Home; but soon after the Deponent's Arrival, Notice came, that the Pannel, and Allan Stewart his Son, were made Prisoners at Inshaig, a Place of about a Quarter of a Mile from Aucharn: That, immediately upon this Notice, Mrs. Stewart, the Pannel's Wife, and the Deponent, went to Inshaig, and by the Way the Deponent offered the three Guineas he had brought from Fort-William to Mrs. Stewart, but she desired him to keep them: That, upon their Arrival at Inshaig, they found the Pannel a Prisoner; but Mrs. Stewart and the Deponent having had Access to converse with the Pannel apart, the Pannel asked the Deponent, what Money he brought from Fort-William? And upon the Deponent's telling him, that he brought three Guineas, the Pannel pulled a green Purse out of his Pocket, out of which he took two Guineas, and gave them to Mrs. Stewart, and Mrs. Stewart delivered the two Guineas immediately to the Deponent; and the Pannel desired, that the five Guineas should be sent to that unhappy Man, meaning Allan Breck, to see if he could make his Escape; and pitched upon the Deponent as a Person that should go with the Money; and does not remember positively, that the Pannel spoke about Allan Breck's Cloaths: That soon thereafter the Pannel was carried off by a Party to Fort-William, and the Deponent returned to Aucharn with the Pannel's Wife: That the Party and Pannel called at Aucharn, and took a Dram; and upon their going off, Mrs. Stewart, the Pannel's Wife, told the Deponent, that he must go to Allan Breck with the five Guineas and his Cloaths; and upon the Deponent's inquiring where he would find him? Mrs. Stewart told him, that he would cast up in Koalisnacoan. Depones, That, some Time after Night-fall, the Deponent got his Supper at Aucharn, and how soon he was done eating, Mrs. Stewart, the Pannel's Wife, carried the Deponent to the Back of the Brewhouse, where there lay a Sack, out of which the said Mrs. Stewart took a blue side Coat, red Waistcoat, black Breeches, a Hat, and some Shirts, all which she delivered to the Deponent, ordering him to go with the Cloaths and Money to Koalisnacoan immediately, and deliver them to John Breck Maccoll, Bouman to Appin, if he did not meet Allan Breck himself. Depones, That the said Mrs. Stewart directed the Deponent not to carry the Cloaths to John Breck Maccoll's House, lest any body might see them. Depones, That he declined going, and told Mrs. Stewart that she might send some other Person, and that, at any Rate, he did not chuse to go alone in the Night-time; but that Mrs. Stewart insisted upon his going, telling there was no other Body she could send, as both her Servants were gone to Fort-William, and desired the Deponent to carry his Sister, Margaret Stewart, a Part of the Way with him: That accordingly the said Margaret his Sister went along with the Deponent as far as Larich in Glenco, where she parted with him about Day-light Sunday Morning: That thereafter the Deponent travelled alone to Koalisnacoan, and left the Cloaths, as directed, at the Root of a Fir-tree, at some Distance from the Houses; and as the Deponent was going to the House, he met said John Breck Maccoll, and asked him if Allan Breck was there? And upon his denying that he was there, the Deponent expressed some Surprize, and told that he was sent with Money and Cloaths to him; told from whence he came, and how he got the Money and Cloaths above-mentioned; upon which the said John Breck Maccoll told the Deponent, that Allan Breck was in the Heugh of Corrynakeigh, above the House of Koalisnacoan; and if the Deponent inclined to see the said John Breck Maccoll directed him to go to a Hill above the Houses and whistle, and that the said Allan Breck would come to him: That the Deponent answered, he had gone far enough after the said Allan Breck already, pointed out to John Breck where he had left the Cloaths, and gave him the five Guineas to be given Allan Breck. Depones, That he went to the said John Breck's House, where he slept for some Time, and thereafter dined with the said John Breck at his House. Depones, That the said John Breck Maccoll told the Deponent, he did not know how the said Allan Breck could leave the Country, as he had no Victuals, and he, the said John, had none to give him, and desired the Deponent to go to Mrs. Macdonald of Glenco's House at Inver, and get a Peck of Meal for Allan Breck's Uſe, which the Deponent refuſed. Depones, That the ſaid John Breck Maccoll told the Deponent, that, unleſs he had come with the Money and Cloaths, he, the ſaid John Breck, would hence been obliged to go to Fort-William for Money to the ſaid Allan Breck. Depones, That he, the Deponent, came back to Aucharn upon the Evening of the Sunday the 17th Day of May laſt, and the Pannel's Wife aſked him if he had ſeen Allan Breck? And upon his anſwering he had not, and telling that Allan Breck was at Koaliſnacoan, tho' he had not ſeen him, and that he had given the Cloaths and Money to John Breck, ſhe appeared ſatisfied. Depones, That the ſaid John Breck Maccoll deſired the Deponent to conceal his carrying the Cloaths and Money to Koaliſnacoan, as above; told him that he could not prove it againſt him, and that he could ſafely depone he did not deliver the Cloaths to him, ſince he only pointed out where they were. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God. And declares he cannot write. And further depones, That he is a diſtant Relation of the Pannel's, tho' he cannot tell the Degree: That his Father lives at a Quarter of a Mile's Diſtance from Aucharn; and that he, the Deponent, uſed to be often in the Pannel's Houſe. And this is alſo Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

John Breck Maccoll, Bouman, to Appin in Koaliſnacoan, aged forty Years, married, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, by the above Mr. Archibald Campbell, ſworn Interpreter, depones, That, upon the Afternoon of Saturday the 16th Day of May laſt, as the Deponent was in a Fir-buſh near Aldaveim, at the Foot of the Heugh of Corrynakeigh in Koaliſnacoan, he heard a Whiſtle; and, upon looking up, ſaw Allan Breck Stewart, at a little Diſtance, beckoning to the Deponent to come towards him; which he did: That after Salutations, the Deponent told him, he was afraid it was no good Action that occaſioned his being in ſuch a remote Place, and at ſuch a Diſtance from any common Road: That Allan Breck anſwered, the Place was not very far from a common Road: That the Deponent, having heard the Day before of Glenure's Murder, charged Allan Breck with being guilty of it: That Allan Breck aſked the Deponent, what he had heard about the Murder? That Deponent anſwered, That he had ſeen no Perſon from the Strath of Appin; but that two poor Women, that had come up Glenco, were telling that Glenure was murdered Thurſday Evening in the Wood of Lettermore, and that two People were ſeen going from the Place where he was murdered; and that he, Allan Breck, was ſaid to be one of them: That Allan Breck anſwered, he had no Concern in it; and that, if his Information was right, there was but one Perſon about the Murder; and that, as he was idle in the Country, he was ſure he would be ſuſpected of it; but that that would give him little Concern, if he had not been a Deſerter, which would bear harder upon him, in caſe he was apprehended, than any thing could be proved againſt him about the Murder: That the Deponent did not believe him, when he ſaid he had no Hand in the Murder of Glenure; and not caring to preſs it much upon him, told him, that, as he was already ſuſpected, it was dangerous to have any Intercourſe with him, and preſſed him to leave the Place, leſt he ſhould bring the Deponent and his Family to Trouble: That Allan Breck ſaid, he did not doubt but the Family of Ardſhiel would be ſuſpected of the Murder, and it was probable the Pannel, and Allan Stewart his Son, might be taken into Cuſtody about it; and that he, Allan Breck, was afraid Allan Stewart the Pannel's Son's Tongue was not ſo good as his Father's; by which Words the Deponent underſtood, that Allan was eaſier entrapped than the Pannel; and the Deponent ſtill inſiſting upon Allan Breck's leaving that Neighbourhood, the ſaid Allan Breck told him, he would not leave the Town for eight Days, unleſs ſome Neceſſaries he expected came to him; and told the Deponent, unleſs ſome Money came for him before next Morning, he, the Deponent, muſt go to Fort-William with a Letter: That tho' the Deponent refuſed to go, Allan Breck looked about among the Trees, and finding a Wood-pigeon's Quill, made a Pen of it, and having made Ink of ſome Powder he took out of a Powder-horn that was in his Pocket, he wrote a Letter, which he told the Deponent he muſt deliver to William Stewart, Merchant at Maryburgh; and, upon the Deponent's telling him that he would by no Means undertake that, as he was informed that every body that went to Fort-William was ſearched, Allan Breck ſaid it was an eaſy Matter to hide a Letter; the Deponent anſwered, If he was catched upon the Streets, what would he do with it? Allan Breck told him, that the Letter muſt not be found upon him by any Means, and, if he was catched with the Letter, he muſt eat it before it was found: That the Deponent then told the ſaid Allan Breck, that he did not know but he would be obliged to go for ſome Beer next Day to Fort-William, in which Caſe he might poſſibly carry the Letter; but at the ſame Time told the ſaid Allan Breck, if he was catched with the Letter, he would tell all he knew about him: That the ſaid Allan Breck deſired the Deponent to go to Callart or Glenco's Houſe for a Peck of Meal to him, which the Deponent refuſed; and at parting, the ſaid Allan Breck told the Deponent, he would ſee him next Day. Depones, That, at the Time of the above Converſation, the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart was dreſſed in a dun-coloured great Coat, black ſhort Coat, and blue Trowſers ſtriped with white. And the Deponent having ſeen in Court the black ſhort Coat with the Buttons on the Pockets, and the Trowſers, depones, That they are the ſhort Coat and Trowſers he ſaw the ſaid Allan Breck wear, or exactly like them. Depones, That early upon Sunday Morning the 17th Day of May laſt, as the Deponent got up to look about his Corns, he ſaw a Man, which he at firſt imagined to be the ſaid Allan Breck Stewart, travelling towards him up the Glen; but, upon his coming near, the Deponent knew him to be Alexander Stewart, travelling Packman in Appin (the immediate preceding Witneſs), who is Couſin-german by the Father's Side to Allan Breck; and after Salutation, and the Deponent's expreſſing his Surprize at ſeeing him ſo early, the ſaid Alexander Stewart aſked the Deponent, if he had ſeen Allan Breck? And the Deponent refuſing his having ſeen him, Alexander Stewart ſeemed ſurprized, and told that he was informed he would meet Allan Breck there; and that he had brought ſome Neceſſaries for him: And the Deponent inquiring what he had brought, the ſaid Alexander Stewart informed him, that he had brought five Guineas and ſome Cloaths; and told that he had a great deal of Trouble in getting the Money: That he had been ſent by the Pannel to William Stewart, Merchant, at Fort-William, from whoſe Wife he got three Guineas; and that the Pannel, or his Wife, gave him the other two Guineas; and that the Pannel's Wife gave him the Cloaths, and informed him that Allan Breck was to meet him at Koaliſnacoan; but that now he would leave the Money and Cloaths with the Deponent: Upon this the Deponent told the ſaid Alexander Stewart, that he had ſeen Allan Breck the Day before, and that he expected theſe Things; and told him, that he believed Allan Breck was then in the Heugh of Corrynakeigh, and, if he would go to a Hill that the Deponent pointed out to him, and whiſtle once or twice, he believed Allan Breck would come to him: The ſaid Alexander Stewart declined going, alledging he was very much fatigued: That the Deponent told the ſaid Alexander Stewart, that he wondered he would not go that Length to ſee his Uncle's Son; the ſaid Alexander Stewart anſwered, That he had ſlept none for two Nights, and was very much fatigued; and upon this he delivered to the Deponent the five Guineas, and told he had left the Cloaths at ſome Diſtance, and would ſhew them to the Deponent when he was going away: That the Deponent told the ſaid Alexander Stewart, that Allan Breck wanted a Peck of Meal from Glenco or Callart's Houſe; and that he, the ſaid Alexander Stewart, ought to get it for him; but the ſaid Alexander Stewart refuſed to go for it: That, afterwards, the ſaid Alexander Stewart ſlept in the Deponent's Houſe. Depones, That the ſaid Alexander Stewart told him, that the Pannel, and Allan his Son, were made Priſoners the Evening before, and ſent to Fort-William; and, upon the Deponent's inquiring, who was ſuſpected of Glenure's Murder? the ſaid Alexander anſwered, That it was Allan Breck, and that it was likely that the Pannel, and Allan his Son, would ſtand the firſt Trial for it. Depones, That the ſaid Alexander Stewart and the Deponent dined together; and as the ſaid Alexander Stewart was going away, about Twelve o'Clock, he pointed out a Fir-tree, at the Root of which he ſaid he had hid Allan Breck's Cloaths. Depones, That, after the Deponent had gone to Bed, upon the ſaid Sunday Evening, he heard one knocking at the Window, and imagined it might be Allan Breck; the Deponent got up, and went out in his Shirt, and ſaw the ſaid Allan Breck at a little Diſtance from the Houſe; and, upon the Deponent's coming up to him, the ſaid Allan Breck aſked him if any Meſſage had come for him? The Deponent told him, That his Uncle's Son had come with five Guineas and ſome Cloaths: That Allan Breck complained there was but little Money, but hoped it would do his Buſineſs: That the Deponent told the ſaid Allan Breck, he was afraid he would ſtarve among the Heather; and that he was not able to help him: That Allan Breck anſwered, he had no Occaſion for Victuals, but wanted a Drink very much: Upon which the Deponent went back to his Houſe, and carried out ſome Whey, or ſome Milk and Water, in a Noggin, and the five Guineas, and gave both to Allan Breck: That the Deponent then went for the Cloaths, which he alſo gave the ſaid Allan Breck, which conſiſted of a blue long Coat, red Waiſtcoat, black Breeches, a Hat, ſome Stockings and Shirts: That the Deponent told the ſaid Allan Breck, that the Pannel, and his Son Allan, were apprehended upon Account of Glenure's Murder; to which Allan Breck anſwered, That that was no more than he expected; but it would not ſignify much, as there could be no Proof againſt them; but expreſſed ſome Apprehenſion, leſt Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel, might be betrayed by his own Tongue: That the Deponent deſired the ſaid Allan, now that he had got all the Neceſſaries he expected, to go about his Buſineſs; and the ſaid Allan Breck promiſed to do ſo; but told the Deponent, that he muſt meet him, the ſaid Allan Breck, next Morning; that he muſt deliver the Deponent the Cloaths he, the ſaid Allan Breck, had then on, to wit, the black ſhort Coat and Trowſers ſhewn to the Deponent in the Clerk's Hands, in order to be kept by the Deponent till he delivered them to the Pannel's Wife: That the Deponent promiſed to meet the ſaid Allan Breck next Morning, but did not ſee him; and when the Deponent went out next Morning, he found the ſaid ſhort black Coat, Trowſers, and the Noggin in which the Deponent carried the Drink to the ſaid Allan Breck, lying together in the Place where the Deponent parted with the ſaid Allan Breck the Night before; and found in one of the Pockets of the ſaid ſhort Coat the Powder-horn now ſhewn him in the Clerk's Hands; and depones, That he has not ſeen the ſaid Allan Breck ſince. Depones, That, in a Converſation the Deponent had with the Pannel, as the Deponent beſt remembers, about two Years ago, Mention being made of Glenure's being about to take on the Management of the Eſtate of Ardſhiel from the ſaid Pannel, and thereby diſabling the Pannel from being of any Service to Ardſhiel's Children, he heard the Pannel ſay, he would be willing to ſpend a Shot upon Glenure, though he went upon his Knees to his Window to fire it. Depones, That he heard a waif Report in the Country, that Ardſhiel (attainted) had ſent Home a Meſſage, that he believed all his Friends were dead, when Glenure was allowed to go on at the Rate he did. Depones, That, upon the Evening of the ſaid Saturday the 16th Day of May laſt, Katharine Maccoll, Spouſe to Hugh Maccoll, in Koaliſnacoan, told the Deponent, that ſhe had ſeen a Man in the Heugh of Corrynakeigh that Day, at ſome Diſtance, and was greatly frighted: That the Deponent told her, there uſed to be Bogles ſeen in that Place, but ſhe muſt take no Notice of what ſhe had ſeen, for fear of frighting the Women of the Town, and prevent them from attending their Cattle in that Part; and that the Reaſon of telling her ſo, was for Fear it would be known it was Allan Breck ſhe ſaw. Depones, That, when he found the black ſhort Coat and Trowſers he ſaw Allan Breck wear, upon Monday Morning the 18th of May laſt, he hid them; and that, after he, the Deponent, had been ſome time Priſoner at Fort-William, he came along with a Party of Soldiers, to whom he ſhewed the Place he hid the ſaid Coaths; and the ſaid Party took the ſaid Cloaths out of the Place he had hid them in, in the Deponent's Preſence, and carried them to Fort-William. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God; and depones he cannot write.

Hugh Macclean, Barber in Maryburgh, aged twenty-ſeven Years, married, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, depones, That being a Barber to his Trade, and one Day being called by the Pannel to the Priſon to ſhave him, which he thinks was upon a Saturday, the Pannel aſked him, him, what News he heard in the Town? To which the Deponent answered, That he heard that he, the Pannel, was to be carried to Edinburgh on the Monday following: Whereupon the Pannel said, That that was a Matter gave him no Concern, and wished it had happened sooner, and was afraid of nothing but that his Servants might be enticed to take Money, and turn against him; and desired the Deponent, as from him, to tell his Servants to say nothing but Truth, to keep their Minds to themselves, and he would take Care of them; and accordingly the Deponent delivered the Pannel's Message, in his own Words, to two of his Servants, who were then in separate Custody in the same Prison; and that they were both of the Name of Maccoll. Depones, That at this Time the Pannel gave the Deponent a Shilling, and said, when he came again to shave him, he would give him more; but that he never got more from him than the said Shilling. Depones, That from the Pannel he went to his Son Allan also to shave him, to whom he told the Commission his Father had given to be delivered to the Servants; and the said Allan gave him Half-a-Crown. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God; and depones he cannot write.

Thomas Baird, Serjeant in General Pulteney's Regiment of Foot, aged thirty-two Years, married, Witness cited, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel; and having been called into Court, before closing of a former Deposition, in order to open a Bundle containing two short Coats and a Pair of Trowsers, to be shewn to a preceding Witness during his Examination; and, after opening the said Bundle, was removed, and called in again; and being solemnly sworn and interrogate, depones, That, about the Beginning of July last, to the best of the Deponent's Remembrance, he was sent with a Party of Soldiers, and a Guide along with him, whose Name, he thinks, was John Breck Maccoll, to a Place computed of above ten Miles Distance from Fort-William over Lochleven; but after passing the Loch, their Guide carried them two Miles down the Side of the Loch, and up to the Top of a Rock, and out of a Clift in the Rock, the Guide took a short black Coat with silver Buttons, and a Powder-horn in the Pocket, and a Pair of Trowsers, and gave them to the Deponent; and the Deponent carried them to Fort-William, and delivered them to Colonel Crawfurd. Depones, That one of the black Coats, with the Powder-horn and Trowsers, that the Deponent took out of the Pocket as above-mentioned, are the same that his Guide delivered to him, and which he delivered to Colonel Crawfurd, as above deponed. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

The Prosecutors Proof being concluded, the Pannel, for his Exculpation, adduced the following Witnesses.

HUGH STEWART, Residenter in Edinburgh, aged thirty and upwards, married, being sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That he knows Allan Breck Stewart to have several Times gone to France, and returned again to this Country; particularly that he went to France in 1747, and returned to Scotland in December 1749; returned to France in May 1751, and came back in February 1752; and when in this Country, he was in use to lodge at the Deponent's House in Edinburgh: That he observed him to be afraid to be seen abroad, and kept at home in the Day-time, and went abroad under the Cloud of Night; for which he gave this Reason to the Deponent, that he had been a Soldier in Colonel Lee's Regiment, from which he had deserted, and was afraid to be discovered. And being interrogate, depones, That, when Allan Breck went abroad, as has been said, in May 1751, he owed the Deponent a Guinea, and, being run short of Money, he drew a Bill on the Pannel for that Sum, whereof he acquainted the Pannel some Time he thinks in July; and some Time in August he received the Money by Maccoll, the Appin Carrier; and by the same Carrier sent the Pannel the Bill upon him. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) HUGH STEWART. JA. FERGUSON.

Duncan Stewart of Glenbuckie, aged twenty-seven Years, unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That he was acquainted with Allan Breck Stewart; and that, at any Time, when he came from France to this Country, he had no fixed Residence to the Deponent known, but went about among his Friends and Acquaintances: That when he came last to Scotland, his Dress was a long blue Coat, a red Waistcoat, black Breeches, and a feathered Hat: That, in March last, when he was at the Deponent's House, he was in that Dress; but, at other Times, he has seen him in a different Dress, particularly in April last at Glenenty, which was the last Time he saw him; his Dress was, a black short Coat with clear Buttons, a Tartan Waistcoat, Trowsers, and a Bonnet; and, above all, a dun-coloured great Coat. Depones, That he remembers, that upon one Occasion, while Allan Breck was at his House, being the first Time he came, he for two Days, to the Deponent's certain Knowledge, wore a short blue Coat of the Deponent's, which the Deponent, at his Desire, lent him; and whether he wore it any more than two Days, of the ten Days he at that Time staid at the Deponent's House, the Deponent does not know, not having been at Home all the Time. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) DUN. STEWART. JA. FERGUSON.

Duncan Ferguson, Servant to Duncan Stewart of Glenbuckie, aged twenty-nine, unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, about the 20th of April last, he saw Allan Breck Stewart at the House of Branachile, the House of the former Witness; at which Time he was dressed in a short black Coat with clear white Buttons, a Tartan Vest, Trowsers, Tartan Hose, and Bonnet. Depones, That he staid there two Nights, and went from thence, as the Deponent was informed, to Glenfinlas, and staid a Night there. Depones, That the Deponent also saw him at Glenbuckie's House in March last, at which Time he was dressed in a blue Coat, red Vest, and feathered Hat. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God; and depones he cannot write.

(Signed) P. GRANT.

Duncan Stewart in Glenfinlas, aged thirty-two Years, married, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That one Night, between the 20th and 23d of April, the Deponent saw Allan Breck Stewart at Glenfinlas, and was dressed in a black short Coat and white clear Buttons, Trowsers, and a Bonnet, and had on a dun big Coat above the short Coat. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) DUNCAN STEWART. P. GRANT.

Katharine Macinnes, late Servant to Alexander Stewart of Ballachelish, aged twenty-two Years, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, by Mr. Archibald Campbell of Stonefield, sworn Interpreter, depones, That in the Evening of the 14th of May last, the Deponent saw Allan Breck Stewart at the Goat-house in the Moor of Ballachelish after Glenure was killed; and that Allan Breck then asked her, what was the Occasion of the Stir in the Town? and that she told him, Glenure was murdered; and further asked her, who might have committed the Murder? and that she told him she did not know; and that the said Allan further desired the Deponent to tell Donald Stewart in Ballachelish to go to the Pannel and desire him to send the said Allan Money; and that she delivered this Message to Donald Stewart that same Night. Depones, That she told the said Donald Stewart where she saw Allan Breck; but that she did not tell him to go to the said Allan, nor did he desire her. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as she shall answer to God; and depones she cannot write.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

John Stewart younger of Ballachelish, aged twenty-six, unmarried, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That, the Day after the Murder of Glenure, the Deponent was at the Pannel's House, who, after Twelve o'Clock of the Day, told the Deponent, that he had had a Message that Morning from Allan Breck by Donald Stewart, to send him Money; but does not remember, whether the Pannel told him the Place where he was directed to send it; and the Pannel told the Deponent, that he was resolved to send him Money. Depones, That the last Day of December last, the Deponent was in Company with the deceased Glenure, an Uncle of Ardshiel's, and the Pannel, and Mr. Campbell of Ballieveolan, when, after the Company had drunk very hard, and were all drunk, some high Words arose between Glenure and Ardshiel's Uncle, and they were like to come to Blows, which both of them attempted; but the Deponent once and again separated them: That Ardshiel's Uncle happened to go out of the House, as did also the Pannel, and the Deponent called to the People without not to let them in again, because they were drunk: That the Pannel had invited Glenure next Day to his House, which Glenure had accepted of, and therefore the Pannel pressed to come in again to the House to renew the Invitation, and take his Leave of Glenure; but the Deponent would not allow him to come in, and undertook to make his Excuse to Glenure: That the Deponent, coming into the House, found Glenure standing with a drawn Hanger in his Hand; and the Deponent asked what he meant by that? and Glenure answered, That he should not allow him to be mobbed there; upon which the Deponent assured him he should not be mobbed there; and then Glenure threw the Hanger upon the Bed: That the Deponent went Home with the Pannel, and next Day Glenure came there before Dinner, and dined, and made Apologies mutually for what passed the Night before; and that Mr. Campbell of Ballieveolan dined there also. And being interrogate for the Pursuers, depones, That the Deponent was in Edinburgh in August last, and was present at Consultations of the Pannel, his Lawyers and Agents, touching his Defence. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JOHN STEWART. P. GRANT.

Alexander Stewart in Auchindarroch, aged about eighteen, unmarried, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, by Mr. Archibald Campbell of Stonefield, sworn Interpreter, depones, That, to the best of his Knowledge, he saw Donald Stewart in Ballachelish and the Pannel together, upon the Marches between Aucharn and Auchindarroch, in the Morning of the 15th of May; and that he himself was at the Time digging Ground, with the other Tenants of the Town. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) ALEX. STEWART.
ARCH. CAMPBELL.
P. GRANT.

Alexander Stewart of Ballachelish elder, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That the Deponent was with Allan Breck Stewart's Father a considerable Time before his Death; but, after he had contracted the Indisposition whereof he died, he told the Deponent, that he intended to leave the Care of his Children, and of his Affairs, to Ardshiel and the Pannel: That the Deponent knows they accordingly took upon them the Management, tho' he believes the Nomination was only verbal, and not in Writing. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) ALEX. STEWART. P. GRANT.

John Stewart, Tenant in Auchnacoan, aged fifty-two Years, married, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That Allan Breck's Father, as he believes, named the Pannel to be Tutor to his Children, and no other Tutor; and the Cause of the Deponent's Belief is, because he saw the Pannel take the Management of their Affairs upon him. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JOHN STEWART. P. GRANT.

John Flockhart, Writer in Edinburgh, aged thirty and upwards, married, Witness cited, sworn, purged and examined ut supra, depones, That being shewn a Letter by the Pannel to Mr. John Macfarlane, Writer to the Signet, dated the 19th of May last, depones, That that Letter came to the Deponent's Hands at Edinburgh by Course of Post the 24th of May last, and the Deponent being to go for Perth next Day, he gave the Letter to Alexander Hart, Clerk to Mr. Macfarlane, to be delivered to his Master; and knows not whether any Thing was done by Mr. Macfarlane, pursuant to that Letter. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

(Signed) JO. FLOCKHART.

And after closing the Oath, being further interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That there was no other Letter accompanying the one one before-mentioned. And this is alſo Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

(Signed) Jo. FLOCKHART. P. GRANT.

John Cameron of Strone, aged twenty-five, married, Witneſs cited, and ſworn ut ſupra, depones, That, about a Year ago, being in Company with ſome of the Tenants of Rannoch, in a Houſe in Rannoch, a Man came unto them, whom they called Serjeant More Cameron, whom the Deponent never ſaw before, nor ſince: That the Tenants were complaining of Glenure for his hard Uſage of the Tenants of Ardſhiel; and the ſaid Serjeant More ſaid, that if he met him in the Highway, he would ſhoot him. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

(Signed) JOHN CAMERON. P. GRANT.

Ewan Cameron, Servant to John Cameron of Strone, aged twenty Years, unmarried, Witneſs cited, ſworn, purged and examined ut ſupra, by Archibald Campbell, Writer in Inverary, ſworn Interpreter foreſaid, depones, That he had Occaſion to be in Rannoch Harveſt laſt: That he ſaw there a Man that was called Serjeant More Cameron, whom he never ſaw before, or ſince. Depones, That he ſaw the Man called Serjeant More in a Houſe; but does not know the Name of the Town, or the Name of the Man to whom the Houſe belonged, the Deponent having never been in Rannoch but that one Time. Depones, That he heard the ſaid Serjeant More ſay, That, if he, the ſaid Serjeant More, met with Glenure, he did not care tho' he ſhould be up-ſides with him; but had no Reaſon for ſaying ſo, he having heard no more of his Diſcourſe. Depones, That the Deponent was then Servant to the former Witneſs, and was then in Rannoch attending him. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God; and declares he cannot write.

(Signed) ARCH. CAMPBELL. P. GRANT.

Then the Procurators for the Pannel declared their Probation to be concluded.

Follows the Writings produced in Evidence for the Proſecutors.

The judicial Declarations of the Pannel, his Wife, and Children.

AT Fort-William, the 2d Day of June 1752 Years, in Preſence of George Douglas, Sheriff-Subſtitute of the Sheriffdom of Inverneſs, ſitting in Judgment, compeared James Stewart in Aucharn, now Priſoner at this Place; who being judicially examined anent the Matter underwritten, declares judicially, 'That Allan Breck Stewart came to his 'Houſe in the latter End of March, upon his coming from France; that 'he ſtaid two Nights there, when the Declarant went to Edinburgh, 'leaving the ſaid Allan at his Houſe: That the ſaid Allan came to the 'Declarant's Houſe in the Month of April, after being at Glenbuckie's 'and Rannoch; and that, upon Monday the 11th Day of May laſt, the 'ſaid Allan came to the Declarant's Houſe from Faſnacloich;' and the Declarant being called upon by Mr. Campbell of Airds to go to Keil, had little Converſation with the ſaid Allan till his Return, and no other after his Return, than what was in the Preſence of the Family; 'Nor does 'the Declarant remember, whether he ſupped with the ſaid Allan that 'Night or not; but rather thinks he did; or whether the ſaid Allan was 'dreſſed in a long blue Coat and Hat, or in a black ſhort Coat with 'ſilver Buttons:' That the Declarant thought himſelf concerned in Drink that Night, having drunk at the Miller of Keil's Houſe with the old Piper, the young Piper, the ſaid Miller, and old Duncan Maccombich, and his Son Archibald: The Declarant went away to Appin's Houſe early upon Tueſday the 12th Day of May laſt, and did not ſee Allan that Day or ſince: That when the Declarant was at Edinburgh, the ſaid Allan carried a ſhort black Coat with ſilver Buttons, belonging to the Declarant, with him to Glenbuckie's and Rannoch, and wore it upon his Return; when the Declarant told the ſaid Allan, that he wondered how his ſhort Coat fitted him, as Allan was a large Man, and the Declarant a little Man; to which he anſwered, that it ſerved him well enough: That, upon Monday Night the 11th Day of May laſt, the Declarant's Son Charles told him, he was to go to Glenco, Callart, and Fort-William; and that he did not ſee his ſaid Son from that Night, till he ſaw him in this Place, after that he, the Declarant, was made Priſoner; nor is the Declarant ſure if his ſaid Son went to Glenco or Callart till Wedneſday the 13th Day of May laſt. Declares alſo, That his Son Allan was at Home on Sunday's Night the 10th of May laſt; but is not ſure whether he was at Home all that Day or not. 'That there were no Strangers at the De-'clarant's Houſe upon the ſaid Sunday's Night, or on the following Mon-'day or Monday's Night, nor yet on the Tueſday or Tueſday's Night follow-'ing, except the ſaid Allan Breck and Faſnacloich's Daughter upon the ſaid 'Monday's Night.' Declares, That John Stewart younger of Ballachelish was at his Houſe upon Wedneſday's Night, and is ſure that Ewan Roy Maccoll, Brother to Appin's Bouman at Kealiſnacoan, ſupped at his, the Declarant's Houſe, either upon the Wedneſday or Thurſday's Night the 13th or 14th Days of May laſt; and that the ſaid Ewan Roy Maccoll was alſo at the Declarant's Houſe upon Saturday thereafter, in the Forenoon, along with his Siſter, Spouſe to Ewan Maccombich, Padler in Guil, and then paid the Declarant ten Pounds Scots, except ſeven Shillings and Two-Pence, for which the ſaid Ewan Maccombich, Padler, became Debitor; which ten Pounds Scots was in Payment of the Graſs-meal of Cattle; and that the ſaid Ewan Roy Maccoll did then give to the Declarant a Liſt of Debts due to him in the Country, whereof twenty Pounds Scots was to be applied towards Payment of a Debt due by the ſaid Ewan to his ſaid Siſter, as the Declarant had the Management of her Effects in the Country of Appin; and which Siſter's Name is Chriſtian Maccoll, and was laſt Winter Servitrix to Mr. Stewart of Ballachallan: That the Declarant delivered ſome Cattle to Duncan Stewart, Servitor to Glenbuckie, and Solomon Maccoll, Servitor to the Declarant's Son Allan Stewart, and John Maccoll, now Priſoner at Fort-William, at the Marches betwixt Aucharn and Sallachan; and that the ſaid Ewan Roy Maccoll was to meet them at Glenduror with Cattle of his own that were to be ſent South along with the Declarant's; and that the ſaid John Maccoll parted with them at a Shealing called the Immerin; and that the Declarant did not ſee the ſaid Ewan Roy Maccoll ſince. And being interrogate, if he had any Arms in his Houſe? declares, That when he was made Priſoner, he had a ſmall Fowling-Piece and a Broad-ſword, which Broad-ſword was to be kept for the Children of the deceaſed Allan Stewart of Cuil, till they were of Age. Declares alſo, That the ſaid Solomon Maccoll, formerly Servant to Donald Stewart at Taybarnan, came Home to his Service on the 15th or 16th Days of May laſt: That John Stewart in Auchnacoan came to the Declarant's Houſe upon the Evening of the 14th Day of May laſt, and ſtaid there that Night; and declares, that he did not ſend him any Meſſage, either that Day or the preceding Day, nor had he any Buſineſs that the Declarant knows of. Declares alſo, That, the Afternoon of Glenure's Murder, ſeveral of the Tenants in the Neighbourhood, particularly the Tenants of Auchindarroch, and Duncan Stewart at Inſhaig, and Robert Stewart the Miller, came to the Declarant, to know what they ſhould do, or whether they ſhould go near the Corpſe; and that he adviſed them to go; but that neither he nor his Son Allan went there, becauſe he underſtood that Ballieveolan and his Sons were to be there; 'and 'that there were ſome Chagrine betwixt him and them, they having 'taken the Declarant's Poſſeſſion the Year before, wherein he had a Stock 'of Cattle, viz. Glenduror, a Part of the Eſtate of Ardſhiel: That when 'young Ballachelish was over-night at the Declarant's Houſe as aforeſaid, 'they had a Converſation about the Removal of the Tenants from the 'Eſtate of Ardſhiel; the Reſult of which was, that they ſhould continue 'their Poſſeſſion, and take the Hazard of the violent Profits, unleſs they 'were forced out; and that he had Converſations with old Ballachelish 'to the ſame Purpoſe; and that he gave the ſame Opinion to ſuch of the 'ſaid Tenants as applied to him;' but recommended to them to uſe no Force in keeping their Poſſeſſions: That the Declarant had no written, but a verbal Commiſſion from the ſaid Tenants, to negotiate for them at Law; nor did he receive any Money from them; but that the Tenants of Lettermore and Ardſhiel and the Miller promiſed to refund his Expences for repreſenting their Caſe, particularly Dugald and John Maccombichs in Ardſhiel. 'And being interrogate, if he had any Converſation 'with the ſaid Allan Breck concerning Glenure? the ſaid Allan aſked the 'Declarant, if he heard that Serjeant More was come from France, or 'if he was in the Country of Appin? To which the Declarant an-'ſwered, That he did not hear he was in Appin, but heard he was in 'Glenlive laſt Year; whereupon the ſaid Allan told the Declarant, that 'Serjeant More ſwore he would kill Glenure, becauſe of the Treatment 'he gave the Tenants on the Eſtate of Mamore, Part of Lochiel Eſtate.' Declares alſo, 'That the ſaid Allan Breck threatened, that he would 'challenge Ballieveolan and his Sons to fight, whenever he met them, 'becauſe of his removing the Declarant laſt Year from Glenduror, and 'being about to remove the other Tenants this Year from ſome other 'Parts of the Eſtate of Ardſhiel;' and that the Declarant told him then, they would not fight him, as they would not conſider him as their Equal; and if he had come to the Country to fight, he had better ſtaid in France. 'And being interrogate, if he had any Converſation with Wil-'liam Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh? declares he had, about the Ex-'pediency of the ſaid Tenants their keeping their Poſſeſſions; and that 'it was the ſaid William's Opinion, that they ſhould keep their Poſſeſ-'ſions; and that their Caſe ſhould be repreſented to the Barons of Ex-'chequer; and that it was hard they ſhould be turned out, until their 'Caſe was ſtated.' And being aſked, if he had any Converſation with Callart anent the Removings? declares, he does not remember; but that commonly every body he ſaw aſked him, what ſhould become of the Tenants of the Eſtate of Ardſhiel? To which he anſwered, he did not know till the Term-day. This Declaration is emitted before the ſaid Sheriff-Subſtitute, Place and Date foreſaid, before theſe Witneſſes, Colonel Howard, Colonel Crawfurd, Donald Campbell of Airds, and Colin Campbell of Carquhin, Eſqrs.

(Signed) JAMES STEWART.
GEORGE DOUGLAS, S. S.

G. HOWARD, Witneſs.
DONALD CAMPBELL, Witneſs.
CO. CAMPBELL, Witneſs.

Eodem die, The ſaid James Stewart, being re-examined, judicially declares, upon Recollection, That it was upon Thurſday the 14th Day of May laſt, that his ſaid Son Charles went to Glenco, and not on Wedneſday, as before-mentioned; and that Callart was at the Declarant's Houſe upon Sunday's Night the 10th Day of May laſt. Declares, That, before Glenure ſerved the Warnings againſt the Tenants of the Eſtate of Ardſhiel, the Laird of Appin propoſed to accommodate ſome of them in Land: That how ſoon the Declarant heard of Glenure's Murder, it came in his mind, that Serjeant More had done it, 'becauſe Allan Breck told him, 'that the ſaid Serjeant ſwore bloody Revenge againſt Glenure before the 'Serjeant came from France, upon Account of Glenure's Treatment of 'Lochiel's Tenants, and his differing with John Cameron of Faſſafern, 'Brother to Lochiel: That the Declarant's Reaſon for ſuſpecting Allan 'Breck afterwards, was, becauſe he left the Country abruptly, without 'taking leave of him, as he expected; and if the ſaid Allan was guilty of 'the ſaid Murder, he believes it behoved to be on Account of the Diſtur-'bance given to the Tenants of the Eſtate of Ardſhiel, and knows no 'other.' Declares, That he did ſet out for Edinburgh on Friday the 3d Day of April laſt, was at Glenco that Night, the 4th at Innerkenvie, the 5th at Lanerick, the 6th at Annat, and called next Day at Newton, and was that Night at Mr. Wordie of Cambuſbaron's Houſe at St. Ninian's, called at Touch on the 8th, and got a Letter from Mr. Seaton to Mr. David Moncrief, Secretary to the Barons of Exchequer; called at Mr. Wilſon's Houſe of Murray's-hall, and was that Night at Mr. Foſter of Dunivan's Houſe, and got a Letter from him to Mr. Patrick Haldane, the Solicitor; but did not deliver it, or the other Letter, as he was told they would be of no Conſequence; and went to Edinburgh upon Thurſday the 9th Day of April laſt, where he continued for eleven Days: That he left Edinburgh upon Sunday the 19th, was that Night at Dunivan, called at Mr. Wilſon's and Mr. Wordie's, and was at Stirling at Night; which Place he left on the 21ſt; called at Mr. Dundas of Manner's Houſe, Dunblain and Newton, and was at Annat's at Night; upon the 22d came to Ballachallan's, and ſtaid there that Night; came to Glenbuckie's the 23d, and ſtaid there two Nights; on the 25th came to Tayindrom; on the 26th came to Duncan Stewart's Houſe in Glenco; and upon the 27th came Home; that, upon the 25th, he called at Mr. Murray of Glenkernock: 'That, 'ſoon after the Declarant came Home, he gave Notice to the Tenants of 'Ardſhiel, that he had procured a Siſt for them againſt the Decreet of Re-'moving; and that, if they had a Mind to continue their Poſſeſſions, they 'were adviſed to go to Glenure and ſeek their Poſſeſſions, and if did not 'grant grant their Desire, they should send for a Notary, and go with him to protest against Glenure; and if they pleased he would send for a Notary; to which they agreed: That accordingly the Declarant sent for Charles Stewart, Notary, and writ him a Letter, signifying they had obtained a Sist for the Tenants of the Estate of Ardshiel, and desired him to come to intimate the same to Glenure, to the Purpose above-mentioned; and that the said Charles did accordingly come to the Declarant's House at Night, and the Tenants came also next Morning; and that the Declarant told them, in Presence of the said Charles, that, if it was not their Mind to proceed in that Method, he would not desire them to do it, because he could not assure them of Success; and that now they had the Advice as it was given to him: and particularly remembers, that three of the Tenants of Ardshiel met the Notary at the Declarant's House, but is not sure if old John Colquhoun, the fourth Tenant in Ardshiel, was there, but rather believes he was: That he was informed on Monday the 11th Day of May last, by his Son Charles, Allan Breck, and Fasnacloich's Daughter, that they heard Glenure was to go to Lochaber that Day.' Declares also, That he saw James Stewart, younger of Fasnacloich, at Glenco's House, upon the 5th Day of May last, who asking him what he had done at Edinburgh? the Declarant told him, he had procured a Sist for the Tenants of Ardshiel's Estate; and that he did not know what Service it might be of, but that some People thought they might sit, and take the Hazard of the violent Profits, till they had an Opportunity of laying their Case before the Barons of Exchequer: That at this Time the Declarant told the said James Stewart, that he wished some Persons of Understanding were present on the Term-day, to see if there was Law for ejecting them; and asked the said James, if he was to be in Duror about that Time? who said, he did not know: That when the said John Stewart of Ballachelish was at the Declarant's House, he asked him, if he would be present with the Tenants, to see if there was Law for turning them out? who said he would, if he did not go to Inverary. Declares also, That, in general, he recommended to every body not to make any Disturbance, and particularly recommended to his own Servants not to be present, not knowing what might happen if a Mob of People gathered; nor did he intend to be present himself. This Declaration is emitted judicially, Place and Date foresaid, before these Witnesses, Colonel Howard, Donald Campbell of Airds, and Colin Campbell of Carwhin, Esqrs.

At Maryburgh, the 3d Day of June, 1752 Years, in Presence of the said Sheriff-Substitute, compeared the said James Stewart, who, after having his former Declarations fully read, recollects, that he was not a Night at Annat, but called there on his Way to Edinburgh, and so was a Day sooner there than what's mentioned in his former Declaration. And being interrogate, if Allan Breck, the Declarant's Son Charles, or Fasnacloich's Daughter told him, when she came to his House upon Monday the 11th of May last, that Glenure had got the said Sist removed? declares, they did not; but that one of them told him, he heard Glenure was to remove the Tenants of Ardshiel, but which of them said so, he does not remember. This Declaration emitted, Place and Date foresaid, before the said Donald Campbell of Airds, and Colin Campbell of Carwhin, Esqrs.

At Maryburgh, the 3d Day of June, 1752 Years, in Presence of the said George Douglas, Sheriff-Substitute of the Shire of Inverness, compeared Allan Stewart, Son to James Stewart in Aucharn; who, being examined judicially, declares, 'That Allan Breck Stewart came to the Declarant's Father's House on Monday's Afternoon, the 11th Day of May last, dressed in a long blue Coat, red Waistcoat, black Breeches, Tartan Hose, and a Hat; and after being some time there, did put off his blue Coat and Waistcoat, and put on a black short Coat with silver Buttons, belonging to the Declarant's Father; and went that Afternoon to work with the Declarant's Father's Servants in covering Potatoes: That the said Allan Breck staid that Night, and was dressed next Morning in his blue Coat and red Waistcoat, as the Day before:' That the Declarant did not see him go away from Aucharn upon the 12th, the Declarant being in the Fields from the Time he rose in the Morning till Twelve of the Clock that Forenoon, sowing Barley, except once that he made a Start Home for more Bear. Declares, 'That upon the Afternoon that the said Allan Breck came to Aucharn, as aforesaid, he told the Declarant, that he heard in Glencrearen, that the Tenants who had taken the Lands of Ardshiel were to be at Glenduror on Thursday's Night, in order to enter to the Possession on Friday the 15th Day of May last; and told him likewise, that he heard Glenure had come Home, and had Orders to remove the former Possessors: That Archibald Cameron, Cousin to Drumnasailly, came along with Fasnacloich's Daughter, and the Declarant's Brother Charles, to his Father's House, upon the said 11th Day of May last, and staid all Night; the said Allan Breck having come by himself about Two of the Clock in the Afternoon that Day: That the DECLARANT'S FATHER CONVERSED WITH THE SAID ALLAN BRECK ASIDE, UPON HIS FIRST ARRIVAL AT AUCHARN UPON THE SAID 11th DAY of MAY; but that the Conversation did not last above five Minutes, or thereabouts; nor did the Declarant hear what passed: That the Declarant's Father did not appear to be the least in Drink upon his coming Home upon the Evening the Monday aforesaid, but told that Mr. Campbell of Airds had given the Declarant's Father, and the Tenants of Keil, three or four Bottles of Whisky; and that the Declarant's Father supped at Home along with the said Allan Breck that Night:' That, upon Tuesday Afternoon, the 12th of May last, the Declarant, and the said Archibald Cameron, and Donald Macdonald, Brother to Glenco, went to the Isle of Ballienageiwan; and the Declarant, and the said Donald Macdonald, returned in the Evening to Aucharn; but the said Archibald Cameron went to his Aunt's at Cuil: That in the Morning of the 13th of May last, the Declarant went to Sallachan, where he saw John More Macilichatten, and delivered them a Mare and a Filly, and then returned Home; and in the Afternoon of that Day went to Kintalline, in order to go to Tayphinst; but being informed by Donald Mackendrick, the old Piper at Keil, whom he met there, that young Ballachelish was to be at Aucharn that Night, the Declarant returned with the said Piper, and went along with him to the Moss: That accordingly Ballachelish younger came to, and staid at the Declarant's Father's House that Night, and went next Day to Appin's House: That the said Ewan Roy Maccoll, Brother to Appin's Bouman at Koalisnacoan, wrought at the Declarant's Father's Peat-moss upon the said 13th of May last, and supped at the Declarant's Father's House that Night, and believes he took his Bed with Duncan Maccoll, his Uncle's Son, at Auchindarroch that Night: That, upon the 14th of May in the Morning, the Declarant went up to Frenchie, and returned by the Houses of Glenduror, where he saw two Women, and spoke with one of them, to hinder the Cattle to trespass on his Father's Grounds; and whilst the Declarant was speaking to that Woman, he saw a Man passing at a little Distance, who was enquiring for Glenure, as the said Woman told the Declarant; which Man the Declarant thereafter observed travelling on the Road towards Auchindarroch: That the Declarant came straight Home from Glenduror, and continued at Home till he went to Inshaig, along with his Brother Charles and Fasnacloich's Daughter, and continued there till the News of Glenure's Murder reached his Father's House, where he heard the first Accounts of it, Glenure's Servant being just gone, as the Declarant was informed: That the Declarant was at Home all Day the 15th of said May; only that he made a Start to Cuil, where he was in Company with Duncan Stewart senior, and Duncan Stewart younger, his Son; and Duncan Stewart at Inshaig. And being interrogate, what Conversation passed betwixt him and his Father, on his Return Home from Inshaig? his Father told him, 'That Glenure's Servant was there; and upon the Declarant's Father's asking his News, he told him, the worst that ever he had; that his Master was killed at Lettermore; and that his Father asked, if it was by a Shot; and that the Servant answered, that it was; and that the said Servant also desired his Father to go and take Care of the Corpse; which he proposed to do, but that his Wife would not let him; but that he sent for the Tenants of Auchindarroch, and desired them to go to take Care of the Corpse; and that the Reason that he, the Declarant, did not go to take Care of the Corpse, was, because it did not at first occur to him; and that it was too late, and the rest of the People gone; yet it was clear Day-light, but thinks the Sun was set; and that the Declarant's Mother also hindered his going, and assigned for a Reason, that if the Friends of the Deceased were there, and had Arms, they might, in their Passion, do Hurt to him and his Father;' and that he was but a little Time at Home after his Return from Inshaig, when he saw Glenure's Servant returning from Glenduror, and passing towards Kintalline: That the Declarant thinks his Brother Charles went in the Afternoon of the 14th of May last with Fasnacloich's Daughter, and the said Archibald Cameron, and the Declarant's Sister, to Lagnaha, where they dined in Alexander Stewart senior his House, and afterwards came back to Aucharn, and then went to Inshaig as aforesaid. Declares, That he heard the said Ewan Roy Maccoll say, upon the 13th, two several Times, that it was hard in Glenure to turn out the honest Tenants of the Ardshiel Estate, as they paid their Rents well, and offered an Augmentation of Rent, and were willing to give Obedience to the Government; and that one of the Times was after Breakfast, when the People were together, at the End of the Declarant's Father's House, going to the Moss; but that his Father was not present: That some of the Tenants of the Neighbourhood were there, as well as his Father's Servants; and that they generally talked in the same Strain with the said Ewan Maccoll; and that the other Time was after their returning from their Work that Evening at the Declarant's Father's House: That the Declarant does not know what became of the said Ewan Roy Maccoll all Thursday said 14th of May last; but is positive that he came into the Barn where the Declarant was lying, that same Night, about Twelve of the Clock, asking for a Bed, which was refused him; but ordered to go and lie with the Servants in another Barn in Aucharn, meaning Dougal and John Maccolls, now Prisoners at Fort-William: That the Declarant saw the said Ewan Roy Maccoll at Aucharn, upon the 15th of May in the Morning, and saw him again at Cuil about Twelve of the Clock that Day; and that they came together from thence to Aucharn, where they parted, and that the Declarant does not remember if they had any Conversation all that Time about Glenure's Murder. This emitted judicially, Place and Date foresaid, before these Witnesses, Donald Campbell of Airds, and Colin Campbell of Carwhin.

Eodem die, The said Allan Stewart being re-examined judicially, and being interrogate whom he suspected guilty of Glenure's Murder? declares, 'That he thought, if Allan Breck did not soon cast up in the Country, he was the most likely Man to have done it: And further declares, 'That, in a Conversation between him and his Father, and others, they were of Opinion, that the People of Ballachelish and Lettermore must have known who committed the Murder at the Time it happened: That, upon the Friday after the Murder happened, he heard his Father say, he did not doubt but he would be taken up upon Suspicion of the said Murder: That when the Declarant's Father was at Edinburgh, he expected a Letter from him about what he was doing about the Removings; which Letter came to Aucharn in the Declarant's Absence, and was opened by James Stewart younger of Fasnacloich, and contained an Account of what the Declarant's Father had done about the Removings;' and that he was about buying a Bargain of Meal. Declares also, 'That he heard his Father express his Desire to young Ballachelish to be present when the new Tenants came to take Possession of the Estate of Ardshiel; and that Donald Macintyre in Aucharn told him, that young Ballachelish had come back from Appin to Keil, in order to attend; but, upon hearing of Glenure's Murder, returned to Appin: That the Declarant's Father told him he would not be present at the Entering of the said new Tenants; nor was the Declarant resolved to be present himself; nor did his Father desire him to go, or suspect him such a Fool as to go: That he knows that the said Allan Breck Stewart lay with the Declarant's Brother Charles in a Barn in Aucharn, upon Monday's Night the 11th Day of May last: That the Declarant has a black short Coat, with nine round silver Buttons on the Breast, two upon each Haunch, whereof one is small, and it has no Buttons on the Sleeves or Pockets; and that his Father has also a black short Coat, with silver Buttons

'on the Breaſt and Pockets, and has none upon the Haunches or Sleeves, 'to the Declarant's Remembrance:' That the ſaid Allan Breck had no big Coat on upon the 11th Day of May laſt, when he came to Aucharn, nor had he any big Coat of his own that the Declarant knows of; for the ſaid Allan borrowed the Declarant's big Coat, when he came to Rannoch: That, in a Converſation the Declarant had with old Ballachelish on the Sunday before Glenure's Murder, Ballachelish then told the Declarant, that the Man that had taken the Ferry of North Ballachelish, came there with his Boat, and was refuſed to enter to the Poſſeſſion by the Tenants, who thought they had as good a Right to the Ferry as to the Land: That thereupon the Ferry-man drew his Boat, and went to Glenure, the Tenants being reſolved to keep their Poſſeſſions for the Year; and that Ballachelish ſaid, that the Tenants of the Ardſhiel Eſtate had as good a Title to ſit, as the Tenants of Ballachelish, if the Suſpenſion was not diſcuſſed; 'and that it was a cant Word through the Country, That the Tenants 'might ſit, ſince the worſt of it would be paying the violent Profits.' Declares alſo, That he has a Gun and Broad-ſword: That he left the Gun in his Father's Brew-houſe, and the Sword he gave to John Maccoll, his Father's Servant, that is Priſoner at Fort-William: That John Roy Stewart, Nephew to Faſnacloich, lay in the Barn with the Declarant upon Thurſday's Night the 14th Day of May laſt; and that John Stewart in Auchnacoan lay in the ſame Barn with the Declarant's Brother Charles, being the Night that the ſaid Ewan Roy Maccoll came to look for a Bed there. This judicial Declaration emitted in Preſence of the ſaid Sheriff-Subſtitute, Place and Date foreſaid, before theſe Witneſſes, the Right Honourable the Lord Bury, Colonels Howard and Crawfurd, Donald Campbell of Airds, and Colin Campbell of Carwhin.

At Maryburgh, the 4th Day of June, 1752 Years, in Preſence of the ſaid George Douglas, Sheriff-Subſtitute aforeſaid, compeared Charles Stewart, Son to James Stewart in Aucharn; who being examined judicially, declares, That he was at Home all Day of the 14th Day of May laſt, and that he dined with his Father, Mother, Brother, Siſter, and Faſnacloich's Daughter; and after Dinner went to Auchindarroch, and there converſed with Duncan Maccombie, Duncan and John Maccolls, and others that were covering Potatoes, and deſired Solomon Maccoll to go with Faſnacloich's Daughter to Ardnamurchan, but he would not go: That Faſnacloich's Daughter and the Declarant's Siſter went along with him to Auchindarroch, and returned before him to Aucharn, the Declarant having ſtaid a Quarter of an Hour after them, to perſuade the ſaid Solomon to go to Ardnamurchan, and then followed them directly to Aucharn; and did not go nearer Lettermore that Day, than the Place where the People of Auchindarroch were covering Potatoes; and, in an Hour thereafter, went with Faſnacloich's Daughter, and the Declarant's Brother Allan, and Siſter, to Inſhaig, where he received the News of Glenure's Murder from John Maccoll, now Priſoner at Fort-William; being ſent there, by the Declarant's Father, to deſire him and his Brother Allan to come Home; but that his ſaid Brother was gone a little before the ſaid John Maccoll came. Declares alſo, That he ſaw Ewan Roy Maccoll, Brother to Appin's Bouman at Koaliſnacoan, at the Declarant's Father's Houſe, upon the Evening of the 14th Day of May laſt before they lighted Candles, and told he had come from Glenco that Day; that he afterwards, that Night, came into the Barn where the Declarant was lying with his Uncle John Stewart, looking for a Bed, and was directed to lie with the Servants in the other Barn in Aucharn. Declares, That upon his Return from Inſhaig with the ſaid John Maccoll Priſoner, that the Declarant aſked him where Glenure was murdered, what Way it was done, and if any Perſon was ſeen by the Place? and that the ſaid John anſwered, That it was done in the Wood of Lettermore; whether it was South or North of the Houſes, he could not tell; that it was by a Shot, and that there was a Man or two ſeen near the Place; and this is all the Declarant remembers of the Converſation upon that Head; and that upon his coming Home, he heard his Father deſire the People of Auchindarroch to go and take Care of the Corpſe; and that his Father propoſed to go himſelf, but that his Wife would not let him; and, 'at the 'ſame Time, heard his Father ſay that he would be ſuſpected of the 'Murder, as he was taking ſo much Part with the Tenants againſt Glen-'ure the Factor:' That he heard Ewan Roy Maccoll ſay, upon the 13th Day of May laſt, that he wondered that Glenure was removing the Tenants that paid their Rent well, and were willing to qualify to the Government; That he obſerved his Father and the ſaid Ewan Roy Maccoll have ſeveral Converſations aſide about that Time. This Declaration emitted judicially, Place and Date foreſaid, before theſe Witneſſes, Donald Campbell of Airds, and Colin Campbell of Carwhin, Eſqrs.

Margaret Stewart, Spouſe to James Stewart in Aucharn, being ſolemnly ſworn and examined, depones, 'That Allan Breck Stewart came to her 'Houſe upon Monday immediately before Glenure's Murder, dreſſed as men-'tioned in the laſt Depoſition, and with a big Coat of the ſame Colour; 'that he ſtaid all Night, and went away next Day about Eight or Nine 'of the Clock in the Forenoon, dreſſed in the ſame Habit; and at his tak-'ing Leave of the Deponent, aſked her, if ſhe had any Commands for Ran-'noch? That, to the beſt of her Knowledge, he came by himſelf, and went 'away by himſelf.' And this is the Truth, as ſhe ſhall anſwer to God; and declares ſhe cannot write.

Elizabeth Stewart, Daughter of the ſaid James Stewart in Aucharn, being ſolemnly ſworn and examined, depones, 'conform to her Mother's 'Depoſition in every Thing, only that ſhe is poſitive that Allan Breck Stew-'art came all alone to Aucharn, upon Monday immediately before Glenure's 'Murder, ſhe having ſeen him come there.' And this is Truth, as ſhe ſhall anſwer to God; and declares ſhe cannot write; and adds, that Solomon Maccoll, her Father's Servant, went off for the South Country upon Saturday the 16th current.

Charles Stewart, Son of the ſaid James Stewart in Aucharn, being re-examined, judicially acknowledges, That Dugald Maccoll, former Declarant, told the ſaid Charles Stewart, that there were Arms in his Father's Houſe, which he had hid; and this judicial Acknowledgment is ſigned this 23d Day of May, 1752 Years, before theſe Witneſſes, Donald Campbell of Airds, and James Campbell, Writer in Inverary, Writer hereof.

NOW I am ſorry to acquaint you, Affairs is going quite wrong upon this Eſtate of your Couſin's: Glenure wants Ardſhiel and Lettermore in his own Hands, and more Rent for our Tenement, and the Carriages to himſelf. How far theſe Things will take Place, God knows! The Man that makes the whole Noiſe, is Ballieveolan, upon Account of our keeping John More; for he does not deny but what he offers more Rents for Glenduror, and gives this as his Reaſons. However, it ſhall be A DEAR GLEN TO THEM OR THEY SHALL HAVE IT. All you heard about the Country is true: I go, in a few Days, to Kingailoch for the Stallion, which ſtands us eight Guineas; he wants to harrow him this Spring, and to get him broke for the Saddle again Harveſt. Faſnacloich has made the Purchaſe for himſelf. You'll not neglect to ſend all the Money you can in a very ſhort Time, as Money never was ſcarcer in this Country. Kingailoch has got Money; ſo that we are ſure of his Cows. Malcolm Livingſton has ſent for more Money; for he employed what he got. I ſhall refer the whole Hiſtory of the Country till I have the Pleaſure of ſeeing you. I beg you'll not neglect ſending a Servant ſoon, with as much as poſſible; let nothing ſtop him. Neglect not about your Brother. No more, but my Compliments to Miſs Jeany, Sandy, and little Donald, is all from, dear Couſin, I am your affectionate Couſin,

Dear Charles,

NOT knowing of your Return from Mudart, ſent for your Father Tueſday's Afternoon; but the Raſcal I ſent, went not by Glencrearan that Night, by which he miſſed the old Man, who went a-fiſhing, as you'll ſee by the incloſed, early that Morning; which I reckon a very great Misfortune. *The next beſt I can think of is, that you be here without fail this Night, if you ſhould hire a Horſe, as every Thing muſt go wrong without a Perſon can act, and that I can truſt. Letter, James Stewart to John Macfarlane.

SIR,

JUST now had your Favour, and am ſorry theſe poor Tenants ſhould have made uſe of me for repreſenting their Grievance, as, in all Appearance, it has brought a great deal of Trouble upon me; being carried here, and my Son upon Sunday laſt, ſuſpected to be knowing to the barbarous Murder of Glenure, who was ſhot dead upon Thurſday the 14th current, in a Wood within two Miles of my Houſe. It is not pretended that I or my Son were actors in this horrid Action, as we both can be well atteſted; but alledges, it was a premeditated Thing, to which I muſt have been knowing: But ſo far otherwiſe, that no Man (I thank God) abhors the Fact more, and would, if at Liberty, do all in my Power to bring it to Light. There is one Allan Stewart, a diſtant Friend of the late Ardſhiel's, who is in the French Service, and came over in March laſt, as he ſaid to ſome, in order to ſettle at Home; to others, that he was to go ſoon back; and was, as I hear, the Day the Murder was committed, ſeen not far from the Place where it happened, and is not now to be ſeen; by which it is believed he was the Actor; he is a deſperate fooliſh Fellow; and, if he is guilty, came to the Country for that very Purpoſe. He is a tall pock-pitted Lad, very black Hair, and wore a blue Coat and metal Buttons, an old red Veſt, and Breeches of the ſame Colour. I would own myſelf under many Obligations to any Friend would diſcover him; am perſuaded he is gone South, in order to embrace the firſt Opportunity of going abroad. When at Edinburgh, he ſtaid in Mr. Hugh Stewart's at the Back of the Fountain-Well; ſo begs, as you have any Regard for my Intereſt, recommend all that wiſh the Country well to be in ſearch of him. What makes my Confinement very uneaſy to me is, that this is the Time of the Year that my Buſineſs would require my Preſence moſt; having bought Cattle (wherein I yearly deal) in different Countries, and taken Graſings South for the Cattle, which I muſt pay, if I ſhould never ſend a Beaſt upon it; which I am afraid will be the Caſe, if either my Son or ſelf be not admitted to Bail, to put our Affairs in Order: So hopes you'll ſpare no Pains in this, as Airds and Appin will bail me in any Sum whatever.

Your Return I'll expect in Courſe of Poſt; and am, with Compliments to your Lady and ſelf, dear Sir, your humble Servant,

SIR, Glenure, December 11, 1749.

THIS Moment I had yours by your Servant, with the twenty Pounds, eighteen Shillings, and five Pence Sterling; and the Warrant I formerly gave you. Receive incloſed your Note: Your Payments are very good, for which I am obliged to you. I intend, God will, to be at Edinburgh on, or a Day or two before the 25th current; that is, I intend to ſet out from this Place this Day, or To-morrow eight Days, and will go by Glaſgow, and make no Stop by the Way. Remember Lady Ardſhiel's Diſcharges, and all your other Tackling. I heartily wiſh you a good Journey.

Then, the Proof on both Sides being concluded, the Lord Elchies ſaid to the Lord Advocate, that now was his Time to proceed to give his Charge to the Jury; which his Lordſhip did as follows.

LORD ADVOCATE.

Gentlemen of the Jury,

IT now becomes my Duty, to be aſſiſting to you in the Diſcharge of yours, by ſtating to you this Caſe, and ſumming up the Evidence that hath been given in your Preſence; which I ſhall now proceed to do as well as I am able, after ſo long an Attendance.

That Attendance, I am ſenſible, muſt have been very heavy upon you, and hath been ſuch, as the like hath not happened ſince the Circuit-Courts of Juſticiary were brought to be held in this County: But I hope you will not repine at the great Fatigue of this Trial, in a Caſe, whereof the Importance is as unuſual as the Length of it; and in which your giving a juſt Verdict will be highly for the Service and Credit of your Country.

N. B. By the ſixteenth Act Anno 1672, concerning the Regulation of Judicatories, Article Tenth, on the Juſticiary Court, it is provided in theſe Words: "That, in all "criminal Purſuits, the Defender, or his Advocate, be always the laſt Speaker, except in Caſes of Treaſon or Rebellion againſt the King."

I need not resume to you, Gentlemen, the Libel or Indictment, whereof I presume you have been furnished with printed Copies before you came here; that, being thereby informed of the principal Circumstances which have been discovered concerning the Murder of Mr. Campbell of Glenure, you might have Leisure to weigh the Import of these, and be the better enabled to attend to the Evidence that should be brought before you; and, on the other Hand, the Pannel James Stewart, who is now standing his Trial, was, by that Libel, fairly informed of the principal Facts and Circumstances that were then discovered against him, so as he might have Opportunity to account for these, and clear himself, if notwithstanding such strong Appearances, he was truly innocent.

The Crime itself, which gives Occasion to this Trial, was of its Nature the most horrid and atrocious that can well be conceived. Wilful Murder, at any Rate, is a Crime most heinous; and concerning the first Murder, God Almighty himself said to Cain, The Voice of thy Brother's Blood crieth unto me from the Ground. And the Murder now in Question, as to this Pannel's Accession to it, was one of the most causeless and unprovoked that ever happened. Poor Mr. Campbell of Glenure was cut off in the Vigour of his Life, in the very Road of his Duty in the King's Service, and for no other Cause or Provocation than his doing that Duty; and then was he basely assassinated by a Ruffian, who lay in wait for him, and shot him from behind his Back, so as he died upon the Spot, leaving two infant Children, and his Widow pregnant.

And to this horrid Violation of the Laws of God and of Humanity, is to be added, in the present Case, that the sole Offence taken at Glenure, was his acting in the Quality of Factor on the forfeited Estate of Ardshiel, agreeably to his Powers and Instructions from the Barons of Exchequer, as being Administrators for the King, whose Property that Estate was; and it was resented as a capital Injury, that the King's Factor should venture to exercise his Majesty's Property as freely, as every Subject may do his own.

And last of all, That this Murder was committed on the 14th Day of May last, just seven Weeks after his Majesty had given his Royal Assent, and passed into a Law, the Bill for annexing this and other forfeited Estates to the Crown unalienably, and for applying the Rents and Profits thereof for the better civilizing and improving the Highlands of Scotland.

The Clemency of the King had been extended early after the last Rebellion, by the Act of Grace of the 20th Year of his Reign, of which the Pannel James Stewart, among many others, had the Benefit; and other beneficial Laws were then made, to secure and promote Freedom, Property, and good Order in all Parts of Scotland. And, to crown all, this last most beneficent Act was made, for the more immediate Benefit of the Highlands of Scotland, out of which three Rebellions have been raised, since the Accession of the Royal Family now happily reigning; an Act of Beneficence not to be paralleled in History, and calculated to render all the Inhabitants of the Highlands good and useful Subjects under this Government, by making them feel their own Interest in being such, and rendering the meanest of them, who will be honest and industrious, free and happy: And at such a Juncture, the Murder you are now inquiring into received no small Aggravation, as it was flying in the Face of the Legislature itself, and endeavouring, as much as in these Criminals lay, to defeat or discourage the Prosecution of a Measure of Government, so highly gracious and beneficial to this Country.

The Truth is, Gentlemen, that though, God be praised, the Highlands of Scotland are in this Age less barbarous than they have been in former Times; yet, in our own Time, there have been such Instances of remaining Barbarism, as serve to prove but too strongly, that these Countries stand yet in need of being better civilized. I think it was in the Year 1724, that, for an Offence of the same Nature with what was here taken, an Attempt to remove certain Macphersons living on the Estate of the Duke of Gordon in Badenoch, the late Gordon of Glenbucket, his Factor or Tacksman, was invaded, and received many Wounds, given with Intent to bereave him of his Life, though he chanced to recover.

You must all remember, how basely Captain Monro of Culcairn was assassinated, by lying in wait, when he was acting in his Duty in the King's Service, soon after the Defeat of the late Rebellion.

And you must have all heard of the late barbarous Enterprize of Robert Macgregor and his Accomplices, in carrying off from her own House the unfortunate Jean Kay, a young Widow and an Heiress, in the Depth of Winter, and Middle of the Night, into remote Parts of the Highlands, and causing her to be married to that Robert, a Person of no Fortune, and an Outlaw for Murder; for being a Conductor in which Attempt, James Drummond, alias Macgregor, a Brother of Robert, has been lately convicted.

The Excuse offered for James Macgregor, was the same mistaken Principle that appears to have misled the unhappy Prisoner at the Bar. It was said, that James Macgregor was actuated by one of the best Affections; he was seeking no personal Advantage to himself by that Enterprize, but only to make the Fortune of Robert his Brother.

And the now Pannel James Stewart conceived a mortal Enmity against Mr. Campbell of Glenure, for disabling him to provide for the Children of his Brother, Charles Stewart late of Ardshiel, attainted, by Contributions levied from the Tenants on that Estate, who had been under his Influence.

But alas! what a Delusion is it, from such Principle to be led to commit or justify the most heinous and abominable Crimes! The Care of the Interest of one's Kindred is doubtless a laudable Affection; and even when that Good-will is extended to the remoter Degrees, and enlarges the Circle of Benevolence, there is no Harm in it; provided in both Cases it be conducted with Justice, and Men exert themselves to serve their Friends, without violating the Rights of other Individuals, or the Laws of Society and civil Government; but he who robs or defrauds his Neighbour, to provide for his own Houshold, or the immediate Children of his own Body, is not the less criminal in the Sight of God and Man, that he was moved by an Affection, in itself natural and just, but which he pursued in a wicked Manner.

And, in the present Case of the Murder of Glenure, there appears to have been no reasonable or probable Scheme of Advantage to the Family of the late Ardshiel, or any body; but that it proceeded from mere Wickedness, Malice, and Resentment, the most groundless that ever was; It affords a recent and shameful Instance of that Spirit of Revenge, which was the Characteristic of the barbarous Highlanders in former Times; and a Pity it is, Gentlemen, and a Reproach to the present Age, that it should be yet capable of furnishing such an Example.

I am far from meaning by this, that the Crimes of a few wicked Persons can justly bring a general Imputation on the whole Country where these were committed; we daily hear of most horrid and unnatural Crimes perpetrated in the Parts of the Kingdom the most wealthy, populous, and civilized; but the Part incumbent on the Country where such Things happen, is, to purify the Land of the innocent Blood with which it is polluted, by bringing the Guilty to condign Punishment; and this is what you are now employed in; and as you have attended to the Evidence patiently, I desire nothing more, than, as an impartial and intelligent Jury, you may consider it carefully, in order to discern the Truth, and then to follow that resolutely according to the Conviction of your own Minds; which, if it lead you to believe the Pannel guilty, you will do Justice to your Country by saying so; and if you are not convinced of his Guilt, in God's Name, let him be acquitted; for better that this Murder, atrocious and scandalous as it is, should go altogether unpunished, than that one innocent Man should suffer for it.

In order to lay before you distinctly the Evidence that you have heard of this Pannel's Accession to the Murder of Glenure, I shall first of all recite the State or Situation in which the Deceased and the Pannel stood towards each other, previous to the Murder, and also that of Allan Breck Stewart in respect of both the others. 2dly, I shall point out to you the Evidence that Allan Breck was the actual Murderer, which I admit to be a Fact that was incumbent on us to prove, in order to convict this Pannel of wilful Accession to it: And, lastly, I shall sum up the Evidence that has been brought of that Accession, and examine the Force of the Defences or Excuses which the Pannel has endeavoured to prove.

As to the first of these, the Situation of the Pannel himself; That, Gentlemen, you partly know, and have heard proved: He is a bastard Brother of Charles Stewart late of Ardshiel, attainted, who, out of his own Tenants, and those of Dougal Stewart of Appin, his Chieftain, levied a Regiment or Battalion, at the Head of which he went into the late Rebellion, accompanied, among others, by this Pannel, who had the Benefit of his Majesty's Act of Grace or Indemnity; whereby he was left at Liberty to remain with his Family in the Country, whilst Ardshiel himself, the attainted Person, made his Escape into foreign Parts, leaving at Home his Wife and a Family of Children, who, as Mr. Campbell of Airds has deposed, were all young, his eldest Son being now, as he thinks, about eighteen Years of Age, and consequently, at the breaking out of the late Rebellion, must have been about eleven.

The late Rebellion, as you all know, was finally suppressed by his Royal Highness the Duke, in the Spring and Summer 1746: In the Year following, the Act vesting the forfeited Estates in the King was passed; and, in 1748, the Lands of Ardshiel, among others, were surveyed by Order of the Barons of the Exchequer; to the Property whereof a Claim was entered on Behalf of Alexander the eldest Son of Charles Stewart, the attainted Person; which Claim, upon Answers made for the King, was dismissed by the Court of Session: And thus it happened, that there was no Factor appointed by the Barons on the Estate of Ardshiel, until Colin Campbell of Glenure was made Factor, by Commission, bearing Date the 23d February 1749, upon that Estate, and also upon the neighbouring Lands of Allan Cameron of Callart, attainted, and, adjoining to these, that Part of the Estate of Lochiel which lies in the Shire of Inverness, to the Southward of Fort-William, and betwixt that Fort and the Ferry of Ballachelish, of which you have heard so much, upon that Loch or Arm of the Sea, which separates Lochaber in Invernesshire, from the Country or District of Appin in this Shire.

Now, as this Factory was granted full three Years after the Rebellion, it is to be observed how the Estate of Ardshiel was possessed and managed in this Interval; and this appears by the Oath of Alexander Stewart of Innernahyle, who hath deposed, "That, before the Factory, as he believes, "the Tenants paid their Rents to the Lady of Ardshiel, and that she "again employed the Pannel to deal with them."

It was during this Period, that the Pannel, as the same Alexander Stewart deposes, who had been a great many Years ago Tenant to his Brother Ardshiel in the Farm of Glenduror, and had been removed also several Years ago by his Brother, again took Possession of the same Farm; and that Ardshiel's Lady and the Pannel, jointly, introduced certain new Tenants of their own Choice, into different Parcels of the Land, which Ardshiel, the attainted Person, had himself occupied before the Rebellion.

Again, when Glenure had obtained this Factory, after he had been for some Time abroad with the Regiment to which he belonged, in Flanders; and being now come Home, was occupied with the Treaty for his Marriage with the young Lady who is now his Widow; he did, as Mr. Campbell of Airds hath deposed, for some Time employ the now Pannel, as his Sub-factor, in levying the Rents of Ardshiel, and setting the Lands; and, to the same Purpose, the said Alexander Stewart deposes, "That the "Factor gave the Pannel the Opportunity of having the greatest Influence "with the Tenants of Ardshiel, more than any other Person, by allow-"ing the Pannel to set the Lands, which he continued doing to Whit-"sunday 1751, if not at that Time also: But adds, That the Pannel's "Connexion with the Family of Ardshiel, gave him also a natural In-"fluence over the Tenants, even before Glenure's Factory."

The Use which the Pannel made of this Influence, natural or acquired, appears partly from the Evidence of the same two Gentlemen: For, upon this Article, Mr. Campbell of Airds hath deposed, "That the Pannel told "him, that whatever was made of these Rents, over what was paid into "the Exchequer, was accounted for to the Children of Ardshiel; and, "when he removed from Glenduror, he told the Deponent, that he had "Reason to believe, that the said Excrescence of the Rents would still be "accounted for to them; and, in that Case, he would be easy as to his "own Removal."

And Mr. Stewart of Innernahyle deposes upon this Article, "That the "Pannel was again removed by the deceased Glenure, the Factor, from the "Farm of Glenduror at Whitsunday 1751, and the Lands lett to Mr. Camp-"bell of Ballieveolan: That as the Pannel is the Deponent's near Neigh-

" bour, the Deponent had frequent Opportunities of converſing with " him touching his ſaid Removal: That the Pannel did not expect to " have been removed, and ſeemed diſſatisfied that he was; and ſaid, " he believed, that Glenure would not have removed him, if (Mr. Camp- " bell of) Ballieveolan had not ſought thoſe Lands from him: That the " Pannel further ſaid, that the Tenants generally allowed ſome Gratuity " to Ardſhiel's Children, and that theſe Lands were the beſt Farms on " the Eſtate, and moſt of the Benefits accreſced from them; and tho' " he himſelf could be provided of a Farm elſewhere, yet the Children " would be deprived of that Benefit."

In what Manner this Removal of the Pannel, from this beneficial Farm of Glenduror, to which he had laſt entered ſince the Rebellion, without any lawful Title whatever, was brought about, appears from the Inſtructions to Glenure from the Barons of Exchequer, produced and proved before you; the laſt of which is in theſe Words: " You are, on no Con- " dition whatever, to lett a Farm to any of the Friends (i.e. the Relations) " of the forfeiting Perſon." And though it be true, that theſe Inſtructions bear Date the 25th July 1751, about two Months after the actual Removal of the Pannel from Glenduror, theſe were nevertheleſs the true Cauſe of that Removal; for it was known or expected by the Factor, that he would receive ſuch Inſtructions, there having been Notice given to the Lords Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, of a conſiderable Poſſeſſion of the Eſtate of Lochiel having been lett to, or for the Uſe of one of the Brothers of the attainted Perſon; upon which their Lordſhips had directed the Barons of the Exchequer to provide againſt the like being done for the future, in order to avoid the Occaſions of continuing that Leading or Influence over the Vulgar inhabiting thoſe Eſtates, that had produced ſo much Diſturbance and Miſchief to the Public.

And thus it was through Neceſſity, and in order to the faithful Diſcharge of the Duty of his Office, that Mr. Campbell of Glenure, at Whitſunday, or in May 1751, removed the Pannel from his Poſſeſſion of the Farm of Glenduror, to the Continuance whereof he had no legal Title or Claim whatſoever; and alſo reſolved to employ the Pannel no longer as his Sub-factor or Aſſiſtant, in managing the Eſtate of Ardſhiel.

It is not eaſy to conceive, that there was any Reaſon or juſt Cauſe given by this Conduct of Glenure, for Reſentment or Hatred from this Pannel, even if it had been true, which the Pannel expreſſed to Stewart of Innernahyle, that, as he believed, Glenure would not have removed himſelf, if Ballieveolan had not ſought or ſolicited this Poſſeſſion of Glenduror from him; and yet, that the Pannel conceived and expreſſed, and proſecuted ſuch Diſpoſition in the moſt outrageous Manner, hath been now fully proved before you. But, before I mention the particular Evidence of this, I muſt proceed to recite the freſh Cauſe of Difference betwixt theſe Perſons, and of Animoſity conceived by this Pannel, from the after-Proceedings of Glenure in the Spring of this preſent Year; when he having taken the Reſolution to remove a few of thoſe Tenants, who had been introduced to their Poſſeſſions, as I have mentioned, by Ardſhiel's Lady and this Pannel, in the Interval betwixt the Rebellion and the Date of the Factory, it appears, that the Pannel being apprehenſive, that this would leſſen his Intereſt and Influence among the People, if he ſhould not be able to protect thoſe Perſons in the Poſſeſſions, which he himſelf had beſtowed or procured, took the Reſolution to oppoſe theſe Removings; which he proſecuted, by repreſenting and complaining of it in the Country as a mighty Act of Oppreſſion, becauſe the King's Factor thought fit to remove four or five Tenants lately introduced upon this Eſtate, who had neither ſtanding Leaſes nor old Poſſeſſions, to intitle them in Point of Right, or in Point of Favour, to be continued; and this groundleſs Oppoſition to thoſe Removings the Pannel ſet about and conducted at his own Expence, and gave himſelf great Agitation and Trouble in the Proſecution of it, having gone to Edinburgh in April laſt, on purpoſe to preſent the Bill of Suſpenſion of thoſe Removings, which you have heard, ſetting forth moſt frivolous Grounds; and all this without the Knowledge, Application, or Contribution for the Expence by the Tenants themſelves, in whoſe Names he took upon him to offer that Bill of Suſpenſion, until he had obtained at Edinburgh an Order upon the Bill from the Lord Dun Ordinary, that Anſwers ſhould be put in to the ſame, and ſiſting or ſtaying Execution in the interim; with which Siſt, and certain Advices he had received at Edinburgh, for making Application for thoſe Tenants to the Barons of Exchequer, when they ſhould meet in the Beginning of June, the Pannel returned to his own Houſe on the 27th April; and then ſent for thoſe Tenants, and gave them Notice of his Proceedings at Edinburgh on their Account; and that if they had a Mind to continue their Poſſeſſions, they were adviſed to go to Glenure, and ſeek their Poſſeſſions (or demand ſuch Continuance); and if he did not grant their Deſire, they ſhould ſend for a Notary, and go with him to proteſt againſt Glenure; and if they pleaſed, he would ſend for a Notary, to which they agreed: And accordingly the Pannel ſent for Charles Stewart, who hath been examined on this Fact, and ſent him along with the Tenants to Glenure's Houſe, where he intimated the Siſt, and took a Proteſt againſt him on the 1ſt of May laſt.

It was upon receiving this Notice of a Suſpenſion preſented, and a Siſt granted, that Glenure repaired to Edinburgh, and put in his Anſwer to the Bill; upon Conſideration of which, the Bill was refuſed or diſmiſſed by the Lord Haining Ordinary; and then Glenure returned to his own Houſe on Saturday the 9th May laſt, in order to take the neceſſary Meaſures for executing the Removings that had been thus oppoſed.

This Part of the Pannel's Proceedings is proved by the Oath of Charles Stewart, his Notary, by the Pannel's own Examinations, which you have heard read, and by Duncan Maccoll in Ardſhiel, one of thoſe Tenants, who hath now depoſed, " That, upon himſelf and others being " warned to remove from the Lands of Ardſhiel, as at Whitſunday laſt, he " for his Part had no Intention other than to ſubmit to the Warning, " till a Paper was procured from Edinburgh, which he heard read by " Charles Stewart, Notary at Aucharn, as on a Day he was there, being " along with his Neighbours adverti ſed to meet there, where he and his " Neighbours were told by the Pannel and Charles Stewart, the Notary, " that the Paper brought from Edinburgh, contained Advice for thoſe " who had been warned to remove, to continue in their Poſſeſſions; and " that they ſhould go to Glenure, and aſk the ſame from him. And de- " poſes, That he gave no Allowance or Mandate to the Pannel to make " any Application at Edinburgh againſt the Removing: That, before he " heard any thing of this Paper from Edinburgh, he had engaged to ſerve " as Bouman to the Tenants Glenure was to introduce; but that, on " hearing of this Paper, he preferred keeping by his Neighbours, as he " conſidered the being continued in his Poſſeſſion, did the Law ſupport " him in it, as more beneficial to him: And adds, That the procuring the " Paper at Edinburgh coſt him no Money."

To the ſame Purpoſe, John Maccombich, another of thoſe Tenants in Ardſhiel, hath depoſed, and adds this farther Circumſtance, " That as to " his agreeing with the incoming Tenants to be their Bouman, he heard " both Glenure and theſe Tenants ſay, that it was by Glenure's Advice " that this was done;" which is, by the way, an Inſtance of the Humanity, with which Glenure acted on this Occaſion, in being at Pains to provide Bread for thoſe Perſons whom he did not think fit to continue as Tenants on this Eſtate of Ardſhiel, where they had been ſo lately introduced by the Pannel.

Theſe then were all the Cauſes of Offence, that, after the ſtricteſt Inquiry, can be diſcovered to have been ever given by Glenure to this Pannel, namely, That Glenure, as Factor upon this Eſtate of Ardſhiel, removed the Pannel himſelf from the Farm or Poſſeſſion of Glenduror at Whitſunday laſt Year, and gave over employing or entruſting the Pannel to act under him in the Management of the Lands of Ardſhiel; and that he was taking Meaſures for removing the few Tenants lately introduced by the Pannel, at Whitſunday this Year; which Meaſure he perſiſted in, the Oppoſition that the Pannel was pleaſed to make, notwithſtanding. Very ſtrange Cauſes, it muſt be confeſſed, for the Pannel's conceiving a violent, and even a mortal Enmity againſt Glenure! And yet nothing is more certain, than that violent Offence may be taken, where no juſt, or even plauſible Cauſe for it hath been given: And, from the firſt Murder recorded in ſacred Hiſtory, down to this now in Queſtion, often hath it happened, that wicked Men have hated their Brothers without a Cauſe, that is, without a Reaſon or juſt Cauſe, tho' there was always an Occaſion, or a Motive, ſuch as it was, for that Hatred being conceived.

Again, it is to be conſidered, that Occaſions of Offence operate differently, according to the Education, Temper, and Character of the Party who meets with them; and we have now heard from the Evidence in this Trial, what a wrong Way of thinking this unfortunate Pannel is poſſeſſed of, in holding it to be a Cauſe of mortal Enmity, that a Man ſhould be removed by another from his Farm or Poſſeſſion which he hath no manner of Title to hold or retain; which is a Prejudice or Deluſion, that, in a lower Degree, prevails elſewhere, but ſeems to be in a particular Manner prevalent in the Highlands, and was the Cauſe of the Attempt made by the Macphersons to aſſaſſinate Glenbucket ſome Years ago, as well as the Cauſe of the horrid Murder into which you are now inquiring.

And, for one Proof that this Pannel is deeply poiſoned with this moſt erroneous Opinion, you heard, Gentlemen, a little while ago the Objection that was by him made to Alexander Stewart ſenior in Lagnahaw, one of the Witneſſes in the Liſt ſerved upon him, and called up to give Evidence againſt him, to whom the Pannel objected, that this Witneſs bore Enmity againſt him, for that the Witneſs was formerly in Poſſeſſion of the Lands of Aucharn, which the Pannel now holds under Mr. Campbell of Airds; and that the Pannel had cauſed the Witneſs to be removed from that Poſſeſſion, and ſucceeded him in it: An Objection in itſelf inſufficient in Point of Law, which cannot ſuppoſe Men to be ſo wicked as to entertain mortal Enmity for ſuch a Cauſe; and therefore, as you heard, it was over-ruled by the Court; notwithſtanding which we freely paſſed from the Witneſs, being ſatisfied that we had Evidence enough beſides, and unwilling to leave any Room for the Pannel to complain, or for you, Gentlemen of the Jury, to apprehend that any one Witneſs was uſed againſt him, of whoſe Credibility there could be the ſmalleſt Suſpicion; but the very moving of ſuch Objection on the Part of the Pannel, affords one Proof of his own Senſe of the Nature and Degree of ſuch Offence.

Another ſignal Proof of this appears from the Oath of Ewan Macintyre, late Herd in Glenduror, who hath depoſed, " That he engaged to be " Herd to Mr. Campbell of Ballieveolan in the Farm of Glenduror, for the " Year 1751; and that, the Day after he entered into his Service there, " the Pannel challenged him for accepting thereof, and told him, that he " would be fit-ſides with him ſooner or later for doing it; and that, if " he did not meet with Reſentment himſelf in his Life-time, others, ſuch " as his Friends, might meet with it after his Death." And adds, " That " he himſelf was never in the Pannel's Service." This was ſurely carrying this Deluſion to a moſt extravagant Pitch, and ſuch as, to any Stranger to this odd Way of thinking, muſt have appeared incredible, till he heard the Proof of a Fact, which demonſtrates how deeply that Opinion is rooted in the Mind of this Pannel.

And, accordingly, we have heard how that was farther diſplayed by his Words and by his Actions on other Occaſions, in reſpect of the deceaſed Glenure, for the Cauſes of Offence I have mentioned, by the Evidence I ſhall now point out.

And firſt of all, John Breck Maccoll, the Bouman to Appin (who, tho' he lives in a Deſart, appeared, to me, to have given his Evidence in a moſt natural ingenuous Manner; and, by his own Words and Behaviour related in it, diſcovers a Degree of Sagacity which, in a Perſon of his Situation, ſurpriſed me; and) upon the Article I am now ſpeaking of, he depoſes, " That, in a Converſation the Deponent had with the Pannel, " as the Deponent beſt remembers, about two Years ago," (whether he was herein accurate in the Chronology, is not eſſential to the Queſtion in Iſſue) " Mention being made of Glenure's being about to take on himſelf " the Management of the Eſtate of Ardſhiel from the ſaid Pannel, and " thereby diſable the Pannel from being of any Service to Ardſhiel's Chil- " dren, he heard the Pannel ſay, he would be willing to ſpend a Shot " upon Glenure, tho' he went upon his Knees to his Window to fire it: " And farther depoſes, That he heard a waif (that is a flying or uncer- " tain Rumour or) Report in the Country, that Ardſhiel (the attainted " Perſon) had ſent Home a Meſſage, that he believed all his Friends were " dead, when Glenure was allowed to go on at the Rate he did."

Again,

Again, another remarkable Converſation of the Pannel's in the ſame Spirit, but carried a good deal farther, is proved to have happened about Chriſtmas laſt 1751, within the Pannel's own Brewhouſe at Aucharn, betwixt him and three of his own Servants, who all concur in proving it, namely, John More Maccoll, Dougal Maccoll, and John Beg Maccoll; of whom the firſt hath depoſed, " That he was preſent at a Converſation " that happened betwixt the Pannel, John Beg and Dougal Maccolls, both " Servants to the Pannel, in his Brew-houſe at Aucharn, before Day-" light, upon a Morning about Yule (or Chriſtmas) laſt, as the Deponent " beſt remembers: That the Deponent was then employed in diſtilling " the ſecond Draught of a Brewing of Aquavitæ, and the Pannel or-" dered the Deponent to give him, and People preſent, a Dram; which " the Deponent did: That the Pannel ſaid, Glenure would not take " the Rent from the Tenants of Aucharn, Part of the Ardſhiel Eſtate, " becauſe they had given the Pannel ſome Barley, which Glenure alledg-" ed they ought to have paid him: That the Pannel complained, it was " hard to refuſe the Rent in Money from the Tenants in a ſcarce Year; " and obſerved, that it would be of no great Conſequence to him, the " Pannel, tho' he ſhould pay back the Barley, in compariſon of what " it would be to the Tenants for ſubſequent Years, in caſe they were " obliged to pay their Farm, Bear and Meal," (to-wit, in Kind according to their Leaſes) " and ſaid the Tenants or Commoners were likely to be " very ill off; for, if Glenure went on in the Way he then did, it was " likely he would be Laird of Appin in a very ſhort Time; and that he " knew once a Sett of Commoners in Appin, who would not allow Glenure " to go on at ſuch a Rate: To which the Deponent and the reſt anſwer-" ed, That they knew no Commoners in the Country who could ſtrive " or contend with Glenure in that Manner."

This Converſation in the Brew-houſe is further proved or explained by the other two Servants preſent: And John Beg Maccoll adds this Circumſtance, " That after he and Dugald Maccoll went out of the Brew-" houſe, either that Day, or ſome time thereafter, they talked together " what the Import of this Converſation might be; and that the Depo-" nent was at a Loſs, whether to conſider it as an Encouragement to de-" ſtroy Glenure, or as a Complaint againſt the Commoners of Appin, as " not being ſo faithful to the Pannel, as he expected them to be."

It muſt be left to your Conſideration, Gentlemen, whether this John Beg Maccoll was not in the right in his Conjecture; and that this Converſation can receive no other Conſtruction, than that the Pannel took that Occaſion to inſtigate theſe Servants of his own, who were all of one Tribe, to reſent againſt Glenure the ſuppoſed Injuries to the common People of that Country, which the Pannel had thus repreſented and exaggerated to them; or at leaſt to feel their Pulſes, and try how they would reliſh ſuch a Propoſal or Inſinuation.

But farther ſtill, the Pannel continued to diſcover the Rancour with which his own Heart was filled againſt Glenure; the next Inſtance of which that hath appeared upon the Evidence, happened in April laſt, when he was on his Road to Edinburgh, with Intent to offer a Bill of Suſpenſion of the Removing of the Tenants that hath been mentioned: And here three Circumſtances are proved by the Teſtimonies of Alexander Campbell and Ewan Murray, two of his Landlords or Innkeepers by the Way, and Colin Maclaren, Merchant in Stirling, who fell into Company with the Pannel at both their Houſes, and travelled in the Pannel's Company ſome Miles on the Road towards Stirling.

Alexander Campbell in Teynaluib hath depoſed, " That in April laſt the " Pannel called at the Deponent's Houſe in the Morning, to have his Horſe " corned; and having called for, and got a Dram, which was afterwards " ſet down upon the Table, one Maclaren, a Merchant in Stirling, who " had lodged with the Deponent the Night before, being preſent, aſked " the Pannel, if he would not help the Deponent to a Dram? and the " Pannel anſwered, he did not know any Thing that he would help the " Deponent, or any of his Name to, if it was not to the Gibbet: And " after ſome farther Converſation, the Deponent ſaid, that Glenure, as " he ſuppoſed, was the Perſon of the (Deponent's) Name with whom " the Pannel had the greateſt Quarrel; and the Deponent did not know " any good Cauſe the Pannel had for it. To which the Pannel anſwer-" ed, That if Glenure had uſed the Deponent as ill as he had uſed him " (the Pannel), by turning him out of his Poſſeſſion, he would have no " leſs Quarrel with him than he had. And, upon the Pannel's Interro-" gatories, the Witneſs added, That at that Time he thought what the " Pannel ſaid proceeded from Malice, and that the Pannel was then " perfectly ſober."

This Converſation was confirmed by Colin Maclaren, the Merchant, who lodged in that Houſe all Night, who adds, " That the Pannel then " ſaid (ſpeaking of the Campbells) that he did not chuſe to be an Exe-" cutioner, but he could draw down ſome of their Feet;—and that at " firſt, during this Converſation in Campbell's Houſe, he thought that " the Pannel had been in Joke, but afterwards it was like to become " very ſerious; for the Landlord and he came to pretty high Words " together."

The next Landlord, Ewan Murray, at the Weſt End of Lochern, hath depoſed, " That in April laſt, the Pannel, and Colin Maclaren, Merchant " in Stirling, came to the Deponent's Houſe, and the Pannel told the " Deponent, that Glenure had warned away ſeveral Families in Ardſhiel's " Eſtate to remove; and that he was informed, that none of the Factors " on the forfeited Eſtates had Power to remove the Tenants; and that " he was going to Edinburgh to take Advice of Lawyers about it; and " if he had not that Power, that the Pannel would apply for Suſpenſion " in his own Name, and in Name of the reſt of the Tenants: And the " Converſation turning upon an Officer in the Army that was branded " with Cowardice, and had been broke on that Account; the Pannel " ſaid, That he had Reaſon to ſay, that Glenure was as great a Coward " as that Officer; for that he, the Pannel, had challenged him to fight " him, which Glenure declined; and deſired the Deponent to tell Glenure, " that he had told him ſo: But the Deponent anſwered, That he would " not carry any ſuch Meſſage from one Gentleman to another: And " from the Converſation, the Deponent underſtood, that the Arms " with which the Pannel had challenged Glenure to fight, was with " Piſtols."

And it is true, Gentlemen, that this Witneſs adds, upon the Pannel's Interrogatory, " That he thought the Pannel was a little con-" cerned with Drink; but if it was ſo, tum veræ voces."

This Converſation is again confirmed by Mr. Maclaren, the Pannel's Fellow-Traveller, in both the Parts of it; who adds this Circumſtance, That the latter Part of the Converſation happened upon the Road after they left that Houſe, and Murray the Landlord rode ſome Part of the Way along with them: And then Mr. Maclaren depoſes to a third Converſation betwixt himſelf and the Pannel, in theſe Words: " That, after " parting with Ewan Murray, in the Courſe of their Journey, the Depo-" nent found, that the Removing was much at the Pannel's Heart, and the " Deponent endeavoured all he could to divert the Converſation to an-" other Subject: That the Pannel told him, That if he failed in a Suſ-" penſion at Edinburgh, he would carry it to the Britiſh Parliament; " and if he failed there, told him, after a little Pauſe, and with an Em-" phaſis, that he behoved to take the only other Remedy that remained."

Theſe laſt Words, Gentlemen, need no Explanation; for ſurely, after the Judgment of the Britiſh Parliament, no other legal or lawful Remedy could remain.

And, as to the Condition of the Pannel during theſe Converſations, Mr. Maclaren farther depoſes, " That he did not think the " Pannel drunk either in Campbell's Houſe, or in Ewan Murray's " Houſe; but after leaving Murray's Houſe, they drank two or three " Drams at a Dram-houſe, and after that the Deponent thought " him much concerned with Liquor; and it was after taking theſe " Drams that the Converſation between Murray and the Pannel, with " reſpect to challenging Glenure, happened; and that the Depo-" nent and the Pannel had rode ſeveral Miles together before the Con-" verſation about the Britiſh Parliament; and the Deponent thought him " even then ſtill concerned with Drink:" And very likely it was this that threw the Pannel ſo much off his Guard as to ſpeak out, to his Landlord and his Fellow-Traveller, ſo much of what lay deeply at his own Heart, and to tell upon himſelf this Matter of Fact about the Challenge he had given Glenure to fight him with Piſtols.

Such appearing to have been the Temper and Diſpoſition of the Pannel towards Glenure in the Month of April laſt, and before that Time; I ſhall next point out to you, Gentlemen, the Evidence concerning that of his Friend Allan Breck, who himſelf does not appear ever to have had any Acquaintance of, or Intercourſe with Glenure in his Life, but, by the Pannel's own ſhewing, was his Kinſman, and had been his Ward or Pupil; and, by Breck's Character, and his then Situation, as being engaged in foreign Service, and not at Liberty to live openly in this Kingdom for any long Time, though he went about among his Highland Friends without any Scruple, he was a fitter Inſtrument of the Vengeance meditated againſt Glenure, than the Maccolls the Pannel's own Servants, or any of the common People of Appin, could be.

And, concerning this Allan Breck, John Beg Maccoll, one of the Pannel's Servants, hath depoſed, " That, in March laſt, he came to the " Pannel's Houſe, late in the Evening, dreſſed in a blue Coat, red " Waiſtcoat, black ſhag Breeches, and a feathered Hat," (that is in his French Dreſs, which the Witneſſes call a ſide or long Coat, in Oppoſition to the black ſhort Coat with ſilver Buttons belonging to the Pannel, which he was afterwards ſeen in; and, upon this his firſt Arrival, the Witneſs proceeds to depoſe,) " That he looked into the Kitchen, and " went immediately to the Room where the Pannel and his Family were; " that afterwards he uſed to go through the Country to different Places, " and came frequently back to the Pannel's Houſe: That once he re-" mained there a Week, which was the longeſt Time that he ſtaid there " at one Time."

Here is then the Intimacy ſtill ſubſiſting betwixt the Pannel and Breck, that naturally aroſe from the acknowledged Connexion betwixt them; the Pannel's Houſe was his Head-Quarters in the Country of Appin, from whence he made his Excurſions to viſit his other Friends in thoſe Parts; and, during the Pannel's Abſence on his Journey to Edinburgh, Breck went over to ſee his Relations in Rannoch. And it hath appeared upon the Evidence, how thoroughly Mr. Breck eſpouſed, and entered into the Notions and Sentiments of his old Guardian and Friend the now Pannel, with reſpect to Glenure.

And on this Head Duncan Campbell, Change-keeper at Annat, depoſes, " That, in the Month of April laſt, the Deponent met with Allan " Breck Stewart, with whom he was not before acquainted, and John " Stewart of Auchnacoan, at the Houſe of the Walk-miller of Acheſ-" ragan, and went on with them to the Houſe; that Allan Breck ſaid, " that he hated all the Name of Campbell; and the Deponent ſaid, he " had no Reaſon for doing ſo; but Allan ſaid he had very good Reaſon " for it: That thereafter they left that Houſe; and, after drinking a Dram " at another Houſe, came to the Deponent's Houſe, where they went in, " drunk ſome Drams, and Allan Breck renewed the former Converſation; " and the Deponent making the ſame Anſwer, Allan ſaid, That if the " Deponent had any Reſpect for his Friends, he would tell them, that " if they offered to turn out the Poſſeſſors of Ardſhiel's Eſtate, he would " make black Cocks of them before they entered into Poſſeſſion; by which " the Deponent underſtood ſhooting them, it being a common Phraſe in " the Country: That John Stewart ſaid he did not blame Glenure ſo much " as Ballieveolan, for taking thoſe Poſſeſſions, whereas Glenure was doing " the King's Service: And Allan Breck replied, That beſides that, he had " another Ground of Quarrel againſt Glenure, for writing to Colonel " Crawfurd, that he, Allan, was come Home from France; but that he " was too cunning for him; for that, when at Edinburgh, he had made " up his Peace with General Churchill, and had got his Paſs, which he " had in his Pocket-Book: That the Deponent aſked a Sight of it; " that he ſearched his Pocket-Book, but could not find it; upon which " he tore a Leaf out of the Book, and ſaid, There it was. And depoſes, " That he ſaid twenty Times over, he would be fit-ſides with Glenure " where-ever he met him, and wanted nothing more, than to meet him " at a convenient Place."

This Converſation is confirmed by Anne Maclaren, Servant to the ſaid Duncan Campbell, who depoſes, " That ſhe heard Allan Breck then ſay, " That he would not ſhun Glenure, where-ever he met him; by which " ſhe underſtood, that he was to do Hurt or Harm to Glenure, where-ever " he ſaw him."

And it is farther confirmed by Angus Macdonald, the Walk-miller mentioned by Duncan Campbell, and by Robert Stewart, a fourth Person present in the Company, who adds indeed, that Allan Breck was much in Drink at the Time of uttering the above Expressions; but they are not the less to be regarded in this Trial, when the Occasion of these Threats, the Repetition of them, and, last of all, the fatal Execution hath been at the same Time proved before you.

Another like Conversation of Allan Breck's was proved to have happened at the House of Malcolm Maccoll, Change-keeper at Pertnacrosh, by the Landlord, and by Anne his Wife, who depose, "That, one Morning "in April last, Allan Breck being in his House with John Stewart, John "Maccoll, then Servant to the Deponent, came into the Company in a "shabby Condition; that Allan Breck asked who he was? that the said "John Stewart answered, That he was an honest poor Man, with a nume-"rous Family of small Children, and that it would be great Charity in "any body to assist him; upon which Allan Breck desired the said John "Stewart to give the said John Maccoll a Stone of Meal, and he would pay "for it, which the said John Stewart promised to do: That the said Allan "then gave the said John Maccoll a Dram, and told him, if he would fetch "him the Red Fox's Skin, he would give him what was much better.— "And depose, That they gave no great Notice to these Expressions at the "Time; but, after they heard of Glenure's Murder, believed he meant "Glenure, as he was commonly called Colin Roy, which means Red Colin, "in the Country."

A third and very remarkable Instance of Allan Breck's Conversations on this Subject, was one which he held with two of the Pannel's Servants above-mentioned, Dugald and John More Maccolls; whereof the former deposes, "That as he and John Maccoll were harrowing in a Field belong-"ing to the Pannel at Auchairn, being the same Day, or the Day after the "Pannel went for Edinburgh, (that is, on the 3d or 4th of April) Allan "Breck Stewart walked for a good Time about the Field; and as they were "looshing their Horses, the said Allan Breck and they entered into Conver-"sation about France, and People from this Country there; and John More "Maccoll asked, if there was any Prospect of any of them coming back? "Upon Allan Breck's answering, he was afraid they would not, John More "said, he wished that none had ever come from that Country; in which "the said Allan joined him, saying, it had dispersed the Friends he most "regarded; and (then added) that it was a particular Misfortune, that the "Management of any Concerns they left behind them, fell into the Hands "of one that was about to shew them no Manner of Favour; and declar-"ed, that he meant Glenure; and told, that the Commoners of Appin were "little worth, when they did not take him out of the Way before now; "and upon their saying, nobody would run that Risque, not knowing who "would stand by them; Allan Breck answered, That he knew how to con-"vey out of the Way any Person that would do so, that he would never "be catched; and also said, That they, and the Tribe they were of, "(meaning the Maccolls) were not like to be the least Sufferers by Glen-"ure's Proceedings."

John More Maccoll swears to the same Conversation at the harrowing, and deposes, that Allan Breck then said, "If they, the Commoners of "Appin, were worth themselves, they could keep out Glenure, and hinder "him from oppressing them; in which Case they would not be banished "from their natural Possessions; and, upon the Deponent's answering, "he did not see how any body could pretend to strive or struggle with "Glenure in that Way, as he had the Laws of the King and Country for "him, and nobody to support or take them by the Hand after their so do-"ing; Allan said, he had it in his Power to save or protect any body that "would put Glenure from trampling upon the Country in the Manner he "then did."

Here then was Allan Breck the Pupil, in Spring last, a few Weeks before the Murder happened, speaking the very same Language, and using the same Arguments, with two of these Maccolls, the Servants of the Pannel, with which the Pannel himself had been practising upon them in his own Brew-house about Christmas last; and this Conversation of Breck's was not like the former, after drinking Drams in Change-houses, but when he was sober and cool, walking in the Fields about the Pannel's House, which was in effect his Home.

And, to the Evidence on this Article, may be added, what the Pannel himself hath declared at his first Examination before the Sheriff-Substitute, which has been proved and read in your Presence, when, being interrogated, "If he had any Conversation with Allan Breck concerning Glenure? "answered, That the said Allan asked the Declarant, if he heard that Ser-"jeant More (Cameron) was come from France, or if he was in the Country "of Appin? To which the Declarant answered, That he did not hear he was "in Appin, but he heard he was in Glenetive last Year; whereupon the said "Allan told the Declarant, that Serjeant More swore he would kill Glen-"ure, because of the Treatment he gave the Tenants on the Estate of "Mamore, Part of Lochiel Estate. Declared also, That the said Allan "Breck threatened that he would challenge Ballievoolan and his Sons to "fight, because of his removing the Declarant last Year from Glenduror, "and being about to remove the other Tenants this Year from some other "Parts of the Estate of Ardshiel."

Now, as to the Mention here made by the Pannel of Serjeant More Cameron, I shall hereafter have Occasion to take Notice of the Use the Pannel made of it; but have here only to observe, that the Causes of Offence, for which the Pannel says Breck threatened to fight Ballievoolan, were the very same which the Pannel himself, as well as Breck, resented so highly against Glenure, namely, the removing the Pannel himself from Glenduror the last Year, and being about to remove other Tenants of Ardshiel this Year: And though the Pannel carefully avoids saying any thing of Breck's Threatenings against Glenure, after he had been actually murdered, and had attempted to throw the Suspicion of that upon Serjeant More; yet here, by the Pannel's own shewing, Breck had entered thoroughly into those Quarrels of his for the actual Removal of himself, and the intended Removal of others, and threatened to challenge and fight Ballievoolan upon that Account.

And as to the other Ground of Quarrel against Glenure, which Allan Breck mentions in one of the above Conversations, namely, for his supposed writing to Colonel Crawfurd, that he, Allan, was come Home from France, I shall not take upon me to explain, or to guess in what Manner Allan Breck came to be possessed with such a Conceit; because we have heard no Evidence concerning the Manner in which he received such Piece of false Information or Intelligence; for that it was false hath been fully proved before you. First of all, Colonel Crawfurd himself "being asked whe-"ther the deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure ever told him, that Allan "Breck Stewart was a Deserter, and in this Country; hath answered upon "Oath, in the negative."

And next, Mr. Campbell of Airds hath deposed, That, in Spring last, "he had a Letter from Colonel Crawfurd, telling him, that he heard Allan "Breck Stewart was come to the Country, and inlisting Men for the French "King's Service, and desired the Deponent to inquire if it was so: That "the Deponent did inquire, and wrote the Colonel for Answer, That he "heard he had been in the Country, but that he was then gone away: "That this was in the Month of April, to the best of the Deponent's "Remembrance; and it seems about that Time Allan Breck Stewart had "gone to Rannoch, which gave Occasion to the Deponent's being informed "that he was gone away, and did not hear of his having returned to the "Country till after Glenure's Murder; and thinks he wrote also to Colo-"nel Crawfurd, according to the Information he had got, that Allan "Breck Stewart was in use of coming every Year to the Country since "Ardshiel went to France."

And Alexander Stewart of Innernahyle deposes, "That he remembers that "Allan Breck Stewart came over to this Country a Year or two ago, and "staid some Weeks among his Friends; but neither at that Time, nor the "last Time, did he seem, so far as the Deponent observed, to be in any "Apprehension of being taken; only, as he had been once in the Army, "he did not chuse to meet with any of the King's Troops."

And besides all this, it hath appeared in the Proof before you, that Breck Stewart remained in the Country, as usual, a full Month or more, after he had mentioned the supposed Notice given concerning him by Glenure to Colonel Crawfurd; and it hath not been proved, or even alledg-ed, that in pursuance of that Notice, whoever gave it, there was any Search made for Breck, or the smallest Disquiet given to him, or any Alarm or Precautions taken by him, till after the Murder of Glenure: To say nothing therefore of the Injustice of that Cause of Offence, had it been true, that Glenure, a good Subject to his Majesty, formerly a military, and still a civil Officer in his Service, had given Notice to the command-ing Officer in a neighbouring Garrison, of such a Person as Breck Stewart, a late Rebel, a Deserter, or a French Emissary, possibly for raising Recruits, being then lately come into that Country; I have only to observe on this Occasion, that in Fact it is incredible, that Breck Stewart himself, upon a bare Surmise, which was not true, that Glenure had given such Notice to Colonel Crawfurd, and upon which no Molestation followed to himself, should have conceived or prosecuted a deadly Hatred against Glenure; and therefore the true Cause of that Enmity must have been the other main Quarrel or Cause of Offence, which was first taken up by the now Pannel, and thereafter adopted and espoused by Breck in the Manner that you have heard.

And, for the Truth of this Observation, we have the Authority of the Pannel himself, who had the best Opportunity to be thoroughly acquaint-ed with Allan Breck's Sentiments; for, in the Pannel's Examination that hath been read before you, he says, "That how soon the Declarant heard "of Glenure's Murder, it came into his Mind, that Serjeant More had done "it, because Allan Breck had told him, that the said Serjeant swore bloody "Revenge against Glenure, before the Serjeant came from France, upon "Account of Glenure's Treatment of Lochiel's Tenants, and his differing "with John Cameron of Fassafern, Brother to Lochiel: That the Decla-"rant's Reason for suspecting Allan Breck afterwards was, because he left "the Country abruptly, without taking Leave of him, as he expected; "and, if the said Allan was guilty of the said Murder, he believes it be-"hoved to be on Account of the Disturbance given to the Tenants of the "Estate of Ardshiel, and he knows no other."

Thus, Gentlemen, stands the Evidence you have heard of the Causes of Offence, such as they were, that were taken by the Pannel and his Friend Breck Stewart against the late Glenure, and of the Manner in which their Resentment against him had been expressed and displayed in and before the Month of April last, when the Pannel went to Edinburgh to obtain a Sus-pension for staying the Removings. And we must now proceed to examine the Evidence of the Sequel of these Animosities and Threatenings, and of the fatal Execution thereof by the actual Murder of Glenure, upon the very Eve of Whitsunday, or the 15th of May, when he was to have proceeded to the removing of the Tenants of Ardshiel, after he had, upon Answers made, obtained the Bill of Suspension offered by the Pannel to be refused or dis-missed; whereby the Pannel's last Effort, to prevent those Removings, and to preserve his own Authority or Influence with the Tenants of Ard-shiel, had been frustrated.

On the 27th April last, by the Pannel's own Account, he returned to his own House from Edinburgh, with the Order he had obtained on his Bill of Suspension, that the same should be answered, and a Sist or Stay of Proceeding in the Interim; soon after which, he called the Tenants, and gave them Notice what he had been doing for them, and sent them with his Notary to intimate the Sist to Glenure; which was accordingly done on the 1st of May, as Charles Stewart, the Notary, hath deposed.

On Saturday the 9th of May, Glenure returned to his own House from Edinburgh, whither he had gone to make an Answer to that Bill of Sus-pension that had been intimated to him; and, upon that Answer, had got the same refused or dismissed; and gave out, in his Family, his Resolution, after reposing himself that Sunday at Home, to set out on Monday the 11th for Fort-William, in order to settle the Affairs of his Factory on the Lochiel Estate, and to return to Appin or Ardshiel before the 15th.

At this Time Allan Breck Stewart is proved to have been at the House of John Stewart of Fasnacloich, distant but one Mile from Glenure's House, which, in that Country, is near Neighbourhood; and there accompanied by Charles, one of the Pannel's Sons, where Allan Breck had Opportunity to get Intelligence of the Motions of Glenure; which accordingly he re-ceived from his Landlord John Stewart the elder of Fasnacloich, who hath deposed, " That he told Allan Breck, that Glenure was come from Edin-

" burgh, with a Warrant to remove the Tenants; to which Allan Breck
" said, That if there was a Warrant, there was no more to be said; but
" that if he had no Warrant, he would not be allowed to remove them:
" And the Witness adds, That he heard, on Sunday the 10th of May,
" that Glenure was going to Fort-William; and Allan Breck left his House
" about Nine o'Clock Monday Morning."

This is confirmed by James Stewart the younger of Fasnacloich, who adds, " That Breck was then in his French Dress, and that, when he " went away on Monday the 11th, about Nine in the Morning, he " told the Family that he was going to leave the Country soon, but " would see them again at Fasnacloich before he went away: And further
" says, That, on Sunday the 10th, he heard, being in Company with
" Allan Breck, that Glenure had got an Order from Edinburgh to remove
" the Tenants, and was gone to Fort-William."

From Fasnacloich, Allan Breck came directly the same Day to the Pannel's House at Aucharn, where, soon after, he put off his French Cloaths, and put on the black or dark-coloured short Coat belonging to the Pannel with silver Buttons, with a Bonnet or Trowsers, being, as several of the Pannel's Servants have deposed, the second Time they ever saw him in that Dress; the only former Time having been, when Breck went in these Cloaths for some Days to Rannoch in April preceding, whilst the Pannel was at Edinburgh.

And now the Pannel himself hath declared, " That he was informed
" on Monday the 11th of May, by his Son Charles, Allan Breck, and Fas-
" nacloich's Daughter, that they heard Glenure was to go to Lochaber that " Day; and that one or other of them told him, that Glenure was to re-
" move the Tenants of Ardshiel."

By the Communication of this Intelligence, it appeared, that the Matter in Dispute was coming to a Crisis; the laborious Efforts made by the Pannel, in going to Edinburgh, of his own Accord, to get a Stop put to the Removing, he now saw were rendered ineffectual, by Means of Glenure's having gone thither after him: And it is presumeable from the Facts that preceded, and that followed this Day, that this was the Time when the Pannel and Breck, at his own House, concerted, that Glenure should be cut off by the Hands of Breck, upon his Return from Fort-William into that Country of Appin; and, as it appears from the Evidence, that the Pannel at this Time was low in Cash, the Facts that have been proved serve to evince, or to render it further presumeable, that at this Time it was concerted betwixt the Pannel and Breck, that the latter, as soon as his Work was done, should retire to the Desart of Koalisnacoan, and there wait, till either the Pannel sent him a Supply of Money to carry him off, or caused the Money to be furnished by his Friend and Correspondent, William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh.

It is true, that for some Hours of this Monday the 11th, the Pannel went from his own House, upon a Message from Mr. Campbell of Airds; but he returned Home in the Evening; and in the Disposition that both he and Breck Stewart had long been in towards Glenure, which was now more inflamed by this fresh Intelligence they had received, that Glenure had got the better of them at Law, and was about to proceed in the Removings, a very short Consultation betwixt them might serve to make all this Concert; the Evidence of which arises from the ensuing Facts, joined with those preceding this 11th of May.

For it hath been proved, that on the Morning of Tuesday the 12th, Allan Breck set out from the Pannel's House, dressed in his short Cloaths, and went directly to the House belonging to Stewart of Ballachelish, adjoining to the Ferry of that Name, upon the Road by which Glenure was to come from Fort-William into Appin; and there Breck met his Friend Stewart the younger of Fasnacloich, who hath deposed, " That he took " Notice to Allan Breck, that he had changed his Dress; who answered,
" That he did it because the Day was warm:" And adds, " That the " Deponent was informed at Ballachelish, in Company with Allan Breck,
" that Glenure was gone to Fort-William."

The same Day Allan Breck went, accompanied by Fasnacloich the younger, to the House of Macdonald of Glenco, where his Mother-in-Law, the Pannel, and Ardshiel's Sister, also lived; and from thence, after staying about an Hour, went a-cross the Ferry to the House of Cameron of Callart, where another Sister of the Pannel and of Ardshiel lives, and where he lodged all that Night; and next Day, being Wednesday the 13th, came back, after calling again by the Way at Glenco's House of Carnoch to Ballachelish, where he remained the Night following.

And now, Gentlemen, we are come to the fatal Day, which was Thursday the 14th of May last, of which, and the Days immediately following, the various Events and Incidents that have been proved before you, merit your particular Attention, as I endeavour to put you in mind of them, as nearly as possible in their Order.

On the Morning of this Thursday the 14th, about Seven or Eight, as John Beg Maccoll, the Pannel's Servant, hath deposed, " The Pannel sent " him off with a Letter to Charles Stewart, Notary Public at Maryburgh,
" and told the Deponent, that the Letter was to make, or cause the said
" Charles Stewart come to the Country of Appin, to protest against Glenure,
" in case he had not a sufficient Warrant to remove the Tenants of Ard-
" shiel;—and also told the Deponent, he was to get some Money from
" William Stewart, Merchant at Maryburgh, to pay four Milk Cows that " were bought for him in the Country; and that if the Money was not " sent, he would not get the Cows; and that the Pannel desired the De-
" ponent to make all possible Dispatch:—That accordingly he made all the " Dispatch he could to Fort-William, where he arrived about Twelve
" o'Clock, delivered the Pannel's Letter to William Stewart, Merchant;
" who told him, that Charles Stewart, the Notary, was not at Home;
" but that there was a Notary along with Glenure, who would serve the " Pannel as well as Glenure; and further told the Deponent, that he, the " said William, had wrote to the Pannel in the Morning; that the said
" William did not give him any Money, but said, he would send Servants
" for the Cattle."

The Reason why he got no Money at this Time, is explained by William Stewart himself, who deposes, " That he gave no Answer in Writ" ing, and thinks he did not give any verbal Answer, if it was not, that
" he bid him tell his Master, that he was not in Cash, which (he says)
" was the Case."

The Letter itself, sent from the Pannel by this Witness, hath been produced, and proved before you; and the Postscript of it is in these Words, which I will now repeat, though they are inserted in the Libel: " As I have no Time to write to William, let him send down immediately
" 8 l. Sterling, to pay four Milk Cows I bought for his Use at Ardshiel."
——The Pannel must have had a very pressing Use for Money, when he was thus urging the Payment of the Price before the Buyer received the Cattle; and let it be observed, that this first Express sent with this Demand of Money from William Stewart, was dispatched by the Pannel on the Morning of the Day on which the Murder happened in the Evening.

Again, you are here to observe the Connexion betwixt the Pannel and this William Stewart at Maryburgh, who appears, by the Letter which he mentioned to the Messenger as having been sent by him that Morning to the Pannel, to have entered with great Zeal into the Pannel's Scheme for opposing the Removing of the Tenants; for that Letter also hath been proved before you, and contains these Words: " I find Glenure has a " mind to eject the Tenants; but they ought to be deaf to it, and, at
" all Risques, keep Possession, as they are in good Hands, and it must
" end in Exchequer; so that I beg they keep Possession: as there will be
" no Troops, they ought to repel Force by Force, and take their Hazard
" of the Consequence, as it can be no more than violent Profits."

About Noon on this Thursday the 14th, as Ballachelish elder hath deposed, " His Guest Allan Breck went out with a Fishing-rod in his Hand,
" and was fishing in a Burn near the Deponent's House; but he did not " see him take any: That he did not take Leave of the Deponent, and
" did not return, and he knows nothing of him since."

Archibald Macinnish, the Ferry-man at Ballachelish, deposes, " That,
" after Mid-day upon Thursday the 14th of May last, as the Deponent was " sitting near the said Ferry with another Man, Allan Breck came be" hind him, and hoasted (or hemmed), and, upon the Deponent's looking
" about, desired him to come to him; which the Deponent did, and the " said Allan enquired of him, if Glenure had crossed the Ferry from Loch-
" aber to Appin? The Deponent told him he was sure he had not: That
" upon this Allan Breck went away towards the High Road, had on a
" dun-coloured big Coat, and had no Fishing-rod. And further deposes,
" That Glenure was expected back upon the Wednesday, and the Depo-
" nent was sure he must be back the Thursday, as it was currently reported
" in the Country, he was to have a Meeting with some Gentlemen at
" Kintalline (on the Ardshiel Estate) Thursday Night."

These Ferry-men have Opportunity to learn all the News in the Country; and that his Intelligence upon this last Article was just concerning the Motions of Glenure; and that the same were well known, is further proved by John Maccombich, Change-keeper at Kintalline, who hath deposed, " That upon Tuesday the 12th of May, Glenure sent Notice to the
" Deponent, that he and some other Company were to be at his House
" upon Thursday then next, and desired that he might be prepared for en-
" tertaining them: That he accordingly made Provision for them; that " he told that Glenure was to be at his House that Night, and that the " whole Neighbourhood knew of it."

And accordingly it hath been proved by the Persons who were in Company with Glenure, Mungo Campbell who attended him as a Clerk or Writer, John Mackenzie his Servant, Donald Kennedy one of the Sheriff's Officers, that Glenure and they crossed the Ferry of Ballachelish betwixt Four and Five in the Afternoon of this Day; that, after crossing the Ferry, Ballachelish elder walked along with Glenure about half a Mile, till they came to the Skirts of the Wood of Lettermore, where Glenure, pursuing his Journey through the Wood, which stood on the Ascent of the Hill on his left Hand, was suddenly shot through the Body with two Balls, that entered behind his Back, and came out at his Belly; of which Wounds he died upon the Spot about Six o'Clock that same Evening.

It is unnecessary for me to repeat the several moving Circumstances related by his Attendants; but if this base and cruel Murder was truly perpetrated by Allan Breck Stewart, who had expressed his Wishes to meet Glenure at a convenient Place, it must be confessed with Regret, that he here met him, or rather, in a base and cowardly Manner, lay in wait for him, at a Place convenient indeed for that wicked Purpose, for concealing himself whilst he went about it, and not far distant from a proper Place of Retreat, after it should be over, until he should be put in a Condition to leave the Country; for which a Supply of Money was necessary.

The News of the Murder was quickly brought to the House of the Pannel, by John Mackenzie, the Servant of the Deceased, who went there to get Intelligence of Mr. Campbell of Ballieveolan; " Where the Pannel see" ing him weeping, asked what the Matter was? And the Servant having
" told him his Master was killed, the Pannel wrung his Hands, expressed
" great Concern at what had happened, as what might bring innocent
" People to Trouble, and prayed that might not happen."

And John Beg Maccoll, the Pannel's Servant, who had been sent Express that Morning to Fort-William, and who was present at this Circumstance, relates it in these Words: " That he was hardly an Hour re" turned Home, when Glenure's Servant came to the Door, calling for
" the Pannel; that the Pannel went immediately to the Door, and asked
" the Servant what was the Matter? and what News he had? To which " the Servant replied, The worst I ever had; my Master is murdered in
" the Wood of Lettermore: Upon which the Pannel said, Lord bless me!
" was he shot? To which the Servant answered, That he was shot, and " said, the Pannel ought to go and take care of his Corpse: That the " Servant immediately went off; but neither the Pannel, nor any of his " Family, went near the Corpse; and the Pannel said, that as he and
" Glenure were not in good Terms, and some of the People that were to " meet Glenure had Arms, he did not care to go near them, not knowing
" what might happen. And further said, that this was a dreadful Acci" dent, and he was afraid would bring Trouble on the Country; and
" appeared to be sorry for what had happened."

Here it is evident, that as soon as the Deed was over, the Pannel's first Reflection, from whatever Cause that sprung, was an Apprehension, that it might bring himself into Trouble or Danger.

That same Night, at the Pannel's House, Orders were given to the Servants by his Wife, to hide all the Arms about the House; and accordingly John Beg Maccoll and Dugald Maccoll hid a large Spanish Gun, that used to stand in the Brew-house, and four Swords.

But

But here it is remarkable, that none of the Servants saw that Night the other shorter Gun, but of a larger Bore, as you have seen, both having been produced, and proved before you; concerning which Dugald Maccoll deposes, "That Allan Stewart, Son to the Pannel, told "him and his Fellow-Servant, that he himself had concealed the lesser "(or shorter) Gun, that used to stand at the End of the Girnel in the "Barn, under the said Girnel, where he thought it would be safe."

That same Night, and after the Murder was over, two Witnesses have deposed, That they saw Allan Breck Stewart on the Hill above the House of Ballachelish, where he had lodged the Night before, and not far from the Spot where the Murder happened. These were Katharine Mackinnish, Servant to Ballachelish, a Witness called by the Pannel, who says, "That "in the Evening of the 14th of May, she saw Allan Breck Stewart at a "Goat-house in the Moor of Ballachelish, after Glenure was killed; and "that Allan Breck then asked her, what was the Occasion of the Stir in "the Town? and that she told him, Glenure was murdered: And fur-"ther asked her, who might have committed the Murder? and she told "him, she did not know: And farther says, that she told Donald Stew-"art, (who is Nephew and Son-in-law to Ballachelish) where she saw "Allan Breck; but that she did not tell him to go to the said Allan, nor did "he desire her."

And this Donald Stewart deposes, "That upon the Evening of Thurs-"day the 14th of May, about Night-fall, Katharine Mackinnish called "him out of Ballachelish's House, and informed him, that Allan Breck "wanted him, and that he was a little above the House on the Brae (or "Hill): That the Deponent went up the Brae, and met Allan Breck, "who was then dressed in a great Coat, and a dark short Coat under it, "with white metal Buttons: The Deponent told him of the Murder, and "said, It could not be but that he, Allan Breck, was about it: To which "Allan Breck answered, That he heard of the Murder, but had no hand in "it: To which the Deponent replied, he did not believe him:—That the "said Allan Breck further said, he believed he would be suspected of the Mur-"der; and upon that Account, and as he was a Deserter formerly from "the Army, it was necessary for him to leave the Kingdom."

The Events of Friday the 15th of May last, immediately following the Murder committed on the Evening of Thursday, do no less merit your Attention, and these begin very early on that Day; for John Macdonald of Glenco deposes, "That on Friday the 15th of May last, the said Allan "Breck Stewart came again to the Deponent's House at Carneck, at Three "or Four o'Clock in the Morning, and knocked at a Window when the "Family were all in Bed; that the Deponent went to the Door of his "House, and there saw Allan Breck, who gave him the first Notice he "had of Glenure's being murdered the Evening before in the Wood of "Lettermore; and told him, that he was to leave the Country, and to go "the Moor-road leading to Rannoch; and came to take Leave of the De-"ponent and his Step-mother, who is a Sister of Ardshiel's; and that the "Deponent did not ask Allan Breck any Questions about the said Murder."

And with Glenco concurs Isobel Stewart his Step-mother, who also got up, and went out with her Step-son, to receive Allan Breck's nocturnal Visit at the Door: And she says, "That she asked him, what News up "the Country? To which he answered, A good deal of News; that Glen-"ure was killed, or shot the Evening before, in the Wood of Lettermore: "That he was come to take Farewel of the Deponent; for he was to "leave the Country; and that she asked him no more Questions about the "Murder, though she asked him to come into the House; but he an-"swered, he would not stay."

Upon this Incident it is an obvious Reflection, that neither the Pannel's Sister, the Lady Glenco, nor her Son, judged it necessary to ask any Question of Allan Breck about the Murder, which he now related to them, as what had happened a few Hours before he came thus unseasonably and abruptly to take Leave: These Circumstances superseded the Question as superfluous, who it was that did it?

About Ten o'Clock in the Forenoon of this same Friday the 15th, Donald Stewart, the Nephew and Son-in-law of Ballachelish, deposes, "That "he met James Stewart, the Pannel, in Duror, not far from his own "House; and that, upon the Deponent's regretting that such an Acci-"dent, as Glenure's Murder, should happen in the Country; the Pannel "joined with him, and said, that he was informed, that one Serjeant "More, alias John Cameron, had been threatening Harm to Glenure in "France; but did not inform the Deponent who told him so: And fur-"ther deposes, That, to his Knowledge, Serjeant More has not been in "Appin these ten Years past."

Now this very Donald Stewart, who is a Friend and Neighbour of the Pannel's, had, as you have heard, the Night before said to Allan Breck himself, that he was surely the Murderer, which was the Sense and Opinion of the whole Country; and yet here it is very remarkable, that, when the Thing was recent, and as somebody must have done it who was likely to be capable of such an Enormity, this Pannel, for want of a bet-ter Shift, is endeavouring to start a very improbable Hypothesis, and to throw the Suspicion on this Serjeant More Cameron, which, as it was destitute of any Foundation in Truth, gained no Sort of Credit or Belief; and you are to consider, Gentlemen, if it could be started by the Pannel, at this Time, for any other Purpose than to divert the Attention and the Suspicions of Mankind from his Friend Allan Breck.

The same Day about Twelve o'Clock, Alexander Stewart, travelling Packman in Appin, and first Cousin to Allan Breck, deposes, "That the "Pannel desired him to go to Fort-William to William Stewart, Merchant "there, and get from him five Pounds, or five Guineas; and told the De-"ponent, that his Friend Allan Breck was about to leave the Country, as "there were Troops coming into it, and that he might be suspected of "Glenure's Murder; and that it was incumbent upon him, the Pannel, "to supply the said Allan Breck with Money; and the Pannel desired the "Deponent to tell the said William Stewart, that he must find him Money, "though he should borrow it from twenty Purses; and also to tell him to "give Credit in five Pounds Sterling to John Breck Maccoll, Bouman to "Appin at Koalisnacoan, in case he came to demand such a Sum: That, "in Consequence of this Message, he went to Fort-William, where he "arrived early in the Evening, met William Stewart, delivered his Mes-"sage; that William Stewart told him, he had not Money, but that next "Morning he would give him his Errand."

William Stewart himself, who received this Message, deposes; "That "it was about Ten o'Clock Forenoon, or betwixt Ten and Twelve, that "he saw the Packman at Fort-William; and his Wife swears it was "about Mid-day;" and, if they are both in the right, the Packman himself must have been mistaken, when he says, that he was dispatched by the Pannel from Aucharn, so late as about Noon that Day; of which Circumstance I shall hereafter have Occasion to take some Notice.

William Stewart further deposes, "That, at this Time, he asked the "Packman, if he had come by the Road where that unlucky Murder "of Glenure had happened? and the Packman told him he did; but the "Deponent did not ask him who was suspected for it, nor had any other "Conversation on that Subject, there being a great many People present "in the Shop at the Time." But this Apology notwithstanding, (for all the People in the Shop at Maryburgh would have been ready to listen to News about such an uncommon Event) this William Stewart, who was so well acquainted with the Cause of Difference betwixt the Pannel and Glenure, being so little inquisitive on this Occasion of receiving a Message from the Pannel the Day after the Murder happened, seems to be no otherwise accountable, than by the Supposition that he knew so well who were Glenure's Enemies at that Time, that it was improper or unne-cessary for him to be inquisitive about the Authors of his Murder.

Dugald Maccoll, the Pannel's Servant, deposes, "That, about Four "o'Clock in the Afternoon of this Friday the 15th of May last, the "Pannel desired the Deponent to carry the Arms from the Houses (at "Aucharn), and hide them in the Moor; that accordingly the Deponent, "and John Beg Maccoll, took the foresaid large Gun from the Back of "the Sheep-house under the Thatch, and the said four Swords from "under the Thatch of the Barn, and found the Gun that used to stand "in the Barn under the Girnel, where the said Allan Stewart, the Pan-"nel's Son, said he hid it, and carried them to the Moor, and hid them "in the Hole of a Rock above the Peat-moss: That the large or Spanish "Gun, that stood in the Brew-house, was charged with Powder and small "Drops; and that there was no Shot in the small or lesser Gun, that used "to stand at the End of the Girnel in the Barn: That they overtook "Katharine Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, in the Brae above the House "of Aucharn, with a Pock or Sack, and something in it, under her Arm. "The Deponent asked her, what she had got in the Sack? to which she "answered, That it was Allan Breck's Cloaths, and that she was going to "hide them; and the Deponent, and the said John Beg Maccoll, saw her "hide the Sack in which the said Cloaths were."

This is confirmed by the Oath of John Beg Maccoll, the other Servant, who says, "They were desired by the Pannel's Wife to hide the Arms better" (i. e. than they had done the Night before); and by the Oath of Katha-rine Maccoll, who says, "That, upon the Evening of this Friday, her "Mistress, the Pannel's Wife, put up a blue Coat and red Waistcoat, "with something else, into a Sack, and delivered them to the Deponent, "desiring her to hide them some way without: That her Mistress did not "tell the Deponent to whom the Cloaths belonged, but that the Depo-"nent thought the said Coat and Waistcoat were Allan Breck's: And she "adds, That, some Time in Summer last, after the above Period, Solomon "Bane Maccoll, Servant to the Pannel, told the Deponent, that the said "Mrs. Stewart, Spouse to the Pannel, desired her to conceal what she "knew about the above Cloaths, in case she should be asked or examined "about them."

On Saturday the 16th of May, as William Stewart's Wife hath deposed, "She being solicitous to have the Cows, bought for her Husband's Use "by the Pannel, towards stocking a Farm they had taken, gave the Pack-"man, his Messenger, Three Guineas out of her Purse: And the Pack-"man deposes, That he got the Money from Mrs. Stewart, after he had "seen William Stewart himself, on this Saturday the 16th, who told him "he would let him go immediately; and that, having got the three "Guineas, he forthwith returned to Aucharn, and arrived there in the "Evening, near to which Place he found the Pannel a Prisoner; but the "Pannel's Wife, and the Deponent, having had Access to converse with "the Pannel apart, the Pannel asked the Deponent, what Money he had "brought from Fort-William? and, upon the Deponent's telling him "that he had brought three Guineas, the Pannel pulled a green Purse out "of his Pocket, out of which he took two Guineas, and gave them to "his Wife, who delivered them immediately to the Deponent; and the "Pannel desired that the five Guineas should be sent to that unhappy "Man, meaning Allan Breck, to see if he could make his Escape; and pitched "upon the Deponent, as a Person that should go with the Money.—"That soon after the Pannel was carried off by a Party to Fort-William; "and Mrs. Stewart told the Deponent, that he would find Allan Breck in "Koalisnacoan; and, some Time after Night-fall, the Deponent got his "Supper at Aucharn, and then the Pannel's Wife carried the Deponent "to the Back of the Brew-house, where there lay a Sack, out of which "the said Mrs. Stewart took a blue Coat, red Waistcoat, black Breeches, "a Hat and some Shirts, all which she delivered to the Deponent, order-"ing him to go with the Cloaths and Money to Koalisnacoan immediately, "and deliver them to John Breck Maccoll, Bouman to Appin, if he did "not meet Allan Breck himself; but directed the Deponent not to carry "the Cloaths to the Bouman's House, lest any Body should see them; "that the Deponent accordingly set out, that same Night, for Koalis-"nacoan."

In the mean while, as John Breck Maccoll, Bouman to Appin, hath deposed, "Upon the Afternoon of this Saturday the 16th of May, as "the Deponent was in a Fir-bush (or Thicket) near Aldavoim, at the "Foot of the Heugh (or deep hollow Place) of Corrynakeigh in Koa-"lisnacoan, he heard a Whistle, and, upon looking up, saw Allan Breck at a "little Distance, beckoning to the Deponent to come towards him; "which he did: That, after Salutations, the Deponent told him, he "was afraid it was no good Action that occasioned his being in such a "remote Place, and at such a Distance from any common Road; that "Allan Breck answered, The Place was not very far from a Road: "That the Deponent, having heard the Day before of Glenure's Mur-

"ders,

" der, charged Allan Breck with being guilty of it: That Allan Breck aſked " the Deponent, what he had heard about the Murder? That the De- " ponent anſwered, That he had ſeen no Perſon from the Strath (or Vale) " of Appin; but that two poor Women, that had come up Glenco, were " telling that Glenure was murdered Thurſday Evening in the Wood of " Lettermore; and that two People were ſeen going from the Place where " he was murdered; and that he, Allan Breck, was ſaid to be one of " them.

" That Allan Breck anſwered, he had no Concern in it; and that, if " his Information was right, there was but one Perſon about the Murder; " and that, as he was idle in the Country, he was ſure he would be ſuſ- " pected of it; but that would give him little Concern, if he had not " been a Deſerter, which would bear harder upon him, in caſe he was " apprehended, than any thing that could be proved againſt him about " the Murder.

" That the Deponent did not believe him, when he ſaid he had no " Hand in the Murder of Glenure; and, not caring to preſs it much upon " him, told him, that, as he was already ſuſpected, it was dangerous to " have any Intercourſe with him; and preſſed him to leave the Place, " leſt he ſhould bring the Deponent and his Family to Trouble.

" That Allan Breck ſaid, he did not doubt but that the Family of Ard- " ſhiel would be ſuſpected of the Murder, and it was probable the Pannel, " and Allan Stewart his Son, might be taken into Cuſtody about it; and " that he, Allan Breck, was afraid Allan Stewart the Pannel's Son's " Tongue was not ſo good as his Father's; by which Words the Deponent " underſtood, that Allan was eaſier intrapped than the Pannel.

" And, the Deponent ſtill inſiſting upon Allan Breck's leaving that " Neighbourhood, the ſaid Allan Breck told him, he would not leave the " Town (as the Witneſs expreſſes it, or the Place) for eight Days, unleſs " ſome Neceſſaries he expected came to him; and told the Deponent, unleſs " ſome Money came for him before next Morning, he, the Deponent, " muſt go to Fort-William with a Letter; that, though the Deponent " refuſed to go, Allan Breck looked about among the Trees, and finding " a Wood-pigeon's Quill, made a Pen of it, and having made Ink of ſome " Powder he took out of a Powder-horn that was in his Pocket, he wrote " a Letter, which he told the Deponent he muſt deliver to William Stewart, " Merchant at Maryburgh.

" And, upon the Deponent's telling him, that he would by no Means " undertake that, as he was informed that every body that went to Fort- " William was ſearched, Allan Breck ſaid, it was an eaſy Matter to hide " a Letter; the Deponent anſwered, If he was catched upon the Streets, " what would he do with it? Allan Breck told him, that the Letter muſt " not be found upon him by any Means, and, if he was catched with the " Letter, he muſt eat it before it was found; that the Deponent then told " the ſaid Allan Breck, that he did not know but he would be obliged to " go for ſome Beer next Day to Fort-William, in which Caſe he might " poſſibly carry the Letter; but at the ſame Time told the ſaid Allan " Breck, that, if he ſhould be taken up, he would tell all he knew about " him.

" That the ſaid Allan Breck deſired the Deponent to go to Callart, or " Glenco's Houſe, for a Peck of Meal to him; which the Deponent " refuſed; and, at parting, the ſaid Allan Breck told the Deponent, he " would ſee him next Day."

The Bouman further depoſes to the Dreſs in which he met Allan Breck at this Time, being the black ſhort Coat and Trowſers lying upon the Table, and produced to him, and proved to have been the Property of the Pannel.

Early upon Sunday Morning, the 17th of May laſt, as both the Pack- man and the Bouman have depoſed, they met near to the Bouman's Houſe, whereof the latter at firſt denied to the Packman, that he had ſeen Allan Breck; and, upon the other's being ſurprized at this, and ſaying, he was informed he would meet Allan Breck there, and had brought ſome Neceſ- ſaries for him; and the Bouman inquiring what he had brought? the Pack- man anſwered, five Guineas and ſome Cloaths; and told, that he had a great deal of Trouble in getting the Money; that he had been ſent by the Pan- nel to William Stewart at Fort-William, from whoſe Wife he got three Guineas, and that the Pannel or his Wife gave him the other two Guineas; and that the Pannel's Wife gave him the Cloaths, and informed him, that Allan Breck was to meet him at that Place; whereupon the Bouman owned to the Packman, that he had ſeen Breck the Day before, and that he expected theſe Things, and directed the Packman how he might find Breck, if he would go to a Hill he pointed out to him, near to the Heugh of Cerryna- keigh, and whiſtle once or twice, he believed Breck would come to him: But this the Packman declined, telling, that he had ſlept none for two Nights, and was very much fatigued; and upon this delivered to the Bou- man the five Guineas, and told, he had left the Cloaths at ſome Diſtance, and would ſhew them to the Bouman when he was going away; and then went to ſleep in the Bouman's Houſe.

After the Packman had ſlept ſome Hours here, he dined with the Bou- man his Landlord, and told him, " That the Pannel, and Allan his Son, " were made Priſoners the Evening before, and ſent to Fort-William; " and, upon the Bouman's inquiring who was ſuſpected of Glenure's " Murder? the Packman anſwered, That it was Allan Breck; and that it " was likely the Pannel, and Allan his Son, would ſtand the firſt Trial for " it." And about Noon this Sunday the Packman went away, without ſeeing his Couſin Breck, after having pointed out to the Bouman a Fir-tree, at the Root of which he had hid Allan Breck's Cloaths.

The Bouman further depoſes, (and indeed every Word of his Teſtimony merits your Attention, and was given in a moſt lively, natural, and cre- dible Manner) " That, after he had gone to Bed upon the ſame Sunday " Evening, he heard one knocking at the Window; and, imagining it " might be Allan Breck, he got up, and went out in his Shirt, and ſaw " Allan Breck at a little Diſtance from the Houſe; and upon the Depo- " nent's coming up to him, Breck aſked him, If any Meſſage had come " for him? The Deponent told him, that his Uncle's Son had come with " five Guineas and ſome Cloaths: That Allan Breck complained there was " but little Money, but hoped it would do his Buſineſs: That the De- " ponent told the ſaid Allan Breck, he was afraid he would ſtarve among " the Heather, and that he was not able to help him: That Allan Breck " anſwered, He had no occaſion for Victuals, but wanted a Drink very " much; upon which the Deponent went back to his Houſe, and carried " out ſome Whey, or ſome Milk and Water in a Noggin, and the five " Guineas, and gave both to Allan Breck: That the Deponent then went " for the Cloaths, which he alſo gave the ſaid Allan Breck, which conſiſted " of a blue long Coat, red Waiſtcoat, black Breeches, a Hat, ſome " Stockings and Shirts.

" That the Deponent told the ſaid Allan Breck, that the Pannel and " his Son Allan were apprehended on Account of Glenure's Murder: To " which Allan Breck anſwered, That that was no more than he expected; " but it would not ſignify much, as there could be no Proof againſt him; " but expreſſed ſome Apprehenſion, leſt Allan Stewart, Son to the Pan- " nel, might be betrayed by his own Tongue.

" That the Deponent deſired the ſaid Allan, now that he had got all " the Neceſſaries he expected, to go about his Buſineſs; and the ſaid Allan " Breck promiſed to do ſo, but told the Deponent, that he muſt meet " him, the ſaid Allan Breck, next Morning; that he muſt deliver the " Deponent the Cloaths he, the ſaid Allan Breck, had then on, to wit, " the black ſhort Coat and Trowſers ſhewn to the Deponent in the " Clerk's Hands, in order to be kept by the Deponent, till he delivered " them to the Pannel's Wife: That the Deponent promiſed to meet the " ſaid Allan Breck next Morning, but did not ſee him; and when the " Deponent went out next Morning, he found the ſaid ſhort black Coat, " Trowſers, and the Noggin in which he had carried the Drink to Allan " Breck, lying together in the Place where the Deponent parted with " Allan Breck the Night before; and that he hath not ſeen the ſaid Allan " Breck ſince."

On Monday the 18th of May, Allan Breck withdrew, as he had pro- poſed, by a very unfrequented Road, through the Moors, and over the Mountains, to Rannoch; and came that ſame Day to the Houſe of Allan Oig Cameron in Rannoch, his Uncle, with whom he remained till Wedneſ- day following. The Uncle hath ſaid, " He preſſed him earneſtly to make " a clean Breaſt, and tell him all he knew of Glenure's Murder. To " which Breck anſwered with an Oath, That he had never ſeen Glenure, " dead or alive; the Uncle however frequently repeated his Inſtances, till " Breck became angry, and the Uncle deſiſted further Inquiry."

Four Days after Breck left his Uncle's Houſe, that is, on the 24th of May, " the Uncle having Occaſion to be fourteen Miles from his own " Houſe, (further down the Country) and paſſing by the Side of a Wood, " he heard a Whiſtle from the Wood, and, looking about, ſaw Allan " Breck, who then told his Uncle, that his only Fear was to be appre- " hended by the Military, as he had been a Deſerter. The Uncle an- " ſwered, He was very ſure the Friends of the Deceas'd would procure " him his Diſcharge, if he could diſcover the Murderer. And Breck re- " plied, That they were at this Time in ſuch Fury and Rage, that he was " very ſure, were he apprehended, he would be hanged."

It is unneceſſary that I ſhould reſume minutely what the other Witneſſes ſaid, who ſaw Breck Stewart in Rannoch or Athole, when he paſſed thro' that Country at this Time; his Appearances beſpoke the Situation he was truly in, that of a Malefactor ſtudying to conceal himſelf, and making his Eſcape.

It is however material, that you ſhould further obſerve, that after Breck Stewart had thus diſappeared from the Country of Appin, where this Murder was committed, every body in that Country, and in that of Ran- noch, through which he retired, and in both which he was well known, and had Relations, imputed to him the actual Murder, and to no other Perſon. You have already heard, that Donald Stewart, the Nephew of Ballacheliſh, charged him with it to his Face, on the Night of Thurſday the 14th, when the Blood of the Deceas'd was hardly yet cold, as the Bouman did on the Saturday following; and, on the Monday following, Cameron his Uncle diſcovered the ſame Belief. And I have now to add upon this Head of the Voice of the Country, or the fama vicinæ, that Ballacheliſh elder, who had been his Landlord the Night before the Mur- der, ſays, " That, the Morning after the Murder was committed, the " Deponent really thought, that Allan Breck Stewart might be the Actor " in this Murder, becauſe he did not return to the Deponent again." And Macinnes, the Ferry-man at Ballacheliſh, ſays, " That he heard no " Body ſuſpected for the Murder of Glenure, but the ſaid Allan Breck." And James Mann, Change-keeper in Rannoch, ſays, " That, before Allan " Breck came to his Houſe in May laſt, it was reported in that Country, " that he was concerned in Glenure's Murder; and that he himſelf ſuſ- " pected him at the Time, as he came unſeaſonably, and was wanting " Proviſions."

There are yet other Circumſtances ſubſequent to the Murder, and to the Pannel's Commitment at Fort-William, that deſerve your Conſideration with the reſt of the Evidence; one of theſe is depoſed by Hugh Maclean, Bar- ber in Maryburgh, who ſays, " That one Day being called by the Pannel " to ſhave him, he thinks upon a Saturday, the Pannel aſked him, what " News he heard in the Town? The Deponent anſwered, That he, the " Pannel, was to be carried to Edinburgh on the Monday following; where- " upon the Pannel ſaid, that was a Matter that gave him no Concern, " and wiſhed it had happened ſooner; and was afraid of nothing but " that his Servants might be inticed to take Money, and turn againſt him; " and deſired the Deponent, as from him, to tell his Servants to ſay no- " thing but Truth, to keep their Minds to themſelves, and he would take " Care of them; and accordingly the Deponent delivered the Pannel's " Meſſage, in his own Words, to two of his Servants, who were then " in ſeparate Cuſtody in the ſame Priſon; and that they were both of the " Name of Maccoll."

Again, Gentlemen, you have heard read, and, I dare ſay, with much Regret, the Examination of the Pannel's Wife and Daughter, taken before the Sheriff upon Oath, wherein they ſay, " That Allan Breck " Stewart came to the Pannel's Houſe on Monday the 11th, in his " French Dreſs (that has been often deſcribed), and that he went away next " Morning, after taking Leave of them, dreſſed in the ſame Habit;" and you have heard by what a Cloud of Witneſſes it was proved, that, from the Evening of Monday the 11th, till the Morning of Monday the 18th, Allan Breck was ſeen in no other Dreſs, than the ſhort Coat and Trowſers belonging to the Pannel, now lying in Court; and,

and, by the Pannel's own Servants and the Packman, it has been prov'd, that Breck's French Cloaths were, by Mrs. Stewart's Order, put into a Sack, and hid in the Moor near the Pannel's Houſe, from thence brought back by the ſame Servant-Maid, by Order of Mrs. Stewart, and by her delivered to the Packman, by him to be carried to Breck at Koaliſnacoan; and that the Maid-Servant, who was employed by her Miſtreſs to hide theſe French Cloaths, and to fetch them back again, was, by a Meſſage from her, deſired to conceal what ſhe knew about the Cloaths, in caſe ſhe ſhould be aſked or examined about them.

Theſe, I think, Gentlemen, are the moſt material Facts and Circumſtances that have been proved before you, which I have reſumed in the Order of Time as they happened, with Intent to give you a juſt View of the Caſe of the Pannel, whom you are now trying; and I am perſuaded, that the Reflections which naturally ariſe from theſe Facts, in reſpect of the Queſtion before you, muſt have occurred to yourſelves, when you heard the Evidence given, and when I have again reſumed it; and therefore my Obſervations to you upon the Whole ſhall be as few and as ſhort as poſſible.

I have admitted, that it is incumbent upon me in this Trial, as againſt James Stewart, the Pannel, to make out, that Allan Breck Stewart was guilty of the actual Murder in Queſtion; and I apprehend, that is done to full Conviction, upon theſe Conſiderations.

And, firſt of all, Gentlemen, here has been a very extraordinary and ſhocking Murder, committed within the County or Diſtrict of Appin, in the moſt Northern Part of this County, of a Gentleman who had an Eſtate and Relations in that Neighbourhood; a Man of a fair Character, who was going about the Duty of his Office, in the King's and the Public Service, intending no Injuſtice to others, and apprehending no Harm to himſelf; for he and all his Attendants were unarmed; and yet he is bereaved of his Life, not by an open Enemy, upon a declared or a ſudden Quarrel, but baſely aſſaſſinated and ſhot behind his Back, by a Perſon lying in wait and lurking among Trees for that Purpoſe.

This, Gentlemen, is a very ſtrange and ſhocking Event; and, as for every Event there muſt be a Cauſe, ſomebody muſt have done it, and upon ſome Reaſon or Temptation, ſuch as it was: And this is not like a Murder committed on the Streets, or on the High-ways leading to a populous City, but in the Corner of a County, where the Deceas'd was himſelf a Gentleman of Note, and where every body of any Note is known to every body: The Deceas'd, therefore, muſt have had one or more Enemies fit or capable, or likely to have deviſed or perpetrated ſuch an Action; and who theſe are, you have been now for many Hours inquiring.

And, upon the Reſult of that Inquiry, what Doubt can there be, in the firſt Place, that Breck Stewart was the Actor? His Character, and his Situation as a Deſerter from the King's Service, and now actually liſted in the French Service, and in this Country only as a Sojourner for a Viſit to his Friends, rendered him the moſt likely Perſon then reſident in that Country, for being guilty of ſuch a Thing; nay, ſo much the only Perſon likely, that the Pannel himſelf, when he caſt about for ſome other Man on whom the Suſpicion of this Guilt might be thrown, mentioned only one Serjeant More Cameron, who is of a Character and Situation very ſimilar to that of Allan Breck, but with this very material Difference indeed, which rendered it impoſſible for that Solution of the Queſtion to paſs, that Serjeant More had not been ſeen in Appin for ſeveral Years paſt; and ſurely the abſent Wanderer could not do it.

But next, and more cloſely, the only known Quarrel that any body had with the Deceas'd, was that of this Pannel James Stewart, about his own Removing the laſt Year, and the Removing of other Tenants of Ardſhiel this Year; into which Quarrel his former Pupil or Ward, and his intimate Friend Breck Stewart, had moſt vehemently entered, and diſcovered that on ſeveral Occaſions; and that he conſidered it as a Cauſe for deadly or mortal Hatred, inſomuch that the Pannel himſelf hath declared, "That, "if Allan was guilty of the Murder, he believes it behoved to be on Ac- "count of the Diſturbance given to the Tenants on the Eſtate of Ard- "ſhiel; and knows no other Cauſe."

And more cloſely ſtill, you have heard the Evidence of what paſſed immediately before, and after this Murder, of the Behaviour and Actions of this Breck Stewart, who had formerly diſplayed his Hatred to the Deceas'd, for this very Cauſe, frivolous and unjuſt as it was. On the 10th of May, at Faſnacloich, within a Mile of Glenure's Houſe, he gets Intelligence of Glenure's Motions, and Deſigns to proceed in removing the Tenants of Ardſhiel, when he ſhould return from Fort-William. On Monday the 11th he comes to the Pannel's Houſe, and there lays aſide his French Dreſs, and puts on a Country Dreſs belonging to the Pannel; and in the ſame Habit, next Day, ſets out to Ballacheliſh, hard by the Ferry over which the Deceas'd was to return; from thence he goes to viſit two Siſters of the Pannel's in the Neighbourhood; he returns to Ballacheliſh on Wedneſday; remains there that Night, and till about Noon next Day, when he takes a Fiſhing-rod in his Hand, a fit Pretext for going out alone, and for ſtaying ſome Time; but, ſoon after, the Fiſhing-rod was laid aſide, and he goes in purſuit of his real Game; he calls aſide the Ferry-man, and enquires if Glenure had yet croſſed the Ferry, and being aſſured he was not, he walks off, and was never again ſeen about that Ferry, or the Houſe of Ballacheliſh; but a few Hours after, that ſame Night, and when the Murder had been committed, he is ſeen by Katharine Mackinniſh, the Maid-Servant of Ballacheliſh, at the Goat-houſe in the Moor of Ballacheliſh: And if Donald Stewart ſpeaks true, there alſo he ſaw him, and charged him with the Murder. Here was then the Deſerter, now a foreign Soldier, and one declared mortal Enemy of the Deceas'd, enquiring for the Deceas'd a little before he paſſed the Ferry; and, ſoon after the Murder, found in the Hill, near to the Spot where it happened, and adjoining to the Houſe where he had lodged the Night before; but to which he never returned; but, inſtead of that, wanders in the Fields; beats up Glenco and his Mother betwixt Three and Four in the Morning; tells them Glenure was murdered, and he was going abroad; takes Leave of them at the Door; retires from thence to a Den in a Deſart, the Heugh of Corrynakeigh in Koaliſnacoan, where he was to wait for his Baggage and his promiſed Viaticum; and where he durſt not even venture to approach the Bouman's

Houſe, except to come to the Door or the Window in the Night; and when he had got theſe Neceſſaries he waited for, withdraws, as he propoſed, a-croſs the Kingdom, over a Tract of Moors and Mountains uninhabited, till he came to his Uncle's Houſe, and is by him, as well as every body elſe who knew him, reputed and believed to be the Murderer. And I have no Doubt, Gentlemen, but, after the Proof of all theſe Things which you have heard, you muſt be entirely ſatisfied, that he was truly ſuch; and, upon that Perſuaſion, will proceed to the main Queſtion that is directly before you, namely, the Evidence of the Acceſſion of this Pannel to that Murder, which may be ſummed up in the Articles following:

Firſt of all, That it was the Quarrel of this Pannel againſt Glenure, that had been only taken up and eſpouſed by Breck Stewart, for which Breck committed the Murder itſelf, as the immediate Actor; the Quarrel, as you have heard, or the Cauſe of Offence ſo highly reſented, was, That this Pannel was himſelf removed from his Poſſeſſion laſt Year by Glenure, who at the ſame Time withdrew from the Pannel, or forbore to employ him in the Office of an Aſſiſtant or Sub-factor, which had given him Intereſt and Influence with the Tenants of Ardſhiel; and that this Year he was inſiſting to remove three or four Tenants, whom the Pannel had lately placed there; in all which Allan Breck had no perſonal Intereſt or Concern: A ſtrange Cauſe of Offence, I admit, to be ſo highly taken up, and ſo deeply reſented! But every Provocation works, according to the Temper or Turn of Mind of the Perſon who receives it; and what thoſe of the Pannel were in this Reſpect, you have heard from the Evidence, and have ſeen in his Conduct before you, when he himſelf objected to Stewart in Lagnabay, as an incompetent Witneſs againſt him; for that the Witneſs bore him capital Enmity, becauſe he, the Pannel, had been inſtrumental in cauſing the Witneſs to be removed from the Poſſeſſion at Aucharn, in which the Pannel ſucceeded him; nay, the Pannel carries this Madneſs ſo far, as to have threatened Ewan Macintyre and his Relations, or Poſterity (a poor Herd who had never ſerved the Pannel himſelf), for no other Offence, than that he engaged to be Herd to Campbell of Ballieveolan, the Tenant who ſucceeded the Pannel in the Farm of Glendurer, from which he was removed laſt Year.

The ſecond Article in Proof is, that, in conſequence of the deep Reſentment conceived by the Pannel for this ſuppoſed Injury of the Removings, he diſcovered, upon ſeveral Occaſions previous to this Murder, an Intention or Deſire to take away the Life of Glenure: This he expreſſed to Appin's Bouman in a moſt inveterate Manner, that he would be willing to crawl upon his Knees to a Window to ſhoot Glenure: But thereafter he proceeds farther than Expreſſions; his Converſation with the Maccells, his own Servants, in the Brew-houſe, about Chriſtmas laſt, could be intended for nothing but to inſtigate them, either by themſelves, or by finding out proper Inſtruments among the common People of Appin, to cut off Glenure: And, when the late Removings came to be in Agitation laſt Spring, which the Pannel ſet himſelf to oppoſe with all his Might, it appears that his Malice and Fury againſt Glenure was increaſed; witneſs his Converſation with his two Landlords on his Way to Edinburgh, and with Mr. Maclaren of Stirling, his Fellow-Traveller Part of the Way; in which, among other Things, the Pannel told them, that he had actually ſent Glenure a Challenge to fight him with Piſtols; and told Maclaren, (who ſays he found the Removing was much at the Pannel's Heart) that, if he ſhould get Relief neither at Edinburgh nor at the Britiſh Parliament, he would take the only Remedy that remained. Now, to a Man that laboured under this Diſtemper of Mind, it was natural or incident, that, after he had returned from Edinburgh in the End of April, with ſuch Degree of Succeſs as to obtain a Siſt on his Bill of Suſpenſion; and had ſome Hopes given him at Edinburgh, that when the Barons of Exchequer ſhould meet they would countermand theſe Removings; when he had called the Tenants together, and acquainted them with theſe Operations of his on their Behalf, and ſent them with a Notary on the 1ſt of May, to intimate the Siſt to Glenure; and when, after this, he learned, on the 11th of May, that Glenure had gone to Edinburgh in his Turn, got the Siſt removed, was come back to the Country, and to proceed in the Removings; that, from this freſh Diſappointment and Affront, that muſt leſſen him in the Eyes of thoſe Tenants whereof he had aſſumed to be Protector, the Reſentment and Hatred which he formerly bore Glenure ſhould be yet higher inflamed, and drive him on to ſend out Breck, his Emiſſary, to cut off the Gentleman whom they both looked on as their Enemy, in Hopes of Safety to Breck, the Actor, by his getting abroad, where he was to go however; and to himſelf, the Mandator and Accomplice, by his remaining in Appearance quiet at his own Houſe.

And the Evidence, that in Fact this was the Caſe, conſiſts of theſe further Circumſtances, of which you have heard the Proof; that the actual Murderer of Glenure, in the Quarrel of this Pannel, and in Reſentment of which this Pannel had diſcovered Deſigns or Intentions againſt his Life, when the Quarrel itſelf was wrought up to the higheſt Pitch, ſets out from the Pannel's Houſe, leaving his own Cloaths and Baggage there, dreſſed in a Suit of the Pannel's Cloaths fitter for the Purpoſe, as being leſs remarkable or diſtinguiſhed than his own; goes directly and puts himſelf in the Way of Glenure; paſſes his Time, whilſt he waited for him, viſiting the Siſters of this Pannel in that Neighbourhood; and with Stewart Ballacheliſh, who was alſo in the general Intereſt of the Pannel in reſpect of the Removings; retires, when the bloody Deed was done, to a deep Retreat that was not far off; where he remains till this Pannel cauſed to ſend him his Baggage and a Viaticum of Money, ſuch as he could afford or ſcrape together, to enable the Aſſaſſin to get off.

And that this Aid and Succour was ſent in conſequence of a Concert betwixt them, previous to the Murder itſelf, appears from theſe Circumſtances; that on the Morning of Thurſday, on the Evening whereof the Murder was committed, the Pannel ſent an Expreſs to William Stewart at Maryburgh, earneſtly preſſing him to ſend him eight Pounds, as the Price of Cows not yet delivered; and it hath not been explained, and far leſs proved, on the Part of the Pannel, who is a Man of ſome Credit and Subſtance, tho' he had then but little Caſh in Hand, what other preſſing Exigency he then had for an immediate Supply of Money, when he was living upon his own Farm at Aucharn; he has not ſhewed you, that he had accepted a Bill payable on Friday the 15th of May, or the Term of Whitſunday this Year, or that he was under Diſtreſs of any kind, that required ſuch immediate Supply.

Again, as the Meſſenger of Thurſday brought back no Caſh, there is another ſent on Friday, being the Packman, the Couſin-german of Breck Stewart himſelf, who carried two Commiſſions from the Pannel: Firſt, That by all Means he ſhould ſend him five Guineas, and this, tho' William Stewart ſhould borrow it from twenty Purſes; and, 2dly, To tell William Stewart to give Credit in five Pounds Sterling to John Maccoll, Bouman to Appin at Koaliſnacoan, in caſe he came to demand ſuch a Sum; the Pannel at the ſame Time telling the Packman, when he gave him this Meſſage, that Allan Breck was about to leave the Country; that he might be ſuſpected of Glenure's Murder; and that it was incumbent upon him, the Pannel, to ſupply Allan Breck in Money.

Now, Gentlemen, to this Meſſage from the Pannel to his Friend William Stewart, by the Couſin of Breck Stewart, you are to join another correſponding Circumſtance depoſed by the Bouman, to which I muſt call for your particular Attention; for, in relating what paſſed betwixt him and Allan Breck on the Afternoon of Saturday the 16th, he ſwears, "That "Allan Breck then told him, he muſt remain there, till ſome Neceſſaries "he expected came to him; and that, unleſs ſome Money came for him "before next Morning, he, the Bouman, muſt go to Fort-William with "a Letter, which Allan Breck then wrote to William Stewart, Merchant "at Maryburgh." Does not this as plainly ſpeak out, rebus ipſis et factis, the Concert betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck, before they parted, as if you had heard it from Witneſſes preſent at their Conference? Breck was ſetting out upon an Exploit, which, if performed, it would require a little Money, of which he, it appears, was then deſtitute, or very ſcarce, to carry him off the Country; the Pannel himſelf was not then in Caſh; but the Aſſurances he gave to Breck muſt have been, that, without Loſs of Time, he, the Pannel, would ſend the Money directly to Breck at Koaliſnacoan, or otherwiſe ſend him Credit upon his, the Pannel's, Friend and Correſpondent, William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh. Their reſpective Actions correſpond exactly with this Contert, and are unaccountable without ſuppoſing it. On Friday the Pannel ſends to William Stewart for five Guineas in Caſh, and an Order to give Credit to Appin's Bouman for five Pounds more, in caſe he ſhould call for it. On Saturday Allan Breck being with this Bouman, at a Place diſtant from the Pannel, tells the Bouman, that unleſs Money came for him before next Morning, he, the Bouman, muſt go to Fort-William with a Letter, which Breck then wrote to the ſaid William Stewart, Merchant at Maryburgh; and ſuch a Letter, that Breck tells the Bouman, if he was catched with it, he muſt eat it before it was found upon him.

Theſe Circumſtances are ſo pinching againſt the Pannel, upon the capital Point now in Iſſue, that he has made an Attempt to prove an Anſwer or Solution of this Difficulty, and that by bringing Katharine Macinniſh, then Servant to Ballacheliſh, to depoſe, That when ſhe met Allan Breck at the Goat-houſe upon Thurſday Night, "the ſaid Allan deſired her "to tell Donald Stewart in Ballacheliſh to go to the Pannel, and deſire him "to ſend the ſaid Allan Money;" and that ſhe delivered this Meſſage to Donald Stewart that ſame Night.

Again, this Donald Stewart hath depoſed, not that Katharine Macinniſh delivered him any ſuch Meſſage from Allan, but, "That ſhe called him "out, and told him that Allan Breck wanted him, and was a little above "the Houſe in the Brae or Hill, where the Deponent went and met Al-"lan Breck, who then told the Deponent, he was going immediately to "leave the Kingdom, and was going then for Koaliſnacoan; and deſired "the Deponent to acquaint the Pannel that he was gone to that Place, "and deſired him, if poſſible, to ſend him Money there; and the Depo-"nent then promiſed to acquaint James Stewart of the above Meſſage." And this Donald Stewart further depoſes, "That, after his Converſation "with the Pannel about Serjeant More, he delivered the above Meſſage "from Allan Breck to the Pannel; and that the Pannel did not ſay whe-"ther he was to ſend the Money or not: That this Converſation happen-"ed about Ten o'Clock in the Forenoon of Friday the 15th of May laſt; "and that there was Nobody preſent."

And, as I think the only plauſible Thing proved for Defence of the Pannel conſiſts of theſe two Teſtimonies I have juſt repeated, I muſt beg your Attention, Gentlemen, to the Remarks I have to offer upon them, that you may be the better able to diſcern what Degree of Credit or Effect they deſerve, or whether they deſerve any at all.

And, firſt of all, this Donald Stewart is Nephew and Son-in-law to Ballacheliſh, and lives in Family with him; and it appears the whole Family are in the general Intereſt of the Pannel; for John Stewart the younger of Ballacheliſh, the Brother-in-law of this Donald, hath depoſed, "That, in the Time of the Spring-Circuit in this Place in May laſt, he "was ſummoned to be of the Jury; but that, at the earneſt Requeſt of the "Pannel, that he ſhould be preſent with a Notary at the Removing of the "Tenants from the Eſtate of Ardſhiel, he was going on that Errand to "the Pannel's Houſe, but returned to Appin, upon hearing of the Mur-"der committed that Day;" and has further depoſed, "That he was in "Edinburgh in Auguſt laſt, and was preſent at Conſultations of the Pan-"nel's Lawyers and Agents touching his Defence:" You are therefore to weigh the Credit due to a ſingle Witneſs of that Family, ſwearing to a Fact or Converſation betwixt the Pannel and him when there was Nobody preſent, that they have judged material to be proved for the Pannel.

2dly, I have already obſerved to you, in reſuming the Evidence of theſe two Witneſſes, the Son-in-law and the Servant-Maid of Ballacheliſh, that there is a manifeſt Diſcrepancy between them, tho' it is not a long Time ſince the Fact they depoſe to happened, and it hath ever ſince been the Subject of Attention and Converſation in the Country where they live; for the Maid ſays, "She received the full Meſſage from Allan Breck, and "delivered it to Donald Stewart; and that ſhe did not deſire Donald to go up "to Allan in the Hill, nor did Allan Breck deſire her to ſend Donald to "him there:" And yet Donald ſwears, "That the Maid informed him, "that Allan Breck wanted him, and told him where Breck was; and that "Breck himſelf gave him the Meſſage to be delivered to the Pannel; which "he delivered accordingly about Ten o'Clock next Day to the Pannel, "whom he met alone in the Fields." So that the Whole of this Tale, attempted to be proved by theſe two Witneſſes, appears extremely ſuſpicious, and their Accounts hang not well together.

3dly, Donald Stewart's Tale, if it be true, and if it be alſo true, that the Packman was not ſent away by the Pannel to Fort-William, till about Twelve o'Clock on Friday, might ſerve to account for, or to have given riſe to the Packman's Meſſage on that Day: But how will it ſerve to account for the former Expreſs ſent upon the Morning of Thurſday by the Pannel, to the ſame William Stewart at Maryburgh, to ſend him down immediately eight Pounds Sterling by the Bearer?

4thly, If it be true, which both William Stewart and his Wife depoſe, that the Packman came to them at Fort-William, upon Friday betwixt Ten and Twelve, as the Huſband ſays, or about Mid-day, as the Wife ſays, then the Packman muſt have been miſtaken in the Hour that he was diſpatched by the Pannel from his Houſe, when he ſays, it was about Twelve o'Clock that Day; and if Stewart and his Wife are rather to be believed, that he got to Fort-William by Noon, he muſt have been diſpatched by the Pannel long before Ten o'Clock, when, Donald Stewart ſays, he delivered Breck's Meſſage to the Pannel.

And, laſtly, That which affords a ſolid and ſatisfying Reply to the Defence founded on theſe two Teſtimonies, of the Son-in-law and Servant-maid of Ballacheliſh, is this Conſideration, That ſuppoſing it true, for Argument's ſake, which they have ſworn as to the Subſtance, that Breck ſent Notice by Donald to the Pannel, that he was going to Koaliſnacoan, and wanted Money, how will that account for what was obſerved a little while ago, "of the Pannel's writing a Letter upon Saturday Afternoon, "to be ſent by the Bouman to William Stewart at Maryburgh?" For though here be a Tale, I am afraid lately invented by the Pannel, of a Meſſage from Breck to him after the Murder, to tell the Place of his Retreat, and that he wanted Money, he hath forgot to provide Witneſſes for proving another Thing, and that is a Meſſage in Return from the Pannel to Breck, to give Breck Notice how the Money was to be found or furniſhed, namely, by the Pannel's giving Credit to him, or the Bouman, upon William Stewart at Maryburgh; for, without ſuch Notice, how could Breck, from the Bottom of his Heugh in Koaliſnacoan, ſo exactly co-operate with what the Pannel was doing from his own Houſe at Aucharn, as to write a Letter on Saturday to the ſame William Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh, to be ſent by Appin's Bouman, to which William Stewart, on Friday, the Pannel ſends Breck's Couſin, to bid him give Credit to Appin's Bouman for five Pounds, if he ſhould call for it?

This Circumſtance, therefore, which is quite unanſwered, as well as the Expreſs on Thurſday Morning for Money, before the Murder happened, makes the Evidence before-mentioned remain in full Force, the Tales of the Meſſage to the Pannel, mentioned by theſe two Witneſſes, notwithſtanding.

There hath been hardly any Thing elſe proved for the Pannel's Defence, that merits a Reply: It is of no Moment, that this was not the firſt Time that Breck Stewart made Uſe of the Pannel's Habit or Cloaths above-mentioned; he had uſed them once before in the Month of April, when he went to Rannoch, whilſt the Pannel was at Edinburgh; but it was not the leſs true, that this Habit was far more commodious for the murderous Purpoſe he went about, when he left the Pannel's Houſe on Tueſday Morning the 12th of May, than his own French Cloaths would have been.

Again, it is true, that, on the Morning of Thurſday, he writes a Letter for a Notary, to take Proteſts againſt the Removings, at the ſame Time that he writes for the eight Pounds; and his Counſel have ſaid, that this was purſuing quite another Scheme: But this is by no Means concluſive, to prove his Innocence; he was galled and incenſed by theſe Removings, and his Proteſt by a Notary, after his Bill of Suſpenſion was refuſed, would be of very little Avail; and yet he writes for one to attend, to be provided for all Events, as it was a poſſible Caſe, that the intended Murder of Glenure might have been prevented, by his going another Road than the common one, or other Accidents.

And as little can it avail the Pannel, that, after he was in Cuſtody, he wrote a Letter to Mr. Macfarlane at Edinburgh, deſcribing Allan Breck, and expreſſing a Deſire that he might be apprehended; for this was a Letter ſhewn to Colonel Crawfurd, the commanding Officer, and now appears to have been a manifeſt Diſſimulation, when, by the ſhewing of the Pannel's own Defences, he ſent Money to Allan Breck in order to help him to eſcape, on Account, as he ſays, of his Relation, and having been formerly his Ward or Pupil.

When therefore, Gentlemen, you ſhall conſider and duly weigh the whole Facts and Circumſtances proved before you, and which I have now reſumed; and when to theſe I have laſt mentioned you ſhall add, that, beſides the Cloaths and the Money furniſhed to Breck, there is a ſtrong preſumptive Evidence, that the very leſſer or ſhorter Gun produced before you, and proved to have been the Pannel's, and which is of the wider Bore of the two, was the very Inſtrument with which the Murder was committed; for none of the Servants ſaw it upon Thurſday Night, when they hid the Arms; and when they ſaw it on Friday Night, when the Arms were carried up to the Hill, it was empty; and Captain Chapeau and others have depoſed, it appeared to them to have been lately fired, when he found it on the 23d of May.

That the Pannel, on the firſt Notice he received of the Murder being over, diſcovered an Apprehenſion that he himſelf might be brought to Trouble on that Account.

That he made an Attempt, though a very unavailing one, to throw the Suſpicion of the Murder upon Serjeant More Cameron, who had not been in that Country for many Years.

That the Pannel, being in Cuſtody, ſent a Meſſage by his Barber to his Servants to keep their Minds to themſelves, and he would take Care of them.

That his Wife and one of his Children have too ſtrongly diſcovered their Senſe of the Importance of the Article of the Cloaths furniſhed by the Pannel to Breck, by ſwearing, that Breck left their Houſe in his own French Cloaths, though the Wife, at leaſt, moſt certainly knew the contrary.

I ſay, Gentlemen, when you put all theſe Things together, you will form your Opinion, and pronounce accordingly, whether this Pannel is, or is not, guilty of Acceſſion to this horrid Murder? In all circumſtantial Evidence, there is a Poſſibility of Innocence, even without ſuppoſing any of the Witneſſes perjured: For Example, in the Caſe of Stewart Abercrombie, which you heard mentioned in the Debate on the Relevancy in this Trial;

it was urged for him, and very truly, that ſome other Man without a Hat, as well as he, might have been the Murderer of the Deceaſed; for there was no Witneſs who could ſwear he ſaw him do it: And in the other Caſe of Maccowan you heard mentioned, who was convicted principally upon a Shirt and Stockings being found in his Poſſeſſion, which the poor Woman had carried with her from Home; it was poſſible that Maccowan might have got theſe Garments immediately, or by Progreſs, from ſome other Perſon who had robbed or murdered the poor Woman. But, in both theſe Caſes, the Pannels were convicted, and ſuffered accordingly.

And, in the preſent Caſe, if, notwithſtanding what you have heard, you can believe, that Allan Breck Stewart committed this Murder purely of his own Accord, and without any Privity or previous Concert with this Pannel; and the Aid given by the Pannel to carry him off, was out of mere Compaſſion, and a Reſolution firſt taken after the Pannel had heard of the Murder itſelf; then ſurely it will be your Duty to acquit the Pannel; for, better that this Murder, atrocious and ſcandalous as it is, ſhould remain unavenged by human Juſtice, than that one innocent Man ſhould ſuffer.

But, on the other Hand, if, upon the whole Evidence, you cannot believe the Pannel innocent, but are convinced in your own Minds, that he has been knowingly acceſſary to this Murder; then, doubtleſs, your Duty to God and your Country requires of you to pronounce him guilty.

Mr. Brown for the Pannel.

Gentlemen of the Jury,

I Appear for the Pannel; and, as this Trial has already taken up a great deal of Time, I ſhall not follow the honourable and learned Gentleman on the other Side, in ſome Things which I conceive to be extrancous to the Matter in Iſſue; but ſhall endeavour to ſum up what I have to ſay, in as few Words as the Importance of the Caſe, and Variety of Matters to be conſidered, will admit of.

As I am at all Times under no ſmall Degree of Concern, as often as I appear in any Caſe of this Nature; ſo I muſt acknowledge I am at preſent under greater Concern than ever I was in any former Caſe, when I conſider the many Diſavadntages which this unfortunate Pannel labours under.

In the firſt Place, I am under the Neceſſity of entering the Liſts with a learned Gentleman of great Abilities, and of much more Experience in theſe Matters than I can pretend to.

But, Gentlemen, if I have undertaken what I am not ſufficient for, the Fault lies at the Door of the private Proſecutor, who, before the Proſecution was commenced, begun early with pre-engaging the whole Counſel at the Bar, who had moſt Experience in theſe Matters, not with an Intention that they ſhould aſſiſt in carrying on the Proſecution, (for many of the Gentlemen who were engaged have not appeared at the Trial) but with an Intention that they might not have it in their Power to appear on the Side of the Pannel.

A juſt Proſecution ſcarcely ſtands in need of an Advocate to ſupport it. What then ſhall be ſaid of a Proſecution, where the Proſecutor deſpairs of prevailing otherwiſe than by depriving the Pannel of thoſe who were moſt able to defend him?

For my own Part, I choſe rather to have it ſaid of me, that I had imprudently undertaken what I was not ſufficient for, than that I had uncharitably refuſed to give any poor Aſſiſtance in my Power to a Gentleman, who imagines that I can be in the ſmalleſt Degree uſeful to him.

I might alſo take Notice of many other Hardſhips which the Pannel has ſuffered from cloſe Confinement, during more than four Months, contrary to the great Charter of Liberty in this Part of the Kingdom,—from the unwarrantable Seizure of his Papers without any legal Authority—and from the Shortneſs of the Time allowed him for making his Defence: But theſe Things have been ſo fully inſiſted on by the Gentlemen who have ſpoke on the ſame Side, that it is unneceſſary for me to repeat what has been already ſaid. The Facts have not been denied by the Proſecutor; and as every Man muſt ſee, at firſt Sight, what a prodigious Loſs it is to a Pannel, to have Acceſs, for ſo long a Time, denied to every Perſon who was capable of aſſiſting him in making his Defence, ſo I muſt be forgiven to ſay, that if this Trial was at all proper for a Circuit-Court, (which may be doubted) it ought to have been brought on in the ordinary Form, by Way of Preſentment, and not ſummarily in the Form of Criminal Letters. By the former Method, the Pannel would have had upwards of three Months to prepare for his Defence, inſtead of fifteen Days, which is all the Time the Pannel has had, ſince the Criminal Letters were executed againſt him.

But, Gentlemen, there is yet another Diſadvantage, which this Pannel labours under, which gives me more Uneaſineſs than all thoſe I have already mentioned, and which, I muſt beg Leave to ſay, I dread more than all the Proof which has been brought againſt him.

What I mean is an Impreſſion, which has been induſtriouſly raiſed, and artfully propagated, as if it were ſome-how neceſſary that the Pannel ſhould be found guilty; and as if his being acquitted might bring a Reflection on this Part of the Kingdom.

Gentlemen, I do not expect, nor do I deſire, that you ſhould return a Verdict contrary to Evidence: But it is my Duty to put you on your Guard, not to allow yourſelves to be carried off by Paſſion or Prejudice: And though I have no Doubt of the Integrity or Honour of any of the Gentlemen to whom I now addreſs myſelf; yet, upon this Occaſion, it is my Duty to ſay, That if you find the Pannel guilty, either without Evidence, or upon doubtful Evidence, you will thereby bring the Blood of an innocent Perſon upon your own Heads:—I ſay, an innocent Perſon; for every Man is held to be innocent, till ſuch Time as he is convicted, not by doubtful, but by legal and complete Evidence.

And if the Evidence is inſufficient, which I am hopeful I ſhall be able to ſhew, I am under no Apprehenſion, that your acquitting the Pannel can ever bring any Reflection either upon yourſelves or upon your Country. It is the peculiar Happineſs of this Part of the Iſland, that, in capital Caſes, the Law makes it neceſſary, that the whole of the Evidence ſhould be taken down in Writing; and as that has been fairly done in the preſent Caſe, the authentic Record will ſatisfy every reaſonable and thinking Perſon, that the Grounds upon which you have proceeded were ſolid; and if you have the Approbation of ſuch, you ought to diſregard what others may ſay of you.

Having ſaid ſo much in the general, I ſhall now proceed to conſider the Crime which has been charged againſt the Pannel, and the Evidence which has been brought in Support of that Charge. As to the Crime itſelf, I readily agree with every one of the Gentlemen who have ſpoke before me, that it is of ſo atrocious a Nature, that Words can hardly be found ſtrong enough to expreſs, in proper Colours, its Enormity; and I ſhall alſo admit, that it is highly aggravated from the particular Circumſtances which have been very properly mentioned by the honourable Gentleman on the other Side. But then, the Proſecutor would do well to obſerve, that the more atrocious the Crime is, the more natural it is to preſume, that the Pannel was not guilty of it. And it is my Duty to put you on your Guard, that a juſt Indignation at the Heinouſneſs of the Crime may not lead you to condemn without proper Evidence: For, however foul the Crime may be, it is much better that it ſhould eſcape unpuniſhed, than that an innocent Perſon ſhould ſuffer for it.

The Crime charged againſt the Pannel is, That he entered into a Conſpiracy with Allan Breck Stewart to murder Colin Campbell of Glenure by the Hands of the ſaid Allan, and that the Murder was accordingly ſo committed. And therefore, before the Proſecutor can prevail, it behoves him to prove, not only that the Murder was committed by the Hands of Allan Breck, but alſo, that the Pannel and he were previouſly in a Conſpiracy to commit the Murder in that Manner.

The Proſecutor pretends not to have brought any direct Evidence of either of theſe Facts; but the Guilt of both Pannels is inferred from a Variety of Circumſtances, which it now belongs to us to conſider, ſo far as is neceſſary for the Defence of this Pannel.

And here I ſhall not diſpute the general Propoſition laid down by my Lord Advocate, "That Crimes may be proved by Circumſtances." I admit that any Crime may be ſo proved; but then I humbly contend, that the Circumſtances ought to be ſuch, as neceſſarily infer the Guilt of the Pannel.

In order that this Matter may appear in its proper Light, I muſt beg Leave to lay down one general Rule, which admits of no Exception, and ought to be ſtrictly followed in judging of all circumſtantiate Evidence; which is, That where any Fact proved againſt the Pannel, is in its own Nature ſuch, that it will naturally admit either of a good or a bad Conſtruction, that Conſtruction ought always to be received which is favourable for the Pannel.

This is founded upon the firſt Principle of natural Juſtice, which directs us, "To do to others, as we would have them do to us:" And as every one of you would think yourſelf hardly uſed, if a bad Conſtruction were put upon any Action of yours, which would naturally bear a good one, the Pannel aſks no more, than that you ſhould judge of his Actions by the ſame Rule.

And here, Gentlemen, I do not mean, that, in a circumſtantiate Evidence, it is neceſſary, that every Circumſtance taken ſeparately ſhould be concluſive: If that were neceſſary, few Crimes could ever be proved. But what I intend is, that, in all Crimes whatever, it is neceſſary that the Proof ſhould be certain and concluſive; and as the Law juſtly rejects all Arguments drawn from Conjectures and forced Conſequences, it is not ſufficient to convict a Pannel, that he might have been guilty of the Crime charged; but the Proof ought to be ſuch as to leave no Room to doubt that he was ſo: And though it is not neceſſary, in a circumſtantiate Evidence, that every Circumſtance, conſidered apart, ſhould be concluſive; yet I conceive I may lay it down as a certain Principle, that where the whole of the Circumſtances are ſuch, that they might naturally have happened without inferring the Guilt of the Pannel, ſuch Circumſtances, however numerous, ought to have no Authority againſt him.

To apply this Rule to the preſent Caſe, I am hopeful I ſhall be able to ſatisfy you, Gentlemen of the Jury, that the Facts charged againſt the Pannel are either not proved, or they are ſuch, that all of them might have naturally happened; and at the ſame Time the Pannel be entirely innocent of the Crime of which he is accuſed.

But before I proceed to conſider particularly the ſeveral Articles of the Proof brought againſt the Pannel, it will be neceſſary to put you in mind of ſome Things which happened previous to the Murder, as theſe may tend to explain many Things which occur in the Proof, and which ſhall be afterwards particularly taken Notice of.

You have already heard, from the Gentleman who ſpoke firſt on the ſame Side with me, that, in the Month of February 1749, the deceaſed Colin Campbell of Glenure was appointed Factor by the Barons of Exchequer, upon the forfeited Eſtates of Lochiel, Callart, and Ardſhiel; and, as the Pannel, who was then Tenant of Part of the Eſtate of Ardſhiel, had always lived in great Friendſhip with Glenure, and had as fair a Character as any Gentleman in that Part of the Country, the Management of the whole Eſtate of Ardſhiel was committed to him by Glenure, and his Bill was taken for that yearly Rent at which the Eſtate had been rated after Survey by the Barons of Exchequer, leaving it to the Pannel to apply the Surplus to the Uſe of Ardſhiel's Children. This is proved by ſeveral Letters and Receipts produced, and in particular from Glenure's Letter to the Pannel, dated the 11th December 1749, in which he writes as follows: "This Moment I had your's by your Servant, with 20 l. "18 s. 5 d. Sterling, and the Warrant I formerly gave you. Receive in- "cloſed your Note. Your Payments are very good, for which I am "obliged to you. I intend, God willing, to be at Edinburgh on, or a "Day or two before, the 25th current; that is, I intend to ſet out from "this Place this Day, or To-morrow eight Days; and will go by Glaſ- "gow, and make no Stop by the Way. Remember Lady Ardſhiel's Diſ- "charges, and all your other Tackling. I heartily wiſh you a good "Journey."

About the Month of April 1751, Glenure applied to the Pannel to give up the Farm of Glenduror, which he then poſſeſſed, to Mr. Campbell of Balliveolan, Glenure's particular Friend, who, it appears, had offered an additional Rent; and though the Pannel had not been legally warned, and ſo was not obliged to remove for that Year; yet he readily agreed with Glenure's Propoſal, removed from the Poſſeſſion, and took from Mr. Campbell of Airds the Farm of Auchairn, where his Family now reſides; but he ſtill continued to uplift the Rents as formerly from the Tenants of Ardſhiel, and likewiſe to poſſeſs a ſmall Farm called Lettermore, which he had ſubſet at about 6 l. Sterling per Annum.

In the Month of April laſt, Glenure executed a Warning, and obtained a Decreet a Decreet of Removing againſt no leſs than five or ſix Tenants of the Eſtate of Ardſhiel, and alſo againſt as many Tenants of the neighbouring Eſtates of Lochiel and Callart, decerning them to remove from their reſpective Poſſeſſions as at the Term of Whitſunday laſt; and, among the reſt, the Pannel's two Sub-tenants in the Farm of Lettermore were alſo decerned to remove.

This was complained of as a very great Hardſhip in that Part of the Country, more eſpecially as the Tenants in Poſſeſſion paid their Rents regularly, and were willing to take the Oaths to the Government; and altho' the Pannel's private Intereſt in the Matter was not great, yet, as he foreſaw that a Procedure ſo ſevere might be attended with diſagreeable Conſequences, he went and often expoſtulated with Glenure upon the Subject; but he having perſiſted in his Reſolution, the Tenants upon all the three Eſtates tranſmitted Memorials of their Caſe to be laid before the Barons of Exchequer; and, as the Pannel was then occaſionally at Edinburgh, about ſome private Affairs of his own, he preſented the Memorials to one of the Barons, who diſapproved greatly of Glenure's Conduct, but could do nothing towards putting a Stop to the Removings, as a Quorum of the Barons could not be held till the next Exchequer Term; though at the ſame time, he undertook to repreſent the Caſe to the whole Barons, adding, that he mad eno doubt but they would give an Order to the Factor to continue the Tenants in Poſſeſſion; which in Part appears from a Letter wrote by the Pannel to Charles Stewart, Writer, dated 27th April 1752, and referred to in the Inventory ſubjoined to the Libel, in the following Words: "Yeſternight I arrived here, after a very "troubleſome Jaunt; and as the Barons could not be got together, put "it out of my Power to procure an Order for our Factor; but "Baron Kennedy, who I found very kind, and ſeemed to ſympathize "much with the Tenants Caſe, gave it as his private Opinion, that "they ſhould ſit their Poſſeſſions for this Year, and that all Juſtice "would be done them; and thought they ſhould take a Proteſt againſt "the Factor's Proceeding in a Body, I mean the Mamore and Appin "Tenants. The ſame Advice I had from all I adviſed with, who were "not a few, and all were of the ſame Mind, that the Tenants had a "good Chance, once their Affair came before the Barons."

Upon this the Pannel adviſed with Counſel, how the Tenants might be kept in Poſſeſſion till the Exchequer Term, and by their Advice applied to the Court of Seſſion for a Suſpenſion of the Removing; and, a Bill of Suſpenſion having been accordingly preſented, a Siſt was obtained, and the Bill ordained to be anſwered; which Siſt was intimated to Glenure, upon the Pannel's Return to the Country: but, Anſwers having been thereafter made to the Bill by Glenure, who had gone to Edinburgh for that Purpoſe, as the Pannel had, through Ignorance of the Forms, carried off with him the principal Bill with the Siſt upon it, the Anſwers were adviſed without the Bill, and the Bill refuſed by an Interlocutor the 5th of May laſt.

Upon Saturday the 9th of May, Glenure returned to his own Houſe in the Country; and ſo ſoon as it came to be publickly known, that the Bill of Suſpenſion was refuſed, and that upon Friday the 15th of May, being the Term-day, Glenure was to execute the Warrant of Ejection againſt the Tenants of Ardſhiel, it was reſolved, in conſequence of the Advice the Pannel had got from Edinburgh, that the Tenants ſhould take a Proteſt againſt Glenure, in caſe he ſhould attempt to put his Warrant of Ejection in Execution; and that they ſhould continue in Poſſeſſion notwithſtanding thereof, till ſuch Time as their Caſe ſhould be fully heard before the Barons, and that their Directions ſhould be known.

Accordingly, in Proſecution of this Plan, upon Tueſday the 12th of May, the Pannel wrote a Letter to Alexander Stewart, Writer in Glenettie, deſiring him to come and act as Notary to the Proteſt intended to be taken againſt Glenure; and at the ſame Time he prevailed upon two Gentlemen of Character in the Neighbourhood, viz. John Stewart younger of Ballachelish, and James Stewart younger of Faſnacloich, to undertake to attend as Witneſſes, and aſſiſt at taking the Proteſt; but the ſaid Alexander Stewart, the Notary, having happened to be out of the Way, when the Pannel's Servant went to his Houſe, and this having been notified to the Pannel upon the Morning of Thurſday the 14th of May laſt, (the Day on which Glenure was murdered) he diſpatched a Servant of his own very early, with a Letter to Charles Stewart, Writer at Auchintour, informing him of the Diſappointment he had met with by the Abſence of the Notary to whom he had firſt wrote, and deſiring him (the ſaid Charles) to come to his Houſe with all poſſible Expedition that Night, in order to act as Notary to the Proteſt intended to be taken againſt Glenure next Day.

In this Situation Matters ſtood upon Thurſday the 14th of May laſt, being the Day upon which this moſt execrable Murder was committed; and therefore, the Facts previous to the Murder being adjuſted, I ſhall now proceed to conſider the Evidence which has been brought for proving both Branches of the Libel; 1*ſt*, That the Murder was committed by the Hands of Allan Breck; and, 2*dly*, That it was committed in conſequence of a previous Conſpiracy betwixt him and the Pannel.

And here it is highly neceſſary that you ſhould be greatly on your Guard, to diſtinguiſh accurately between the Facts charged againſt the Pannel, and thoſe charged againſt Allan Breck; which is the more neceſſary, as in the Libel the Facts are ſo intermixed, that it is no eaſy Matter to diſtinguiſh the one from the other. And though I muſt admit, that the learned Gentleman on the other Side has been very candid in ſumming up the Evidence; yet I could have wiſhed he had been more careful to diſtinguiſh the Proof, ſo far as it relates to the different Pannels charged in the Libel.

With regard to the firſt Queſtion, concerning the Guilt of Allan Breck, I ſhall not take up much of your Time; for, though it is incumbent upon the Proſecutor to prove that the Murder was committed by the Hands of Allan Breck, yet it is not abſolutely neceſſary for the Pannel to maintain the Innocence of that Perſon; as it is of no Importance for the Proſecutor to prove that the Murder was committed by Allan Breck, unleſs he ſhall alſo prove that the Pannel was acceſſary to it.

And therefore I ſhall very ſhortly ſtate the Objections againſt this Part of the Evidence, leaving it to your own Conſciences to determine you, how far the Evidence brought by the Proſecutor is ſufficient.

And the firſt Circumſtance charged in the Libel is, "That, upon "Monday the 11th of May, Allan Breck having been informed that Glenure "had gone that Day to Lochaber, and was to return by the Ferry of "Ballachelish upon the Thurſday after, he had laid aſide his French "Cloaths, which were remarkable, and had diſguiſed himſelf in a black "Coat and Trowſers belonging to the Pannel, with an Intention to "commit the Murder."

But, in the firſt Place, it is not proved, that, upon Monday the 11th of May, Allan Breck had been particularly informed of Glenure's Motions; for though it does indeed appear, from the Depoſitions of ſome of the Witneſſes referred to by the Proſecutor, that Allan Breck had heard of Glenure's having ſet out that Day for Lochaber, yet it does not appear that he had got any Information what Road he was to take, or at what Time he was to return: None of the Witneſſes have ſaid ſo, and, in Caſes of this Nature, no Fact ought to be preſumed without proper Evidence.

2*dly*, Though it is proved that Allan Breck did change his Cloaths upon the Day libelled, yet it is not natural from thence to preſume, that this was done with an Intention to commit the Murder. It clearly appears, from the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes relative to this Article, "That, "upon former Occaſions, Allan Breck had been in uſe of laying aſide his "French Cloaths, and putting on the Dreſs of the Country." And, in particular, it is proved by the Depoſitions of the three Macells, (who cannot be ſaid to have been partial for the Pannel) "That he had on "theſe very Cloaths belonging to the Pannel, when he went to Rannoch "in the Month of April laſt:" And therefore, as it was no new Thing, but a common Practice of Allan Breck's to lay aſide his French Cloaths, and put on the Dreſs of the Country, it is wrong in the Proſecutor to lay hold of this Circumſtance, which is in itſelf innocent, and to wreſt it into an Argument againſt the Pannel; eſpecially as it appears from the Depoſitions of the ſame three Witneſſes, "That Allan Breck wrought "with them in the Potatoe-field the greateſt Part of that Afternoon "upon which he came to the Pannel's Houſe," which was a very natural Reaſon for laying aſide his French Cloaths, as not being proper for that Purpoſe.

The next Circumſtance charged againſt Allan Breck is, "That, for "ſome Days before the Murder happened, he had hovered near to the "Ferry of Ballachelish, at which it was known Glenure was to paſs; "that, during that Period, he had been twice at the Houſe of Ballachelish, twice at the Houſe of Glenco, and once at the Houſe of Callart."

But, in the firſt Place, it is not proved, that Allan Breck knew that Glenure was to paſs at the Ferry of Ballachelish; and therefore it is ridiculous to talk of hovering or lying in wait, when it was not known at what Ferry Glenure was to paſs.

2*dly*, If Allan Breck had known that the Defunct was to paſs at Ballachelish, and had intended to lie in wait, he would have kept cloſe at Ballachelish, and would not have gone either to Callart or Glenco, which are each of them at three Miles Diſtance, the firſt on the North Side, and the other on the South Side of the Ferry. It is much more natural to preſume, that Allan Breck went to theſe Places with an Intention to viſit his Friends who lived there. And this is another Inſtance where the Proſecutor wreſts a Circumſtance, which is in itſelf innocent, into an Argument againſt the Pannel.

The third and ſtrongeſt Circumſtance againſt Allan Breck is, "That "he abſconded that very Night upon which the Murder happened, and "left the Country ſoon thereafter."

But this Circumſtance has been in like Manner obviated by the Proof brought in Behalf of the Pannel. It is clearly proved, that, in the Year 1745, Breck was a Soldier in the Regiment commanded by Col. Lee; that, immediately after the Battle of Preſton, he deſerted to the Rebels; that he remained with them till they were happily defeated at the Battle of Culloden; and that, ſince that Time, he had been in the French Service: And therefore, as Breck muſt have foreſeen, that, upon the Murder of Glenure, a very ſtrict Search would be made, it was very natural for him, though innocent, to abſcond and leave the Country, and accordingly it appears from the Proof, that he gave this Account of the Matter to every Perſon whom he had Occaſion to converſe with upon that Subject; and therefore, as this Circumſtance, as well as all the reſt, may naturally bear a Conſtruction favourable for the Pannel, it is wrong in the Proſecutor to put a bad Conſtruction upon an Action which will naturally bear a good one.

The only other material Circumſtance from which the Guilt of Allan Breck is inferred, is, that, before the Murder, he had, upon different Occaſions, uſed threatening or reſentful Expreſſions againſt the Defunct: But, as it ſeemed to be admitted by the learned Gentleman on the other Side, that Expreſſions alone were not ſufficient to infer the Crime, I ſhall have Occaſion to conſider more particularly the Effect of ſuch Expreſſions, under the ſecond Branch of my Argument, which properly relates to this Pannel.

And whatever may be your Opinion with regard to Allan Breck, I muſt humbly contend, that there is no Sort of Evidence that the Pannel, now at the Bar, was in any previous Conſpiracy to commit this heinous Murder; and, as far as the Nature of the Thing could admit of it, the Pannel has proved the Improbability of his being any Way acceſſary to it.

In the firſt Place, the Character of the Pannel goes far to protect him from any Suſpicion of this Kind. Though that Part of the Evidence was not taken down in Writing, yet he has proved by Witneſſes, beyond all Exception, and can appeal to your own Conſciences for the Truth of it, that his Character in private Life was never ſtained by any diſhonourable Action. Is it poſſible then to believe, that one of ſuch a Character can at once plunge himſelf into the deepeſt Guilt, by committing the Crime of Aſſaſſination, which is of all others the moſt ſhocking to human Nature?

2*dly*, The Pannel's Guilt is ſtill the more improbable, as he could not poſſibly propoſe any Benefit by it. He was a Man of too good Underſtanding, not to ſee that Glenure's Place as Factor would ſoon be ſupplied; that the ſtricteſt Search would be made for the Authors of this enormous Crime; and that his Family, as being nearly connected with the forfeited Perſon, would be firſt ſuſpected: Is it poſſible, that, in ſuch Circumſtances, it could enter into the Imagination of the Pannel, to commit a Crime of ſo black a Nature, when he could not only reap no Benefit by it, but when it behoved neceſſarily to involve his own Family in inevitable Diſtreſs and Ruin?

But,

But, 3*dly*, There is another Circumstance which renders it incredible that the Pannel could have been in any previous Conspiracy to commit this Murder; for it is clearly proved, that at that very Time he was pursuing quite contrary Measures; that he had provided himself, and was endeavouring to provide the other Tenants, in other Possessions; and it is further proved, not only by verbal, but also by written Evidence, which cannot lie, That his Intention was to proceed in a legal Way, by taking a Protest against Glenure upon the Term-day, in case he should attempt to put his Removing in Execution. This is clearly proved by the Pannel's Letter to Charles Stewart, the Notary, dated the 14th of May, being that very Day on which Glenure was murdered: Which Letter ought to have the greater Weight, as it is not produced by the Pannel, but by the Prosecutors, the same having been recovered by them out of Charles Stewart's Hands.

In this Letter (which greatly deserves your Attention) the Pannel writes to Charles Stewart, That, by the Negligence of his Servant, he had been disappointed of the Notary he first intended, "which he reckons "a very great Misfortune." And then the Letter concludes in these Words: "The next best Thing I can think of is, that you be here this "Night, without fail, if you should hire a Horse; as every Thing must "go wrong, without a Person can act, and that I can trust. This is such "a Tie upon all the Members of our Family, that I'll press you no fur"ther, but do depend on seeing you once this Night."

It is indeed true, that this Letter does not particularly mention that the Pannel's Intention was to take a Protest against Glenure; but then, this is fully explained by the Depositions of the Witnesses, particularly by the Oath of Charles Stewart, who deposes, "That he received a second "Letter from the Pannel, of Date the 14th of May, desiring him to at"tend the next Day at the Ejection; but he declined the same, because "he did not care to disoblige Glenure."

This is further confirmed by the Oath of John Beg Maccoll, the Person who carried the Letter, who deposes, "That, upon Thursday the 14th of "May last, the Pannel gave a Letter to the Deponent, to be delivered "to Charles Stewart, Notary Public at Maryburgh; and told the Depo"nent, that the Letter was to make or cause Charles Stewart come to "the Country of Appin to protest against Glenure, in case he had not a "sufficient Warrant to remove the Tenants of Ardshiel: That the Pan"nel desired the Deponent to make all possible Dispatch, and desire John "Breck Maccombie at Kintalline, and John More Maccoll, Servant to the "Pannel, who was then at Kintalline, to ferry the Deponent from Kin"talline to Onich, being much shorter than the Ferry of Ballachelish: "That he set out from Aucharn about Seven or Eight o'Clock in the "Morning, and made all the Dispatch he could to Fort-William, where "he arrived about Twelve o'Clock. Deposes, That, when he came to "Fort-William, he delivered the Letter he got from the Pannel to Wil"liam Stewart, Merchant in Maryburgh, who told him that Charles Stew"art, the Notary, was not at Home, he having gone to the Braes of "Lochaber in the Morning; and told the Deponent, that he, the said "William, had wrote to the Pannel in the Morning, and that there was "a Notary along with Glenure, who would serve the Pannel, as well as "Glenure."

And it is further proved, that the Pannel had gone so far as to provide proper Witnesses to be present at taking that Protest, as appears from the Deposition of John Stewart younger of Ballachelish, who deposes, "That, "in the Time of the Spring Circuit in this Place, in May last, he was "summoned to be of the Jury; but, at the earnest Request of the Pannel, "that he, the Deponent, should be present with a Notary at the Remov"ing of the Tenants from the Estate of Ardshiel, he was going, on that "Errand, to the Pannel's House; but returned to Appin, upon hearing "of the Murder of Glenure committed that Day."

And this Observation, that the Pannel had at this Time no Thoughts of the execrable Murder of which he is now accused, is further confirmed from William Stewart's Letter to the Pannel, dated the same 14th of May, recovered by the Prosecutors from out of the Pannel's Repositories, which concludes in the following Words: "I find Glenure has a mind to eject "the Tenants; but they ought to be deaf to it, and, at all Risques, keep "Possession, as they are in good Hands, as it must end in the Exchequer; "so that I beg they keep Possession: As there will be no Troops, they "ought to repel Force by Force, and take their Hazard of the Conse"quences; as it can be no more than violent Profits, which is often modi"fied in inferior Courts, besides the Exchequer, who will insist for no "such; their chief Design being to have a Sett of peaceable Tenantry, "and a well-paid Rent: So that the People ought to be assured they will "be supported as far as Law will, which, no doubt, must determine in "their Favours."

From the Depositions of these Witnesses, joined with the Letters which have been read in your Presence, it is incontestably proved, That the Plan concerted between the Pannel and his Friends went no further, than to take a Protest against Glenure, in case he should attempt to execute his Warrant of Ejection against the Tenants; or, at furthest, that the Tenants should continue in Possession notwithstanding the Warrant, and run the Risque of violent Profits. And it is of great Importance in the present Argument, that these two Letters are dated upon the Morning of that very Day on which the Murder happened; a Circumstance utterly inconsistent with the Libel, which has no other Footing to stand upon than this, That the Pannel and Allan Breck had concerted the Murder previous to the Time when Allan Breck changed his Cloaths, which, as has been already observed, was four Days before the Murder.

Amidst such glaring Improbabilities, it would require the strongest Evidence to convict the Pannel. And this leads me to consider the several Facts, according to the Order in which they are laid in the Indictment.

And the first Thing charged in the Libel is, that the Pannel had conceived an unjust Resentment against the Defunct, for three different Reasons: 1*st*, Because he had accepted the Factory of the Estate of Ardshiel; 2*dly*, Because he had removed him from the Farm of Glenduror; and 3*dly*, Because that, in the Month of April 1752, he had taken Measures for removing certain other Persons, who were Tenants and Possessors of that Estate.

The first is clearly disproved by Letters and Discharges under the Hand of the Deceased, which have been read in your Presence; and from which it appears, that, for several Years after the Date of the Factory, the Deceased and the Pannel were in perfect good Terms; and that Glenure had such Confidence in the Pannel, that he had employed him to uplift the Rents from the other Tenants.

The second Ground for Resentment is disproved by the Oath of Alexander Stewart of Innernahyle, who deposes, "That the Time when the "Pannel removed from Glenduror, he told the Deponent, that he had "had a Meeting with Ballieveolan, and that there was a Compromise "betwixt them: That he did not hear of any Warning, but that he re"moved voluntarily."

And therefore the only Ground of Resentment which remains, is, That the Defunct had taken Measures for removing some of the other Tenants of the Estate, as at the Term of Whitsunday last: And tho' it may be true, that the Pannel has, upon different Occasions, complained, in strong Terms, of the Hardship of removing these Tenants; yet it is impossible to believe, that so trifling a Cause of Resentment could have so strong an Effect, as to push on the Pannel to the barbarous Murder of which he is now accused; more especially, when it is considered, that he is noways related to any of these Tenants, and that none of them are so much as of the same Name.

The Prosecutor has been pleased to lay great Stress upon certain foolish Expressions alledged to have been used by the Pannel upon the Subject of these Removings.

It must occur to every Man, how extremely dangerous a Proof of this Kind is: There are very few Witnesses who can repeat exactly the Particulars of any Conversation, and still fewer who can recollect these Particulars at any Distance of Time. In such Cases, much may depend upon the Tone of Voice, or Gesture of the Person who speaks; and the Variation of a Circumstance may alter the Meaning of the whole Expression.

Besides, there is an obvious Disadvantage which this Pannel labours under, and of which, in the present Case, he has no small Reason to complain; which is, That the particular Expressions charged against him are not taken into the Libel, neither are the Circumstances of Time and Place mentioned; by which the Pannel is deprived of the Opportunity he ought to have had of bringing a contrary Proof. If the particular Expressions were known to the Prosecutor, it was but just that they should have been taken into the Libel; and, on the other hand, if they were not known, no such Thing ought to have been at all mentioned.

And indeed, with regard to some of the Expressions, it is impossible to believe, that the Pannel used the Words deposed to by the Witnesses. Thus, in particular, the strongest Expression is that deposed to by John Maccoll the Bouman, who deposes, "That, about two Years ago, he "heard the Pannel say, That he would spend a Shot on Glenure, though "he went on his Knees to the Window to fire it." But as this Expression is only deposed to by one Witness, who seems to have been abundantly forward in deposing against the Pannel; so it is utterly incredible, that, at the Time deposed to by this Witness, the Pannel would have used this Expression; as it is clearly proved, by the Depositions of the other Witnesses, that the Deceased and the Pannel were then in strict Friendship together; and that at that Time the Deceased had such Confidence in the Pannel, that he was then employing him as Sub-factor upon this Estate.

It would be very tedious, and is unnecessary, for me to make particular Observations upon the other Expressions deposed to by the several Witnesses; at the same Time it is scarcely possible for me to recollect them, as I had no Opportunity to know them, till they were deposed to by the Witnesses themselves. It is sufficient for me, in general, to observe, that some of them may bear an innocent Meaning; that others of them appear to have been uttered when the Pannel was in Drink; and that none of them are so strong, as that deposed to by the Bouman, which has been already answered.

And though it should be admitted, that the Pannel had, upon different Occasions, expressed himself foolishly in Terms which implied Resentment against the Defunct; yet this, by itself, is by no Means sufficient to prove, that the Pannel was accessary to the Murder which afterwards happened.

And here I have only to appeal to your own Hearts, and ask, how often you have heard resentful Expressions thrown out in Conversation, where you were yourselves conscious, that nothing was seriously intended: And though it may be true, that such Expressions may serve as a Weight in the Scale, with other Circumstances, to convict the Pannel; yet this holds only where these other Circumstances cannot naturally admit of an innocent Construction, but can never apply to the present Case, where, I am hopeful, I shall be able to shew, that the other Circumstances proved against the Pannel, have no Shadow of Relevancy in them.

At the same Time, it is a Circumstance of some Weight, in the present Case, to take off the Effect of these Expressions, that it is not pretended, that the Murder was committed by the Pannel; on the contrary, the Libel sets forth, that the Murder was committed by the Hands of Allan Breck: And however it may be true, that Expressions importing Resentment, proved against the Pannel, may go far to presume Guilt, where none other is condescended on as the Actor and Perpetrator of the Murder; yet that will noways apply to the present Case, where the very Libel, upon which the Pannel is accused, sets forth, that the Murder was not committed by the Pannel, but by another.

The second Fact charged in the Libel, is founded on a Concert supposed to have been entered into betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck, upon Monday the 11th of May; in consequence of which Concert, it is alledged, the Murder happened. But as the Prosecutor has brought no Evidence of any such Concert, or that Allan Breck and the Pannel had any Conference whatever upon the Subject that Day; so it is proved, as strongly as the Nature of the Thing can admit of, by the Prosecutors own Witnesses, that no such Thing could possibly have been concerted that Day. The Sum of the Evidence relative to this Matter, is, That Allan Breck came to the Pannel upon Monday the 11th about Mid-day, the Pannel being then sitting in a Field of Potatoes, in Company with three of his Servants: That, after they had sit for a Quarter of an Hour together, a Message came from Mr. Campbell of Airds, desiring the Pannel to come to him at Keil, which is about two Miles distant from the Pannel's House: That, in consequence of this Message, he immediately went to Keil, leaving Allan Breck with his Servants: That he remained with Airds all that Afternoon, and did not return to his own House till late at Night,

Night, the Family being then at Supper, and ſeveral Strangers along with them: That the Pannel and Allan Breck had no Converſation together in private that Night: That they ſlept in ſeparate Places, and that the Pannel had left his Houſe next Morning, before Allan Breck got out of Bed.

As this is a very material Circumſtance, in reſpect it is admitted upon all Hands, that this was the only Occaſion the Pannel and Allan Breck had of converſing together, between Glenure's Return from Edinburgh, upon Saturday the 9th, and the Murder, which happened upon the Thurſday thereafter, I muſt beg leave to reſume, particularly, the Evidence on this Head.

John More Maccoll, depoſes, "That, upon Monday the 11th of May laſt, "he ſaw Allan Breck come to Aucharn, dreſſed in his long Cloaths, and "came directly where the Pannel, Allan his Son, John Beg Maccoll, and the "Deponent were covering Potatoes: That, when Allan came up, they "were reſting themſelves, and ſitting by one another: That Allan Breck "ſat with them; and all the Converſation the Deponent obſerved, conſiſted "in ſome Queſtions about the Welfare of the People of Glencrearan; and "that he did not obſerve the Pannel have any private Converſation with "the ſaid Allan Breck; for that, a very little Time after Allan Breck's "Arrival, the Pannel had a Meſſage to meet Mr. Campbell of Airds at "Keil; and that this happened after Mid-day: That the Pannel imme-"diately, upon receiving the above Meſſage, went away, in order to "meet Airds; and that nobody went along with the Pannel, Allan Breck "having ſtaid with them."

John Beg Maccoll depoſes, "That, when Allan Breck came, upon the "11th of May laſt, to Aucharn, the Pannel was ſeeing the Deponent, John "More Maccoll, and Dougal Maccoll, working at Potatoes; and that "Allan Stewart, the Pannel's Son, was likewiſe there: That, when Allan "Breck came, they were all ſitting together; and that he ſeated himſelf "by the Pannel, and had ſome Converſation in Engliſh, which the De-"ponent does not underſtand. Depoſes, That Charles Stewart, Son to "the Pannel, and Stewart, Daughter to Foſnacloich, came to Aucharn "from Foſnacloich a little after the ſaid Allan Breck." And further depoſes, "That when Allan Breck came back, upon Monday the 11th of "May laſt, to the Place where the Pannel, Deponent, and others, were "covering Potatoes, as above, they had ſit together but for about a Quar-"ter of an Hour, when the Deponent went to work at Potatoes at a greater "Diſtance; and before he went away, heard a Meſſage had come for his "Maſter to meet Airds at Keil, and heard his Maſter ſpeak of going there; "but when he went, or who went along with him, the Deponent does "not know: That the Deponent continued working at the Potatoes till the "Evening, and the Pannel was not come Home when he came from his "Work: That the Pannel came Home at Bed-time, accompanied with "John More Macilichuttan, who lay with the Deponent that Night."

Dougal Maccoll depones, "That when the Deponent came Home from "the Wood, upon Monday the 11th of May laſt, the Pannel was not at "Home, and the Deponent was told, he was gone to Keil, to meet the "Laird of Airds; and that the Deponent had gone to Bed before the Pan-"nel came Home that Night; and that early upon Tueſday Morning, "when the Deponent got up, he ſaw the Pannel without, who told him, "that he was going to Appin's Houſe; and that, to the Deponent's Know-"ledge, Allan Breck, or the Pannel's Sons, were not then up: That he "ſaw the Pannel go towards Letterſhuna, where Appin lives. Depoſes, "That Allan Breck left Aucharn before the Pannel returned from Letter-"ſhuna."

Katharine Maccoll depoſes, "That the Pannel went in the Afternoon "of the Day (viz. 11th May) to Keils, to meet Mr. Campbell of Airds; "and that it was late at Night before he came Home; but that the Fa-"mily had not ſupped when the Pannel came Home; and that the Pan-"nel ſupped in Company with Allan Breck Stewart, Foſnacloich's Daugh-"ter, and Archibald Cameron, Nephew to Foſnacloich, and the Pannel's "Family."

Archibald Cameron, depoſes, "That, upon Monday the 11th of May "laſt, the Deponent came from Foſnacloich's Houſe to the Pannel's Houſe, "after Mid-day: That, ſome little Time after he came there, he ſaw "Allan Breck Stewart: That the Pannel was not at Home when the De-"ponent came firſt there, but came Home before Night-fall: That the "Deponent, Pannel, Allan Breck, and the Family, ſat in one Room, "and ſupped together: That he did not obſerve Allan Breck and the Pan-"nel ſpeak in private that Night: That the Deponent and Allan Stewart, "the Pannel's Son, lay in one Bed, and Allan Breck and Charles Stewart, "Son to the Pannel, in another Bed in the ſame Barn: That, to the "beſt of his Remembrance, they all went to Bed much about one Time, "and got up together next Morning: That the Deponent did not ob-"ſerve the Pannel about the Houſe next Morning when he got up."

And the Depoſitions of theſe Witneſſes are corroborated by Donald Campbell of Airds, who depoſes, "That, upon Monday the 11th of May "laſt, the Deponent ſent to the Pannel, deſiring him to come to him at "Keils, a Farm belonging to the Deponent, at about a Mile's Diſtance "from the Pannel's Houſe: That the Pannel accordingly came there to "him that Afternoon, as ſoon as he expected him: That the Deponent's "Buſineſs with him was for his Aſſiſtance in ſetting that Farm: That "the Farm was accordingly ſet, and the Pannel himſelf took Part of it, "and conducted the Deponent a Part of his Way Home, and then they "parted: That, before parting, he deſired the Pannel to go next Morn-"ing to Appin's Houſe: That the Pannel accordingly did ſo, and the "Deponent had a Letter from him from that Place."

From what has been ſaid, therefore, it appears, that the Proſecutor has not only not proved, that upon the 11th of May there was any thing concerted with regard to the Murder betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck, but, on the contrary, it is proved, as ſtrongly as the Nature of the Thing can admit of, that no ſuch Thing was or could be concerted betwixt them at that Time; and if this is once eſtabliſhed, it ſaps the Foundation upon which the whole Libel ſtands; as it is not pretended, that the Pannel and Allan Breck had ever any other Opportunity of converſing together, betwixt Glenure's Return from Edinburgh and the Time of the Murder.

The third Article charged in the Indictment is, That, in purſuance of the Concert entered into upon the 11th of May, the Pannel had furniſhed Allan Breck with a Suit of his own Cloaths, in order to ſerve as a Diſguiſe, that he might be enabled to commit the Crime with the greater Safety.

But, in the firſt Place, it muſt occur to every Man who hears me, that this is a moſt improbable Tale; for, if it had been intended that Allan Breck ſhould be diſguiſed at the Time of committing the Crime, it is impoſſible it could be ſeriouſly intended, that he ſhould be diſguiſed in a Coat belonging to the Pannel; for, however this might have ſerved for a Diſguiſe to Allan Breck, it might ſerve equally for a Point of Evidence againſt the Pannel: And therefore this improbable Poſition can gain Credit with no Mortal, unleſs it ſhall firſt be ſuppoſed, that the Pannel is not only the moſt wicked, but alſo the moſt fooliſh among Men; which will not be eaſily credited by you, who have been Witneſſes to the decent Appearance he has made at this Trial.

2*dly*, As the Story is improbable, ſo it is equally deſtitute of all Foundation in Truth; for it is not proved by any of the Witneſſes, that the Pannel furniſhed or gave the Cloaths to Allan Breck: And though it is proved, that he laid aſide his French Cloaths, and put on a Suit of Cloaths belonging to the Pannel, or his own Son, upon the Monday before the Murder; yet it would be ridiculous to ſay, that a Party could be convicted as acceſſary to a Murder, becauſe that the Murderer had on his Cloaths at the Time when the Crime was committed.

And, laſtly upon this Head, the Circumſtance of changing the Cloaths has been fully acounted for in the former Part of the Argument; and as it has been clearly proved, that Allan Breck had been formerly in uſe of wearing theſe very Cloaths, the Accident of his having them on at the Time when the Murder was committed, can have no Weight againſt the Pannel.

The fourth Article charged in the Libel is, That, upon the Morning of that Day upon which the Murder happened, the Pannel had ſent John Beg Maccoll, a Servant of his own, to Fort-William, in order to watch, and give Intelligence concerning the Motions of the Deceaſed; and great Pains have been taken to prove this Article.

But, unluckily for the Proſecutor, this Fact happens to be contradicted by every Part of the Evidence.

In the firſt Place, it appears, from the Oath of John Beg Maccombich, "That it was known over the whole Country, that Glenure was to have "been that Evening at Kintalline, which lies on this Side the Ferry of "Ballachelish:" And therefore, if the Pannel's Intention had been to watch Glenure's Motions, it is natural to aſk, what good Reaſon there could be to order his Servant to croſs the Ferry, and go on to Fort-William, when, by waiting at the Ferry, he was ſure to get Intelligence of Glenure's Motions?

2*dly*, The Fact is contradicted by the Depoſitions of Fergus Kennedy and John Mackenzie, two Witneſſes alſo adduced for the Proſecutor, who concur in depoſing, "That John Maccoll met Glenure and his Company "in their Way Southward, about three Miles from Fort-William."—If his Errand had been to watch and give Intelligence concerning Glenure's Motions, he would have certainly returned immediately, and have given Intelligence accordingly. But, inſtead of this, it appears, from the Depoſitions of theſe Witneſſes, compared with the Oaths of William Stewart and his Wife, that John Maccoll did not return, but went on to Fort-William; which is utterly inconſiſtent with what the Proſecutor ſuppoſes.

And, laſtly, this Circumſtance is flatly contradicted by the Oath of John Beg Maccoll himſelf, who expreſsly depoſes, "That, when he went to "Fort-William with the above Letter to Charles Stewart, the Notary, he "had no Orders from his Maſter to enquire after the Motions of Glenure, "or to acquaint any body thereof;" but had been ſent to Fort-William, in order to bring a Notary from thence, to take a Proteſt againſt Glenure upon the Day following: And as that Part of his Evidence is confirmed by the Pannel's Letter to Charles Stewart, produced by the Proſecutor; ſo the remarkable Haſte with which John Beg Maccoll went to and returned from Fort William, clearly ſhews, that it was no ſham Errand, but that the Pannel's real Intention was to proceed in a legal Way, by taking a Proteſt againſt Glenure, in caſe he ſhould attempt to execute the Ejection.

The next Circumſtance charged in the Libel is, that when John Mackenzie informed the Pannel of the Murder, he appeared no ways concerned nor ſurprized; and that neither he, nor his Family, went to look after the dead Body.

But as this Circumſtance is extremely trifling, ſo the firſt Part of it is clearly diſproved by the Oath of John Mackenzie, Glenure's Servant, who depoſes, "That, immediately after the Murder, he went to James Stewart's "Houſe in Duror; and James ſeeing him weeping, aſked what the Matter "was? and the Deponent told him, his Maſter was killed: Whereupon "James Stewart aſked him, by whom, and how it was done? To which "he, the Deponent, anſwered, That he did not know by whom; and be-"lieved it to be a Shot from a Gun or Piſtol." And further depoſes, "That, when he ſaw the Pannel at his Houſe in Aucharn, as aforeſaid, "the Pannel wrung his Hands, expreſſed great Concern at what had happened, "as what might bring innocent People to Trouble, and prayed that inno-"cent People might not be brought to Trouble." And, to the ſame Purpoſe, the ſaid John Beg Maccoll depoſes, "That, when John Mac-"kenzie informed the Pannel of the Murder, he ſaid, It was a dreadful "Accident, and he was afraid it might bring Trouble on the Country; and "appeared ſorry for what had happened."

It is indeed true, that the ſame Witneſs has depoſed, "That neither "the Pannel, nor any of his Family, went near the dead Body:" But as this is a Circumſtance of no Manner of Weight; ſo the Witneſs has accounted for it in a very natural Way, viz. That as the Deceaſed and the Pannel had not been in good Terms together, the Pannel did not chuſe to go to the Place where the Body lay; and more eſpecially as he knew that ſome of thoſe who were to meet Glenure had Arms, and it was impoſſible to know what unreaſonable Lengths their Reſentment might carry them: At any Rate, it ſhews how much the Proſecutors are pinched in point of Argument, when they are obliged to found upon it, as a Circumſtance againſt the Pannel, that he did not go from his own Houſe, which is about two Miles diſtant from the Place where the Murder was committed, merely to aſſiſt at the Funeral of a Perſon to whom he was no-way related.

The

The fifth Article charged in the Libel is, That, upon the second Day after the Murder, the Pannel had sent five Guineas by the Packman to Allan Breck, in order to enable him to make his Escape. As to which, Gentlemen, I do admit, that, if at this Time the Pannel had been in the Knowledge that Allan Breck was the Murderer of Glenure, his furnishing him with Money, in order to enable him to make his Escape, might have been considered as an Offence deserving Punishment. At the same Time, however wrong this would have been, it might have admitted of an Excuse, from the Connexion and Relation which the Pannel had to Allan Breck. And it is now proved, by the concurring Testimonies of two Witnesses, that the Pannel had been left his Tutor; and therefore it is much doubted, how far the Pannel's sending Money to Allan Breck, tho' he had known him to be the Murderer, would have been punishable.

But however the Law might have stood upon that Supposition, it will not apply to the present Case. The Pannel denies he knew any thing of Breck's being the Murderer: And as he was well acquainted with his particular Circumstances, of which he has now brought full Evidence, by the concurring Testimonies of many Witnesses, that he had been first a Deserter, next a Rebel, and was then in the French Service; I conceive it was noways criminal in the Pannel to advance this trifling Sum, in order to enable him to make his Escape; it was doing no more than what any good-natured Man would have done to his Friend in the like Circumstances: And hard will be the Case of the Pannel, if he should be condemned merely for doing a good-natured Deed, which had nothing criminal in it; more especially as he had Reason to believe the Message which was sent him from Allan Breck, importing, that he had no Accession to the Murder, but judged it prudent for him to leave the Country, in respect of his particular Circumstances, explained as above.

And indeed his Majesty's Advocate does not seem to lay much Stress upon this Circumstance by itself; but then has attempted to rear up certain Arguments, tending to shew that the sending of this Money must have been in consequence of a previous Concert with Breck. And, in the first Place, it has been said, that the Pannel could not have known to have sent the Money to Koalisnacoan, if it had not been in consequence of such previous Concert.

But, with Submission, there is a very satisfying Answer to this Objection, viz. That, upon the Day after the Murder, the Pannel had received a Message from Allan Breck, informing him where he was, and desiring him to send what Money he could spare, to enable him to make his Escape. This is distinctly proved by the concurring Testimonies of no less than four Witnesses, whose Depositions, as they connect with one another, fall now to be attentively considered.

Katharine Macinnes deposes, "That, in the Evening of the 14th of "May last, the Deponent saw Allan Breck Stewart at a Goat-House in "the Moor of Ballachelish, after Glenure was killed: That Allan Breck "then asked her, what was the Occasion of the Stir in the Town? and "that she told him, Glenure was murdered: And further asked her, who "might have committed the Murder? and that she told him, she did not "know: And that the said Allan further desired the Deponent to tell "Donald Stewart in Ballachelish to go to the Pannel, and desire him to "send the said Allan Money; and that she delivered this Message to "Donald Stewart that same Night; and that she told the said Donald "Stewart where she saw Allan Breck."

And Donald Stewart, the next Witness, deposes, "That, upon the "Evening of Thursday the 14th of May last, about Night-fall, Katha- "rine Macinnes came to the Deponent, and told him, that one without "wanted to speak to him: That this Message came to him in Balla- "chelish's own House: That, when he went out, the said Katharine "Macinnes told him, that it was Allan Breck that wanted him, and that "he was a little above the House in the Brae: That the Deponent went "up to the Brae, and met Allan Breck, who was then dressed in a great "Coat, and a dark short Coat under it, with white metal Buttons: "The Deponent told him of the Murder, and said, it could not be but "that he, Allan Breck, was about it: To which Allan Breck answered, "That he had heard of the Murder, but had no Hand in it: To which "the Deponent replied, He did not believe him: That the said Allan "Breck Stewart told the Deponent, he was going immediately to leave "the Kingdom, was very scarce of Money, and was going then for "Koalisnacoan, and desired the Deponent to acquaint the Pannel, that "he was gone to Koalisnacoan, and desired him, if possible, to send him "Money there; and the Deponent then promised to acquaint James "Stewart of the above Message: That Allan Breck said, he believed he "would be suspected of the Murder; and upon that Account, and as he "was a Deserter formerly from the Army, it was necessary for him to "leave the Kingdom: That, after the Conversation with the Pannel about "Serjeant More, he delivered the above Message from Allan Breck to the "Pannel; and that the Pannel did not say whether or not he was to send "the Money; and this Conversation happened about Ten o'Clock in "the Forenoon of Friday the 15th of May last; and that there was no- "body present." And further deposes, "That, upon the Deponent's "delivering the above Message from Allan Breck to the Pannel, the "Pannel asked why Allan Breck himself did not come for Money, if he "wanted it? To which the Deponent, to the best of his Remembrance, "replied, That Allan Breck told him, he would be suspected for the Mur- "der, and was a Deserter: To which the Pannel answered, That he "hoped in God Allan Breck was not guilty of the Murder: That, during "the above Conversation with the Pannel, Alexander Stewart, Duncan "Maccombich, and several other Possessors of Auchindarroch, were in the "adjoining Field delving, but at such a Distance, that the Deponent "cannot think they could hear the above Conversation."

From the Depositions of these two Witnesses, which connect exactly together, it is distinctly proved in what Manner the Pannel came to the Knowledge of the Place where Allan Breck was: And their Depositions are further supported by the Deposition of John Stewart younger of Balla- chelish, who deposes, "That, the Day after the Murder, the Deponent "was at the Pannel's House, who, after Twelve o'Clock of the Day, "told the Deponent, that he had a Message that Morning from Allan "Breck by Donald Stewart, to send him Money; but does not remem- "ber whether the Pannel told him the Place where he was directed to "send it; and the Pannel told the Deponent, that he was resolved to "send him Money."

And also by the Deposition of Alexander Stewart in Auchindarroch, who deposes, "That, to the best of his Knowledge, he saw Donald Stewart in "Ballachelish and the Pannel together, upon the Marches between Au- "charn and Auchindarroch, in the Morning of the 15th of May; and "that he himself was at the Time digging Ground with the other Te- "nants of the Town."

The learned Gentleman on the other Side has been pleased to except against this Part of the Evidence; that the two material Witnesses are both connected with the Family of Ballachelish; that, as to some of the Facts, they are single Witnesses; and that they do not entirely agree as to the Import of the Message sent to Donald Stewart by Allan Breck.

I must acknowledge, I am under no small Difficulty to find out any Foundation for the first Part of the Objection. It is neither pretended nor proved, that Ballachelish is at all related to the Pannel; and as it cannot be said that any valid Objection could have been made against Ballachelish himself, if he had been produced as a Witness for the Pannel, far less does any Objection lie against the Son-in-law or Servant of Balla- chelish, upon Account of his being in the Interest of the Pannel, of which, however, no Sort of Evidence has been brought. And as to the second Part of the Objection, that there are not two Witnesses concurring as to the whole of the Facts relative to the Message sent by Allan Breck to Do- nald Stewart;—the learned Gentleman would do well to observe, how much of his own Proof is founded only upon single Testimony; and then let him shew Cause, why his Packman and Bauman, though single Witnesses, should be credited, and the like Indulgence should not be given to the Pannel.

At the same Time it must be observed, that the two Witnesses who have deposed with regard to this Message, are not single; they concur as to the material Part, that Allan Breck had sent a Message to the Pannel, desiring him to send him a present Supply: And though the two Witnesses differ with regard to the precise Words used by the Maid in delivering Allan Breck's Message to Donald Stewart; yet, as they agree in every material Circumstance, no Regard ought to be had to trifling Variations; and it is believed the Gentleman on the other Side will admit, that the Objection would have been full as strong (if not stronger), if the two Witnesses had both used the same Words.

And lastly, As to the Observation that the Witnesses differ among themselves, as to the precise Hour when the Packman arrived at Fort- William, and demanded the Money from William Stewart, it is noways surprising, that, at so great a Distance of Time, Witnesses should not be altogether exact as to Hours and Minutes. What appears most probable is, that William Stewart and his Wife have both mistaken the Hour, as, from their Oaths, neither of them seem to be positive with regard to that Matter: And Stewart the Packman seems to have been more attentive to this Particular, since he not only swears as to the Time when he received his Message from the Pannel, which he says was about Twelve at Noon, but also as to the Time when he delivered it to William Stewart, which, as the Packman says, was early in the Evening: And as this agrees entirely with the Account which Donald Stewart gives of the Matter, when he says, "That he delivered Allan Breck's Message to the Pannel about Ten o'Clock Forenoon;" so it is plain there could be no Concert betwixt these two, not only as Donald Stewart is above all Suspicion of that Kind, but also as the Packman has been kept under close Confinement by the Prosecutor, and had no Opportunity of conversing with Donald Stewart from the Time of the Murder till he was produced as a Witness: And I cannot help thinking, that it would sound strangely to say, that the Prosecutors should be allowed to give Credit to this Packman where he swears for them, and, at the same Time, to reject his Testimony where it happens to make against them.

The Prosecutor has been pleased to lay great Stress upon the Oath of John Breck Maccoll, Bouman; and in particular upon that Part of it, where he says, that Allan Breck had desired him to go into Fort-William with a Letter to William Stewart, in case some Money did not come to him before next Morning; and this, it has been said, agrees exactly with the Message sent by the Pannel to William Stewart, desiring him to give Credit in five Pounds Sterling to John Breck Maccoll, Bouman in Koalisna- coan, in case he came to demand it; and it is pretended, that this is a clear Proof of a private Concert betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck, settling the Manner in which he was to be supplied with Money.

But as the whole of this Argument is founded upon the Oath of the Bouman, deposing to a long romantic Story, in which he is altogether unsupported, I am intitled in Law to plead, that his Oath is not to be held as legal Evidence against the Pannel; more especially as it appears, from what has been already said, that his Evidence is disproved in one very material Article, in which he deposes to a very strong Expression, as applied by the Pannel against Glenure, at a Time when it is proved they were in perfect Friendship together.

2*dly*, The Oath of the Packman, relative to this Article, is as little to be relied on; for, though he has now deposed, That the Pannel had desired him to tell William Stewart, not only to send him five Pounds, but also to give Credit for the like Sum to John Breck Maccoll in Koalisnacoan, in case he came to demand it; yet it is remarkable, that, in the Libel, which it must be presumed was taken from his own Mouth, no Mention is made of the five Pounds, for which Credit was to be given to the Bouman; and therefore this must have been a new Discovery made by the Packman since printing the Libel. And it is further remarkable, that this Part of the Packman's Evidence is contradicted by the Oath of William Stewart, who expressly deposes, That, at the Time when the Packman delivered his Message from the Pannel, no Mention was made of the Name of Allan Breck; and therefore no Argument can be drawn from any Thing either the Packman or Bouman have said upon this Matter.

But, 3*tio*, supposing all the Bouman has said to be true, viz. That Allan Breck had desired him to carry a Letter to William Stewart, it will not follow, that he and the Pannel were under any previous Concert relative to that Matter; for as Allan Breck was acquainted with William Stewart, and as nearly related to him as he was to the Pannel, it was natural for him to have Recourse to William Stewart to supply him in his Necessity; and and therefore his doing ſo, will not prove that it was done upon any previous Concert with the Pannel. From the Commiſſion Allan Breck had given to Donald Stewart upon the Thurſday Evening, he had Reaſon to expect that the Pannel would have ſent him a Supply with the firſt Opportunity; and as that had not happened, it was natural for him to apply to William Stewart, who was his Acquaintance, and as nearly related to him as the Pannel.

The learned Gentleman has been pleaſed alſo to found upon the Poſtſcript ſubjoined to the Pannel's Letter of the 14th of May, to Charles Stewart; in which he deſires, "That William may ſend immediately "eight Pounds Sterling, to pay for four Milk Cows he had bought for "his Uſe at Ardſhiel:" From which it is inferred, that, before the Murder, the Pannel was preparing Money to give Allan Breck, in order to enable him to make his Eſcape. But as that Letter and Poſtſcript do not mention the Name of Allan Breck, nor to what Purpoſe the Money was intended to be applied, the Obſervation does not deſerve any Anſwer; tho' at the ſame Time it clearly proves, that the moſt innocent Circumſtances have been laid hold of, and reared up into Arguments againſt the Pannel.

Thus it appears, that no Argument can be drawn from the Circumſtance of the Pannel's ſending Money to Allan Breck; as it is not proved, that the Pannel then knew that the Murder had been committed by him; and far leſs is it proved, that there had been any previous Concert betwixt them concerning the ſending of that Money before the Murder was committed. And indeed, Gentlemen, it appears to me, that the Circumſtances which attended the ſending of this Money, and in particular the Difficulty there was in obtaining it, cannot fail to convince every unprejudiced Perſon, that this horrid Murder had not been committed in conſequence of any previous Concert betwixt the Pannel and Allan Breck; for, if that had been the Caſe, it is impoſſible to believe, that the Money would not have been more early provided. It behoved to occur to both Parties, that Money would be neceſſary to enable the Murderer to make his Eſcape; and as it clearly appears, that neither the one nor the other was in Caſh upon Monday the 11th, when the Time and Manner of committing the Murder is ſuppoſed to have been concerted, it is impoſſible, that this important Matter of providing the Money would not have been inſtantly ſet about, or that it would have been delayed till the Hour when the execrable Act was to be committed.

The learned Gentleman has been pleaſed alſo to lay Weight upon another Circumſtance, viz. That, ſome Days after the Murder, two Guns were found concealed near the Pannel's Houſe, one of them loaded, and the other unloaded; and it has been inſinuated, as if the unloaded Gun was that, with which Allan Breck committed the Murder. But this Circumſtance is really ſo trifling, that it ſcarcely deſerves a ſerious Anſwer. It is well known, that the Part of the Country where the Pannel lives, fell under the diſarming Act; and therefore it was noways ſurpriſing, that the Guns were found hid, and that Orders were given to hide them at a Time when it was foreſeen, that a ſtrict Search was to be made by the Military; and, though one of the Guns was unloaded, it is a ſtrange Flight of Imagination, from thence to infer, without Evidence, that this was the Gun with which the Murder was committed.

Beſides, it appears from the Oaths of John Beg and Dougal Maccolls, both Witneſſes produced for the Proſecutor, that the little Gun, which was found unloaded, was in ſuch miſerable bad Order at the Time when the Murder happened, that it is impoſſible it could have entered into the Head of any Mortal to uſe it for the Purpoſe ſuppoſed by the Proſecutor. Dougal Maccoll depoſes, "That he, the Deponent, has no Skill about "Guns; but heard Allan Breck, and Allan Stewart the Pannel's Son, "complain more than once, that the Guns were in bad Order."

John Beg Maccoll depoſes, "That neither of the Guns were in good "Order; that the large or loaded Gun was in uſe, when going to be "ſnapped, to ſtand at Half-cock; and that the little Gun was in uſe to "ſnap or misfire: That the little Gun had an old wore Flint in it, and "that he obſerved this Flint in the ſaid Gun, when he was in uſe to ſee "it ſtand at the End of the Girnel as above; but did not obſerve whether "it had a Flint or not, when he took it from under the Girnel: That "he knows no Fault the Lock of the little Gun had, but its being in uſe "to misfire; and that the Lock was on the ſaid Gun when he hid it "on the Friday Evening: That Allan Breck carried it out one Morning, "and told that it miſgave with him thrice at a black Cock, and ſhot with "it the fourth Time, without killing the Cock."

And, in like Manner, Captain David Chapeau and Patrick Campbell concur in depoſing, That this little Gun, at the Time when it was found, was in ſuch bad Order, that, for want of a Screw-nail, the Lock was tied to the Stock by a String:—And therefore, upon the whole, I leave it to you to judge, how far it is poſſible that a Gun in ſuch Order would have been uſed for the Purpoſe ſuppoſed by the Proſecutor; or that it would have been carried back ſo quickly, as it muſt have been, to the Pannel's Houſe, at a Time when every Perſon was on the Watch inquiring about the Murder.

And it is of no Importance, that neither John Beg nor Dougal Maccoll ſaw this Gun, at the Time when the other Arms were hid upon the Thurſday Evening; for as neither of theſe two Witneſſes ſay that they looked for it, ſo they have both depoſed, "That Allan Stewart, the Pan-"nel's Son, had then told them, that he had hid it below the Girnel;" and as they accordingly found it ſo hid upon the Day following, it removes all Ground of Suſpicion, which might otherwiſe ariſe from the Circumſtance, that this Gun was not hid with the reſt of the Arms on the Thurſday Evening. At the ſame Time, the Pannel muſt beg leave to ſay, that it would require ſome Explanation how it has happened, that the Lock of this little Gun comes to be now miſſing, when ſuch Care has been taken to preſerve every other Particular, which could poſſibly furniſh any Handle for an Argument againſt the Pannel. A good deal of Weight has been alſo laid upon another Circumſtance of the like Nature with the former, viz. That, upon the Day after the Murder, Allan Breck's Cloaths were hid, in conſequence of an Order by the Pannel's Wife: But as it is not eaſy to figure how an Order given by the Pannel's Wife ſhould have any Effect againſt the Pannel; ſo it is humbly thought that this Circumſtance may be eaſily accounted for.—It was foreſeen, that, as Allan Breck was about to leave the Country, he would be immediately ſuſpected as guilty of the Murder; and, as there was great Reaſon to believe that a Search would be forthwith made in every Place where Breck was in uſe to viſit, it was natural for the Pannel's Wife to put his Cloaths out of the Way, that they might not be the Occaſion of Suſpicion againſt the Pannel or his Family.

His Majeſty's Advocate was pleaſed to found upon the Oath of John Maccoll, Bouman, who depoſes, "That Allan Breck had ſaid to him, "that the apprehending of the Pannel and his Son would not ſignify "much; but expreſſed ſome Concern, leſt Allan Stewart, Son to the "Pannel, might be betrayed by his own Tongue." But, as the Bouman is only here depoſing to an Expreſſion of Allan Breck's, when he was endeavouring to free himſelf from Suſpicion; as the Bouman is at beſt only a ſingle Witneſs; and as the Expreſſion ſuppoſed to have been uſed by Allan Breck does not imply, that either the Pannel, or his Son, had been guilty of the Murder; this Circumſtance, ſuppoſing it true, ought not to be regarded.

And here I cannot omit putting you in mind of one Circumſtance depoſed by Alexander Stewart, the Packman, which ſhews pretty clearly, that no Regard ought to be had to the Oath of the Bouman; and beſides it is ſingle, and not ſupported by other Evidence. The Packman depoſes, "That the Bouman had deſired him to conceal his carrying "the Cloaths and Money to Koaliſnacoan; told him that he could not "prove it againſt him; and that he could ſafely depoſe he did not deliver the "Cloaths to him, ſince he only pointed out where they were." I leave to you, Gentlemen, to judge, what Credit can be given to a Witneſs whoſe Principles were ſuch, as to ſuppoſe that Perjury might be avoided by ſo poor an Evaſion.

It has been alſo ſaid, "That the Pannel's Wife, his two Sons, and "his Daughter, have, in ſome Things, contradicted each other, in the "Declarations made by them ſeverally at Fort-William."

The Pannel cannot help thinking it hard, that extrajudicial Declarations made by his own Family ſhould have been received as Evidence againſt him; more eſpecially as it has been hitherto held to be an eſtabliſhed Principle in our Law, not only that extrajudicial Declarations by third Parties cannot be taken, or received as Evidence againſt any Pannel, but alſo that thoſe who ſtand in the Relation of Wife or Children to the Pannel, cannot be received as Witneſſes againſt him.

However, as theſe Declarations have been allowed to be read in Court, though objected to by the Counſel for the Pannel, he muſt acquieſce in the Judgment given; but, at the ſame time, I am fully perſuaded, that, upon peruſing theſe Declarations, the Jury will be of Opinion, that the Differences (if there are any) are ſo trifling, that they can have no Weight againſt the Pannel: And though it ſhould be ſuppoſed that the Wife or Daughter of the Pannel, from a miſtaken Notion of Duty to a Parent and Huſband, who had been always indulgent to them, have endeavoured to conceal that Allan Breck went from the Pannel's Houſe on Tueſday Morning, dreſſed in a Coat belonging to the Pannel; yet, as it has been demonſtrated, it is hoped to your Conviction, that there is no ſort of Relevancy in this Circumſtance, it can have no other Effect, but to ſhew how extremely improper it is, that ſo near Relations ſhould be examined againſt any Man upon Trial; but can never be uſed as an Argument againſt the Pannel. On the contrary, Gentlemen, I cannot help thinking, that theſe Declarations afford a very ſtrong Argument for the Pannel; for as no leſs than ſixteen different Declarations appear to have been taken from the Pannel himſelf, his Wife, and Children, (one of his Sons having been examined no leſs than five different Times) it is really ſurpriſing that ſo great a Number of Declarations, ſigned by different Parties, all relative to the ſame Matter, ſhould agree ſo exactly together; and, as all the Attention of the Proſecutor has not been able to draw from theſe Declarations any thing which can fix the moſt diſtant Suſpicion of Guilt againſt the Pannel, it tends ſtrongly to fortify the legal Preſumption of his Innocence.

As to the Letter wrote by the Pannel to John Macfarlane, referred to in the Libel, I am ſtill at a Loſs to diſcover what Argument can be drawn from it; for as that Letter (which was wrote ſoon after the Murder, and before any Advertiſement had been publiſhed by the Friends of the Deceaſed for apprehending Allan Breck) contains an exact Deſcription of Breck's Perſon and Dreſs, and alſo of the Place where he was moſt likely to be found, it rather proves for, than againſt the Pannel; and it was but natural, at this Period, for the Pannel to expreſs an Anxiety to have Allan Breck apprehended; as it appears from the Proof, that before this Time it was the common Report of the Country, that the Murder had been committed by Allan Breck; and therefore it behoved naturally to occur to the Pannel, that the eaſieſt and ſhorteſt Way to obtain his own Liberty, was to find out and ſecure the Perſon by whom the Murder was ſuppoſed to have been committed.

The learned Gentleman on the other Side ſtill inſiſts, that it is not proved, that any other Perſon, beſides the Pannel, had any Quarrel or Reſentment againſt the Deceaſed; and it has been further ſaid, "That "if Allan Breck was the Actor in the Murder, he was only revenging "the Quarrel of the Pannel."

But the Weight of this Obſervation is fully taken off by the Evidence produced for the Pannel. It is clearly proved by the Depoſitions of Angus Macdonald, Duncan Campbell, Robert Stewart, and Charles Stewart, "That "Allan Breck had ſworn Revenge againſt Glenure, upon a Belief, that he "had given Information againſt him as a Deſerter:" And though Colonel Crawfurd has depoſed, "That the Deceaſed had never given him "any ſuch Information;" yet this does not at all vary the Argument, as it is undeniably proved, that Allan Breck ſtill believed, that ſuch Information had been given, and upon that Account bore deep Reſentment againſt the Deceaſed: And therefore, ſuppoſing that the Murder had been committed by Allan Breck, (which is not admitted) it will not follow, that it was done with a View to reſent any Quarrel the Pannel might have had with the Deceaſed; ſince it might have been done with a wicked Purpoſe of avenging his own private Quarrel: And, at the ſame Time, it is very proper to be here obſerved, that the Deceaſed had executed a Warning, and obtained a Decreet of Removing, againſt a great many of the Tenants of Ardſhiel and Lochiel; and if it is true, that in that Part of the Country a Step of this Sort is conſidered as a Cauſe of mortal Hatred, it was, at leaſt, as much ſo to the Tenants removed, as it could poſſibly be to the Pannel: And therefore it is wrong in the Proſecutor to say, that there was no other Person who had any Cause of Resentment against the Deceased, but only the Pannel; whereas it is plain, that every one of the Tenants who had been decerned to remove from their respective Possessions, had at least as strong a Cause of Resentment against the Deceased, as that which is libelled against the Pannel; and besides, I might also observe, that it is proved, by the Depositions of the two last Witnesses produced for the Pannel, that one Serjeant More Cameron (who in that Part of the Country is known to be of a most abandoned Character) had threatened to shoot Glenure, or to be upsides with him, in case he should happen to meet him.

Upon the whole, Gentlemen, I flatter myself, I have shewn to your Conviction, that all and each of the Circumstances proved against the Pannel are such, that they can easily bear a good Construction, and might have happened naturally, though he had been innocent of the Crime laid to his Charge: And when to this it is added, that the Character of the Pannel in private Life, renders it highly improbable that he could have been accessary to so vile a Crime; that he could not possibly reap any Benefit by it; and that it is proved by inconteſtable Evidence, that, at the very Time when the Murder was committed, he was anxiously pursuing another Measure, which was utterly inconsistent with the Supposition of his being any way accessary to the Murder; I persuade myself that you will be careful to divest yourselves of any Impressions you may have received without Doors; that you will judge upon the Evidence impartially as it lies before you; and that, upon the whole, you will find the Pannel not guilty of the Crime laid to his Charge.

At the same Time, in case you shall have any Difficulty in finding the Pannel not guilty, or in case you shall be of Opinion, that there is a Shadow of Relevancy in any of the Circumstances proved against the Pannel, it is your Duty to return a special Verdict upon the Facts proved for and against the Pannel; and in that Case you ought to be particularly careful to omit no Circumstance which may have any Tendency to exculpate the Pannel.

Curia legitimè affirmata.

Intrat. The above James Stewart, Pannel.

The Persons, who passed upon the Assize of the said James Stewart, returned the following Verdict:

" At Inverary, the 24th Day of September, 1752 Years, New Style, The " above Assize, having inclosed, did make Choice of the said Colin Camp- " bell of Skipnish to be their Chancellor, and James Campbell, late Bailie of " Inverary, to be their Clerk; and, having considered the criminal Let- " ters pursued at the Instance of William Grant of Prestongrange, Esq. his " Majesty's Advocate, for his Majesty's Interest, and also at the Instance " of Janet Mackay, Daughter to the Honourable Hugh Mackay of Bighouse, " Esq. and Relict of the deceased Colin Campbell of Glenure, for herself, " and on behalf of Elizabeth and Lucy Campbells, her infant Children, with " Concourse of his Majesty's Advocate, for his Majesty's Interest; against " James Stewart, Pannel; the Lord Justice-General, and Lords Commis- " sioners of Justiciary their Interlocutor thereupon, with the Depositions " of the Witnesses adduced for proving thereof, and Depositions of the " Witnesses adduced for the Pannel, together with the Writings, and " other Particulars contained in the Inventory subjoined to the Libel, and " the Writings produced for the Pannel; find unanimously the Pannel " James Stewart GUILTY, Art and Part, of the Murder of Colin Campbell " of Glenure. In Witness whereof, our said Chancellor and Clerk have " subscribed these Presents in our Names, and in our Presence, Place and " Date above-written."

JA. CAMPBELL, Clerk.

After reading this Verdict the Court proceeded to give Judgment; which, being written down in the Book, and signed by the whole Judges, was read by the Clerk, and, in the usual Manner, repeated pronounced by the Dempster to the Pannel, as follows:

" The Lord Justice-General, and Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, " having considered the Verdict of Assize, of Date the 24th current, ac- " cording to the present Style, returned this Day against James Stewart, " Pannel, whereby he is found Guilty, Art and Part, of the Murder of " Colin Campbell of Glenure; they, in respect thereof, by the Mouth of " John Mackenzie, Dempster of Court, decern and adjudge the said James " Stewart to be carried back to the Prison of Inverary, and therein to re- " main till the 5th Day of October next, according to the present Style; " and then to be delivered over by the Magistrates of Inverary, and Keeper " of the said Prison, to the Sheriff-depute of Argyllshire, or his Substitutes; " and to be by them transported to the Shire of Inverness, and delivered " over to the Sheriff-depute of Inverness, or his Substitutes; and to be by " them transported to Fort-William, and delivered over to the Governor, " Deputy-Governor, or Commander in Chief, for the Time, of the said " Garrison, to be by them committed to Prison in the said Fort, therein " to remain till the 7th Day of November next, according to the present " Style; and then again to be delivered over to the Sheriff-depute of In- " vernessshire, or his Substitutes; and to be by them transported over the " Ferry of Ballachelish; and delivered over to the Sheriff-depute of Ar- " gyllshire, or his Substitutes, to be by them carried to a Gibbet to be " erected by the said Sheriff on a conspicuous Eminence upon the South " Side of, and near to the said Ferry: And decern and adjudge the said " James Stewart, upon Wednesday the 8th Day of November next, accord- " ing to the present Style, betwixt the Hours of Twelve at Noon and " Two Afternoon, to be hanged by the Neck upon the said Gibbet, by " the Hands of an Executioner, until he be dead; and thereafter to be " hung in Chains upon the said Gibbet; and ordain all his moveable " Goods and Gear to be escheat and inbrought to his Majesty's Use; " which is pronounced for Doom."

After which the Lord Justice-General spoke to the Pannel to the following Effect:

JAMES STEWART, you have had a very long and most impartial Trial: You have been prosecuted with all the Moderation consistent with the Crime you stood accused of; and your Counsel have defended you with great Ability, and with Decency. The Jury have unanimously found you guilty of having been accessary to this horrid Murder, which, upon due Consideration of all Circumstances, seems to be according to the Evidence.

My Brethren, in delivering their Opinions, have endeavoured to make you sensible, how heinous the Crime is of which you stand convicted; a base and most infamous Murder and Assassination, in Defiance of the Laws of God and Man, and the common Principles of Humanity! I must add one Circumstance more, which aggravates your Guilt; and that is, your Ingratitude to that Gentleman, who, by your Means, is now no more. You had, by your Artifices, got into his Confidence, before he had Time to be well informed of the Circumstances of the Estate of which he was appointed Steward. This Confidence you abused so much, as to raise Sums of Money from the Tenants for your own Purposes: But when, in Obedience to the Orders of his Superiors, he was removing you and others from the Farms they did possess, then, according to the Malice always prevailing in uncivilized Parts of the Highlands, your inveterate Hatred began: So that it may be said of you, That you first eat his Bread, and then shed his Blood.

To trace your Crime from its true original Source, I will use the Words of our Statute-Book, Those barbarous Cruelties and lawless Oppressions practised in the Highlands during several Centuries, against which the Laws made so long ago as the Year 1587, and inforced in 1690, were so severe, that the Clans were bound to deliver Hostages, as Securities for the Peace, who were even to be put to Death, if no Redress was made. To this I must add that obstinate and almost incurable Disaffection and Aversion to the Government in several Highland Clans, and in particular your own, ever since the happy Revolution, and the Establishment of the Crown in the Protestant Line.

In the Year 1715, there broke out a most unnatural and unprovoked Rebellion, soon after the Accession of his late Majesty to the Throne; in which the Part your Clan acted is well known, so many being here present that were Witnesses of their composing Part of the Rebel Army, which besieged this Town. This I myself have Reason to know. A Royal Indemnity soon followed after those Treasons then committed: But, in the Year 1719, your Clan, unmindful of their Lives and Fortunes having been granted them only two Years before, did again rise in Rebellion, and assisted a foreign Enemy in an Invasion: In this you are said to have acted a Part, though at that Time very young.

In the Year 1745, the restless Spirits of the disaffected Highlanders again prompted them to raise a third Rebellion, in which you and your Clan formed a Regiment in that impious Service, and in which you persevered to the last. The Divine Providence at first permitted you to obtain some Advantages, which has possibly been to give you Time to repent of your Crimes. But who can dive into the Secrets of the Almighty! At last Heaven raised up a great Prince, the Son of our gracious King, who, with Courage equal to that of his Ancestors, and with Conduct superior to his Years, did, at one Blow, put an End to all your wicked Attempts.

If you had been successful in that Rebellion, you had been now triumphant with your Confederates, trampling upon the Laws of your Country, the Liberties of your Fellow-Subjects, and on the Protestant Religion: You might have been giving the Law, where you now have received the Judgment of it; and we, who are this Day your Judges, might have been tried before one of your mock Courts of Judicature, and then you might have been satiated with the Blood of any Name or Clan to which you had an Aversion.

I have thought it my Duty to put you in mind of these Facts, only to mark out those wicked Paths which have led you to Destruction: And though you don't now stand accused as a Rebel, nor am I permitted to call you a Traitor, because his Majesty's undeserved Mercy to you did several Years ago restore you to the State of an innocent Man; yet I may say, with great Force of Truth, that this Murder has been visibly the Effect and Consequence of the late Rebellion.

You may yet, during the short Time you have to live, be of great Service to your Friends and Neighbours, by warning them against those Principles and Practices which have brought you to this untimely End; and may the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul!

Immediately after Sentence of Death had passed upon James Stewart, and the Lord Justice-General had ended his Speech, the Pannel said,

MY Lords, I tamely submit to my hard Sentence. I forgive the Jury, and the Witnesses, who have sworn several Things falsely against me: And I declare, before the great God, and this Auditory, that I had no previous Knowledge of the Murder of Colin Campbell of Glenure, and am as innocent of it as a Child unborn. I am not afraid to die; but what grieves me, is my Character, that After-ages should think me capable of such a horrid and barbarous Murder.

Thereafter the Pannel was ordered back to Prison, and executed according to his Sentence; and the Morning before he went to Execution, he declared to the Sheriff his Innocence of the Fact for which he was convicted; and did the same at the Gallows, with many Protestations of his Innocence, calling God to witness the Truth of what he declared.

N. B. When the Sentence was pronounced against James Stewart at Inverary, the Gentlemen who attended the Trial the preceding Days, having been all tired with it, did not take Notes the last Day: But, as far as they can recollect, the Substance of what the Lord Justice-General then said to the Pannel, was as is above set down.

XLIX. The TRIAL of JOHN BARBOT, Attorney at Law, for the Murder of Matthew Mills*, Esq. at a Court of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol-Delivery, held at the Town of Basseterre, in and for the Island of St. Christopher, on Friday the 5*th Day of* January, 1753, before the Honourable William Matthew Burt, Esq. President of his Majesty's Council of the said Island, and others, his Majesty's Justices of Gaol-Delivery.

[Published by Permission of the Judges.]

ON Thursday the 4th of January, 1753, a Bill of Indictment was found by the Grand Inquest for the Island of St. Christopher, against John Barbot, Gentleman, for the Murder of Matthew Mills, late of the said Island, Esq.

On Friday the 5th of January, 1753, the Court being met, the Prisoner John Barbot was set to the Bar, when the Court proceeded thus:

Clerk of Arraigns. John Barbot, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You stand indicted by the Name of John Barbot, late of the Parish of St. George Basseterre, in the Island of St. Christopher, Gentleman; for that you, not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, on the 19th Day of November, in the 26th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, about the Hour of Five of the Clock in the Morning of the said Day, with Force and Arms, at a certain Place called Frigate-Bay, in the Parish of St. George Basseterre aforesaid, in the Island aforesaid, in and upon one Matthew Mills, Esq. in the Peace of God, and of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, then and there being, feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice aforethought, did make an Assault; and that you the said John Barbot, with a Pistol of the Value of five Shillings, then and there charged and loaded with Gunpowder and leaden Bullets, which said Pistol you the said John Barbot in your right Hand then and there had and held, into and against the aforesaid Matthew Mills, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did shoot off and discharge; and that you the said John Barbot, with leaden Bullets aforesaid, issuing and shot off out of the Pistol aforesaid, then and there, by the Force of the said Gunpowder, the said Matthew Mills, in and upon the right Side of the Body of the said Matthew Mills, and between the two last false Ribs, and near the Back of the said Matthew Mills, then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice aforethought, struck, penetrated, and wounded; and that you the said John Barbot, then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice aforethought, gave to the said Matthew Mills, with the leaden Bullets aforesaid, out of the said Pistol, then and there, by Force of the said Gunpowder, shot off and discharged, in and upon the right Side of the Body of the said Matthew Mills, and between the two last false Ribs, and near the Back of the said Matthew Mills, then and there one mortal Wound of the Breadth of one Inch, and the Depth of nine Inches; of which said mortal Wound the said Matthew Mills at Frigate-Bay aforesaid, in the Parish aforesaid, in the Island aforesaid, instantly died: And so you the said John Barbot, the said Matthew Mills, in Manner and Form aforesaid, at Frigate-Bay aforesaid, in the Parish and Island aforesaid, feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice aforethought, did kill and murder, against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Clerk. of Arr. How sayest thou, John Barbot, art thou guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof thou standest indicted, or not guilty?

Prisoner. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

Pris. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Pris. May it please your Honours, I have a Motion to make, which is, That I may be allowed Counsel on my Defence, not only to Matters of Law, but also to Matters of Fact, and to make my Defence in the fullest Manner. What I ask is no new Thing, it being, as I am informed, usual in England, and having been granted several Times to Prisoners in Cases of Life and Death in the King's-Bench of this Island: Which Mr. Sollicitor-General knows to be so; having been himself concerned in those Cases on behalf of the Crown.

Mr. Sollicitor-General. (John Baker, Esq.) May it please your Honours, I was indeed aware that this Motion would be made by the Prisoner, and in the Manner it has been; and therefore beg Leave to offer to the Court what has occurred to me on the Matter.

It is certain that the Practice in England, 'till a very few Years ago, was, that a Person indicted for a capital Offence was never allowed Counsel on a Plea of Not Guilty, unless to Matter of Law only; and that to be started by the Prisoner himself. And to this, besides the known Practice, the Authorities in Law are so full and plain, that you can look into no Book, which at all treats of this Matter, where this Doctrine does not at once stare you in the Face.

It is very true, that, by the more modern Practice, the Rigour of this Rule hath been something relaxed; but then it is proper to see how far it has been so: And I can venture to affirm, that it has gone no farther than to permit Counsel to examine and cross-examine Witnesses; and never to the giving them Leave to make Observations on the Evidence; or to draw Arguments or Inferences from it to the Point in Issue; or to do any Thing else in the Way of a formal or full Defence. And this, tho' at first a pure Indulgence, yet now seems to be so far grown into a Right, that I believe it would be thought hard to deny it to the Prisoner in the present Case; and I should readily consent to the granting it on behalf of the Crown. But as to the allowing Counsel in the full Extent the Prisoner has moved for it, I am confident no Instance was ever yet seen of the Kind in England; and I fear, for that Reason, your Honours can hardly be thought at Liberty to allow it here.

This is a Trial of great Expectation, and your Honours will be very careful to do what is exactly right; and to leave no Part of your Conduct liable to Censure hereafter.

Whether it be a Hardship to deny full Counsel to Prisoners in capital Cases, I shall not pretend to say: But this is certain, that if it be one, it is of the Law's making, and not of your Honours; and therefore you cannot be blamed for it; tho' perhaps you might be so, for allowing an Indulgence which the Law and the Practice of England do not warrant.

For the Instances alledged by the Prisoner, in the Court of King's-Bench in this Island, they have been but two or three, and of very late Years only. It was no longer ago than the Year 1744, that I myself was refused by that Court to be of Counsel for one James Dixon, who stood indicted for the same Crime that the Prisoner at the Bar now does: So that any Instances to the contrary must have been since that Time; and none in the Case of Murder; tho' I think one or two of other Felonies. But these are too recent to govern the Determination of the Court in the present Case; which must therefore turn on this Question only, how far the permitting Counsel for the Prisoner is in itself right, and agreeable to Law.

I shall but just add, that in Proof of what I have affirmed as to the present Practice in England, I have here two printed Trials of Persons indicted for Murder, the one so late as in the Year 1741, and the other so very late as about ten Months ago: The former is of Captain Goodyer, Commander of one of his Majesty's Ships of War, for the Murder of his Brother Sir John Dinely Goodyer, Bart. and the latter of Miss Blandy, for the Murder of her own Father, tried at Oxford Assizes no longer ago than the Month of March last. The Prisoners were both Persons of some Rank and Fortune in Life, and such as both could well afford the Expence, and would not have wanted Advisers to move for full Counsel, had it been a Thing proper to have been asked or granted. And yet in neither Case is there the least Pretence on the Part of the Prisoner, of being intitled to it, or any Thing like a Motion for it; but (what is yet a stronger Confirmation of what I have alledged, than a mere Silence on the Matter) it is only asked in the Case of Captain Goodyer, to allow Counsel for the Prisoner to examine and cross-examine Witnesses; and even that is insisted on by the Counsel for the Crown, to be a Favour, and not a Right; and it is there granted as such.

The President then put it to the Court for their Opinion, whether or how far the Prisoner ought to be allowed Counsel to make his Defence; when the Court unanimously declared it as their Opinion, that he should be allowed Counsel to speak to Points of Law to be started by himself, and also to examine his own, and cross-examine the Witnesses for the Crown, but no further.

Pris. Then I pray your Honours will please to allow Mr. Frye to be of Counsel for me.

The Court accordingly assigned Mr. Frye of Counsel for the Prisoner.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation for Silence.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! His Majesty's Justices do strictly charge and command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Cryer. Oyez! You good Men, that are impannelled to try between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Prisoner at the Bar, answer to your Names, and save your Fines.

The Jury were called over, and appeared.

Cl. of Arr. You, the Prisoner at the Bar, these Men which were last called, and do now appear, are those who are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon the Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, you must challenge them as they come to the Book to be sworn, before they are sworn: And you shall be heard.

Cl. of Arr. George Weatherill, look upon the Prisoner! You shall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Prisoner at the Bar, whom you shall have in Charge, and a true Verdict give, according to the Evidence: So help you God.

And the same Oath was administered to the rest, (which were sworn) and their Names are as follow:

Prisoner. May it please your Honours, I challenge Mr. Armour for Cause: My Cause of Challenge is this:—Mr. Armour lately at Montserrat was heard to say, that, if he was upon my Jury, he would hang me.

* This Mr. Mills lived some Time at Richmond in Surrey, and married a Daughter and Coheir of Colonel Soulegre: (The other Daughter and Coheir married Stephen Theodore Janssen, Esq. Lord-Mayor of London in 1755.) He went over to St. Christophe, Antigua, &c. to look after his Estates there, and was barbarously murdered.

Mr. President.

Mr. President. Can you prove this Declaration of Mr. Armour's?

Prif. Yes. I pray that Mr. Frye may be ſworn to prove it.

Mr. President. Swear Mr. Frye. (Which was done.)

Mr. Frye. I heard Mr. Armour ſay at Montſerrat, that, if he was to be on Mr. Barbot's Jury, he would condemn him.

Mr. Sollicitor General. This is abundant Cauſe, to be ſure.

Mr. President. Mr. Smith, go on with the Jury.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation,

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez! If any one can inform the King's Juſtices, the King's Sollicitor-General, or this Inqueſt now to be taken, of any Treaſons, Murders, Felonies, or Miſdemeanours, committed or done by the Priſoner at the Bar, let him come forth, and he ſhall be heard, for the Priſoner ſtands now at the Bar upon his Deliverance; and all Perſons that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, or they will forfeit their Recognizances.

Priſ. May it pleaſe your Honours, I humbly move that I may have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Mr. President. Ay, by all Means.

Cl. of Arr. John Barbot, hold up thy Hand! Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Charge; he ſtands indicted by the Name of John Barbot, late of the Pariſh of St. George Baſſeterre, in the Iſland of St. Chriſtopher, Gentleman, for that he not having (as in the Indictment before ſet forth). Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and upon his Arraignment hath pleaded Not Guilty; and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are: Your Charge therefore is, to enquire whether he be guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty. If you find him guilty, you ſhall enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the Time of the Felony committed, or at any Time ſince: If you find him Not Guilty, you ſhall enquire whether he fled for the ſame. If you find that he did fly for the ſame, you ſhall enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him guilty: If you find him Not Guilty, and that he did not fly for the ſame, ſay ſo, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Jury. May it pleaſe your Honours, we pray we may have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Mr. President. Mr. Smith, let the Jury have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Mr. Kerr. May it pleaſe your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel for the King on this Trial: It is an Indictment by which the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands accuſed of the Murder of Matthew Mills, Eſq. The Indictment ſets forth, That the Priſoner at the Bar, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, on the 19th Day of November, in the 26th Year of the Reign of his preſent Majeſty, about the Hour of Five of the Clock in the Morning, with Force and Arms, at a Place called Frigate-Bay, in the Pariſh of St. George Baſſeterre, in this Iſland, in and upon one Matthew Mills, Eſq. in the Peace of God, and our ſaid Lord the King, then and there being, felonioufly, voluntarily, and of his Malice aforethought, did make an Aſſault; and that the Priſoner, with a Piſtol then and there charged with Gunpowder and leaden Bullets, which he in his right Hand then and there had and held, into and againſt the ſaid Matthew Mills, then and there felonioufly, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did ſhoot off and diſcharge; and that the Priſoner, with leaden Bullets iſſuing out of the ſaid Piſtol, by Force of the ſaid Gunpowder, the ſaid Matthew Mills, in and upon the right Side of his Body, and between the two laſt falſe Ribs, and near the Back of the ſaid Matthew Mills, then and there felonioufly, voluntarily, and of his Malice aforethought, ſtruck, penetrated, and wounded; and that the ſaid Priſoner then and there felonioufly, voluntarily, and of his Malice aforethought, gave to the ſaid Matthew Mills, in and upon the Right Side of his Body, between the two laſt falſe Ribs, and near the Back of the ſaid Matthew Mills, one mortal Wound of the Breadth of one Inch, and the Depth of nine Inches; of which ſaid mortal Wound the ſaid Matthew Mills inſtantly died.

To this Accuſation the Priſoner at the Bar hath pleaded Not Guilty; and for Trial hath put himſelf upon you, Gentlemen of the Jury: It is, therefore, the Duty of us, who are of Counſel for the King, to prove this horrid Crime upon the Priſoner to your Satisfaction; and I make no Doubt we ſhall be able to ſupport this Indictment, upon the moſt violent preſumptive Proof that ever appeared on a Trial of this Kind. If this ſhould be the Caſe, I hope the Jury will, under your Honours Direction, find the Priſoner guilty of this Murder. We ſhall proceed to examine the Witneſſes for the King, as ſoon as the Gentlemen who are to follow me have opened to your Honours, and the Jury, the Nature of the Evidence that will be produced on this Occaſion.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

The Priſoner at the Bar, John Barbot, ſtands indicted of no leſs a Crime than that of Murder; the Murder of one Matthew Mills, Eſq. I ſay, of one Matthew Mills; becauſe ſuch is the Stile and Form of the Indictment; and not as ſuppoſing you are, or can be any Strangers to the Name or Character of that unfortunate Gentleman: For who the Deceaſed was, his Rank and Diſtinction in Life would not permit any one in theſe Parts to be ignorant; and as to what he was, if there were any who knew it not in his Life-time, they muſt neceſſarily have learned it from the general Sorrow and Concern, and the many Hearts that are yet bleeding for his Death.

Gentlemen; as to the Murder of which the Priſoner ſtands indicted, it is perhaps the hardeſt to be accounted for, as to its Cauſes and the Motives to it, of any intended, any concerted Event, that has ever fallen out within the Compaſs of your Knowledge and Experience. The two grand and ordinary Motives to the committing of Murder, are Intereſt and Malice. But, for the former of theſe, there does not ſeem to have been the leaſt Proſpect of any Advantage to be reaped by any one whatever, by the Death of the Deceaſed: Though how many, and in how grievous a Degree, will be Sufferers by it, God knows: And for the other Motive, Malice, one would have thought his amiable Character, and moſt unexceptionable Conduct towards every one, muſt have ſecured him againſt the Enmity and Ill-will of any Perſon living; and even ſtill we may venture to affirm, that no good Man was, or could be, his Enemy: Yet that he had an Enemy, (one, at leaſt, if not more; I ſay, that he had, at leaſt, one Enemy) is but too apparent from the Manner and Circumſtances of his Death: And I believe your Conſciences will be abundantly convinced by the Evidence, that that Enemy was the Priſoner at the Bar; the Conſciouſneſs of whoſe Guilt, if that ſhould be the Caſe, muſt be greatly aggravated by this Conſideration, that he has robbed the World of a Man, whoſe Loſs he cannot make good to it in himſelf; and that there is no Probability, that in the Courſe of twenty ſuch Lives as his, he ſhould ever be able to make Amends to the great Number of Perſons whom he has rendered ſo unhappy, and made ſuch Sufferers by it: So diffuſive a Ruin, ſo extenſive a Miſchief has been accompliſhed by a ſingle Stroke of ſo inſignificant a Hand!

Gentlemen, there are few Murders committed, of which it is not with ſome Difficulty and Labour the Authors are found out: For, as the more atrocious the Crime, and conſequently the greater the Puniſhment attending it, ſo the greater the Caution and Secrecy uſed in the committing it, and the Manner and Means of putting it in Execution the more carefully ſtudied and concerted, in order to avoid a Diſcovery, and eſcape the Hand of Juſtice.

And yet, Gentlemen, in moſt Caſes of Murder, (for, indeed, in ſome few Inſtances, Heaven has thought fit to reſerve the whole of Vengeance to itſelf; but, I ſay, in moſt Caſes of Murder) it has pleaſed Providence by ſome Mark or another to point out the guilty Perſon; and all the Care and Foreſight of the cooleſt and cunningeſt Offenders, have not been able to guard againſt ſome Token, ſome unthought-of Circumſtance, which has left a Door open to a Diſcovery, when they imagined they had barred up all Acceſs to it.

Thus, Gentlemen, in the preſent Caſe, though the Priſoner at the Bar flattered himſelf he had ſo effectually laid his Meaſures, as perfectly to ſecure him againſt (not the Knowledge and Diſcovery of his Crime, for that he knew there were thoſe about him who could, and muſt, make publick; but againſt) the Puniſhment which he knew by Law was due to it; by taking care to have none preſent when he committed it, who could be legal Witneſſes againſt him: Yet I believe all his Management and Precautions of that Sort will ſtand him in very little ſtead; ſince, by Evidence unqueſtionably legal, ſo many and evident Tokens of his Guilt will appear; ſuch a Train of Circumſtances will be laid before you of various Kinds, as, when taken and conſidered together, will give ſuch Light and Strength to each other, as to convince the moſt incredulous Perſons, and ſatisfy the moſt ſcrupulous and tender Conſciences, that the Priſoner at the Bar was the Perſon by whoſe Hand the Deceaſed was murdered.

And this, Gentlemen, as it is legal Evidence, ſo it is ſufficient too, if it be ſuch as ſatisfies your Belief, that he committed the Fact. And indeed this is the beſt and only Evidence, which we can hope to meet with in almoſt all Caſes of Murder; where the Caution and Secrecy which I obſerved to be uſed in the committing it, makes a Neceſſity of inveſtigating the Truth by painful Steps, and of tracing and hunting out the Murderer, by following the Track of Circumſtances, as we can find Light enough to diſcern and purſue it. For, if the bare taking care to have no Perſons preſent at the Time of committing the moſt execrable Crimes ſhould avail, in ſpite of the plaineſt and ſtrongeſt Circumſtances pointing out the Criminals, to ſcreen them from public Juſtice, it would hardly ever be poſſible, but by extreme Accident, to convict the moſt flagrant Offenders; and nothing were eaſier than to commit the worſt of Crimes with abſolute Safety and Impunity.

Gentlemen, it were a Thing greatly to be wiſhed, both for your Sakes and the Sake of this Iſland, that it had not been made the Scene of this abominable Act: So ſhould you have been ſaved the diſagreeable Taſk that is now impoſed on you; and the Iſland the Odium, which will perhaps unjuſtly, as well as unfortunately, be thereby brought upon it: I ſay, unjuſtly, becauſe, as you will hear from the Evidence, though the Matter was executed here, it was conceived and concerted elſewhere. The Arrow was indeed thrown in this Iſland; but it was firſt dipped in the Poiſon that was generated in another; where, as you will hear, Gentlemen, the Priſoner at the Bar was exerciſing himſelf in rehearſing this fatal Tragedy, and making himſelf perfect in his Part of it, ſome Days before it was acted.

Gentlemen, as I before told you, the Motive to this unhappy Affair is hard to be accounted for; yet all that can be conceived or imagined to have been a Provocation to it, with the Subſtance of what elſe you will hear in Evidence in Proof of the Indictment, I ſhall relate to you; and though the Provocation you will hear of was the ſlighteſt and ſtrangeſt that was perhaps ever known to the committing an Act of this Kind, yet I believe the Priſoner will find it a difficult Matter to aſſign a ſtronger or a better.

You muſt know, Gentlemen, that on Tueſday the 7th Day of November laſt, there being a public Sale at the Town of Charles-Town, in the Iſland of Nevis, of an Eſtate in that Iſland, commonly called Bridgwater's, the Priſoner at the Bar offered himſelf as a Purchaſer, and accordingly bade for it the Sum of 2510 l. Sterling. The Deceaſed, who was largely intereſted in this Sale, as having a Demand for a conſiderable Part of the Purchaſe-Money, and who, as well as many others, was not only ſurprized to hear the Priſoner bid a Sum of Money ſo far beyond what all the World muſt be ſenſible he was able to make good, but alſo juſtly offended at the Priſoner's Behaviour, which tended to throw every Impediment in the way of the Sale that he could, ſaid, he deſired that there might not be ſo much Cavilling, and that no Boy's-Play might be uſed on the Occaſion; for that this Eſtate had once before been ſold, and the Purchaſe-

Money not paid: Upon which the Priſoner, with great Heat, and a Pertneſs peculiar to him, ſtepped up to the Deceaſed, and in modiſh Phraſe told him, He expected to be treated like a Gentleman. To which the Deceaſed only replied, He ſhould uſe him and every one as ſuch.

And this, Gentlemen, is all the Provocation, which, on all the Recollection and Inquiry that can be made uſe of, it can be found was ever given by the Deceaſed to the Priſoner; ſince there appear not the leaſt Traces of their having long before ſpoken to each other, or had any Intercourſe on any Occaſion at all; and it is almoſt a Certainty, that they never ſpoke to, or ſaw one another afterwards, till the Morning of the Death of the unfortunate Deceaſed: But this, Gentlemen, according to the very high Conceit which the Priſoner had of himſelf and his own Merit, was, it ſeems, ſuch an Indignity, as nothing leſs than the taking away ſo important and valuable a Life as the Deceaſed's could atone for. And of this he was ſo full, and ſo blinded by his Purpoſe, that on the Friday following, the 10th of the ſame November laſt, he declared in the Street of this very Town, That there was a certain Gentleman in this Iſland, whom he would either kill, or be killed by, in leſs than a Fortnight: And indeed in leſs (and very little leſs) than that Time the Deceaſed was killed; and (as I believe you will by and bye be perfectly convinced) by the Priſoner at the Bar. What could induce the Priſoner to make this ſtrange and unneceſſary Declaration of his Intention, is difficult to ſay; nor is it at all ſatisfactorily to be accounted for, but from that Fatality which it has pleaſed Providence ſhall hang upon Guilt, to convince Men, that what he thinks proper ſhall be revealed, it ſhall not be in their Power, with all their Care and Precaution, to keep ſecret. Gentlemen, in purſuance of this Declaration, and in the Interval between that and the 19th of the ſame Month, when (as it is laid in the Indictment) the Deceaſed was killed; the Priſoner took an Opportunity to exerciſe himſelf in firing with Piſtols at a Mark; and, as the Event has proved, became but too apt a Proficient at it; having fatally improved himſelf to ſuch a Perfection in it, as to enable him to accompliſh his Deſign on the Deceaſed; who was found dead of a Wound, apparently given from a Piſtol, between five and ſix of the Clock on Sunday Morning the 19th Day of November laſt; the very Night before which, as you will hear, the Priſoner, in a very haſty Manner, made his laſt Will at a public Tavern in the Town of Charles-Town in Nevis, where he delivered it into the Cuſtody of one who was to have ſome Concern in it. Gentlemen, from theſe Circumſtances and this Behaviour of the Priſoner, previous to the Murder, I believe no Man, for his own private Satisfaction, would look further for the Perſon who committed it, than the Priſoner at the Bar. But from other more numerous, and much ſtronger Circumſtances, which you will likewiſe hear from the Evidence, and which I ſhall firſt open to you, I think all Shadow of Doubt, whether it was the Priſoner who committed it, muſt be entirely taken away. For, Gentlemen, the Night before the committing the Fact, the Priſoner, after having thus executed his laſt Will, and delivered it out of his own Cuſtody, went from the Tavern into the Country with one Dr. James Webbe, at whoſe Houſe he ſlept, or, at leaſt, made Appearance of ſleeping; and accordingly, between Nine and Ten o'Clock, he bade the Doctor and his Family a good Night, and retired to the Chamber allotted him, under Pretence of going to Bed; but in the Morning when the Doctor aroſe at his uſual Hour, he found to his very great—I beg Pardon; I was going to ſay, to his very great Surprize; but That I cannot take upon me to ſay; but however he did find, that the Priſoner was gone from his Houſe; and about Eight or Nine o'Clock in the Morning he ſaw him riding up to his Houſe on his [the Doctor's] own Horſe, and with his own Negro Boy attending him. Where he had been while he had thus withdrawn himſelf, and what he had been doing, you will preſently hear. Gentlemen, about Five o'Clock, or very little after, that ſame Sunday Morning, as one John M'Kenley, who is an Overſeer at the Plantation of Mr. Spooner near Frigate-Bay, was lying on his Bed (for he had riſen, it ſeems, ſome time before, and had been abroad; but was now lying down again; when) a Negro Boy whom he very well knew, called Coomy, who belonged to, and uſually ran with the Deceaſed when he went on Horſe-back, came haſtily into the Chamber, and even leaped on the Bed, and with great Emotion and ſeeming Fright, told M'Kenley, that his Maſter was fighting on the Bay with a Gentleman come from Nevis, and that he feared his Maſter was killed; the Negro then inſtantly went out of the Room, and mounting his Maſter's Horſe, on which he had rode thither, galloped back to the Bay again. M'Kenley was going to ſaddle his Horſe to follow him; but thinking that would take up too much Time, and it not being more than a Quarter of a Mile, or thereabouts, to the Place, he walked away as faſt as he could to the Place, where, when he came, he found Coomy ſupporting his Maſter againſt his Knees; but on coming cloſe to him, he found the unhappy Gentleman was actually dead, tho' ſtill warm; having juſt breathed his laſt. M'Kenley then aſking Coomy, who it was that had killed his Maſter? the Negro anſwered, it was Mr. Barbot, who was come from Nevis, and was then going back again; and added, If you will go to the Sea-ſide, I believe you will ſee him; for I am ſure he cannot be gone far. M'Kenley then ran to the Beach, which was about fifty Yards from the Spot where the Deceaſed lay; but with a riſing Bank between; and there ſaw a Canoe with four Oars and a Paddle, rowing from the Shore towards Nevis, with Somebody dreſſed in white ſitting in the Stern; but by the Perſon's Back being towards him, and from the great Conſternation he was in at the unhappy Event, having himſelf a little while before been a Servant to the Deceaſed, he did not diſtinguiſh who the Perſon was. However, that, Gentlemen, will ſoon be made appear to you; for about Half an Hour after, as the Canoe was in its Way to Nevis, it was met by a Schooner coming from Montſerrat to this Port; the Maſter of which very well knew the Priſoner, and ſaw him ſitting in the Canoe, dreſſed in a white Coat, and having on a laced Hat; he will ſhew you that there was no other Canoe then in Sight, than this one, which he purſued with his Eye, 'till he ſaw it near the Bay at Nevis, called Molton's Bay, where the Priſoner was ſeen to land out of it about Seven of the Clock in the Morning, by Perſons who knew the Canoe, and two of the principal Negroes who rowed it. From thence, Gentlemen, the Priſoner walked up to the Houſe of the Plantation called Bridgwater's, which was about Half a Mile diſtant from the Sea, and there inquiring for Dr. Webbe's Negro-Boy, called Pope, ordered him to ſaddle the Horſe; meaning, as you will hear, the Doctor's Horſe, which, as you will find, the Boy had brought thither about Midnight, under the Pretence of looking for his Maſter, though he knew he was then at Home. From hence, Gentlemen, the Priſoner rode back to Dr. Webbe's, where he had pretended to go to Bed the Night before, and which is about three Miles diſtant from Bridgwater's; and there diſmounting, finiſhed his glorious Expedition, and reſted from his worthy Labours. I muſt not omit, Gentlemen, that a very ſenſible Negro Fellow, belonging to the Canoe, as ſoon as they came back to Nevis, ſeeming greatly dejected and thoughtful, and his Maſter preſſing him to know the Occaſion of it, the Fellow anſwered, he was afraid Mr. Barbot had done ſome Miſchief; which is thus far material, that it was ſaid before the News came from St. Chriſtopher's to that Iſland, of the unhappy Affair.

Gentlemen, as you may perceive by what I have ſaid, and will ſtill more plainly find from the Evidence, the Priſoner at the Bar, whether to ſecure a further Chance for his eſcaping the Puniſhment due to his Crime, or, it may be, deſpairing of other Means or Opportunity to accompliſh his Purpoſe againſt the Deceaſed, took Care to draw him to a Place of Appointment, in order to give the Act he committed the favourable Conſtruction of a Duel. But, in the firſt Place, I believe you are not to be told, that were it really ſo, or were it ever ſo fair a Tranſaction, as it is generally termed, of that Sort, that, in the Law, by which you upon your Oaths are to try the Priſoner, is abſolutely Murder. Should that appear or be believed, how far it might be an Argument for Mercy or Pardon, is the Buſineſs of another Place, and of other Perſons: But the ſerious and ſolemn Buſineſs of this Day, and of you, Gentlemen, is upon your Oaths to ſay, whether you believe, upon the whole Matter, the Priſoner killed the Deceaſed or not. And in the next Place, Gentlemen, I believe you will be too well convinced by the Evidence given, that the Notion and Form of a Duel was only meant as a Cover and a Sanction to the intended Murder; and that the Deceaſed was unqueſtionably killed before he was provided, or could have a Chance of worſting the Priſoner or defending himſelf: For you will find, Gentlemen, that by the Wound given, which was in the Side, and the Courſe it took along his Belly, the Deceaſed could be in no offenſive Poſture; and it is plain his Piſtols neither were, nor had been, loaded. And now, Gentlemen, we ſhall call the Witneſſes to theſe ſeveral Facts which I have mentioned, from whoſe Mouths, and on whoſe Oaths, you will have a Confirmation of what it was my Duty thus to open to you, in order the better to conduct your Attention to the proper and material Parts of the Evidence.

Mr. Horne. May it pleaſe your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

I humbly beg your Honours Indulgence, and, Gentlemen of the Jury, your favourable Attention to my ſpeaking in behalf of the Cown, and in Support of what Mr. Sollicitor-General has opened to you with ſuch Strength and Perſpicuity. And, though I muſt long lament the fatal Deed which brings me before you this Day; yet, it is a Circumſtance of no ſlight Satisfaction to me, when I obſerve the Solemnity of this Aſſembly, this unuſual Concourſe of People from all the Iſlands, ſpeaking the Importance of the Occaſion, and the Expectation of the Public, that my firſt Appearance before your Honours, is, in a Cauſe that requires no extraordinary Ability in the Advocate, no Art to gloſs, or Sophiſtry of Arguments to diſguiſe it; that I am to ſpeak to a Subject that lies level to every Underſtanding; and to a Crime whoſe Malignity is confeſſed by every Heart. And as in the Courſe of this Trial I ſhall not abuſe you, or diſhonour myſelf, in employing any diſhoneſt Artifice; ſo am I as ſteadily reſolved to ſuppreſs no Truth (however offenſive to any Man) that may be neceſſary to detect Guilt, to retrieve Honour from the fantaſtic Notions under which it labours, and to engage your Juſtice to the Community, as well as to an injured Family, in becoming Inſtruments in the Hand of Heaven to puniſh the Guilty, and to determine agreeably to that Denunciation of Vengeance from Heaven, that, whoſo ſheddeth Man's Blood, by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed.

Such is the natural Odium that every Man conceives againſt the Crime with which the Priſoner is charged, ſo much is the common Intereſt of Man affected by Murder, that at the Name of it we take the Alarm, with Impatience and Sympathy we hear and feel the Story, with Ardor we purſue the Murderer, with Eagerneſs apprehend him, with Pleaſure deliver him up to Juſtice, with Satisfaction hear the Sentence, and with Approbation all acknowledge that Blood for Blood is a juſt Reſtitution. Is there a Crime, in the Diſcovery of which the Finger of God has been ſo often held forth? For when Man's Invention has entrenched the Criminal with Artifice behind Artifice, and covered him in a Diſguiſe fitted to cheat the moſt inquiſitive Eye, Heaven has wonderfully revealed the Man of Blood. —That Providence which is attentive to the Fall of a Sparrow, can never be regardleſs of the moſt excellent of his Creation. The firſt Murderer carried about with him a diſtinguiſhed Mark of divine Vengeance; and for the innocent Blood of a Brother, wandered a Vagabond through the World.

Crimes ſo odious in their Nature, which the Laws have puniſhed with Death, are generally contrived with the utmoſt Caution, and perpetrated with the profoundeſt Secrecy; for he who knows that an ignominious Death muſt be the certain Conſequence of the Diſcovery of his Villainy, will, as the Priſoner has done, employ all his Artifice, and exert his utmoſt Ability, in the Concealment of it; while Innocence acts always in open Day, where the World may be Spectators of its Actions. But, Gentlemen of the Jury, I am perſuaded that the Witneſſes will ſatisfy your Conſciences, that in ſpite of all the artful Preparations that attended the Contrivance, and the ſtudied Precaution and Secrecy that attended the Perpetration of this Crime, that no Man on Earth but the Priſoner at the Bar could be guilty of it; for notwithſtanding his Life depended upon the Concealment of his Crime, and the Knowledge of this kept alive all his Art and Caution when he was retired to himſelf, and was by himſelf concerting his Scheme; yet in Company you will be ſurprized to find his Vanity (ſuch is the fatal, the providential Inconſiſtency of Guilt) throwing him off his Guard, and drawing from him the Diſcovery of his Reſentment, and a Confeſſion of his Intention. You will hear him expreſſing his Malice to the Deceaſed, vowing Vengeance againſt him, and ſetting but a Fortnight's ſhort Period, to a Life, which, from its amiable and uncommon Value, all good Men would have wiſhed to have had protracted to the happieſt old Age.

You will be able, Gentlemen, to trace him almoſt Step by Step thro' his whole Track, and keep him almoſt conſtantly in View, from the firſt opening to the cloſing of this abominable Deed. As Mr. Sollicitor has already opened the Fact and the Evidence of it, it would be impertinent in me to abuſe the Patience of the Court and Jury, by an unneceſſary Repetition of them in all their Circumſtances: And had there been nothing elſe proper to offer to you, Gentlemen of the Jury, upon this Occaſion, I ſhould not riſe, however painful for me to be ſilent on a Subject that has ſo ſenſibly affected me, and muſt ſo long lie heavy at my Heart.

The Counſel for the King will not, Gentlemen, go out of the ordinary Road of Juſtice, and have Recourſe to an unuſual Evidence, even upon ſo extraordinary an Occaſion, when you are inquiring into the Murder of ſo excellent a Man. We ſhall not therefore attempt to produce poſitive Teſtimony [i. e. the Teſtimony of Slaves]: For, though we have ſuch as no Law, either of our Mother-Country, or of theſe Colonies, prohibits; yet good Policy in general, the Ground of all Law, and in particular the Policy of theſe Iſlands, forbids it. Indeed there is no Neceſſity for it, the Evidence of concurring Circumſtances being in the preſent Caſe, as well as many others, more convincing, than the Teſtimony of any one poſitive Witneſs. The Evidence of the Priſoner's Guilt muſt then reſult from Circumſtances, but Circumſtances ſo ſtrong, ſo connected, reflecting ſuch Light upon each other, as will amount to the moſt violent Preſumption, which, Gentlemen, their Honours will inform you, is in Law a full Proof.

And here, Gentlemen of the Jury, as it is impoſſible in ſuch ſmall Communities to avoid hearing the Conjectures and Opinions that are thrown out in all Matters of Moment ſufficient to engage the public Attention; give me Leave to take Notice of two Notions that ſeem to have been artfully given out, and induſtriouſly propagated, on this Occaſion: "That as the Teſtimony of the Slaves, preſent at this melancholy Action, "will not be offered, circumſtantial Evidence can be no Proof; and that "if the Deceaſed thought proper to meet the Priſoner, and was killed in "a fair Duel, the Priſoner ought to be acquitted." Nothing can equal the Weakneſs of theſe Aſſertions, but the Boldneſs with which they have been maintained. For weak as they are, it ſeems they have found very zealous Supporters. How deep, or how extenſive, the Impreſſion and Influence of them may be, I cannot ſay: But as the Tendency of ſuch Notions may be of pernicious Conſequence, it becomes neceſſary to prove that they have no Foundation, either in Law or Reaſon. For it would be to little Purpoſe to aim at eſtabliſhing a Fact upon Circumſtances, if they were not to be regarded; and to as little Purpoſe would it be (admitting the Force of Circumſtances) to prove the Priſoner killed the Deceaſed, if his doing it in what is called a fair Duel, was believed to be a Juſtification.

If, Gentlemen, it be conſidered, that a Witneſs may be bribed, and the Bribe pervert and falſify his Teſtimony; that a Witneſs may be concerned in Intereſt, and Intereſt warp him into Partiality; that a Witneſs may be a Partaker in the Guilt, and the Fear of Puniſhment intimidate him into a Suppreſſion of the Truth; if theſe, I ſay, be conſidered, it will be allowed, that ſtrong circumſtantial Evidence is more to be depended upon, than the poſitive Teſtimony of a ſingle Witneſs. For a Series of Circumſtances, which the Wit of Man could never forge, following one the other in Order both as to Time and Place, and, as in the preſent Caſe, coming from different Witneſſes in different Iſlands, where there was no Poſſibility of concerting a Scheme for the Priſoner's Condemnation; ſo many, and ſuch ſtrong Circumſtances pointing him out, from the firſt Projection to the Completion of his Scheme, force a Conviction upon the Mind, and demand Belief. Facts ariſing out of Circumſtances are ſtubborn Things, and will never lie.

Hence it is, that in numberleſs Trials Circumſtances alone have determined the Jury. The Caſe of Harriſon and Dr. Clenche, and many others might be mentioned: But I ſhall only obſerve further, that this Kind of Proof is thought ſo ſtrong, that it is ruled particularly in the Caſe of a Baſtard Child, that if it appears there has been an Endeavour to conceal its Death, there needs no Proof that the Child was born alive, or that there were any Signs of Hurt on the Body; but it ſhall be undeniably taken that the Child was born alive, and murdered by the Mother *. So that Circumſtances always have determined, and always will determine, the Jury in Trials, when there is no Poſſibility of producing Eye-Witneſſes of the Fact.

This, Gentlemen, is no lately invented Proof that has but juſt found a Place only in our Law-Books; for I would (if I may preſume to take a Liberty with it) refer you to a Caſe of the greateſt Antiquity, and moſt ſacred Authority, that depended abſolutely upon Circumſtance. You will anticipate me, I am ſure, and immediately perceive, that I allude to the celebrated Judgment of the Man tranſmitted to Poſterity as the wiſeſt of the Creation. No Witneſſes as Aſſiſtants to the Birth, appeared in that Caſe to evince the Reality of the Mother; the Truth of the Fact ſeemed to depend ſolely on the Aſſertion of each intereſted Party. Here was an Act of Juſtice to be done; the Caſe was nice, the Deciſion hard; even Solomon's Wiſdom was at a ſtand, 'till by a happy Thought the alarming Propoſal for deſtroying the Child, produced a Circumſtance that removed the Difficulty. The Tears and Anguiſh of the one revealed the true Mother, and prevailed againſt the Vociferation and obſtinate Perſiſtance of the other.

And indeed, if there was no Ground of Belief, no Evidence on which to determine, but from the direct and poſitive Teſtimony of an Eye-Witneſs; the Mind would be left to fluctuate in perpetual Doubt, and be irreſolute in the moſt intereſting Concerns of Life. If the Proof that ariſes from Circumſtance, from Reaſoning and Induction, be excluded out of our Notion of Evidence, it would prove too much; for how ſhould we be able to judge of the moſt important Points, even of Religion itſelf, either natural or revealed? how ſhould we able to prove the moſt momentous of all Truths, the Exiſtence of the Supreme Being? The ſeveral Parts of the Univerſe are but ſo many Circumſtances of Creation; from whence is deduced the Proof of a Creator. If that abſurd and ſtrange Opinion already mentioned was to prevail; no Crime committed againſt Society would be puniſhed; but ſuch alone as were proved by direct and poſitive Evidence; the Conſequence of which in a little Time would be; that no Crime would meet a Puniſhment at all; when the Criminal had nothing to do but to ſin in ſecret; and ſin ſafely. There would be then an End put to the patient Attention of Courts; and the Offices of Judge and Juror would be entirely uſeleſs.

One Thing more give me Leave to ſubmit to your Conſideration: If this Kind of Evidence were excluded from the Caſe of Duels particularly, which are always carried on with the utmoſt Secrecy and Precaution; Murders of that Sort could be rarely puniſhed. This Conſideration too will grow ſtronger, when you recollect, that if circumſtantial Evidence is not to be admitted, particularly in Duels, what Opportunity, what Encouragement will you give to this romantic, this cruel Practice, in a Country where the Duelliſt's Purpoſe is to act in ſecret, will be aſſiſted by the Intervention of our Slaves, who are incapacitated to be Witneſſes, and who are always at Hand to carry on the dangerous Intercourſe! An unhappy Circumſtance attending our Situation, (if circumſtantial Evidence be rejected) that the moſt atrocious Crimes may be committed with their Aſſiſtance, without the Fear of being convicted on their Evidence: What an Inlet this to Confuſion, and even to the Diſſolution of Government!

Whatſoever, Gentlemen, makes the Truth evident, although it be Circumſtance, is legal Evidence; and that which ſatisfies your Conſcience, convinces your Underſtanding, and induces you to believe the Priſoner guilty, is good Evidence in Law. It may ſeem ſurprizing in another Place that any Pains ſhould be taken to make out what is in itſelf ſo clear; but let Miſtakes be ever ſo unreaſonable, 'tis proper to remove them. Other Arguments upon this Point might be drawn from the Nature of Trials and other Conſiderations; but as that may poſſibly anticipate what may be offered in Reply to the Defence which may be expected from the Priſoner, I ſhall content myſelf with having premiſed thus much by way of Preparation for Evidence that is entirely circumſtantial.

I muſt appeal to you, Gentlemen of the Jury, whether you have not heard it aſſerted with equal Confidence, that if the Deceaſed met the Priſoner on his Challenge, and was fairly killed, the Priſoner ought to be acquitted. That this is not the preſent Caſe, but that the Deceaſed was baſely murdered, before he was prepared either to attack the other or to defend himſelf, you will find, Gentlemen, is to be violently preſumed from the Circumſtances of his unloaded Piſtol, his Cloak and Gloves being found upon him, and, above all, the Situation of his Wound, which the Surgeons will prove to you, from its Entrance and its Direction, could not be received by a Man in the Poſture of Defence.

To the Aſſertors of this ſecond Opinion, as irrational and almoſt as dangerous as the firſt, it will be in vain to prove the Priſoner's Guilt, if the imaginary Notion of Honour is to varniſh the Crime, and diſappoint its Puniſhment. For Argument-ſake then, grant what is ſuppoſed, that the Duel was fair, and ſee how reconcileable this Opinion is to Reaſon, or how juſtifiable by the Laws. Alas! how is the Name of Honour proſtituted! Can Honour be the ſavage Reſolution, the brutal Fierceneſs, of a revengeful Spirit? No, Gentlemen of the Jury, ſearch your own Boſoms, and there you'll find, that true Honour is manifeſted in a ſteady, uniform Train of Actions, attended by Juſtice, and directed by Prudence. Is this the Conduct of the Duelliſt? Will Juſtice ſupport the Duelliſt (and in the preſent Caſe, the Priſoner, if he be found guilty) in robbing the Community of an able and uſeful Member, and in depriving the Poor of a Benefactor? Will it ſupport him in preparing Affliction for the Widow's Heart? in filling the Orphan's Eyes with Tears, and in bringing Sorrow and Misfortune on Friends, and a numerous Train of Dependants? Will Juſtice acquit him for enlarging the Puniſhment beyond the Offence? Will it permit him, for (perhaps) a raſh Word that may admit of Apology, an unadviſed Action that may be retrieved, or an Injury that may be compenſated, to cut off a Man before his Days be half numbered, and for a temporary Fault inflict an endleſs Puniſhment? On the other hand, will Prudence bear him out in riſking an infamous Death, if he ſucceeds in the Duel? But if he falls, will it plead his Pardon at a more aweful Tribunal, for ruſhing into the Preſence of an offended God, with all his Imperfections on his Head? View the Duelliſt in the Light that either Religion or the Law conſiders him, and you'll quickly perceive and acknowledge the Illegality, the Impiety of his Spirit. Man, like the Centinel fixed to his Poſt, who dares not ſtir till he is relieved; Man, I ſay, muſt wait till Death, natural Death, the grand Relief of human Nature, ſhall diſcharge him; nor can he prodigally throw away a Life beſtowed for better Purpoſes. The Giver, the Preſerver of Life muſt be diſpleaſed with him who uſurps a Power to caſt away his own, or take away his Fellow-Creature's. Man is made in the expreſs Image of his Maker. Shall the Duelliſt with Impunity, in the Perſon of his Fellow-Creature, deſtroy that Image, in impious Diſobedience to that Command, which bids us not to kill?

The Laws of his Country too condemn the Duelliſt. The Sages of the Law, in their Books, will tell him, that Perſons convicted barely of ſending a Challenge, have been adjudged to pay † a large Fine, and ſuffer Impriſonment without Bail, to make a public Acknowledgment of their Offence, and to be bound to their good Behaviour. That where Perſons coolly and deliberately engage in a Duel, which cannot but be attended with the apparent Danger of Murder, it is not only an open Defiance of the Laws, but carries with it a direct Contempt of the Juſtice of the Nation, as putting Men under the Neceſſity of righting themſelves. That if two Perſons in ‡ cool Blood meet and fight on a precedent Quarrel, and one of them is killed, the other is guilty of Murder. And this the Law adjudges to be of Malice, and that the Party cannot help himſelf by alledging that he was firſt ſtruck by the Deceaſed; or that he had often declined to meet him, and was prevailed upon to do it by his Importunity; or that it was only his Intent to vindicate his Reputation.

Who then after this will be hardy enough to acquit the Criminal, whom the Laws of God and Man condemn? Notwithſtanding the Law declares that he affronts public Juſtice, who ſnatches the Sword from the Magiſtrate's Hand, and carves out his own Revenge; yet, who ſo loud as the Duelliſt, when he has ſecretly butchered ſome worthy Man, in demanding Juſtice and a fair Trial? Try me, ſays the Priſoner, by the Laws of my Country, and I have nothing to fear. Aſtoniſhing Preſumption! That he ſhould dare to hope for the Protection of thoſe very Laws, which he has juſt before diſobeyed and diſhonoured! That he ſhould inſult the Wiſdom and Juſtice of the Laws of his Country, and ruſh contemptuouſly into the Duel that they forbid, and at the ſame Time claim a Shelter under the Mercy of them, and demand open and poſitive Evidence for a Murder which he has contrived and committed in Darkneſs! What! ſays the Man of Honour, forbid by Laws divine on one Hand, and reſtrained by human Laws on the other, muſt I never draw my Sword, never ſhew my Courage? Yes, draw the one, and exert the other, in the Cauſe of your Country; employ them to guard your Property from a Robber, to defend your Perſon from a Ruffian, your Bed from Diſhonour, your Daughter from Violation, and to ſave your Friend from Aſſaſſins. Theſe are Actions worthy of the Man of Honour.

Duelling ſeems to be an unnatural Graft upon genuine Courage, and the Growth of a barbarous Age. The polite Nations of Greece and Rome knew nothing of it; they reſerved their Bravery for the Enemies of their Country, and then were prodigal of their Blood. Theſe brave People ſet Honour up as a guardian Genius of the Public, to humanize their Paſſions, to preſerve their Truth unblemiſhed, and to teach them to value Life only as uſeful to their Country. The modern Heroes dreſs it up like one of the Dæmons of Superſtition, beſmeared with Blood, and delighting in human Sacrifice.

A Man of Honour, in the modern Senſe, ſignifies no more, than an audacious Man who will fight at all Events: A Man, perhaps, who has been firſt indebted to your Generoſity, by diſhoneſt Artifices has abuſed your Patience, and at laſt attempts your Life for calling in your Debt: A Man, perhaps, who will wound your Peace in ſtaining the Honour of a Wife or Daughter, and afterwards, on your remonſtrating the Wrong, heroically waſh away thoſe Stains in the Father's or Huſband's Blood.

Senſeleſs as this Notion of Honour is, it unhappily has its Advocates among us. But for the Prevalence of ſuch a Notion, how could the amiable Perſon, whoſe Death has made the ſolemn Buſineſs of this Day, be loſt to his Country, his Family and Friends? Would to God that I was a Maſter of Words, and it could be indulged to the Tenderneſs of a Friend to pay a Tribute to his Memory! I might then endeavour to ſet him full before you in the Variety of his Excellence: But as this, perhaps, would be venturing too far, I can only lament that ſuch Virtue had not a longer Date; that this good Man was cut off in the Strength of his Age, ere half his Glaſs was run; when his large Heart was projecting and executing Schemes to relieve Diſtreſs, and by the moſt ſurprizing Acts of Beneficence, vindicating the Bounty of Providence for heaping Wealth upon him.

We ſhall now proceed to call our Evidence.

The other Gentlemen of Counſel for the King, were Mr. Wilſon and Mr. Davis.

Mr. Peter Carew ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mr. Carew, was you at Nevis on the 7th of November laſt?----Carew. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Bridgwater's Eſtate ſold that Day?

Carew. Yes, Sir, it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you preſent at the Sale?---Carew. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Deceaſed there?---Carew. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Priſoner at the Bar there?

Carew. Yes, he was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any Converſation that paſſed between the Priſoner at the Bar and the Deceaſed at the Sale?

Carew. As I went into the Room where the Eſtate was put up to Sale, I heard the Priſoner ſay to the Deceaſed, he expected to be treated like a Gentleman, or, he did not treat him like a Gentleman, or Words to that Effect; which ſeemed to be in Anſwer to ſomething the Deceaſed had ſaid to him, but I did not hear what.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know whether the Priſoner and the Deceaſed had any Converſation after that?

Carew. I cannot tell whether they had or not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were they together at any Time after?

Carew. I really do not know.

Priſ. Pray, what was I doing at the Time that, you ſay, I ſaid this to Mr. Mills?

Carew. I cannot tell what you were doing.

Priſ. Was any body in the Room at that Time?

Carew. Yes, a great many People.

Thomas Mills, Eſq. ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, were you at Nevis when Bridgwater's Eſtate was laſt ſold?---Mills. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you preſent at the Sale?

Mills. Yes, Sir, it was on the 7th of November laſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were the Deceaſed and the Priſoner at the Bar there?

Mills. Yes, they were both there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any Converſation that paſſed between them at the Sale, and what it was?

Mills. I remember very well that Mr. Cottle the Attorney was drawing the Conditions of Sale, and after he had finiſhed them, the Priſoner objected to them; and the Deceaſed ſaid, Mr. Barbot, the Conditions of Sale are very fair; why will you cavil about them? Upon which the Priſoner ſaid, Sir, I expect to be treated like a Gentleman; and the Deceaſed replied, Sir, I ſhall always treat you and all Mankind as ſuch.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you obſerve that the Priſoner ſpoke with Warmth?

Mills. Yes, he ſpoke very warmly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell whether the Deceaſed had any Converſation with the Priſoner at the Bar, at any Time after theſe Words paſſed?

Mills. I cannot tell whether they had or no; for I left them together in the Auction-Room.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know whether the Deceaſed ſaw the Priſoner after the Day of the Sale?

Mills. I cannot poſitively tell; but I have great Reaſon to believe he did not ſee the Priſoner 'till the Morning he was killed; for after the Sale was over, I went with the Deceaſed to Melton's Bay; and on the 9th, which was the ſecond Day after the Sale, we went to St. Chriſtopher's together, and I ſaw him or heard from him every Day after, 'till the 19th that he was killed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know whether the Deceaſed gave the Priſoner at the Bar any Provocation?---Mills. None, to my Knowledge.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had he never any Difference with him at all?

Mills. None, that I know of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you ever any Difference with the Priſoner at the Bar yourſelf?---Mills. Never any.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Priſoner is an Attorney at Law; did he ever do any Buſineſs for you?

Mills. Yes, he has done Buſineſs for me in his Profeſſion.

Priſoner. Yes, I have, and have always been very honeſtly paid for it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any Letters that paſſed between the Priſoner and the Deceaſed?

Mills. No, I do not know of any; I have heard, ſince the Murder, that ſome Letters did paſs between them.

Mr. Frye. Did you hear the Priſoner ſay any Thing to the Deceaſed in a cavilling Way, at the Sale of Bridgwater's Eſtate?

Mills. Yes, he cavilled at the Conditions of Sale, and the Deceaſed imagined he wanted to delay the Sale 'till Sun-ſet, in order to prevent the Eſtate being ſold that Day; and from his Behaviour I imagined ſo too.

Priſ. You ſay I was cavilling; pray, were not the Conditions of the Sale, that One-third of the Purchaſe-Money ſhould be paid down immediately, and the other Two-thirds in a Month, or elſe the firſt Third to be forfeited? And do not you remember I ſaid, the Court-Act did not direct it ſhould be ſo, and that it was very hard to impoſe ſuch Conditions, againſt an Act made to regulate Sales under Executions?

Mills. I do not recollect that.

Priſ. Pray, was not the whole of my Behaviour warm that Day? Did not I ſay ſomething warmly to Mr. Cottle?

Mills. I do not remember that you did.

Mr. Andrew Armour ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Armour, do you recollect any Converſation that paſſed between you and the Priſoner at the Bar, ſome Time before you heard the Report of the Deceaſed being killed?

Armour. I remember ſome Time in the Beginning of November laſt, the Priſoner told me that Mr. Mills had treated him cruelly, and in ſuch a Manner as ought never to be forgiven.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, what Time in November was it?

Armour. I am almoſt certain it was ſome Time between the 3d and the 7th, but I am ſure it was before the 7th; for I went to Montſerrat on the 7th, and did not return to this Iſland 'till after the Murder.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was you when he ſaid this to you?

Armour. I was ſtanding at Mr. Conſtantine's Door.

Priſ. Pray, Sir, was there any Company preſent at that Time?

Armour. No, there had been, but the Company was juſt gone as I came to the Door.

Priſ. Did I expreſs myſelf warmly?

Armour. No, I did not think you did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did not the Priſoner tell you his Reaſon for ſaying this? Did he not tell you in what Manner Mr. Mills had behaved to him, to occaſion his ſaying this of him?

Armour. No, he only ſaid generally, that Mr. Mills had treated him in ſuch a Manner as ought never to be forgiven.

Priſ. Who was in Company, do you ſay?

Armour. Nobody, the Company was juſt gone as I came up.

Priſ. Had I any other Converſation with you about Mr. Mills?

Armour. Not that I remember; I do not recollect any other than what I have already related.

Mr. Preſident. Did the Priſoner ſay which Mills it was that ought never to be forgiven?

Armour. No, Sir, he only ſaid Mr. Mills.

Mr. Preſident. Which Mills did you apprehend it to be?

Armour. I took it to be Mr. Matthew Mills.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, pray take Notice what Mr. Armour ſays. Did you, from the Tenor of the Diſcourſe between you, apprehend it to be Mr. Matthew Mills that the Priſoner meant?

Armour. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr. Juſt. Loſack. Pray, clear up this Point—Mr. Armour, did you then know, or have you known ſince, that, previous to this Declaration of the Priſoner to you, he had any Difference or Quarrel with Mr. Thomas Mills, or Mr. William Mills?

Armour. No, I never heard he had any Difference with either.

Mr. Juſt. Loſack. Did you know he was on good Terms with both thoſe Gentlemen?

Armour. I knew nothing to the contrary.

Priſ. I never had any Difference with either of thoſe Gentlemen.

Mr. Juſt. Loſack. Pray, what Reaſon had you to imagine it was the Deceaſed that the Priſoner meant?

Armour. Becauſe he mentioned Mr. Mills only, without any Chriſtian Name by way of Diſtinction; I concluded from thence it was the Deceaſed that he meant.

Patience Dorſet ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Dorſet, do you know the Priſoner at the Bar?

Dorſet. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long have you known him?

Dorſet. Above a Twelvemonth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Give the Court and the Jury an Account of what you heard him ſay at any Time before you heard the Report of the Deceaſed being killed.

Dorſet. Upon the King's Birth-day Mrs. M'Cabée (the Tavern-Keeper's Wife) ſent to deſire I would come and help her, for they were to provide an Entertainment for the Lieutenant-General and a great deal of Company that Day. Accordingly I went, and as I was going into the Houſe, the Priſoner was ſtanding under the Gallery talking to two Men, and as I was paſſing by, I heard him ſay, There was a certain Gentleman in this Iſland, that within a Fortnight he would either kill or be killed by.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Time of the Day was this?

Dorset. Between Eleven and Twelve in the Forenoon.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear any Guns fire that Day?

Dorset. Yes, I heard a great many.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the Persons the Prisoner was talking to?

Dorset. No, I never saw them, to my Knowledge, before nor since that Time.

Pris. Are you sure it was on the King's Birth-day you heard me say those Words?——Dorset. Yes, I am very sure it was.

Mr. Frye. It is very well: We shall bring Witnesses to prove the Prisoner was at Nevis on the King's Birth-day.

Doctor James Webbe sworn.

Mr. Horne. Doctor Webbe, do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

Webbe. Before I answer any Questions, I pray the Court will favour me with a Word. I am brought down from Nevis, where I live, as an Evidence on this Trial, and I desire the Protection of this Court from any Arrests that may be issued against me. I am a Stranger in this Island, and it would be impossible for me, if I was arrested, to find Security. Another Thing too, I am afraid of being assassinated.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is not the Country of Assassins; they come from elsewhere.

Mr. President. What Reason have you to apprehend being assassinated?

Webbe. Sir, I have been told there is an Intention to assassinate me.

Mr. President. Who has told you so?

Webbe. I have heard it commonly reported, Sir.

Mr. President. Can you fix the Intention on any particular Person?

Webbe. No, Sir, but I am afraid of Mr. Mills's Family in general; and I desire Mr. Colhoun will give me Security, that I may go in Safety from Mr. Mills's Family to Nevis.

Mr. Colhoun. May it please your Honours, if Dr. Webbe will swear that he is in Danger of his Life from me, or from any Part of Mr. Mills's Family, I am very willing to give him the Security he asks.

Mr. President. Doctor Webbe, you hear what Mr. Colhoun offers; what say you to it?

Webbe. Sir, I cannot take upon me to swear any more than that I have heard there is an Intention to assassinate me.

Mr. President. It is very strange you should not know from whom you heard so!

Webbe. I did not hear it from any particular Person: I have heard it commonly reported.

Mr. President. Well then, unless you can charge some particular Person, we can take no Notice of it. Surely you would not have us bind over the whole Island!

Webbe. Then, Sir, I desire I may have my Expences paid me since I have been down here.

Mr. President. No, you cannot; for this is a Prosecution at the Suit of the Crown, and in that Case the Witnesses always bear their own Charges. With respect to your being arrested, the Court will protect you from any Arrests during their Sitting. Mr. Solicitor, go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Horne. Do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?---Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. How long have you known him?

Webbe. Between four and five Years.

Mr. Horne. Did you not usually consult and advise with him in your Affairs?—Webbe. I have employed him as an Attorney.

Mr. Horne. Were you present when Bridgwater's Estate was sold last at Nevis?——Webbe. Yes, I was.

Mr. Horne. Did not that Estate belong to you, and was it not sold for a Debt of yours?

Webbe. Yes, it was my Estate, and was sold for a Debt of mine.

Mr. Horne. When was it sold?---Webbe. On the 7th of November last.

Mr. Horne. Were the Prisoner at the Bar and the Deceased present at the Sale?——Webbe. Yes, they were.

Mr. Horne. Did not the Provost-Marshal make Conditions of Sale?

Webbe. Yes, I believe there were Terms of Sale.

Mr. Horne. Were those Conditions read, before the Estate was put up to Sale?—Webbe. I believe they were, but I am not certain.

Mr. Horne. What were the Conditions, pray?

Webbe. I do not remember what they were.

Mr. Horne. Did the Prisoner make any Objections to them?

Webbe. I heard him say, We will be bound by these Conditions, as far as the Law can bind us, and no farther; and that the Marshal had no Right to make any Terms of Sale.

Mr. Horne. Did you hear him make no other Objection? Were there no other Words past?

Webbe. No, only the Deceased said, We will have no School-Boy's Play.

Mr. Horne. What Answer did the Prisoner make to that?

Webbe. I do not know, I did not hear any Answer.

Mr. Horne. Why, were you not present all the Time?

Webbe. No, I was backward and forward.

Mr. Horne. How near was you to the Prisoner, when he said what you have related?

Webbe. About the Distance of the Room off.

Mr. Horne. And did you hear nothing else that passed on the Occasion?

Webbe. No, Sir.

Mr. Horne. How came you so unconcerned, as not to attend to what was going forward?

Webbe. I was so confused I could not mind any thing.

Mr. Horne. What was the Cause of your Confusion?

Webbe. The Estate being sold.

Mr. Horne. Did the Prisoner at your Request purchase that Estate?

Webbe. Yes, he did purchase it at my Request.

Mr. Horne. One would imagine, that, as you were so nearly concerned in the Purchase of the Estate, you would have been more attentive to all that passed.

Webbe. I was walking backward and forward, and getting Mr. Jacob Saunders to sign the Bills for the Purchase-Money.

Mr. Horne. You say you were much confused; pray, did your Confusion proceed from Concern or Resentment?

Webbe. From Concern at having my Estate sold.

Mr. Horne. How long did the Deceased stay at Nevis after the Sale?

Webbe. I do not know; I never saw him after.

Mr. Horne. Did the Prisoner see him after the Sale?

Webbe. I do not know that he did.

Mr. Horne. Did the Prisoner go Home with you after the Sale?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. When was the first Time that you saw him after the Sale?

Webbe. I saw him the next Day.

Mr. Horne. Do you not live in great Intimacy with the Prisoner?

Webbe. Yes, I am intimate with him.

Mr. Horne. Has he not confided in you often?---Webbe. Yes, he has.

Mr. Horne. The next Day after the Sale that you saw the Prisoner, did he not tell you the Conversation that had passed between the Deceased and him at the Sale?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Had you no Conversation at all about the Sale?

Webbe. No, we only talked about the Bills.

Mr. Horne. Did you see the Prisoner the Day after that, on the 9th?

Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. What Conversation had you with him then?

Webbe. I do not remember the Conversation.

Juryman. Had you no Conversation about the Estate that Day?

Webbe. I do not remember we had.

Juryman. It is very strange, that you, who was the Purchaser of the Estate, should not say something of it to the Prisoner, who purchased it for you; or that you should not remember what he said to you about it!

Webbe. We had frequent Conversations about the Estate, but I do not remember the Particulars of them.

Mr. Horne. Did you make no Inquiry about the Event of the Sale?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did you never hear any Complaint from the Prisoner of his having been ill-treated at the Sale?—Webbe. Not that I remember.

Mr. Horne. Try to recollect: I am sure, Sir, your Memory will serve you on this Occasion, if you please. Did you never hear the Prisoner mention any thing of Satisfaction, or Ill-treatment?

Webbe. Never.

Mr. Horne. Did you never hear him express any Dissatisfaction at the Conditions of Sale?

Webbe. I heard him say they were contrary to Law.

Mr. Horne. Did he not complain of the Hardship of them?

Webbe. I do not remember that he did.

Mr. Horne. Did you yourself complain of the Conditions?

Webbe. I said I thought them hard too, and I advised him not to sign them.

Mr. President. You said in the Beginning of your Evidence, that you knew not what the Conditions of Sale were, and now you say you advised the Prisoner not to sign them, because you thought them hard; surely you must have known what the Conditions were, or you could not have given him such Advice. This is strangely inconnected indeed!

Webbe. I advised him not to sign any Conditions at all.

Mr. Horne. Do you know whether the Prisoner went to St. Christopher's after the Sale of the Estate?—Webbe. I do not know that he did.

Mr. Horne. Pray, are not you a Guardian to Mrs. Dasent's Daughter?

Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. Did not Mrs. Dasent apply to you, and tell you she thought it improper for the Prisoner to stay at her House, and did not she desire you to speak to the Prisoner not to continue there?

Webbe. Yes, she did apply to me, and I did desire the Prisoner to leave her House, and to come to mine.

Mr. Horne. And did he go to your House?——Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. When did he go there?

Webbe. He came to my House on the 16th of November at Night.

Mr. Horne. How long did he stay there?

Webbe. He stayed there all the next Day.

Mr. Horne. Did he never say any thing to you on the Subject of the Dispute that had happened at the Sale of Bridgwater's Estate?

Webbe. No, he never did.

Mr. Horne. Do not you know, or did not you hear the Prisoner say, he had hired a Canoe from John Gribbe to carry him down to St. Christopher's?

Webbe. No, I never heard him say so, nor I do know that he did.

Mr. Horne. Where was the Prisoner on the 18th of November?

Webbe. On the 18th he went to Mr. Jacob Saunders's, where we dined.

Mr. Horne. Did not you and the Prisoner execute a Bond of Indemnity to Mr. Jacob Saunders that Day?

Webbe. Yes, we executed a Bond to indemnify him for endorsing the Bills for the Purchase-Money of the Estate.

Mr. Horne. Do you know whether the Prisoner sent any Letters to St. Christopher's on the 18th?

Webbe. He told me he had wrote to Dr. William Mills, about Mr. Symmonds's Affair.

Mr. Horne. Did the Prisoner receive any Letters from St. Christopher's that Day?

Webbe. While we were at Mr. Saunders's, the Prisoner's Negro Boy brought him a Packet from St. Christopher's, and the Prisoner shewed me a Letter he had received from Dr. William Mills.

Mr. Horne. Did he shew you no other Letter?——Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Nor tell you he had received any Letter from the Deceased?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did nothing more pass while you were at Saunders's than what you have already related?

Webbe. Nothing more, that I remember.

Mr. Horne. Were you not at O Donnell's Tavern with the Prisoner, the Night before the Murder?

Webbe. Yes, we were that Evening at O Donnell's.

Mr. Horne. Did not you know the Prisoner intended to execute some Paper, or Writing, that Evening?

Webbe. No, I did not.

Mr. Horne. Did not you see the Prisoner that Evening writing a Paper at O Donnell's?

Webbe. Yes, I saw him writing at a Side-Table.

Mr. Horne. What was it he was then writing?—Webbe. I do not know.

Mr. Horne. Do not you know he was then making his Will?

Webbe.

Webbe. No, I do not know whether it was a Will, or what it was.

Mr. Horne. Did not the Priſoner deſire you to procure three Witneſſes to atteſt that Paper? and did not you deſire one Springett not to be out of the Way that Evening?

Webbe. Yes, I believe he did deſire me, and I did ſpeak to Springett not to be out of the Way.

Mr. Horne. Did not you look over the Priſoner while he was writing?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Nor did not you read what he was writing?—Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Nor after he had finiſhed it?——Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. You read no Part of it at all?——Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Was you in the Room all the Time the Priſoner was writing?

Webbe. No, I was in and out.

Mr. Horne. Did not the Priſoner call you frequently while he was writing?——Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. What did he ſay to you at thoſe Times?

Webbe. I remember nothing, but his aſking me if I had got the Witneſſes ready.

Mr. Horne. Did not he whiſper to you?——Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did he ſay nothing elſe to you?

Webbe. No, he only aſked me if the Witneſſes were come.

Mr. Horne. Do you know the Contents of the Paper the Priſoner was writing?——Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did not he ſhew it you while he was writing it?—Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Who were the Witneſſes to it?

Webbe. Mr. O Donnell, Mr. Potts, and Mr. Springett.

Mr. Horne. Did the Priſoner execute it in their Preſence?—Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. Did not you know, or had not you great Reaſon to believe, it was his Will?

Webbe. I do not know it was his Will: It might have been his Will, or a Power of Attorney; for I heard him ſay, he would either make a Will, or give a Power of Attorney to ſecure Mr. Jacob Saunders for indorſing his Bills.

Mr. Horne. How could a Will or a Power of Attorney ſecure Mr. Saunders? Beſides, what Neceſſity was there for either, when the Priſoner had that very Day joined you in a Bond of Indemnity to Mr. Saunders?

Webbe. I do not know, but he ſaid he would do ſo.

Mr Horne. Did not the Priſoner tell you he had made you a Legatee in his Will?——Webbe. No, he did not.

Mr. Horne. What did the Priſoner do with that Paper, when he had executed it?——Webbe. He gave it to me.

Mr. Horne. Did you look into it at the Time he gave it to you?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Was it ſealed or open when he gave it to you?

Webbe. It was folded up, but not ſealed.

Mr. Horne. When the Priſoner delivered it to you, did he pronounce any Words?——Webbe. None that I heard.

Mr. Horne. In whoſe Cuſtody is that Paper now?

Webbe. In mine, it is at Nevis.

Mr. Horne. Was it indorſed?——Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Was it ever recorded?——Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. What did you really take it to be?

Webbe. I thought it was a Power of Attorney to ſecure Jacob Saunders.

Mr. Horne. Did you never read it, nor look into it at all?

Webbe. No, I never did.

Mr. J. Loſack. It is very ſtrange you ſhould not have the leaſt Curioſity to look into a Paper, that, by your own Confeſſion, was ſo relative to your own Concerns! But, upon the Oath you have taken, did the Priſoner ſay any thing to you, and what, at the Time he delivered into your Hands the Paper we are now upon, at the Tavern?

Webbe. No, he ſaid nothing at all to me.

Mr. J. Loſack. Did he not tell you it was his Will?—Webbe. No.

Mr. J. Loſack. Upon your Oath, Dr. Webbe, did he not inform you it was his Will, and that you were a Legatee in it?

Webbe. No, he did not.

Mr. J. Loſack. Is Dr. Webbe's Examination, which was taken at Nevis, in Court?

Cl. of Arr. Yes, Sir.

Mr. J. Loſack. Pleaſe to hand it up here.

Mr. Horne. I pray that Judge Herbert may be called, and the Examination read; for this Gentleman has now contradicted what he poſitively ſwore to before Judge Herbert.

Joſeph Herbert, Eſq; ſworn.

Mr. Horne. Judge Herbert, is not that the Hand-writing of Dr. Webbe ſubſcribed to that Examination? and was not that Examination ſworn to and ſubſcribed by Dr. Webbe before you?

Mr. Herbert. Yes, this Examination was ſubſcribed by Dr. Webbe, and ſworn to before me, and that is my Hand to the Jurat.

Mr. Horne. Was not the Examination read by Dr. Webbe, or read to him, before he ſwore to it?

Mr. Herbert. Yes, the Examination was by my Deſire written by Mr. Cottle the Attorney, and taken from Dr. Webbe's own Lips, and afterwards read by Mr. Cottle to Dr. Webbe before he ſwore to it, or before the Doctor had ſigned it, and he read it himſelf alſo.

Mr. Preſident. Mr. Smith, read Dr. Webbe's Examination.

Cl. of Arr. Nevis, Before the Honourable Joſeph Herbert, Eſq. Chief-Juſtice of his Majeſty's Court of King's Bench and Common-Pleas, in the Iſland of Nevis, and Samuel Clarke and Sommers Payne, Eſqrs. Juſtices of the ſame Bench.

The Examination of James Webbe, of the ſaid Iſland, Surgeon, who being ſworn on the holy Evangeliſts of Almighty God, depoſeth and ſaith,

THAT on Thurſday the 16th Day of this Inſtant, Deponent going to his Houſe, found John Barbot there.

That it was ſome Time in the Evening after Candle-light, when he ſo returned Home; but Deponent knoweth not the Time preciſely, or any particular Hour near it.

That ſaid John Barbot continued at this Deponent's with Deponent till the Saturday following, when they dined at Mr. Jacob Saunders's, and ſtaid there till about Five in the Evening, when Barbot and Deponent both went away from thence to Mr. Edward Paris's, where they made a Stay of about Half an Hour, and thence came to Charles-Town to Mr. O Donnell's Tavern, where they ſtaid about an Hour, and then went directly Home to Deponent's Houſe, where they arrived about Nine o'Clock, as Deponent believes.

That the ſaid Barbot, ſoon after his coming to Deponent's Houſe, declared he was ſleepy, and wiſhed Deponent a good Night, and went to Bed, as Deponent believes; that Deponent being troubled with a Lax, got up in the Night to go to the Neceſſary-houſe, and on paſſing through the Hall for that Purpoſe, ſaid Barbot called to Deponent, and aſked him, what was the Matter? To which Deponent replied, nothing had happened, or was the Matter: Said Barbot then aſked, what it was o'Clock? Deponent told him, he believed it was about One: No other Converſation then paſſed. Deponent did not ſee or hear ſaid Barbot 'till the next Morning, Sunday the 19th Inſtant, when ſaid Barbot came to Deponent's Houſe on Horſeback, upon one of Deponent's own Horſes, between Eight and Nine o'Clock, attended by a Boy-Slave called Nero.

Barbot continued with Deponent 'till they both ſet out for Gingerland Pariſh, in order to dine abroad; and Deponent parted with ſaid Barbot at Mr. Pemberton's Negro-Houſes, when ſaid Barbot took Leave of Deponent, who told him he was going to dine at Deponent's Uncle George Webbe's. That Deponent then went and dined at Mr. Maynard's; from thence he went with Mr. Maynard to Capt. Symmonds's; but whilſt he was at Mr. Maynard's, a Negro Man came to inquire for Deponent, and aſked Deponent, who was then by himſelf in a back Room upon a Bed, if he knew where Mr. Barbot was? Deponent told him, he was at Stony-hill; the Negro then went out, and ſoon afterwards returned, and told Deponent, that there were People come from St. Chriſtopher's after Mr. Barbot, for killing Mr. Mills, or the Gentleman upon Toby Wall's Eſtate; but Deponent does not particularly remember which. The Boy told no other white Perſon in the Family. About Half an Hour after Deponent's hearing this Account from the Boy, Deponent and Mr. Maynard ſet out for Capt. Symmonds's as aforeſaid, where he received a Note from ſaid Barbot, deſiring him, upon the Receipt thereof, to come to the ſaid Barbot directly at Mr. John Herbert's; upon which Deponent went to him immediately, and found him drinking Tea. Barbot ſoon afterwards told Deponent he wanted to ſpeak with him, and they both went out together into the Neceſſary-houſe. Barbot there aſked Deponent, if he had heard any Thing of the killing Mr. Mills; the Deponent told him, Yes, he had heard it at Capt. Symmonds's, who read a Letter which had been received from St. Kitt's about it, and that he (Capt. Symmonds) was gone after him (Barbot) to take him. Barbot replied, He did not care, he ſhould not go out of the Way, for he knew nothing of the Matter. This was the Purport of all the Converſation which paſſed between Deponent and Barbot in the Neceſſary-houſe, 'till the Conſtables appeared to take him. The Deponent never heard, ſaw, knew, or was informed of any Letters or Meſſages that paſſed between the ſaid Barbot and the deceaſed Mr. Mills. That Deponent and ſaid Barbot were one Day at the Widow of James Daſent's Houſe upon Saddle-hill, when ſhe was from Home; when Deponent took up a Caſe of Piſtols that were lying in the Houſe, and ſaid he would try whether he could ſhoot with them, and aſked the ſaid Barbot if he would go; and they accordingly went out and fired ſeveral Shot together at the Head of a Barrel. That Deponent believes, it was about the Time Mrs. Hickman was ſick, and that Deponent believes Mrs. Daſent was then gone to viſit her.

That on the Saturday Evening when the ſaid Barbot came to Mr. O Donnell's Tavern as aforeſaid, he made his Will: That the ſaid O Donnell, and Charles Potts, and John Springett, both in the Deponent's Service, were Witneſſes to the ſame; the Will was delivered to the Deponent that ſame Night: That ſaid Barbot informed Deponent he was a Legatee. That the Road Deponent and Barbot went that ſaid Saturday Night to Deponent's Houſe, was through Willet's Eſtate. That ſaid Barbot was writing at Mr. O Donnell's Houſe that ſame Saturday Night, and Deponent believes it was his Will. That Deponent was preſent when the ſaid Barbot's Will was executed, and does not recollect any Converſation that paſſed between the ſaid O Donnell and Barbot on that Occaſion; nor that, upon the ſaid O Donnell's ſaying to ſaid Barbot, that this (meaning the executing the ſaid Will) looked like a military Settlement of a Man's Affairs, he this Deponent ſaid huſh to the ſaid O Donnell, or made uſe of any other Means to deſire the ſaid O Donnell to keep Silence.

James Webbe.

Sworn this 22d Day of November, 1752, before
Joſeph Herbert.
Samuel Clarke.
Sommers Payne.

Webbe. I do not remember, when I read the Examination, that any Thing was in it about making me a Legatee. I read it in a Hurry.

Mr. Horne. Did the Priſoner give you any Reaſon for making his Will ſo ſuddenly?

Webbe. I do not remember it was his Will; he had talked of going to England, and ſaid he would make his Will.

Mr. J. Loſack. Dr. Webbe, pray raiſe your Voice, the Court does not hear you; and conſidering how much your Evidence ſeems calculated for the Advantage of the Priſoner, it is pity he ſhould loſe any Part of the Benefit of it. Did you ever receive any Letters from the Deceaſed?

Webbe. Yes, I have received a Note or two from him.

Mr. J. Loſack. Then you know his Hand?

Webbe. Yes, I believe I ſhould, if I was to ſee it.

Mr. J. Loſack. Did you never ſee his Hand-writing in any Letters to the Priſoner?——Webbe. No.

Mr. J. Loſack. Nor on the Superſcription of any Letter to the Priſoner?——Webbe. No, I never did.

Mr. Horne. At what o'Clock did you leave O Donnell's Tavern the Evening the Priſoner executed the Paper he delivered to you?

Webbe. Between Seven and Eight in the Evening.

Mr. Horne. Where did you go to?——Webbe. We went Home.

Mr. Horne. Did the Priſoner go Home with you?—Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. Had you no Converſation with the Priſoner relative to the Deceaſed, in your Way Home, or after you got Home?

Webbe. I do not remember any.

Mr. J. Loſack. Had you poſitively no Converſation relative to the Deceaſed?—Webbe. I do not remember we had.

Mr. J. Loſack. Pray, Dr. Webbe, do you remember on what Day you came laſt from Nevis?

Webbe. From Nevis, Sir?

Mr. J. Loſack. Yes, from Nevis.

Webbe. I came from Nevis the Day before Yeſterday.

Mr. J. Loſack. It is very well, Sir; I only wanted to know whether you had Remembrance of any Thing.

Mr. Horne. Did the Priſoner never tell you of any Letter he had received from the Deceaſed?—Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Nor any verbal Meſſage?—Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did he mention to you any Intention he had of going out that Night you came from O Donnell's?—Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Pray, what was the Converſation you had together, after you got Home?

Webbe. I do not recollect what it was, but we had very little Converſation together, for we were reading.

Mr. Horne. How long were you reading?

Webbe. I cannot tell exactly, I believe it was about an Hour.

Mr. Horne. What Book were you reading?

Webbe. James's Dictionary.

Mr. Horne. At what Time did the Priſoner go to Bed?

Webbe. At about Nine o'Clock.

Mr. Horne. Did you ſee him that Night after he went to Bed?

Webbe. No. I did not ſee him till the next Morning; but I was up at about One o'Clock in the Morning, and heard him.

Mr. Horne. How came you up at that Hour?

Webbe. I had a Lax, and was going to the Neceſſary-houſe, and as I was paſſing through the Hall, the Priſoner called to me, and aſked me what o'Clock it was? and I told him it was about One.

Mr. Horne. You ſay you ſaw the Priſoner the next Morning: Was he on Foot, or on Horſeback, when you ſaw him?

Webbe. He was on Horſeback, riding up to the Houſe.

Mr. Horne. Whoſe Horſe was he on?—Webbe. On my Horſe.

Mr. Horne. Had he any Negro with him?

Webbe. Yes, he had my Boy.

Mr. Horne. What is the Boy's Name?—Webbe. Pope.

Mr. Horne. Pray, at what Time do you generally riſe in the Morning?

Webbe Between Seven and Eight generally.

Mr. Horne. At what Time does the Priſoner uſually riſe?

Webbe. He commonly riſes later than that.

Mr. J. Loſack. Did you miſs any of your Horſes that Morning, before the Priſoner came to your Houſe?—Webbe. No, Sir.

Mr. J. Loſack. How many Horſes do you keep?

Webbe. I keep four, Sir.

Mr. J. Loſack. When you get up in a Morning, do you not uſually go to your Stable to ſee to your Horſes?—Webbe. No, I very ſeldom do.

Mr. J. Loſack. Did not you viſit your Stable that Morning, on the 19th of November?—Webbe. No, Sir

Mr. Preſident. Pray, when the Priſoner came to your Houſe that Morning, had he any Piſtols?—Webbe. No, he had none.

Mr. Preſident. Was his Coat wet?—Webbe. I cannot tell.

Mr. Preſident. Were any of his Cloaths wet?

Webbe. I do not know, I did not take Notice that they were.

Mr. J. Loſack. Had you any Converſation with the Priſoner when he came into your Houſe?—Webbe. Yes.

Mr. J. Loſack. What was it?

Webbe. He aſked me, whether I had breakfaſted? I ſaid, I believed not.

Mr. J. Loſack. Why, could not you tell whether you had breakfaſted or not?—Webbe. I meant, that I believe Breakfaſt was not over; for I ſeldom do breakfaſt myſelf.

Mr. J. Loſack. Did you not aſk the Priſoner where he had been?

Webbe. No.

Mr Horne. Did you not aſk him why he took your Horſe and Boy without your Leave?

Webbe. No, for he was always welcome to my Horſe and Boy too; he had my Leave to take them, whenever he wanted them; and he had frequently taken them without firſt acquainting me of it.

Mr. Horne. Where did you imagine the Priſoner had been?

Webbe. I had no Suſpicion of where he had been; I thought he had been wenching.

Mr. Horne. Did the Priſoner ſay nothing to you about one Peter Rowland, a Chriſtian Slave?—Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did he never tell you he had beſpoke a Canoe of that Peter Rowland?—Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did he ſay nothing to you about a Canoe?

Webbe. Nothing at all.

Mr. Horne. Did he not tell you he was to give a Dollar to each of the Oars-Men?—Webbe No, he did not.

Mr. Horne. How does the Priſoner carry his Things generally when he travels?—Webbe. His Boy generally carries them.

Mr. Horne. What is his Boy's Name?—Webbe. Nero.

Mr. Horne. Do you know whether the Priſoner has a Trunk?

Webbe. Yes, he has.

Mr. Horne. What Colour is it of?—Webbe. It is a red Trunk.

Mr. Horne. Where did you ſee the Trunk laſt?

Webbe. The laſt Time I ſaw it was at Mrs. Daſent's.

Mr. Horne. Does he generally carry his Things in that Trunk when he travels?

Webbe. He generally carries them in a red Trunk, I cannot tell whether it is the ſame I ſaw at Mrs. Daſent's.

Mr. Preſident. When the Priſoner came to your Houſe from Mrs. Daſent's on the 16th of November, had he a Trunk with him?

Webbe. Yes, I believe he had.

Mr. Preſident. Was the Priſoner's Boy Nero at your Houſe on the 18th of November at Night?—Webbe. No, I did not ſee him there.

Mr. Preſident. Did you ſee him on the 19th in the Morning?

Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Preſident. Had he the Trunk with him then?

Webbe. Yes, I ſaw him with the Trunk coming up to the Houſe.

Mr. Preſident. Was it before the Priſoner came to your Houſe?

Webbe. It was about the ſame Time.

Mr. Horne. Did you not ſee the Trunk opened; or did you not ſee the Priſoner, or his Boy, take any Piſtols out of it?

Webbe. No, I did not ſee it opened, nor I did not ſee the Priſoner, or his Boy, take any Piſtols out of it.

Mr. Horne. What Cloaths had the Priſoner on, when he came to your Houſe that Morning, on the 19th of November?

Webbe. He had on a whitiſh Coat and a ſilver-laced Hat.

Mr. Horne. What Waiſtcoat had he on?

Webbe. A dark-coloured Waiſtcoat, I think.

Mr. Horne. Did the Priſoner ſhift his Cloaths as ſoon as he came in?

Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. Where did he ſhift them?

Webbe. In one of the Rooms of the Houſe, I cannot tell which.

Mr. Horne. Did you ever ſee the Priſoner fire at a Mark with a Piſtol?

Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. Where was it?—Webbe. At Mrs. Daſent's, at Saddle-hill.

Mr. Horne. On what Occaſion?—Webbe. He fired at my Requeſt.

Mr. Horne. What was your Reaſon for deſiring him to fire the Piſtols?

Webbe. No particular Reaſon, we were talking about Mr. Daſent's fighting Peterſon with thoſe Piſtols.

Mr. Horne. What kind of Piſtols were they the Priſoner fired out of?

Webbe. They were ſilver-mounted, and braſs Barrels.

Mr. Horne. How often did he fire out of them?

Webbe. But that once.

Mr. Horne. I mean, how many Times did the Priſoner fire out of the Piſtols that Day?—Webbe. A good many Times.

Mr. Horne. What Mark did he fire at?—Webbe. At a Barrel-head.

Mr. Horne. On what Day was it?

Webbe. The Sunday before the Deceaſed was killed.

Mr. Horne. Who did the Piſtols belong to?

Webbe. They were a Pair of James Daſent's.

Mr. Horne. Are theſe the Piſtols? (a Pair of Piſtols ſhewn him.)

Webbe. I believe they are.

Mr. Horne. When you were exerciſing the Piſtols, had you any Converſation with the Priſoner about the Deceaſed?—Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. What became of the Piſtols, when you had done exerciſing them?

Webbe. I ordered one of Mrs. Daſent's Boys to clean them.

Mr. Horne. Where were the Piſtols generally kept at Mrs. Daſent's?

Webbe. There was no fixed Place for them: Sometimes they were kept in the Shop, and ſometimes in the Judge's Room on a Beam.

Mr. Horne. When did you hear that Mrs. Daſent miſſed the Piſtols?

Webbe. On Monday, the Day after I heard the Report of the Deceaſed being killed, Mrs. Daſent ſent to me to deſire I would go to her: I went to her accordingly, and ſhe told me ſhe miſſed a Pair of Piſtols, and had been looking for them, but could not find them. She ſeemed frightened, and aſked me, if I knew where they were? I ſaid, I did not, but I would help her to look for them; and I went into the Shop, and ſearched there, but could not find them; from thence I went with her into the Judge's Room, and I ſaid, Let us look under the Bed; and I ſat upon the Bed, and took up the Baſe, and found the Piſtols under the Bed.

Mr. Horne. Why, did you know where they were, that you ſo readily found them?—Webbe. No, I did not know where they were.

Mr. Horne. Were they not in Holſter Caps?

Webbe Yes, lying on a Box upon the Floor: The Caps were mouldy.

Mr. Horne. Do you, or do you not know that the Piſtols were placed there by the Priſoner, or his Boy?

Webbe. I did not know they were in that Place, nor do I know who put them there.

Mr. Horne. Did the Piſtols appear to have been lately made uſe of?

Webbe. I cannot tell, I did not examine them.

Mr. Horne. Were they the ſame Piſtols the Priſoner fired at the Mark with?—Webbe. I believe they were.

Mr. Horne. Did the Priſoner ever make uſe of them, after he fired at the Mark with them?---Webbe. Not to my Knowledge.

Mr. Horne. Did he ever borrow any Piſtols of you?

Webbe. No, he never did.

Mr. Horne. Had he any Piſtols of his own?

Webbe. He had none that I know of.

Mr. Horne. Did he not uſually ride with Piſtols?---Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Do you not know, or have you not great Reaſon to believe, the Priſoner had thoſe Piſtols with him the Morning the Murder was committed?

Webbe. I do not know whether he had them or not.

Mr. Horne. Did not the Priſoner's Boy carry the Piſtols to Mrs. Daſent's, the Morning the Murder was committed?

Webbe. I do not know that he did.

Mr. Horne. Did not you and the Priſoner uſually lie in the Room where the Piſtols were found?---Webbe. We have lain there ſometimes.

Mr. Horne. Did you obſerve the Furniture of the Room the Day you found the Piſtols?---Webbe. No, I did not take Notice of it.

Mr. Horne. Was there a red Trunk in it?

Webbe. Yes, there was a red Trunk.

Mr. Horne. Did it belong to the Priſoner?

Webbe. Yes, I believe it did.

Mr. Horne. Was it the ſame that Nero brought to your Houſe the Morning before?---Webbe. Yes, I believe it was.

Mr. Horne. Did not the Priſoner aſk you, the Night before you heard the the Deceaſed was killed, to lend him your Horſe, or your Boy Pope?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Nor had you no Suſpicion of his going out that Night?

Webbe. None at all; nor I did not know where he had been 'till the next Morning, that Pope told me he had been at Molton's Bay.

Mr. Horne. Did not you miſs Pope that Night?

Webbe. No, I did not miſs him, 'till I ſaw him in the Morning coming up with the Priſoner.

Mr. Horne. Where did you dine on Sunday the 19th of November? and where did the Priſoner dine that Day?

Webbe. The Priſoner dined at my Uncle Webbe's at Stony-hill, and I dined at Mr. Maynard's.

Mr. Horne. Did the Priſoner ſtay at your Houſe all that Morning, from the Time you ſaw him alight, 'till he went to your Uncle's to Dinner?

Webbe. Yes, he did; and I rode with him to the turning off at Mr. Ottley's, where we parted; I went to Mr. Maynard's, and he went to my Uncle's.

Mr. Horne. Had you no Converſation with the Priſoner about the Deceaſed then? Did he not tell you of his having killed the Deceaſed, or having fought a Duel with him that Morning?

Webbe. No, he did not ſay a Word about the Matter.

Mr. Horne. Did not you hear of the Murder while you were at Mr. Maynard's?——Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. By what Means did you hear it?

Webbe. A Negro came to me and told me, that Mr. Barbot had killed Mr. Mills.

Mr. Horne. Whoſe Negro told you this, and who ſent him to tell you? Did not you inquire?

Webbe. I do not know whoſe Negro it was: I did not inquire, and do not know who ſent him.

Mr. Horne. This is extremely odd, that a Negro ſhould come and tell you this News, and you not inquire whom he belonged to, or who ſent him! When you heard this, did you tell the News to Mr. Maynard's Family?

Webbe. I do not know whether I did or not, but I believe I did tell it.

Mr. Horne. Strange, indeed! that upon hearing ſuch News as muſt have ſurprized and concerned every other Man, you ſhould be ſo very indifferent about it, as not to recollect poſitively your telling it to the Family!——Webbe. I believe I told them the News.

Mr. Horne. How long did you ſtay at Mr. Maynard's after hearing the News?——Webbe. Not very long.

Mr. Horne. Where did you go from thence?

Webbe. I went to Mr. John Symmonds's.

Mr. Horne. Who did you find there?

Webbe. Mr. Edward Bridgwater.

Mr. Horne. Did you tell them the News of the Murder, when you went there?—Webbe. No, I did not.

Mr. Horne. Did you not receive a Letter from the Priſoner, while you were at Mr. Symmonds's?—Webbe. Yes, I received a Note from him.

Mr. Horne, What was the Purport of it?

Webbe. It was, as well as I remember, Dear Doctor, I want much to ſee you; on Receipt of this, come immediately to me.

Mr. Horne. Did not Mr. Symmonds, while you were at his Houſe, receive a Letter, giving him an Account of the Murder?

Webbe. Yes, he did.

Mr. Horne. Did he not, upon receiving the News, aſk you, if the Priſoner did not ſleep at your Houſe the Night before?

Webbe. Yes, he did; and I told him that the Priſoner had ſlept at my Houſe the Night before.

Mr. Horne. Did he not aſk you, if you had ſeen the Priſoner that Morning?—Webbe. Yes, I believe he did.

Mr. Horne. What Anſwer did you make him?

Webbe. I do not recollect the Anſwer.

Mr. Horne. Did you, or did you not tell him, you had not ſeen the Priſoner that Day?—Webbe. I do not recollect what I told him.

Mr. Horne. Did not Mr. Symmonds, on hearing the News of the Murder, ſay, he would go and aſſiſt the Poſſe in taking the Priſoner? and did he not immediately order his Horſe, and ſet out for that Purpoſe?

Webbe. Yes, he did ſay he would go and aſſiſt, and did order his Horſe, and I believe did go.

Mr. Horne. Did you make any Offer to aſſiſt in taking the Priſoner, or did you tell Mr. Symmonds where the Priſoner was?

Webbe. No, I did not.

Mr. Horne. Why did you not offer to give your Aſſiſtance? Was it not the Duty of every honeſt Man to aſſiſt in taking up a Murderer? What was your Reaſon for behaving with that Indifference, on a Matter of ſuch Conſequence?

Webbe. It was none of my Buſineſs. I did not like ſuch troubleſome Jobbs.

Mr. Horne. It is very ſtrange you ſhould act thus, when a Gentleman of Mr. Mills's univerſal good Character had loſt his Life, nay, when it was reported he had been murdered! Surely you muſt have had ſome very particular private Reaſons for ſuch a Behaviour!

Webbe. I did not care to meddle in ſuch Matters; I thought it was nothing to me.

Mr. Horne. How long did you ſtay at Mr. Symmonds's, after you received the Letter you mention from the Priſoner?

Webbe. I did not ſtay long; I went immediately to John Herbert's, where I found the Priſoner.

Mr. Horne. Who was with the Priſoner?

Webbe. Nobody but the Family, they were drinking Tea.

Mr. Horne. Where was the Priſoner taken?

Webbe. At Mr. John Herbert's.

Mr. Horne. Was you preſent when he was taken?—Webbe. Yes, I was.

Mr. Horne. How long had you been with the Priſoner before he was taken?

Webbe. Not long.

Mr. Horne. How long?——Webbe. I cannot poſitively ſay.

Mr. Horne. Pray, Sir, recollect how long.

Webbe. When I came in, they were drinking Tea; and the Priſoner took a Turn or two about the Houſe, and then deſired to ſpeak with me, and we went into the Neceſſary-houſe, where he was taken by the Officers of Juſtice.

Mr. Horne. This, Sir, does not anſwer the Queſtion. Pray, Sir, tell the Court and Jury how long (as near as you can recollect) you were with the Priſoner at Mr. John Herbert's, before he was taken.

Webbe. We were in the Neceſſary-houſe, I believe, about five Minutes before he was taken.

Mr. Horne. Pray, what did the Priſoner ſay to you when he took you aſide there?

Webbe. I do not recollect what he ſaid to me.

Mr. Horne. What! not recollect what he ſaid to you, when you had been ſent for by the Priſoner upon a Matter of ſuch Conſequence! You ſay, you had heard the News of the Priſoner's killing the Deceaſed; the Priſoner wrote to deſire you to come immediately to him: You went, you ſay, directly to him, and were in private with him, the Priſoner, your very particular Friend; and, notwithſtanding all this, you cannot recollect what paſſed between you! This is very ſtrange! But pray, Sir, recollect yourſelf, and tell the Converſation.

Webbe. I cannot recollect poſitively what paſſed, for I did not take much Notice of it. I believe he ſaid ſomething of the Report of his having killed Mr. Mills. He aſked me, if I had heard the Report of his having murdered Mr. Mills? I told him, Yes, I had heard it; and he ſaid, he ſhould not fly for it, for he knew nothing of it.

Mr. Horne. Did he, or did he not tell you, he had killed Mr. Mills that Morning?—Webbe. No, he did not.

Mr. Horne. Did no other Converſation paſs between you and the Priſoner at that Time?——Webbe. No other, that I remember.

Mr. Horne. Did you not aſk him whether he had been off Nevis?

Webbe. No, I did not.

Mr. Horne. Did not the Priſoner, after he was taken into Cuſtody, take you aſide in Mr. Herbert's Hall, and ſpeak in private with you?

Webbe. Yes, he did.

Mr. Horne. What did he ſay to you at that Time?

Webbe. He deſired me to ſpeak to my Uncle, George Webbe, to let him have ten Piſtoles.

Mr. Horne. Did nothing more paſs?——Webbe. Nothing more.

Mr. J. Loſack. Was that all he whiſpered to you?

Webbe. Yes, Sir, all.

Mr. J. Loſack. Was it neceſſary to convey ſuch a Requeſt in a Whiſper?

Mr. Horne. How long was you aſide with the Priſoner at that Time?

Webbe. About two or three Minutes.

Mr. Horne. Did he give you any Papers at that Time?

Webbe. No, he did not.

Mr. Horne. Did you ſee the Priſoner while he was in Gaol at Nevis?

Webbe. Yes, I ſaw him once.

Mr. Horne. What Converſation had you with him then?

Webbe. I deſired him to make over Bridgwater's Eſtate to me.

Mr. Horne. What elſe?—Webbe. I do not remember any thing elſe.

Mr. Horne. Had you no other Converſation at all?

Webbe. I do not recollect any thing but that.

Mr. Horne. Do you know whether the Priſoner burnt any Papers while he was in Gaol?---Webbe. I heard Mr. Burnet, the Marſhal, ſay he did.

Mr. Horne. Do not you know it of your own Knowledge?

Webbe. No, I only heard Mr. Burnet ſay ſo.

Mr. Horne. Did not you hear from the Priſoner what thoſe Papers were that he burnt?——Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did the Priſoner ever give you any Paper relative to this Murder?——Webbe. No, he never did.

Mr. Horne. Where was your Boy Pope on the Saturday Night preceding the Murder?——Webbe. At Home.

Mr. Horne. Did you ſend him out on any Errand that Night?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did you ſend any of your Horſes out?---Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. You did not poſitively ſend either your Boy Pope or your Horſe out at all that Night?——Webbe. No, I did not poſitively.

Mr. Horne. Were you ſent for that Night by any of your Patients?

Webbe. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen of the Jury, I beg, for a particular Reaſon, that you would attend to this Part of Dr. Webbe's Evidence. He ſays, that the Night preceding the Murder, he neither ſent out his Boy Pope, nor any of his Horſes; and further, that he himſelf was not ſent for by any of his Patients.

Mr. Horne. Did you give the Priſoner any Dram or Cordial that Night?---Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. Did you make any Compoſition for him?---Webbe. No.

Mr. Horne. When you got up that Night, did you obſerve what Kind of Night it was?---Webbe. Yes, it was a very boiſterous Night.

Mr. Horne. Would you have gone out in ſuch a Night for Pleaſure?

Webbe. No, I ſhould not.

Mr. Horne. Do you know whether Pope was at Bridgwater's Eſtate that Night?---Webbe. I cannot tell whether he was or no.

Mr. Horne. Do you think that, from the Time you ſpoke to the Priſoner that Night, to the Time you ſaw him riding up to your Houſe the next Morning, he could have been at St. Chriſtopher's and back again?

Webbe. Yes, I believe he might.

Mr. Horne. Were you preſent at Mrs. Daſent's, when the Priſoner's Trunk was opened?---Webbe. Yes.

Mr. Horne. What was in it?

Webbe. There was a Coat and Waiſtcoat, and ſome Linen.

Mr. Horne. Was not there a Night-gown?---Webbe. Not that I ſaw.

Mr. Horne. Were the Coat and Waiſtcoat wet?

Webbe. Yes, they were moiſt.

Mr. Horne. What Part of them was moiſt?

Webbe. I cannot tell what particular Part, but they were moiſt.

Mr. Horne. Are theſe the ſame Coat and Waiſtcoat that were found in the Trunk, and is this the Trunk (the Priſoner's Trunk and Cloaths ſhewn him) in which they were found?

Webbe. I believe they are the ſame, and I believe that is the Trunk.

Mr. Horne. Are theſe the ſame Coat and Waiſtcoat the Priſoner had on, when he came to your Houſe on Sunday Morning, the 19th of November laſt?—Webbe. I cannot tell whether they are or not.

Mr. Horne. Is this the Priſoner's Trunk?

Webbe.

Webbe. I do not know.

Mr. Horne. Did you know that the Coat and Waiſtcoat were in the Trunk at your Houſe?

Webbe. No, I knew nothing of the Matter.

Mr. Horne. May it pleaſe your Honours, we have done with this Witneſs.

Mr. Preſident. Mr. Barbot, the King's Counſel have done with this Witneſs, would you aſk him any Queſtions?

Priſoner. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then call Hugh O Donnell. (Who appeared, and was ſworn.)

Mr. O Donnell. Do you keep a Tavern at Nevis?

O Donnell. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember to have heard the Report of the Deceaſed being killed?

O Donnell. Yes, I heard it on Sunday the 19th of November laſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember to have ſeen the Priſoner the Night before you heard the Report?

O Donnell. The Night before I heard the Report, between Seven and Eight o'Clock, Dr. Webbe, and Mr. Barbot the Priſoner at the Bar, rode up to my Houſe. I called to the Priſoner, and gave him a Letter that had been left at my Houſe for him. As ſoon as I gave him the Letter, he attempted to read it by the Light of the Moon; but finding, I ſuppoſe, that he could not, he alit off his Horſe, and came into the Houſe; Dr. Webbe followed him in, and the Priſoner, as ſoon as he came in, aſked for Pen, Ink, and Paper, which was brought him, and he ſat down to write, and continued writing for a conſiderable Time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Dr. Webbe in the Room with the Priſoner while he was writing?

O Donnell. Yes, the Priſoner called to him ſeveral Times, and he went to him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Priſoner ſpeak to him while he was writing?

O Donnell. Yes; but I did not hear what he ſaid, for they ſpoke in a Kind of Whiſper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When the Priſoner called Dr. Webbe to him, did Dr. Webbe look over him?

O Donnell. Yes, he did look over him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did the Priſoner do with the Paper he was writing, when he had finiſhed it?

O Donnell. As ſoon as it was finiſhed, he ſealed it, and the Priſoner and Dr. Webbe went into another Room; and after ſome little Time, Dr. Webbe came out, and deſired Dr. Potts, Mr. Springett, and myſelf, to go in and witneſs a Paper: We went into the Room, where the Priſoner was, and we did ſee him write his Name to the Seal.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee him acknowledge it?

O Donnell. Yes, he put his Thumb on the Seal, and ſpoke ſome Words, but they were hurried over ſo inarticulately, that I did not underſtand them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Tell in what Manner he did it?

O Donnell. When he took his Thumb off the Seal, he ſaid, ſeal and deliver this, and then mumbled over ſome Words (as I ſaid before) ſo very inarticulately, that I did not underſtand them.

Mr. Juſtice Greatheed. Was there any Thing written juſt over the Place where you ſigned?

O Donnell. I believe there was, but he covered that with his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, what did you take that Paper to be?

O Donnell. I took it to be a Will.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why did you think it was a Will?

O Donnell. Becauſe there were three Witneſſes to it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who witneſſed the Paper beſides yourſelf?

O Donnell. Dr. Potts and Mr. Springett were the other Witneſſes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did the Priſoner do with the Paper, after it was ſigned and witneſſed?

O Donnell. He folded it up, and gave it to Dr. Webbe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear him ſay any Thing, when he delivered it to Dr. Webbe?

O Donnell. He did ſay ſomething, but I could not hear diſtinctly what it was, for he ſpoke in a low Voice.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear him pronounce the Words, publiſh or declare?

O Donnell. I did not hear any one Word diſtinctly that he ſaid.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you Reaſon to think, from his Manner of pronouncing the Words, that he intended to conceal them?

O Donnell. No, I did not apprehend that he did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what Manner did he ſpeak the Words?

O Donnell. He ſeemed to ſpeak them indifferently.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Paper ſealed, or only folded up, when he delivered it to Dr. Webbe?

O Donnell. It was folded up, but not ſealed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is it uſual to make Wills, or draw Inſtruments of Writing, at your Tavern?

O Donnell. No, Sir, I do not remember any ſuch Thing being done at my Houſe before.

Mr. Preſident. Would you aſk this Witneſs any Queſtions, Mr. Barbot?

Priſ. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then call Charles Potts. (Who was ſworn.)

Do you remember on what Day it was you heard that the Deceaſed was murdered?

Potts. Yes, I remember it was on Sunday the 19th of November laſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you at Mr. O Donnell's Tavern the Night before you heard the Deceaſed was killed?——Potts. Yes, I was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember what paſſed with regard to your witneſſing any Paper for the Priſoner?

Potts. I was ſitting in the Tavern in the Evening, and ſomebody called me, and told me, I was wanted in the inner Room.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who called you?

Potts. I cannot tell who it was, but ſomebody called me, and told me, I was wanted in the inner Room; and I went in, and the Priſoner deſired me to ſign, as a Witneſs, to an Inſtrument of Writing; and accordingly the Priſoner ſigned his Name to it: Mr. O Donnell ſigned firſt as a Witneſs to it, I ſigned next, and Mr. Springett laſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did not the Priſoner acknowledge that Inſtrument of Writing, when he had ſigned his Name to it?

Potts. Yes, he put his Thumb on the Seal, and took it off again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he ſay when he acknowledged it?

Potts. I do not recollect what he ſaid.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you apprehend that Inſtrument of Writing to be?

Potts. I thought it was ſome Deed to ſecure Jacob Saunders.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why did you think ſo?——Potts. Becauſe I met the Priſoner and Dr. Webbe coming from Mr. Saunders's that Day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that all the Reaſon?——Potts. That is all, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you read the Paper before you ſigned it?

Potts, No, I did not read it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Nor any Part of it?——Potts. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then how are you ſure it was not a Note of Hand that you ſigned?

Potts, I am ſure it was not a Note of Hand, for it was too long.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was too long, the Atteſtation? Did you not ſign juſt under the Atteſtation?

Potts. I did not obſerve the Atteſtation; I had no Suſpicion of its being a Note of Hand: I thought it was a Deed to ſecure Mr. Saunders's Debt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did not the Priſoner cover the Atteſtation with his Hand?

Potts. He did not when I ſigned.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you not hear the Priſoner ſay, he publiſhed that Paper as his Will?——Potts. No, I did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you come to the Tavern by Accident, or did any one deſire you to be there at that Time?

Potts. I came there by Accident; I had been round the Iſland, and called at Mr. O Donnell's to refreſh myſelf with a Mug of Beer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you go after you ſigned as a Witneſs to the Paper?——Potts. I went with Mr. James Brodbelt to his Plantation, and from thence I went to Dr. Webbe's: It was about Ten o'Clock when I got there, and I went to Bed in about an Hour after.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee the Priſoner that Night at Dr. Webbe's?

Potts. No, I did not ſee him from the Time I left Mr. O Donnell's, till about Nine o'Clock next Morning I ſaw him come into the Yard on Horſe-back, upon Dr. Webbe's Horſe, Kent.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ever hear of any Reſentment the Priſoner had againſt the Deceaſed?——Potts. None in the World: On the contrary, I have always heard him expreſs great Reſpect for the Deceaſed.

Priſ. Mr. Potts, you ſaw me ſome Days before this Accident happened, did you ever hear me expreſs any Reſentment againſt Mr. Mills?

Potts. Never; I never did indeed.

Priſ. Have you not often heard me ſpeak of him in the moſt reſpectful Terms, and ſuch as ſhewed I had a great Eſteem for him?

Potts. I have indeed very often; and I never heard you ſay any Thing of him that looked like Malice or Reſentment.

Thomas Hobſon ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember hearing the Report of the Deceaſed being killed?——Hobſon. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember when it was that you heard it?

Hobſon. It was on Sunday the 19th of November laſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where do you live?

Hobſon. I live on Bridgwater's Eſtate at Nevis.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray inform the Court and the Jury of what you know concerning a Horſe and Boy coming to your Houſe, the Night before you heard the Deceaſed was killed.

Hobſon. On Saturday Night, the Night before I heard the Deceaſed was killed, Dr. Webbe's Boy Pope came to the Houſe where I live with Dr. Webbe's Horſe, and knocked at the Door, and called me: It was about Midnight. I got up, and opened the Door, and ſaw it was Pope. He was wet. I aſked him, where he had been; he told me, he had been round the Iſland looking for his Maſter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Horſe wet?—Hobſon. Yes, the Horſe was wet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Horſe and Boy ſtay at your Houſe all Night?

Hobſon. Yes, Sir, he put the Horſe in the Stable, and ſtaid there all Night; and about Eight o'Clock next Morning, I ſaw a little Man, in a whitiſh Coat, and a ſilver-laced Hat, coming up. As ſoon as he came up to the Steps, he aſked for Pope. Pope went to him, and he bade him ſaddle the Horſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did not he aſk firſt, if there was a Horſe there?

Hobſon. No, the Minute he came to the Steps, he called for Pope, and bade him ſaddle the Horſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he ſeem to expect a Horſe there?

Hobſon. Yes, I believe he did, for he bade Pope ſaddle the Horſe, without aſking whether there was any Horſe there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, look at the Priſoner. Was the Perſon you ſaw that Morning, that bade Pope ſaddle the Horſe, like the Priſoner?

Hobſon. Yes, it was that very Man.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You are ſure it was the Priſoner?

Hobſon. Yes, I am ſure it was him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. After he ordered Pope to ſaddle the Horſe, what did he do then?——Hobſon. As ſoon as the Horſe was ſaddled, he aſked Pope which Road he ſhould take; and Pope ſhewed him the higheſt Way to Pinney's, where Dr. Webbe lives, and he got on Horſeback, and rode away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Priſoner come up from the Bay the Morning you ſaw him?——Hobſon. I believe he did; he came from that Way.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you take Notice whether his Cloaths were wet?

Hobſon. I obſerved his Shoes were wet. I cannot tell if the reſt of his Cloaths were wet or not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How high up was he wet?

Hobſon. Only his Shoes, that I ſaw.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had he any Boy with him with a Trunk?

Hobſon. No, I ſaw no Boy with him, nor no Trunk.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have done with this Witneſs.

Mr. Preſident. Would you aſk this Witneſs any Queſtions, Mr. Barbot?

Priſ. No, Sir.

Sarah Hobſon ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where do you live?

Hobſon. I live on Bridgwater's Eſtate at Nevis.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember hearing the Report of the Deceaſed being killed?——Hobſon. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And when it was?

Hobſon. Yes, it was on Sunday the 19th of November laſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, give the Court and the Jury an Account of what you know of a Horſe and Boy coming to your Houſe, the Night before you heard of the Report of the Murder.

Hobſon. The Night before I heard the Report of the Murder, I heard a knocking at the Door about Midnight, and I called to my Brother, and aſked him what it was. He told me, he believed it was the Negroes cutting Wood in the Garden; but I knew it could not be that, for the Garden was too far off to have heard, if it had been ſo. My Brother immediately got up and opened the Door, and found it was Dr. Webbe's Pope with his Horſe. My Brother aſked him, where he had been? He ſaid, he had been round the Iſland looking for his Maſter. I did not ſee Pope, but I heard this as I was in the Chamber; and, about Eight o'Clock the next Morning, as I was ſtanding at the Door, I ſaw a little Gentleman coming up to the Houſe. As ſoon as I ſaw him, I went into the Chamber, and looked through the Window at him; and as ſoon as he came up to the Steps, he called for Pope. Pope went to him, and he ordered him to ſaddle the Horſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen of the Jury, you obſerve both theſe Evidences ſay the Boy Pope declared, when he came to Bridgwater's, that he was looking for his Maſter; and yet, as I deſired you to take Notice in the Courſe of Dr. Webbe's Evidence, the Doctor himſelf declared, he neither ſent out this Boy, nor any of his Horſes, that Night. What! did he bid Pope ſaddle the Horſe, before he knew whether there was a Horſe there or no?

Hobſon. Yes, the Moment he came to the Steps, he called for Pope, and bade him ſaddle the Horſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he ſpeak as if he expected to find a Horſe there?

Hobſon. I believe he did, by bidding Pope ſaddle the Horſe the Minute he came to the Steps.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, how was he dreſſed?

Hobſon. He had on a whitiſh Coat, a ſilver-laced Hat, and a pig-tail Wig.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look at the Priſoner. Pray, was the Perſon, you ſaw that Morning, like him?---Hobſon. Yes, that is the very Man.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You are ſure it was the Priſoner?

Hobſon. Yes, I am ſure it was him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he do, after he had ordered Pope to ſaddle the Horſe?

Hobſon. As ſoon as the Horſe was ſaddled, he aſked Pope which Road he ſhould take, and Pope ſhewed him the higheſt Way to Pinney's, where Dr. Webbe lives, and he got on Horſeback, and rode away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know where the Priſoner came from, when he came up to your Houſe?

Hobſon. I believe he came from the Bay, for he came from that Way.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were his Cloaths wet?---Hobſon. I did not take Notice that his Cloaths were wet, but his Shoes were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How high up was he wet?

Hobſon. I only obſerved that his Shoes were wet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had he any Boy with him with a Trunk?

Hobſon. No, he had Nobody at all with him, that I ſaw, nor no Trunk.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have done with this Evidence.

John M'Kenley ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. M'Kenley, where do you live?

M'Kenley. I live upon Mr. Spooner's Eſtate at Frigate-Bay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray inform the Court and the Jury of what you know concerning the Death of the Deceaſed.

M'Kenley. On Sunday Morning the 19th of November laſt, I got up at about Four o'Clock, and went out to give ſome Orders in the Plantation, and returned in about a Quarter of an Hour. As ſoon as I came in, I lay down upon my Bed; and preſently after a Negro-Boy ruſhed into my Chamber, and threw himſelf upon the Bed where I was lying, and cried out, O Lord, Maſter, make Haſte and come down, for my Maſter is fighting with Sword and Piſtols, with a Gentleman that is come from Nevis. I immediately got up, and aſked him, who was his Maſter? He anſwered me, Mr. Matthew Mills. I then looked hard at the Boy, and knew him to be Coomy, that always ran with the Deceaſed. The Boy immediately got upon his Maſter's Horſe, (for he had rode up) and galloped down as faſt as he could, and I followed him on Foot, for I thought I ſhould get down to the Bay ſooner, than if I ſtayed to have my Horſe ſaddled. When I came down to the Place juſt by the Starting-Poſt, I found Coomy ſupporting the Deceaſed between his Legs, and the Deceaſed's Head leaning on Coomy's Breaſt. I ran immediately up to him, and aſked him who had uſed him ſo, but he made me no Anſwer. I took hold of his Hand at the ſame Time, and he had no Pulſe. I found then that he was ſtone-dead, but ſtill warm, and was but juſt expired. I then aſked Coomy, who it was that had killed his Maſter; he told me it was Mr. Barbot, and that if I would go down to the Bay, I might ſee him, for that he was juſt gone off in a Canoe.

Priſ. Gentlemen of the Jury, you will pleaſe to obſerve, that what Mr. M'Kenley tells you of Coomy's Declaration, is no Evidence at all. Coomy himſelf cannot be an Evidence at any Rate, much leſs can what he only told another be Evidence.

Mr. Frye. Gentlemen, this is but hearſay Evidence, which I appeal to the Bench is no Evidence in any Caſe, much leſs where a Man's Life is concerned.

M'Kenley. I immediately ran down to the Sea-ſide, and ſaw a Canoe with four Oars and a Paddle, making very faſt from the Shore.

Mr. Sol. Gen. At what Diſtance was the Canoe from the Shore, when you firſt ſaw it?---M'Kenley. It was about fifty Yards off.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Could you diſtinguiſh the Perſons in the Canoe?

M'Kenley. No, I could not diſtinguiſh who they were. I ſaw ſomebody in white ſitting in the Stern of the Canoe, but I could not tell who it was. I was in ſo much Confuſion, that I did not take as much Notice as I might have done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Cloaths had the Deceaſed on?

M'Kenley. He had on his great Coat and his Gloves.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Kind of Gloves?---M'Kenley. I really cannot tell what Kind of Gloves; they were of a browniſh Colour.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were they Buff Gloves?

M'Kenley. No, I think they were not Buff; but I cannot poſitively ſay what Kind of Gloves they were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Situation were the Deceaſed's Piſtols in?

M'Kenley. His Piſtols were in the Holſters on his Horſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you examine his Piſtols?—M'Kenley. No, I did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was his Sword drawn?

M'Kenley. No, his Sword was lying on the Ground at ſome Diſtance from him in the Scabbard, and the Belt wrapt round the Hilt.

Mr. J. Loſack. What Time do you think it would take to go in a Canoe from Frigate-Bay to the Salt-Ponds?

M'Kenley. I cannot tell; but the Canoe was rowing very hard from the Shore.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long do you think it would take? You may gueſs pretty near the Time.

M'Ken. I believe it might take about Half an Hour.

Priſ. Was the Perſon you ſaw in white, ſitting in the Stern of the Canoe, a white Man or a Negro?

M'Kenley. I cannot tell whether it was a white Man or a Negro.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call William Johnſon. (Who appeared.)

Priſ. May it pleaſe your Honours, I humbly beg Leave to oppoſe Johnſon's being ſworn.

Mr. Preſident. Let us hear your Objections to him.

Priſ. He is an infamous Perſon.

Mr. Frye. He is ſo, for I ſaw him publickly whipt at Montſerrat for Petty Larceny.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Honours, if the Priſoner would invalidate the Evidence of Johnſon, on the Score of what Mr. Frye alledges, it is neceſſary that he produce the Record of his Conviction. Let him produce the Record.

Mr. Frye. I knew nothing of this Man's being produced as a Witneſs till the Day before Yeſterday; otherwiſe I could have had the Record, or an atteſted Copy of it now. But I humbly apprehend I may be admitted to produce Witneſſes to prove that he was publickly whipt for Petty Larceny, for ſtealing a Pair of ſilver Shoe-buckles. He is rendered an infamous Man, and ought not to be admitted as a Witneſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I am ſurprized to hear a Gentleman of Mr. Frye's Standing and Experience in the Law, offer a Thing of this Kind, when he muſt know, that nothing but the Record of this Man's Conviction, or an atteſted Copy of it, can diſable him to be a Witneſs. It is abſolutely illegal, Sir, to offer to prove the Fact Mr. Frye ſpeaks of by Witneſſes, who, he ſays, ſaw Johnſon puniſhed; or by any other Method, than that which I have mentioned.

Mr. Frye. Surely we ſhall be allowed to examine Witneſſes to the Character of this Man.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Yes, to his general Character you may be allowed to give Evidence, but not to any particular Part of it; and that only to diſcredit his Evidence, after he has given it: But no Evidence of that Sort can diſable him from being a Witneſs at all.

Mr. Frye. I did ſee him publickly whipt, and I know him to be an infamous Perſon, and would not regard his Oath of a Farthing.

Mr. Horne. May it pleaſe your Honours, I humbly beg that Mr. Frye be not allowed to ſpeak in this Manner of the Witneſs. If he had intended to object to this Man, he ought to have done it legally; he knew the Method the Law had preſcribed, and ought to have purſued it; and I hope your Honours will not allow him to diſcredit the Witneſs, by throwing out Things he cannot legally ſupport. It is done with a Deſign to influence the Jury. If Mr. Frye can produce any Evidence to his general Character, he has been told he may do ſo; but that in its proper Place, and not to prevent his giving his Evidence, or before he has given it.

Mr. Frye. I will produce Witneſſes to his Character; but it is ſtrange I ſha'n't be allowed to prove that Fact by viva voce Witneſſes!

Mr. Horne. You are not to be allowed that, Mr. Frye; you know it is illegal; and I am ſurprized a Gentleman of your Knowledge in the Law, ſhould inſiſt on a Thing of this Kind.

Mr. Frye. Go on then, Sir, I will by and bye produce Witneſſes to this Man's Character.

Mr. Preſident. Swear Johnſon. (Which was done.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you come to this Iſland at any Time in or about the Month of November laſt?

Johnſon. Yes, on Sunday the 19th of November.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray inform the Court and the Jury, whether you ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar on Sunday the 19th of November laſt, and where it was you ſaw him?

Johnſon. I left Montſerrat on Saturday the 18th of November laſt, and came to an Anchor at the Salt-Ponds at about Two o'Clock the next Morning, and at about Four I put out of the Salt-Ponds; and in about two Hours after, a Canoe with four Oars and a Sail paſſed by me. The Priſoner was in the Canoe, he had on a white Coat and a laced Hat, and a dark-coloured Waiſtcoat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the Priſoner?---Johnſon. Yes, I have ſeen him ſeveral Times at Nevis, and once at Montſerrat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Could you ſee, from the Place where you were when you met the Canoe, all the Way between Frigate-Bay and Nevis?

Johnſon. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And was there any other Canoe in the Channel?

Johnſon. No, there was none but that which the Priſoner was in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. At what Diſtance was the Canoe from you, when it paſſed by?---Johnſon. It was about forty or fifty Yards off.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you think it came from?---Johnſon. It ſeemed coming from Frigate-Bay, and was ſtanding for Nevis.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you ſure the Priſoner at the Bar was the Perſon you ſaw in the Canoe?—Johnſon. Yes, I am ſure he was the Perſon.

Mr. Frye. It is very odd you ſhould now be ſo poſitive it was the Priſoner, when you could not poſitively ſwear to him the very Day of the Murder, when you were examined before the Coroner's Inqueſt. We ſhall produce a Witneſs by and bye to prove that you were not then ſo poſitive.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Since this has been thrown out, I beg Leave to aſk the Witneſs another Queſtion. Pray, did you ſee the Priſoner at any Time between your Examination before the Coroner, and this Day?

Johnſon. Yes, I ſaw him in Gaol; and when I ſaw him there, I was ſatisfied he was the Man that I had ſeen in the Canoe the Morning I was coming from the Salt-Ponds.

Mr. Sol. Gen. However, to make this Matter ſtill plainer, we ſhall call a Gentleman of Character, who will inform the Court and Jury, that this this Witness declared his seeing the Prisoner at the Time and Place he has now sworn he did, before he had received any Intimation, or had it at all suggested to him, that the Prisoner was then there. Call Thomas Wilson, Esq.

Thomas Wilson, Esq. sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Wilson, will you please to give the Court and the Jury an Account of your seeing Johnson on the 19th of November last, and what passed between you?

Wilson. On Sunday the 19th of November last, in the Morning, on hearing that the Deceased was killed, I went down to Mr. Colhoun's, to inquire further of the Matter. I staid there about half an Hour, and at my Return Home I found this Witness, Johnson, waiting for me with a Letter, which he had just brought from Mr. Misset of Montserrat. He told me, that Mr. Misset had hired him on Purpose to bring me that Letter, and that if I did not dispatch him by Twelve o'Clock, Mr. Misset was to pay him so much an Hour after that Time. I then said to him, There has been Murder committed here. He asked me, What Murder? I told him, that a Gentleman of this Island, one Mr. Mills, was killed, and it was supposed by Mr. Barbot. Barbot! said he, why I met him going in a Canoe to Nevis this Morning. Do you know him then? said I. Yes, said he, I have known him above eighteen Months. I thought this so material a Circumstance, that I immediately acquainted Mr. Colhoun of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Court and Jury will take especial Notice of Mr. Wilson's Evidence, because it will stand for an Answer to the Objection that will be made to Johnson's Evidence, from what they insinuate of the Badness of his Character; which in this Case must be wholly out of the Question, seeing the first Information he gave was before there is the least Probability he could have had it suggested to him.

Jasper Thomas sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray inform the Court and the Jury, whether you saw the Prisoner on the 19th of November last, and where you saw him.

Thomas. On Sunday Morning, the 19th of November last, I saw a Canoe land under the Manchioneal Trees, just under Lowland-Church: it was Mr. Cribbe's Canoe: Mr. Hulburd's Peter and Mr. Deverade's Joe were in it, and the Prisoner jumped out of the Canoe the Instant it struck the Shore. He had on a silver-laced Hat, and a whitish Coat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Time in the Morning was it that he landed?

Thomas. It was between Six and Seven in the Morning.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did any body come out of the Canoe with the Prisoner?

Thomas. There was a little yellow Negro Boy, with a little red Trunk on his Head, that jumped out of the Canoe at the same Time that the Prisoner did, and went towards the Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see the Canoe at any Distance before it landed?

Thomas. I saw it above fifteen hundred Yards off before it landed. It was under Sail, and they did not strike Sail 'till the Canoe struck the Ground.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you think the Canoe came from?

Thomas. It seemed to me to be coming from the Salt-Ponds.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you sure it was the Prisoner at the Bar you saw land out of the Canoe?

Thomas Yes, I am sure it was him, for I know him very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know where he went to when he landed?

Thomas. No, I cannot tell where he went to.

John Thomas sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember when it was you heard the Deceased was killed?

Thomas. Yes, it was on Sunday the 19th of November last that I heard it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see the Prisoner at the Bar that Day?

Thomas. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then give the Court and the Jury an Account where, and at what Time, you saw him.

Thomas. It was on Sunday Morning, the 19th of November last, the Day that I heard the Deceased was killed. I was with my Father Jasper Thomas, and I saw a Canoe at a Distance under Sail, that seemed to be coming from St. Kitt's; and I said to my Father, I believed there were some St. Kitt's People coming up; and soon after the Canoe came ashore, and Mr. Hulburd's Peter and Mr. Deverade's Joe were in it; and I saw a little Man, very like the Prisoner, jump out of the Canoe, and run up the Bank. He had on a silver-laced Hat and a long-tail Wig, a whitish Coat, and a brownish Waistcoat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it the Prisoner at the Bar that you saw?

Thomas. I do believe it was him, for the Person I saw was very like him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did any body land out of the Canoe besides the Prisoner?

Thomas. There was a little yellowish Negro Boy, with a small red Trunk on his Head, that jumped out of the Canoe at the same Time the Prisoner did, and went towards Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Time in the Morning was it that the Prisoner landed out of the Canoe?

Thomas. It was between Six and Seven in the Morning.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you observe which Way he went after he landed?

Thomas. No, I did not take Notice which Way he went.

William White sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

White. Yes, I know him very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you live at Nevis?

White. No, but I have been working there for above a Twelvemonth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was it you first heard the Report of the Deceased being killed?

White. I heard it on Sunday the 19th of November last.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see the Prisoner that Day?

White. Yes, I was at work at Mr. Woodley's Estate at Nevis that very Morning, and I looked towards the common Road, and saw a little Man that I took for the Prisoner. He was walking up the Road that leads to Bridgwater's Estate.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, does that Road lead to any other Estate or House besides Bridgwater's?

White. Yes, it leads to Mr. Huggins's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see where the Prisoner came from?

White. No, but I believe he came from the Bay.

Mr. Sol Gen. How was he dressed?

White. He had on a laced Hat, and a brown Coat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. A brown Coat? You must be mistaken surely?

White. No, I am not; it was a brown Coat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you see any Coat here in Court that is like it? Look about, and see if you can't find some Coat that resembles it in Colour?

White. It was like this Coat, I think (shewing a brown Coat).

Mr. Sol. Gen. He may be mistaken in the Colour of the Coat. If he swears to the Identity of the Person, it is sufficient. Once more let me ask you on your Oath, Are you sure it was the Prisoner at the Bar that you saw?---White. Yes, I am sure it was him.

Mr. Edward Bridgwater sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Bridgwater, pray inform the Court and the Jury, whether you saw the Prisoner on the 19th of November last, and where you saw him.

Bridgwater. On the 19th of November last, between Nine and Ten in the Morning, I saw the Prisoner riding over Gruff's Gutt, the nearest Way to Dr. Webbe's. He met Jacob Saunders, and they stopt and spoke together, and that gave me an Opportunity of coming pretty near him, and I took Notice that the Prisoner was on a Horse of Dr. Webbe's; it was a sorrel Horse, with a white Face. In the Afternoon of the same Day I went to Mr. John Symmonds's; while I was there, Dr. Webbe came in, and presently after Mr. Symmonds received a Letter, that gave an Account of the Prisoner's having killed the Deceased. As soon as Mr. Symmonds mentioned it, Dr. Webbe said, that the Prisoner had lain at his House the Night before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you perceive any Alteration in Dr. Webbe, on Mr. Symmonds's mentioning what had happened?

Bridgwater. Yes, he changed Countenance, and seemed, I thought, a good deal confused; and Mr. Symmonds asked him, if he had seen the Prisoner that Morning? Dr. Webbe answered, That he had not seen the Prisoner since he went to Bed the Night before at his House; at which I expressed a good deal of Surprize, and said, that I had seen him that Morning riding towards Dr. Webbe's House on a Horse which I was sure belonged to Dr. Webbe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Dr. Webbe make you any Answer to this?

Bridgwater. I do not remember that he did; but in about five or six Minutes after he went away, and said he was going up towards the Mountain.

John Cribbe sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray inform the Court and the Jury, whether the Prisoner hired a Canoe of you, and when it was.

Cribbe. It was the Friday before I heard the Deceased was killed. The Prisoner hired my Canoe to carry some Letters to St. Kitt's, and the Canoe returned the next Day in the Afternoon.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Prisoner hire the Canoe again of you the Day she returned?

Cribbe. No, the Day she returned, the Negroes that belong to her took her to go a-fishing, as I understood; and I did not see them again 'till about Eight o'Clock on Sunday Morning, which was the Day I heard the Deceased was killed. I went to Peter, and asked him, What Luck? for I imagined they had been fishing: He answered me, Poor Luck! and looked very thoughtful and melancholy, and said, he was troubled. I asked him, what was the Matter? He told me, he had been at St. Kitt's with Mr. Barbot, who, he was afraid, had done a great deal of Mischief, for he believed he had killed Mr. Mills.

Pris. Gentlemen of the Jury, pray don't be influenc'd by this Part of the Evidence. This is the same with what M'Kenley swore of Coony's Declaration; but neither one or other of them, as being only hearsay Evidence, and that of Slaves too, ought to affect me.

Mr. Frye. Nay, indeed, the Evidence ought not to have been given: Surely, no Hearsay can be Evidence. Nothing is more indisputable than that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In this Case it is very material Evidence; but of that by and bye: We won't interrupt the Course of Evidence; but observe upon it in a more proper Place. At what o'Clock in the Morning was it that you had this Discourse with Peter?

Cribbe. It was about Ten o'Clock.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you then heard it reported that the Deceased was killed?

Cribbe. No, I had not heard it, 'till Peter told me of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He was the first Person you heard it from?

Cribbe. Yes, he was the first that told me of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will bring a Witness to prove that Peter could not have heard the Report of the Murder at the Time this Witness says he told him of it; for we shall shew that the Person who carried the first News of the Murder to Nevis did not arrive there, 'till at least an Hour after Cribbe had the Conversation he has related with Peter.

Call Thomas Quin (Who was sworn).

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Quin, at what o'Clock did you arrive at Nevis, the Day you were sent up in pursuit of the Prisoner at the Bar?

Quin. It was about Eleven o'Clock, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When you arrived at Nevis, did you report publickly that the Deceased was killed?

Quin. No, I did not say a Word of it to any body but the Gentleman I carried the Letters to from Mr. Colhoun.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it known at Nevis, before you arrived there, that the Deceased was killed?

Quin. No, I am sure it was not, or I should have heard of it. I am sure I was the first that carried the News of it, for I did not stop or stay any where, but went off the Minute Mr. Colhoun gave me the Letters, and made the best of my Way up.

Mrs. Frances Dasent sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Madam, will you please to give the Court and the Jury an Account of what you know concerning the Prisoner's taking away a Case of Pistols from your House?

Dasent. Upon hearing that the Magazine was broke open on Sunday Night, the 19th of November last, I ordered all the Arms in the House to be be ſearched for, to ſee that there were none miſſing; and upon miſſing a Pair of Piſtols, I ordered the Boy to look on the Beam for them, where I had directed him to put them. He looked, and could find but one Pair: I then grew very uneaſy, and ſent to deſire Dr. Webbe to come over to me. He did ſo the next Morning, and I told him I was very uneaſy; that I miſſed a Pair of Piſtols, and aſked him, if he knew where they were? He told me, that he knew nothing of them. I begged of him then to help me to ſearch for them. Accordingly he went into the Shop with me, and ſearched there, but could not find them. From thence we went into the Chamber, and the Doctor looked under the Bed and found the Piſtols.

Mr. Horne. What was it that induced you to look for the Piſtols?

Daſent. Hearing the Magazine was broke open, and the Accident that had happened to Mr. Mills together, made me think of looking for them. I was very uneaſy about it, for I had heard that the Priſoner and Dr. Webbe took down the Piſtols in my Abſence, while I was at my Mother's, to fire out of.

Mr. Horne. Did you ſee a red Trunk belonging to the Priſoner, in the Room where the Piſtols were found?

Daſent. Yes, there was a ſmall red Trunk that belonged to the Priſoner.

Mr. Horne. Did you ever deſire the Priſoner to leave your Houſe?

Daſent. Yes; the Thurſday before this Accident happened, I deſired him to come to my Houſe no more, for ſome prudential Reaſons I had.

Mr. Horne. Did this put an End to his Viſits?

Daſent. Yes, he came to my Houſe no more; but he ſent to borrow a Horſe of me the Day before the Murder, which I refuſed to lend him; nor I knew nothing of his Trunk being at my Houſe 'till the Monday after the Accident, that Judge Herbert came to my Houſe, and demanded the Trunk, and it was opened before him.

Mr. Horne. Were you preſent when the Trunk was opened?

Daſent. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Horne. What was in it, pray?

Daſent. I ſaw nothing in it but a brown Waiſtcoat, and a Pair of black Breeches.

Mr. Horne. Did they belong to the Priſoner?

Daſent. Yes, I believe they did.

Mr. Horne. Is this the Priſoner's Trunk, and are theſe the Cloaths (the Priſoner's Trunk and Cloaths ſhewn her) you ſaw taken out of that Trunk?

Daſent. Yes, I believe they are.

Joſeph Herbert, Eſq. ſworn.

On hearing the Deceaſed was killed by the Priſoner with a Pair of James Daſent's Piſtols, I went, the Day after the Murder, to Mrs. Daſent's, to inquire for them. When I came there, I ſaw a ſmall red Trunk, which being opened, I found a Pair of black Breeches and a brown Waiſtcoat in it, which were wet. I touched the Waiſtcoat with my Tongue, and found it ſalt, from which I concluded it muſt have been wet with Salt-Water. Theſe Piſtols (Piſtols ſhewn him), which Mrs. Daſent had miſſed, were ſhewn to me at the ſame Time; and I was informed by ſome of the Negroes, that they believed the Priſoner's Boy had brought the Piſtols to Mrs. Daſent's privately in his Cloaths.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is this the Trunk, and are theſe the Cloaths, you ſaw at Mrs. Daſent's (the Trunk and Cloaths ſhewn him) the Day after the Murder?---Mr. Herbert. Yes, they are.

Dr. Hamilton and Mr. Edwards ſworn.

Mr. Horne. Dr. Hamilton, you were ſent for, I think, to inſpect the Body of the Deceaſed?

Dr. Ham. Yes, Sir, I was ſent for on Sunday the 19th of laſt November by the Coroner, to view the Body of the Deceaſed. When I came to Mr. Colhoun's, where the Body lay, I found that the Deceaſed had received a Wound on the right Side, which muſt have been given him by a Ball out of ſome Fire-arm.

Mr. Horne. Whereabout on the right Side?

Dr. Ham. I cannot deſcribe it better than thus; by drawing a ſtraight Line directly from the Pap four Inches downwards, and then carrying it four Inches towards the Back. In that Place was the Wound.

Mr. Horne. Sir, will you pleaſe to put your Finger on the Place, as near as you can gueſs, where the Wound was received?

Dr. Ham. It was juſt here (placing his Finger on his own Side).

Mr. Horne. Now, go on, Sir, if you pleaſe.

Dr. Ham. I then, with the Aſſiſtance of my Son, Mr. Edwards, opened the Body, and found that the Ball had entered between the two laſt falſe Ribs, and ſplintered one of them, and had penetrated the Body obliquely from the right to the left Side, and had wounded the fore Part of the Liver on the left Side. I found too, that in paſſing it had wounded a large Blood-veſſel.

Mr. Horne. Do you think the Deceaſed could have received that Wound, if he had been ſtanding in a Poſture of Defence?

Dr. Ham. No, I think he could not; for the Situation of the Wound was ſuch, that had he been in a Poſture of Defence, he could not have received it in that Place: And from the Courſe the Ball took (which was towards the fore Part of the left Side of the Body) it is evident, I think, that the Deceaſed could not have been in a Poſture of Defence.

Mr. Horne. Do you think that that Wound was the Cauſe of his Death?

Dr. Ham. Yes, I am certain it was.

Mr. Horne. Did you find the Ball?

Dr. Ham. No, I ſearched for it, but could not find it. I believe it had fallen into the Abdomen, which was ſo full of Blood, that there was no Poſſibility of finding the Ball, unleſs we had taken out all the Bowels; and it was ſo late, that the Jury, ſatisfied on my Report that the Wound muſt have been given by a Ball diſcharged from ſome Fire-arm, and that it was the Cauſe of the Deceaſed's Death, did not think it neceſſary to look any farther for the Ball.

Mr. Horne. Mr. Edwards, you aſſiſted Dr. Hamilton in opening the Body of the Deceaſed; can you give the Court any farther Information of the Nature of the Wound than what the Doctor has already related?

Edwards. No, Sir, I can ſay no more than what Dr. Hamilton has already related.

Mr. Walter Pringle and Mr. Samuel Baker ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Pringle, Pray give the Court and the Jury an Account of the Situation you found the Deceaſed's Piſtols in the Morning he was killed.

Pringle. On Sunday Morning, the 19th of November laſt, I heard the Deceaſed was killed at Frigate-Bay, and that his Body was brought to Mr. Colhoun's, where I went to ſee it. As ſoon as I came into the Room, I aſked for the Deceaſed's Piſtols, and ſomebody (I really do not recollect who it was) brought them to me. They were a ſmall Pair of ſcrew-barrel Piſtols, with a brown wooden flat Handle (the Piſtols ſhewn him). Theſe are the Piſtols. I unſcrewed one of them, and found a Ball ſticking in the Barrel. I looked into the Chamber, and could find no Powder in it. I ſmelt it, and it did not appear to me by the Smell that it had been lately fired out of. Then I examined the Screws and the Cock very carefully, and could not perceive that any Part of them were the leaſt tinged with Powder. I then unſcrewed the other Piſtol, and examined it in the ſame Manner I had done the firſt; but I found no Ball in it, nor any the leaſt Sign of Powder either in it or about it, except about two Grains, which I imagine had been bruiſed by the Hammer; but I think, if the Piſtols had been fired out of lately, there would have been a Stain of burnt Powder left about the Cock, which always remains after any Fire-arm is diſcharged; and there was no ſuch Stain on either of theſe Piſtols.

After I had done with the Piſtols, I examined the Deceaſed's Cloaths, and found upon the right Flap of his Coat a Stain of dry Powder, and the ſame upon the Inſide of his great Coat, on the right Side.

Baker. I was at Mr. Colhoun's on Sunday the 19th of November laſt, the Morning that the Deceaſed was killed, and upon inquiring for the Deceaſed's Piſtols, they were brought to me. Theſe are the Piſtols: They were half-cocked. I unſcrewed one of them, and examined it very carefully, and there was neither Powder nor Ball in it, nor any where about it, except about two Grains of Powder, which ſeemed to have been bruiſed by the Hammer. I unſcrewed the other, and examined it in the ſame Manner, and found a Ball ſticking in the Barrel, but no Powder at all either in the Chamber, or any where elſe about it, nor there was not the leaſt Stain of burnt Powder either about the Cock, or any where elſe; for I put my little Finger into the Barrel, and there came off upon my Finger a yellowiſh ruſty Dirt; whereas if the Piſtols had been fired out of, there would have remained in the Barrel a black Moiſture, which would have come off on my Finger: From all which Circumſtances I am convinced the Piſtols had not been fired out of. After I had done with the Piſtols, I examined the Deceaſed's Cloaths; and the right Flap of his Coat, and the Inſide of his great Coat, were ſtained with dry Powder, as Mr. Pringle has related.

Mr. Horne. I deſire Judge Herbert may be called again.

Judge Herbert was called, and appeared.

Mr. Horne. Will you pleaſe, Sir, to give the Court and the Jury an Account of what you found in the Pockets of the Deceaſed?

Mr. Herbert. The Morning that the Body of the Deceaſed was brought to Mr. Colhoun's, I was there; and a little while after the Body was laid down, I ſearched the Deceaſed's Pockets, and found in his Breeches Pockets three Bullets.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Honours, we ſhall call no more Witneſſes, unleſs the Priſoner makes it neceſſary by his Defence; but ſhall reſt the Charge here.

Mr. Preſident. Mr. Barbot, now is the Time to make your Defence. The King's Counſel will call no more Witneſſes 'till they hear what you have to ſay.

Priſoner. May it pleaſe your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury,

Now that the Counſel for the Crown have gone through their Evidence, ſuch as it is, and finiſhed their Charge, I am to beg your ſerious Attention, while I ſpeak to you in my Defence.

To you Gentlemen of the Jury, I ſhall chiefly addreſs myſelf. You, Gentlemen, are my principal Judges on this unhappy Occaſion; Judges, which the Wiſdom of our Anceſtors has provided for every Britiſh Subject, who is, or ſhall be, accuſed; leſt the Torrent of Power ſhould at any Time prevail over Juſtice, and Malice and Ill-will ſhould injure and oppreſs the Innocent. It is now, Gentlemen, I have Reaſon to think myſelf fortunate. I am by Birth an Engliſhman, and thereby, notwithſtanding the implacable Reſentment of my powerful Proſecutors, I cannot be denied the Privilege of having twelve honeſt Men to acquit me of the Crime laid to my Charge: For acquit me you muſt, if you, as I am ſure you will, govern yourſelves according to the Evidence; ſince, notwithſtanding the Colourings which the Gentlemen for the Crown have given to what they have produced as ſuch, there cannot, even upon the Footing on which it now ſtands, be more Reaſon to adjudge me guilty, than any of you, Gentlemen, who are now to paſs upon me on my Life or Death.

Gentlemen, could I lay open my Heart to you, and make the Sentiments of my Soul viſible to your Eyes, you would there ſee the moſt lively Sorrow for the Deceaſe of the worthy Gentleman, for whoſe Death I ſtand here accuſed. I truly revere his Memory. He was, I doubt not, all that the Gentlemen concerned againſt me have ſaid of him. But while I lament his untimely End, I cannot accuſe myſelf for his Death. Would the depriving me of Life, on Rumour and Surmiſe, make Atonement for the Loſs the World has ſuſtained in him? Surely no! And therefore, as this Proſecution has been begun and carried on againſt me, not only with all imaginable Heat, but every Art has been uſed to deprive me of Exiſtence, I muſt, I will ſtand up in Support of it, and, by preſerving my Life, thereby pave the Way for vindicating my injured Character, and deprive my Proſecutors of the Satisfaction of triumphing over my Misfortunes.

Gentlemen, was I not afraid I ſhould take up too much of your Time, I could give you a Detail of Impoſitions and Hardſhips that would ſhock you; the chief End of which was to deprive me of the Opportunities and Means of making a fair and juſt Defence. My Friends, Gentlemen, have been ſpirited from me; they have been threatened, if they ſhould dare to come near me; Spies have been placed round the Gaol, to ſee if I was continually in Irons or no; and if at any Time I was taken out to dreſs, Mr. Thompſon the Marſhal has been harraſſed and reprimanded for giving me too much Indulgence. I have been kept in total Ignorance of all which I ought to have known; and 'till this Day, I was not made acquainted with the Perſons who were to be produced as Evidence againſt me, much leſs with the Purport of what they were to ſwear, leſt I might have provided the Means of invalidating any of their Teſtimony. I have been deprived of the Privilege of writing privately to ſuch Perſons as I had Buſineſs with;

with; even Mr. Cooke my Sollicitor never approached me without a Witneſs (intended at leaſt) to our Converſations; and the whole Iſland has been made acquainted with the Contents of a private Letter I received from my Father, on which ſome very ingenious Comments have been made, with an Intent, I ſuppoſe, to raiſe a popular Odium againſt me, and to make you think, Gentlemen, the Life of a Villain, ſuch as I have been repreſented to be, was not worth your Care, and that you might, upon the ſlighteſt Surmiſe, condemn me to Death, if not for the Crime wherewith I am accuſed, yet for the general Diſrepute I might acquire by the Succeſs of theſe artful Endeavours to viliſy my Reputation.

No Wonder then, Gentlemen, if that appears thus clouded. But I have ſuch Confidence, Gentlemen of the Jury, in your Honour and Integrity, that I am aſſured you will not be influenced by any of theſe Artifices. Your Breaſts, I doubt not, are diveſted of all Prejudice. I therefore promiſe myſelf you will attend calmly and deliberately to me, while I make ſome Obſervations on the Evidence you have heard delivered to you, and anſwer the Arguments which have been advanced againſt me.

One of theſe Witneſſes, Johnſon, Gentlemen, has taken upon himſelf, you have heard, to ſwear moſt poſitively he ſaw me on Sunday the 19th of November laſt in a Canoe, rowing towards Nevis, with ſome other Particulars. Yet is it not ſtrange that this Man, on the very Day on which he thus pretends to have ſeen me, when the Fact muſt have been ſuppoſed to be moſt recent in his Memory, before the Coroner's Inqueſt, on being to this Purpoſe particularly interrogated by Mr. Julius, declared he could not poſitively ſwear it was me he ſaw, but only believed ſo? His Reaſon he gave for knowing me, at the ſame Time ſhewing his Malice againſt me, on Account of my being the Inſtrument of putting him twice in Gaol, which, however, I have no Recollection of. It is moſt plain, if he ſaw any Canoe at all, he judged me to be in ſuch Canoe, from the Reports he had heard on Shore; and mad with the Deſire of Revenge, he haſted to the Coroner's Inqueſt, with Intent to do me all the Prejudice in his Power. Yet there his Conſcience pricked him, and, when made to recollect himſelf, could ſay no more than that he believed he ſaw me. After this, and from the Character you have heard of him, can any Credit be given to what he has ſworn? I am well aſſured, Gentlemen, you will give it none.

As to the Evidence of Patience Dorſet, ſhe ſwears, Gentlemen, poſitively, that the Words which ſhe is pleaſed to have heard me ſay, were ſpoken by me on the 10th of November in the Morning, being the King's Birth-day, at Mr. M'Cabée's Tavern. Now, Gentlemen, I ſhall prove to you beyond Contradiction, I was all that Day, and for four preceding Days, and for ten Days after, at Nevis. And particularly on the 10th of November, I was for the whole Day in a Part of Nevis the fartheſt removed from this Iſland, at leaſt ſeven Miles from the Town, and did not in the leaſt dream of coming down here, having Buſineſs of Importance to tranſact there, which required my Preſence. And when I have done this, I hope I ſhall have effectually deſtroyed this mighty Fabrick, which the Counſel for the Crown have taken ſuch infinite Pains to raiſe up. All the reſt of the Evidence have not the leaſt, the moſt diſtant Relation to the Crime wherewith I am charged, conſiſting only of my Motions from Place to Place, and of ſome trifling Tranſactions, none of which ſhew any Thing like my harbouring Deſigns to the Prejudice of any one, much leſs of Mr. Mills; againſt whom there is not the leaſt Appearance I could entertain any Anger. I deſire Mrs. Lowman may be called.

Mrs. Frances Lowman ſworn.

Priſ. Pleaſe to inform the Court, Madam, whether I was, or was not at Nevis on the 10th of November laſt.

Lowman. Mr. Barbot came to my Father's, Mr. George Webbe's ſenior, on the 8th of November laſt; he dined and lodged there; and lodged there the next Night alſo. On the 10th he breakfaſted there; and after Breakfaſt, he and Mr. William Daniel walked out together, and returned in about two Hours; and I left him at my Father's, at about One o'Clock, juſt going to ſit down to Dinner. Dinner was upon Table, and I went away to my Brother George Webbe's, where I dined in Company with Mr. William Herbert.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You ſay the Priſoner and Mr. Daniel took a Walk after Breakfaſt on the 10th of November; pray, where did they go to?

Lowman. I believe they went to Mr. Ottley's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They were abſent for two Hours, you ſay; at what Time in the Morning did they go out?

Lowman. They went out at about Nine o'Clock, and returned in about two Hours.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Madam, when were you firſt applied to, to endeavour to recollect where the Priſoner was on the 10th of November?

Lowman. I was firſt applied to the Day before Yeſterday, and I am poſitive he was at my Father's on the 10th of November.

Priſ. I pray Mrs. Ottley may be ſworn.

Mrs. Lucretia Ottley ſworn.

Priſ. Do not you recollect, Madam, that I came to your Houſe with Mr. William Daniel, on the King's Birth-day in the Morning?

Ottley. I do remember that Mr. Daniel and you came to my Houſe one Morning after the Sale of Bridgwater's Eſtate, but I cannot poſitively ſay what Day it was, though I remember it was in the ſame Week that Bridgwater's Eſtate was ſold.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Priſoner at your Houſe any more than one Morning?

Ottley. No, he never was there more than once, to my Knowledge.

Priſ. I pray Mr. Ottley may be alſo ſworn.

Mr. Thomas Ottley ſworn.

Priſ. Will you pleaſe, Sir, to inform the Court on what Day it was I came to your Houſe with Mr. William Daniel?

Ottley. I remember that the Priſoner did come to my Houſe one Morning with Mr. Daniel, but I neither remember on what Day of the Week or Month it was.

Priſ. I deſire that Mr. Joſiah Webbe, the Son of Mr. George Webbe, ſenior, may be ſworn.

Mr. Joſiah Webbe ſworn.

Priſ. Pray, Sir, be kind enough to inform the Court, whether I was not at your Father's on the 10th of November laſt.

Webbe. I am not certain, but I think Mr. Barbot dined at my Father's on the 10th of laſt November. I remember that he and Mr. Daniel dined at my Father's on Wedneſday the 8th of November, and lay there at Night, and they ſtayed all next Day, and ſpent moſt Part of the Day in playing at Backgammon, and lay there again that Night; and I cannot be poſitive, but, to the beſt of my Remembrance, Mr. Barbot dined at my Father's on the 10th. I ſtayed at Home that Day to keep Mr. Barbot Company, and I am almoſt ſure it was the 10th.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When were you firſt deſired to recollect this?

Webbe. The Day before Yeſterday.

Priſ. I deſire Mrs. Lowman may be called again.

Mrs. Lowman called up again.

Priſ. Pray, Madam, are you not very poſitive I was at your Father's on the 10th of November?

Lowman. Yes, Sir, I am poſitive that I left you at my Father's on the 10th of November, and I dined that Day at my Brother George Webbe's, in Company with Mr. William Herbert.

Mrs. Ottley. I now recollect very well that it was on Thurſday the 9th of November, that Mr. Barbot came to my Houſe with Mr. Daniel. Miſs Nanny Herbert was at my Houſe at the ſame time. She is now here, and has mentioned ſome particular Circumſtances, that make me recollect the Thing perfectly well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I deſire Miſs Herbert may be ſworn.

Miſs Ann Herbert, the elder, ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pleaſe to declare to the Court, on what Day it was the Priſoner went with Mr. Daniel to Mr. Ottley's.

Herbert. The Day after the Sale of Bridgwater's Eſtate, I dined in Town at my Brother's with Mrs. Ottley, and we ſaw Mr. Daniel there, and Mrs. Ottley invited him to her Houſe in the Country: Accordingly he came the next Morning after Breakfaſt with Mr. Barbot: They ſtayed about an Hour and an half, and went away again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you ſure it was on the 9th of November that the Priſoner and Mr. Daniel went to Mr. Ottley's?

Herbert. Yes, I am ſure it was on the 9th; for it was on the ſecond Day after the Sale of Bridgwater's Eſtate.

Priſ. I deſire Mr. William Herbert may be ſworn.

Mr. William Herbert ſworn.

Priſ. Pleaſe to declare to the Court, Sir, whether you did not dine, in Company with Mrs. Lowman, at Mr. George Webbe's junior, on the 10th of November laſt.

Herbert. I remember dining at young Mr. George Webbe's, the Thurſday after the Sale of Bridgwater's Eſtate, in Company with Mrs. Lowman; and the next Day I dined at Mr. Cole's. As I was riding to Mr. Cole's, I heard the Guns fire, and on aſking the Reaſon of their Firing, I was told it was the King's Birth-day: I remember particularly it was the King's Birth-day; for after Dinner, I ſaid to Mr. Pemberton, who was one of the Company, As you are the oldeſt Man in Company, begin with a Bumper to his Majeſty's Health.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you ſure it was on the King's Birth-day you dined at Mr. Cole's?

Herbert. Yes, I am ſure it was. Mr. James Brodbelt is now in Court; he was one of the Company.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell how many Guns you heard fired on the King's Birth-day?

Herbert. I think I heard fifteen; but Mr. Weekes the Gunner is in Court, he can tell poſitively how many he fired.

Mr. William Weekes ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember firing any Guns on the King's Birth-Day?——Weekes. Yes, I remember to have fired fifteen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you fire any more or leſs than that Number?

Weekes. No, I fired exactly fifteen.

Priſ. I pray John Cornelius may be ſworn.

John Cornelius (a free Negro) ſworn.

Priſ. Do you remember on what Day it was Bridgwater's Eſtate was ſold?

Cornelius. It was on Tueſday the 7th of November laſt. I was at work at Mr. George Webbe's that Day, and the Thurſday after I ſaw Mr. Barbot at old Mr. Webbe's: He and Mr. Daniel went out in the Morning to Mr. Ottley's, as I was told, and returned in about two Hours; and the next Day, which was the King's Birth-day, Mr. Barbot dined at Old Mr. Webbe's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear any Guns fire that Day?

Cornelius. No, I heard none.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was you deſired by any body to recollect this?

Cornelius. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Nobody inſtruct you to ſay it?

Cornelius. Nobody at all.

Mr. James Brodbelt ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pleaſe to declare to the Court, where you dined on the King's Birth-day.

Brodbelt. I dined at Mr. Cole's on the King's Birth-day, with Mr. William Herbert, Mr. Pemberton, Mr. Paris, and ſome other Gentlemen. The Fort-Guns fired on account of the Day, and I remember Mr. Herbert propoſed to Mr. Pemberton drinking the King's Health in a Bumper, which we all did.

Priſ. I deſire Samuel Lawrence may be ſworn.

Samuel Lawrence ſworn.

Priſ. Do you remember when Bridgwater's Eſtate was ſold?

Lawrence. I do not remember the Day.

Priſ. Do not you remember the Day I came to old Mr. Webbe's?

Lawrence. No.

Priſ. Do not you know how long I ſtayed there?

Lawrence. Indeed I cannot tell.

Priſ. Do you remember the Day I wrote a Note for old Mr. Webbe to ſend to Mr. Cradock for Corn?

Lawrence. I do remember you wrote a Note to Mr. Cradock for Corn for Mr. Webbe, but I do not recollect on what Day it was.

Priſ. Do you not remember I dined at old Mr. Webbe's the Day I wrote that Note?

Lawrence. Yes, you did dine there the Day you wrote the Note, but I do not remember what Day that was.

Priſ. I pray Mr. Joſiah Webbe (Dr. Webbe's Brother) may be ſworn.

Mr.

Mr. Joſiah Webbe ſworn.

Priſ. Pray, Sir, inform the Court, whether I was not at your Houſe on the King's Birth-day, and whether I was not ſent for, while I was there, to make Mrs. Hickman's Will?

Webbe. I remember Mr. Barbot came to my Houſe one Afternoon ſoon after the Sale of Bridgwater's Eſtate, and while he was there, a Meſſenger came from Mrs. Hickman to him, to deſire he would go and make her Will.

Priſ. Was it not on the King's Birth-day?

Webbe. It was one Day after the Sale of Bridgwater's Eſtate, but I am not certain what Day it was.

Priſ. I deſire Mrs. Daſent may be ſworn.

Mrs. Frances Daſent ſworn.

Priſ. Pleaſe to declare to the Court, Madam, on what Day it was you ſent for me to make your Mother's (Mrs. Hickman's) Will.

Daſent. I ſent for Mr. Barbot to make my Mother's Will, and I remember he came and made her Will, but I cannot be certain what Day it was.

Priſ. I deſire Miſs Jenny Herbert may be ſworn.

Miſs Jane Herbert ſworn.

Priſ. Do you remember being at Mrs. Hickman's when ſhe was ill?

Herbert. Yes.

Priſ. Do you remember my making her Will?

Herbert. Yes; Miſs Nancy Herbert and myſelf were Witneſſes to it.

Priſ. Do you recollect when Bridgwater's Eſtate was ſold?

Herbert. Yes, it was on Tueſday the 7th of laſt November.

Priſ. How long after that was it that I made Mrs. Hickman's Will?

Herbert. I am not certain whether it was the Thurſday or Friday after, but I believe it was the Friday.

Priſ. It was the Friday after.

Herbert. I think it was, but I am not poſitive whether it was the Thurſday or Friday.

Priſ. Did you ſtay at Mrs. Hickman's that Night?---Herbert. No.

Priſ. Do you know whether young Mr. Payne came there the Day following?---Herbert. I cannot tell whether he did or no.

Priſ. I pray Mr. Sommers Payne, junior, may be ſworn.

Mr. Sommers Payne, junior, ſworn.

Priſ. Do you remember the Day that I was at Mrs. Hickman's?

Payne. I remember ſeeing you there, but I cannot tell on what particular Day it was.

Priſ. I pray Miſs Nancy Herbert may be ſworn.

Miſs Anne Herbert, the younger, ſworn.

Priſ. Do you remember what Day it was I was at Mrs. Hickman's to make her Will?

Herbert. No, I do not recollect the Day.

Priſ. Do not you remember to have heard of a Ball being at St. Kitt's, on the King's Birth-day?

Herbert. I remember to have heard there was to be a Ball at St. Kitt's, but I cannot tell on what Day.

Priſ. Had you no Converſation with any young Ladies of your Acquaintance about the Ball?

Herbert. Yes, I believe I might have talked about it, but I do not remember the Day.

Priſ. I deſire Mr. Julius may be ſworn.

Mr. William Julius ſworn.

Priſ. Mr. Julius, you were one of the Coroner's Inqueſt; pray, what did Johnſon ſwear before the Inqueſt?

Julius. When he came before the Inqueſt, I aſked him if it was Mr. Barbot that he ſaw in the Canoe? He ſaid, he believed it was, but he could not ſwear poſitively to him, for he was a Muſket-ſhot off.

Priſ. I pray Manſell Wilkes may be ſworn.

Manſell Wilkes ſworn.

Mr. Frye. Do you know Johnſon?---Wilkes. Yes, I know him very well.

Mr. Frye. What Character does he bear?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You are to take Notice, that you are to ſpeak to the Character of the Man in general, and not charge him with any particular Fact; for he is not come here prepared to defend himſelf againſt any particular Charge.

Wilkes. Since I have known him, he has always borne a bad Character.

Mr. Frye. Has he been always looked upon as a Man of infamous Reputation?

Wilkes. Yes, he is reckoned a bad Man.

Mr. Preſident. Have you any more Witneſſes to examine, Mr. Barbot?

Priſ. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Honours, ſince the Priſoner has attempted to prove that he was at Nevis on the 10th of November, in order to invalidate the Teſtimony of Patience Dorſet; we beg leave to produce ſome further Evidence of his being actually on this Iſland on that Day. Call Martha Scoaper, Mary Sutton, and Mary Cockade (a free Mulatto). Who appeared and were ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Scoaper, do you know the Priſoner at the Bar?

Scoaper. Yes, Sir, I know Mr. Barbot very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long have you known him?

Scoaper. I have known him a great while; he is my near Neighbour.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember ſeeing him on this Iſland on the 10th of November laſt?

Scoaper. I do not know what Day of the Month it was, but I am almoſt ſure I ſaw Mr. Barbot here on the King's Birth-day. To the beſt of my Remembrance, I ſaw him paſs by my Houſe in the Forenoon, and his Boy came to my Houſe that Morning to beg ſome Water.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know, by any particular Circumſtance, that it was on the King's Birth-day you ſaw the Priſoner?

Scoaper. It was the Day that there was a great Ball at Manaſſeh Williams's. I was at the Ball myſelf.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That was on the King's Birth-day. Mrs. Sutton, do you know the Priſoner at the Bar?

Sutton. Yes, I know him very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pleaſe to inform the Court and the Jury, whether you ſaw him here on the King's Birth-day.

Sutton. Between Eleven and Twelve o'Clock in the Forenoon, on the King's Birth-day, as I was ſitting in my Houſe, I ſaw Mr. Barbot coming down by Mr. Bunyard's Houſe, and he turned down the Alley that leads to Mrs. Philips's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember how he was dreſſed?

Sutton. He had on a white Coat, a green Waiſtcoat, and a ſilver-laced Hat flapt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you ſure it was on the King's Birth-day you ſaw the Priſoner?

Sutton. Yes, I am ſure it was on the King's Birth-day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Cockade, do you know the Priſoner at the Bar?

Cockade. Yes, Sir, I know him very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray inform the Court and the Jury, whether you ſaw him here on the King's Birth-day.

Cockade. Mrs. M'Cabée ſent for me on the King's Birth-day to help her; for they were to provide an Entertainment for a great deal of Company: And while I was in the public Room below, Mr. Barbot came in, and I heard him aſk a Man whom I did not know, whether there was a good deal of Company up Stairs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you ſure it was on the King's Birth-day you heard him ſay this?---Cockade. Yes, I am ſure it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Honours, we have gone through all our Evidence. We could produce many more Witneſſes to prove the Priſoner's being actually on this Iſland on the 10th of November, but we think thoſe that have been already examined ſufficient to eſtabliſh that Fact, notwithſtanding what hath been ſworn to by Mrs. Lowman and Cornelius, who are the only poſitive Witneſſes to the Priſoner's being at Nevis on the 10th of November; and the firſt of them (Mrs. Lowman) founds her Evidence on two Circumſtances, in both of which ſhe ſtands flatly contradicted: The firſt, that of the Priſoner's going with Mr. Daniel to Mr. Ottley's on the King's Birth-day in the Morning; and the other, that of her dining on the ſame Day at her Brother George Webbe's, in Company with Mr. William Herbert. Now, your Honours and the Gentlemen of the Jury muſt have obſerved, that, in the firſt of theſe Circumſtances, Mrs. Lowman ſtands contradicted by the Evidence of Mrs. Ottley and Miſs Anne Herbert, who have both poſitively ſworn that it was on the 9th of November, the Day preceding the King's Birth-day, that the Priſoner and Daniel were at Mr. Ottley's; and in the other ſhe is alſo contradicted by Mr. William Herbert, who has likewiſe poſitively ſworn, that it was on the 9th of November he dined at Mr. George Webbe's junior, in Company with Mrs. Lowman, and that on the 10th he dined at Mr. Cole's. And this Evidence of Mr. Herbert is corroborated by that of Mr. James Brodbelt.

Mr. Preſident. Mr. Barbot, go on with your Defence.

Here Mr. Frye got up, and handed ſome Papers to the Priſoner, which Mr. Horne, one of the Counſel for the King, obſerving, addreſſed the Court, in this Manner:

Mr. Horne. May it pleaſe your Honours, I beg Mr. Frye may not be allowed to do this. He is now giving Papers to the Priſoner to aſſiſt him in his Defence.

Mr. Frye. They are nothing more than ſimple Notes of the Evidence, which I took, in order to help his Memory, when he comes to make his Defence; and one or two Caſes that I have writ down for him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is what they have not a Right to; but it is no great Matter. You may give him the Papers.

Mr. Frye. Here, Mr. Barbot, you are to read from this Place to this, (pointing with his Finger.)

Priſ. May it pleaſe your Honours, the firſt Witneſs produced againſt me, in order to prove my having had ſome Reſentment againſt the Deceaſed, is Mr. Carew, who, as you muſt have obſerved, ſays no more, than that on the Day Bridgwater's Eſtate was ſold at Nevis, he heard me ſay to the Deceaſed, That I expected to be treated like a Gentleman. If I did ſay theſe Words, I aſſure you, Gentlemen, they made no Impreſſion at all on me, for I have not the leaſt Recollection of having ſaid any Thing like this to the Deceaſed. But, admitting I had; does the ſaying to a Gentleman, that I expect to be well treated, or treated like a Gentleman by him, imply any kind of Malice, or Reſentment, againſt that Gentleman? Surely no!

Mr. Thomas Mills was the next Witneſs produced on this Occaſion. He agrees with Mr. Carew in the Words that paſſed at the Sale of Bridgwater's Eſtate. But, Gentlemen, was there any Thing offenſive, or malicious, in my Anſwer to the Deceaſed; or can any Thing be collected from thence, to ſhew that I had any Reſentment againſt him? I think not, and I am confident you will think ſo too.

Mr. Armour has ſworn to a Converſation that, he ſays, paſſed between him and myſelf, ſome Time before the Sale of Bridgwater's Eſtate. He ſwears, he heard me ſay, Mr. Mills had treated me in a Manner never to be forgiven. This, I confeſs, aſtoniſhes me; for I have not the leaſt Remembrance of it. And it is indeed ſtrange and very improbable, that I ſhould throw out ſuch Expreſſions concerning a Gentleman, againſt whom I never had any Reaſon to conceive the leaſt Anger or Reſentment. It is probable I might, at the Time Mr. Armour ſays he joined Company with me, have been talking about Mr. James Daſent's Affairs, and might have ſaid that Mr. Mills's Behaviour to Mr. Daſent ought never to be forgotten; for I well knew that Mr. Mills had been a great Friend to Mr. Daſent. It is therefore probable, I ſay, that Mr. Armour might have miſunderſtood me. And indeed he muſt have been miſtaken, for I am certain I never uttered the Words he has ſworn to. Beſides, it is obſervable, that Mr. Armour does not ſwear which of the Mills's I ſpoke of. He believes, indeed, it was the Deceaſed, and for no other Reaſon than becauſe I did not uſe any Chriſtian Name by way of Diſtinction. I might, Gentlemen, for any Thing Mr. Armour knew, have meant Mr. William Mills, or Mr. Thomas Mills.

The Evidence of Patience Dorſet, I confeſs, is more ſurprizing than any. She has boldly ſworn, that ſhe heard me throw out a Menace at a public Tavern in this Town on the King's Birth-day, in Company with two Men, whom ſhe ſays ſhe did not know, nor did ſhe hear any of the Converſation previous or ſubſequent to this Menace. Is it not very ſtrange, that this Woman ſhould only hear that particular Part of the Converſation and no other, and not be able to recollect who the People were I was talking to? Beſides, admitting I had had any Reſentment againſt Mr. Mills, it would have betrayed great Weakneſs in me to have thrown out ſuch a Menace. But, Gentlemen of the Jury, I am confident this Piece of Evidence will have no Weight with you, as it has been ſufficiently proved by three Witneſſes, (one of them a Lady, and the other a Gentleman, of undoubted Characters, and the third a very honeſt Man) that at the Time Dorſet heard me uſe this Threat ſhe has ſworn to, I was actually at the Iſland of Nevis. This, I think, Gentlemen, fully ſufficient to invalidate her Evidence, and I make no Doubt will have its proper Weight with you.

Doctor James Webbe was called next on the Part of the Crown. Between the Doctor and myſelf, there has for a long Time paſt, and ſtill does ſubſiſt a very great Intimacy; inſomuch, that if I had ever had any Quarrel with, or Reſentment againſt, the unhappy Gentleman deceaſed, it is extremely probable I ſhould have communicated it to him. And yet, Gentlemen, you have heard the Doctor poſitively ſwear, that ſo far from his being acquainted with my having any Difference with the Deceaſed, or any Intention to fight him, that he never knew, or even ſuſpected, any thing of the Kind.

It has been alſo given in Evidence to your Honours, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, that on the 18th of November at Night, I went to Bed at Dr. Webbe's Houſe about Nine o'Clock; and Dr. Webbe ſwears, that about One in the Morning, as he was paſſing through the Hall, he ſpoke to me. This plainly proves, I was at that Time at Dr. Webbe's Houſe in Nevis. It has been alſo proved, that I was at Dr. Webbe's at Nine o'Clock in the Morning of the 19th, the Day on which the Deceaſed is ſuppoſed to have been killed; and it is obſerveable, that through all the Evidence that has been produced againſt me, there has not been one Witneſs who could ſwear that I was even at Frigate-Bay that Morning; and I do take upon me to ſay, it was incumbent on the Counſel for the King to prove, by ſome poſitive Witneſs, that I was that Morning at Frigate-Bay. They have endeavoured indeed, by preſumptive Evidence, to prove my being there, and for that Purpoſe John M'Kenley and Johnſon have been examined. M'Kenley ſwears the Deceaſed's Negro Boy Coomy told him, I had killed his Maſter, and that on this he ran to the Bay, and ſaw a Canoe rowing from the Shore, with a Perſon in white ſitting in the Stern. I beg Leave to make two Obſervations on M'Kenley's Evidence: Firſt, That his Information was from a Slave, who, by the Laws of this Country, would have been an incompetent Witneſs, had he been produced as ſuch; and conſequently any Hearſay from him muſt be illegal, and ought to have no Weight with the Jury. Add to this too, the Poſſibility that Coomy might have been bribed to fix the Murder on me. And next, That M'Kenley himſelf cannot poſitively ſay that it was even a white Perſon that he ſaw ſitting in the Stern of the Canoe. Is it not therefore unjuſt to conclude that I was the Perſon?

As to Johnſon's Evidence, I beg Leave to add only one Obſervation to what I have already ſaid on that Matter. It has appeared in Evidence to you, Gentlemen of the Jury, that he is a Man of a very bad Character, and, had I had timely Notice of his being a Witneſs againſt me, I could have had a Copy of the Record of his Conviction for Petty Larceny from Montſerrat, which would have proved him beyond all Doubt an infamous Perſon. But although I have been ſo unfortunate as not to be able to produce this Record, yet from what you have heard of this Man's Character, I am perſuaded you, Gentlemen of the Jury, will pay no Regard to what he has ſworn.

The Counſel for the King, to prove this Fact upon me, have endeavoured, by a Number of Witneſſes, to trace me, as they are pleaſed to call it, from Place to Place. This Kind of Evidence, I hope, will have no Weight with you, Gentlemen of the Jury, as it is at beſt but very light, preſumptive Evidence, and as it is abſolutely neceſſary to prove poſitively that I committed the Fact. Great Streſs has been laid alſo on my exerciſing the Piſtols at Mrs. Daſent's. It has been proved to your Honours and the Jury, by Dr. Webbe, that this was merely accidental, and that after we had done with the Piſtols, they were cleaned and put up by a Boy of Mrs. Daſent's. Is it not ſtrange that this Piece of Evidence ſhould be made uſe of to prove the Murder upon me? What had my exerciſing theſe Piſtols (which I did a Week before merely for my Amuſement) to do with the killing Mr. Mills? Did no other Perſon ever fire at a Mark with Piſtols? Now, Gentlemen of the Jury, if it had happened that a Man was found dead of the Wound of a Sword, and one of you had been exerciſing a few Days before a Caſe of Foils; might it not with equal Juſtice be ſaid that you killed that Man?

For my being ſeen to land out of a Canoe, I am ſure, Gentlemen, that can be no Proof of my having been at Frigate-Bay. Beſides, the Witneſſes themſelves cannot take upon them to ſwear I came from Frigate-Bay. For any thing they knew, I might have been a-fiſhing; and ſurely that is an innocent Action. Was no other Perſon ſeen that Morning in a Canoe but myſelf?

There has been no Kind of Proof that I had any Piſtols with me, or that my Boy had any. They have indeed now produced a Caſe of Piſtols which they ſuppoſe I uſed that Morning; but I beg Leave to obſerve, that theſe very Piſtols were found by Dr. Webbe, under the Bed at Mrs. Daſent's, in a Pair of Holſter Caps; and it does not appear from any of the Evidence, that they had been lately uſed.

I make no Doubt the Counſel for the King will lay great Streſs on the Evidence that has been given of my having executed a Paper at O Donnell's, which they have endeavoured to prove was my Will. Is it not the Duty of every Man, as well as a Satisfaction to him, to make a Will? and is he not at Liberty to make it when and where he pleaſes? Beſides, I had very good Reaſons for making a Will, which were to ſecure Mr. Jacob Saunders for indorſing my Bills, as I intended going to England in Captain Fleming, who was to ſail in a few Days.

Mr. Juſtice Loſack. Mr. Barbot, give me Leave to interrupt you. I apprehend you are only waſting your Time, and doing yourſelf very little Service, by all this. Would it not be much more for your Advantage, to prove where you was from the Time you went to Bed at Dr. Webbe's the Night preceding the Murder, to the Time you were ſeen to land at Nevis?

Priſ. That, Sir, would be a Hardſhip indeed. I ſubmit it to you, Gentlemen of the Jury, whether it would not be very difficult for any of you to prove where you were on any particular Night, from Nine to Six in the Morning; and, on Failure of ſuch Proof, to be ſuppoſed guilty of Murder? Beſides, may it pleaſe your Honours, I humbly apprehend that in this Caſe the onus probandi lies on the Crown, and that they muſt firſt prove an ibi, before I am obliged to prove an alibi. But admitting I had been out the Night preceding the Murder, ought it from thence to be concluded, that I committed the Murder? Was no other Perſon out that Night but myſelf?

Gentlemen of the Jury, it has been ſaid to you, that preſumptive Evidence is ſufficient to convict a Man of Murder, and I expect the Counſel for the King will labour to prove this Point. But I beg Leave to aſſert, that preſumptive Evidence is by no Means ſufficient, and that nothing but poſitive Proof ought to be admitted to convict a Man of a Crime where his Life is at Stake. It would be of the moſt dangerous Conſequence to admit of preſumptive Evidence in ſuch Caſes; for an innocent Man might ſuffer for a Crime he never was guilty of. I have ſome Authorities in my Hand, to ſhew how extremely cautious Juries ought to be in finding a Man guilty, on any but the cleareſt and fulleſt Proof. Coke Inſt.

> " An Uncle was correcting his Nephew, and the Boy was heard to > " cry out, O Lord, Uncle, don't kill me! The Boy immediately
> " after abſented himſelf. The Neighbours, who had heard the > " Outcry, on miſſing the Boy, ſuſpected the Uncle had killed him.
> " The Uncle, finding he was ſuſpected to have murdered his Ne-
> " phew, procured a Boy very like his Nephew to perſonate him.
> " But it being ſoon diſcovered that this was not his real Nephew,
> " the Uncle was thereupon apprehended, tried for the Murder, and
> " convicted. Some time after this the Nephew appeared."

Another Caſe I have, Gentlemen, to the ſame Point. I do not immediately recollect the Book it is in; but the Caſe is this:

> " A Man was found dead in a Field. Another Man happened to paſs
> " by and ſee him, and went and told two Perſons of it. Theſe two
> " Perſons, ſuſpecting him to be the Murderer, carried him before a
> " Magiſtrate. He was indicted for the Murder; and one of the > " Jury that tried him, contraty to the Opinion of the other Eleven,
> " and of the Court alſo, would not find him guilty. Upon this > " Man's ſtanding out a long Time, and abſolutely refuſing to agree
> " with the reſt of the Jury, they were called into Court, and upon
> " the Judge's aſking this Man his Reaſon for refuſing to find the
> " Priſoner guilty, he honeſtly confeſſed that he himſelf had killed
> " the Man, and that the Priſoner at the Bar was perfectly innocent."

From hence it appears, Gentlemen of the Jury, that you ought not to be determined by circumſtantial Evidence. If former Juries have taken upon themſelves to judge ſeverely from preſumptive Evidence, that ſhould be no Rule, no Example, for you.

I beg Leave to trouble your Honours, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, with one Caſe more, to ſhew the Neceſſity of having poſitive Evidence to convict a Man on a Trial of this Sort.

> " It happened at Montſerrat, that one Captain Watts was indicted for > " killing of one Oulds. A Woman, who was the only Evidence,
> " ſwore ſhe heard the claſhing of Swords, and ſaw Captain Watts
> " draw a Sword out of Oulds's Body; but becauſe ſhe could not
> " ſwear that ſhe ſaw Watts thruſt the Sword into his Body, the Jury
> " acquitted him."

Common Fame, Gentlemen, I am perſuaded, will have no Weight with you at all. You muſt all have been ſenſible at Times, how Report is apt to ſpeak untruly. And, in the preſent Caſe, every Art has been tried to raiſe it to my Prejudice. You are ſworn to judge by the Evidence which is delivered to you, not by what you have heard out of Doors. If the Evidence is favourable, you muſt in your Conſciences judge ſo; otherwiſe you introduce a Precedent for the greateſt Evils.

Gentlemen, if you examine the whole Tenor of my Behaviour for a few Days which preceded this unhappy Accident, until my Commitment, you will find me ſolely employed about Dr. Webbe's and Mrs. Daſent's Affairs, and preparing for a Voyage to Europe; and for the Moments of Receſs from Buſineſs, only employed in paſſing my Time agreeably among my Friends. The very Night before poor Mr. Mills's Death, my Behaviour was ſuch, as ſhewed I harboured no miſchievous Intentions. And can it be ſuppoſed that, if I had been conſcious of the Crime laid to my Charge, I ſhould have dined at Colonel Webbe's (the Houſe where I always dined on a Sunday when at Nevis) the very Day on which the Murder was committed, and behaved there in my uſual Manner? My Circumſtances were ſuch as might have made the Means of eſcaping very eaſy to me, had I been guilty of ſo weighty a Crime as that I am accuſed of.

Upon the whole, if any Preſumption can be drawn from Evidence like this, it muſt be favourable for me, as they do moſt effectually demonſtrate the whole of my Behaviour to have been moſt innocent and inoffenſive. I ſhall juſt beg Leave to caution ye, Gentlemen, againſt any Arguments that have, or may be made uſe of, to influence your Paſſions on this Occaſion. Much Pains have been taken to ſtir up in your Breaſts Sentiments of Rage and Indignation againſt me, and to make me appear guilty in your Eyes, though I could by no Means be proved ſo.

But, Gentlemen, I know you are not to be blinded by Subtleties of this Kind. It is not rhetorical Flouriſhes will move you on this Occaſion to lay down my Life a Sacrifice to my Proſecutors, however powerful they may be. You are, Gentlemen, a Jury, Judges upon your Oaths of Matters of Fact according to Evidence; and, from the perſonal Knowledge I have of every one of you, I am perſuaded nothing but full and demonſtrative Proof will anyways induce you to condemn me: not diſtant Arguments that amount hardly to a Poſſibility; and when they have an equal Poſſibility, that any of the Perſons in this Court may be the guilty Perſon, and not me. For the Preſumption, I am ſure, that is altogether in my Favour.

I ſhall ſay no more to you on this Occaſion, but commit myſelf, Gentlemen, to your Judgments, not doubting a happy Iſſue. May God Almighty incline your Hearts in my Favour! On his Protection I depend; and to him be all Honour and Glory henceforth and for ever! Amen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Honours,

I ſhall beg the Indulgence of a few Words, in Reply to the Priſoner's Defence. I ſhall not make any Recapitulation of the whole Evidence; both as the Trial has been drawn out into ſo very great a Length, and as that will be done from the Bench; but confine myſelf to the making a few Obſervations which I think neceſſary, on what has fallen from the Priſoner in the Courſe of his Defence: In which too I ſhall not be long; for indeed the Priſoner has ſaved me the Neceſſity of giving you much Trouble, by the extreme Weakneſs of his Defence; which was indeed ſo very weak, that his very Defence itſelf ſeems a Proof of his Guilt. For has he invalidated any Part of the Evidence againſt him? Has he diſproved a ſingle Fact? Nay, has he even attempted to do it? ſave in one Inſtance only, where it was not without Concern I ſaw him endeavouring to cover one Crime by another, in offering, by a palpable Perjury, to take away the Force of the Evidence of Patience Dorſet, by getting it proved, that he was not on this Iſland at the Time when ſhe ſwore ſhe heard him ſpeak the particular Words ſhe gave an Account of. Could he indeed have fairly and honeſtly diſproved her, it might have been of no ſmall Avail to him: But by unſucceſsfully attempting to do it, he has only the more eſtabliſhed the Truth of her Teſtimony; and the very Attempt itſelf ſhews how ſtrongly he felt the Weight of it to lie upon him; and amounts to a Sort of Confeſſion of his Crime, in labouring, by ſo undue Means, to deſtroy an Evidence, which only the Conſciouſneſs of his Guilt could make him ſo ſtrenuous to invalidate.

But the main of his Defence ſeems to lie in this, that the Evidence againſt him is only circumſtantial; and therefore, however ſtrong, ought not to avail to convict him, without abſolute and poſitive Proof of his committing the Fact, by Perſons who ſaw him do it. I indeed expected he would fly to this miſerable Refuge, the laſt Reſort of a guilty Man, oppreſſed by the Weight of Conviction, and borne down by the Force of the plaineſt Evidence againſt him. I ſhall therefore beg to be a little particular to this Point; not only as being what the Priſoner ſeems to have reſted the whole Force of his Defence upon, and placed all his Hopes of an Acquittal in; but as I am ſenſible great Pains have been alſo taken to inculcate this Doctrine abroad: A Doctrine the falſeſt and moſt dangerous that can be broached, and which plainly contradicts all our Reaſon and Experience on this Matter. For,

Not only, according to this Doctrine, hardly any Criminal could ever be convicted at all; but moreover, I am bold to ſay, out of all thoſe that have been ſo, by much the greater Part were convicted on circumſtantial Evidence.

So far from being none, or even bad Evidence, it has ever been allowed that, for the Lights it does give, it is the beſt and ſureſt of all Kinds whatſoever, and the leaſt likely to deceive and miſlead.

A Man may lye; but, as an ingenious Gentleman ſaid this Morning, Facts cannot lye. A well-invented Tale may be told and ſtood to by a wicked and daring Witneſs, in a Manner that he knows it is impoſſible for him to be detected in: But a Variety of Facts of ſeveral Kinds, all collected from different and diſtant Perſons, Places and Times, with an apparent Impoſſibility of Combination or Confederacy, all independent of each other, and with no other Connexion or Agreement between them, but what ariſes from their bearing from different and diſtant Points to the ſame Center of Truth; theſe can never miſlead the Judgment, or impoſe upon the Belief; but juſtify and confirm each other, and are the ſureſt and moſt unerring Guides to conduct to Truth.

They who affirm, that circumſtantial Evidence alone cannot be ſufficient to convict, muſt not only be greatly unuſed to the Hearing or Reading of Trials; but muſt alſo be perfectly ignorant of the very Nature of a Trial, and what it is. For what is a Trial, but to hear, examine, and weigh all that is offered on either Part; and then from the Whole to draw out, or (as the well-known Term is) to find the Truth?

Is it not the conſtant and univerſal Practice on Trials by Juries, for the Judge who ſums up the Evidence, to cloſe the Charge with Words to this Effect? "If, upon the whole Matter, you believe in your Conſciences "that the Priſoner at the Bar committed the Fact of which he ſtands in-"dicted, you are to find him guilty: But if, upon the whole Matter, "you do not believe in your Conſciences that he committed it, you are "to find him not guilty." Is it not the uſual and conſtant Practice, I ſay, to cloſe the Charge with Words like theſe?

But where is the Senſe or Meaning, I pray ye, of ſuch an Admonition, or of Words like theſe, if ſtrong Circumſtances alone may not, in any Caſe, be a ſufficient Evidence to authorize the Jury to find the Priſoner guilty?

If nothing but poſitive, ocular, point-blank Evidence can be ſufficient for that Purpoſe, how trifling and impertinent were it to give ſuch a Charge? For,

If there be ſuch poſitive and abſolute Evidence, what Doubt or Difficulty can there be in the Caſe? or how is it then congruous to ſay, if they believe, upon the whole Matter, a Thing ſo plainly and palpably ſworn, as to leave no Room to talk of the whole Matter, or hardly of believing at all? And,

If there be not ſuch poſitive and abſolute Evidence, what Reaſon or Juſtice is there in the Judge's ſaying to them, if, upon the whole Matter, they believe in their Conſciences, what he ſees there is no Foundation, and they can have no Right, to exerciſe their Belief or their Conſciences at all about?

In a Word, if nothing leſs than ſuch poſitive Evidence would avail, how can there ever be any Doubt at all? or what Occaſion can there be, in any Caſe, of having a Jury at all? In God's Name, what, in that Caſe, is, or can a Jury be for?

If ſuch poſitive Evidence only will ſuffice, 'tis immediately ſeen whether there be ſuch or not: And then the Court, without the Mediation of a Jury, have no more to do than to acquit or condemn at a ſingle Word; and the very ſwearing a Jury were a moſt unneceſſary and idle Formality.

But to conſider this Matter a little further.—How frequently do Trials of Murder in England, laſt eight, twelve, ſixteen Hours, or longer? Every body knows that ſuch Things have frequently happened.

But, I beſeech ye, how could this be, if only ocular, downright poſitive Proof could avail to convict a Perſon?

Is it not, and muſt it not be ſeen, in one Hour of the Trial, whether there be ſuch poſitive and abſolute Proof or not?

If there be ſuch poſitive Proof, what can there be further to be done? or what Occaſion to protract the Trial to any greater Length?

If there be not ſuch poſitive Proof, why are ſo many fruitleſs Hours waſted in giving in Evidence, and laying together Circumſtances and Preſumptions, which, though ever ſo numerous, or ever ſo powerful, could be of no Conſequence at all?

What a Figure muſt the Judges make in ſuffering ſo much Time to be miſpent, in hearing, and permitting to be ſolemnly given in Evidence, what in itſelf, at this Rate, muſt all be ſo utterly inſignificant and beſide the Purpoſe?

And yet, do they not conſtantly, after Trials of ſo great a Length, ſolemnly and gravely enumerate all the Circumſtances and Preſumptions, and then put it to the Belief and Conſciences of the Jury, whether they are from them convinced of the Priſoner's Guilt? and are not Priſoners accordingly conſtantly convicted on them? But,

Were it not the moſt crying Abuſe in the Judges, and the greateſt Profanation of Juſtice in itſelf, thus gravely to ſet the Priſoner's Life on ſuch a Hazard, if they knew in their Conſciences, that there was no Evidence given, which ought to affect him?

Ought they not to tell the Jury at once, they are to find the Priſoner not guilty, without more ado?

Gentlemen of the Jury,

Though I hope you need no further Conviction of the Falſeneſs of this Doctrine, yet it may not be amiſs to tell you what our great Oracle of the Law, my Lord Coke, whoſe Name you have, I make no Doubt, often heard of, defines a Trial to be: "A Trial (ſays he) is to find out, by "due Examination, the Truth of the Point in Iſſue."

And is not this, Gentlemen, perfectly agreeable to, and a Confirmation of, what I have been inſiſting on? that is, That it is to hear, examine and weigh all that is offered on either Side? Is not this, I ſay, the finding out the Truth on due Examination?

But, I pray ye, would this be an apt or proper Definition, or would this exhibit a juſt or adequate Idea of a Trial, if nothing but Point-blank Proof of the Commiſſion of the Fact were, or could be, allowed a ſufficient Evidence to convict a Perſon?

Does it not, on the contrary, ſuppoſe an Uncertainty? Does it not imply a Doubt and Difficulty? But,

Where can be the Doubt and Difficulty, if there is ſuch poſitive point-blank Proof? or what is there to be found out, on due Examination, if none elſe be ſufficient?

But, Gentlemen, to illuſtrate this Matter ſtill further by the ſame great Authority, I beg Leave to read you other Words of the ſame Author, extremely pertinent to this Purpoſe; and, Gentlemen, they are theſe: "When the Trial is by Verdict of twelve Men, there the Judgment is not "given upon Witneſſes, or other Kind of Evidence, but upon the Ver-"dict; and upon ſuch Evidence as is given to the Jury, they give their "Verdict——And many Times Juries, together with other Matter, are "much induced by Preſumptions, whereof there be three Sorts, viz. vio-"lent, probable, and light or temerary. Violenta præſumptio is many "Times plena probatio; as if one be run through the Body with a Sword "in a Houſe, whereof he inſtantly dieth, and a Man is ſeen to come out "of that Houſe with a bloody Sword, and no other Man was at that Time "in the Houſe." Thus you hear, Gentlemen, the general Doctrine he lays down; and the Inſtance he gives by way of Illuſtration of it, and which may ſerve the better to make it underſtood.

But, Gentlemen, I have another Authority in my Hand ſtill more explicit of this Matter, and which may enable you ſtill the more clearly to judge of it; and that is from a Trial which I had Occaſion to mention this Morning to another Purpoſe; which is of Miſs Blandy, who (as I make no Doubt you have all heard) was tried at Oxford no longer ago than the Month of March laſt, for the Murder of her own Father; where the learned Judge, in the Cloſe of his Charge to the Jury, has the following Words, extremely appoſite to the preſent Purpoſe: "In the preſent "Caſe, which is to be made out by Circumſtances, great Part of the Evi-"dence muſt reſt upon Preſumption, in which the Law makes a Diſtinc-"tion: A ſlight or probable Preſumption only, has little or no Weight; "but a violent Preſumption amounts, in Law, to full Proof, that is, where "Circumſtances ſpeak ſo ſtrongly, that to ſuppoſe the contrary, would "be abſurd."

Thus, Gentlemen, it appears in the plaineſt Manner, from the Reaſon of the Thing; from conſtant Experience; from the Words with which the Charge of the Judge to the Jury is always wont to be cloſed; from the, otherwiſe, Impropriety of thoſe Words of the Charge; from the frequent extreme Length of Trials of Murder in England; from the abſolute Unneceſſarineſs of ſuch Length on any other Suppoſition; from the Definition of a Trial by my Lord Coke; and laſtly, from the expreſs and plain Words of the very Charge of which I have juſt now read you a Part: From all theſe, I ſay, it is plain and clear, that circumſtantial Proof may be, and frequently is, ſufficient in itſelf to convict an Offender, and prove the Charge againſt him; and that the contrary Doctrine is contrary to Experience and good Senſe, and in itſelf falſe and abſurd.

But, may it pleaſe your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, as abſurd as this Doctrine is, the Abſurdity of it is not all.——No; there is ſtill ſomething further to be conſidered and guarded againſt; and that is, its dangerous and deſtructive Tendency.

If once it comes to be eſtabliſhed into a Rule, that nothing but point-blank, poſitive, ocular Evidence ſhall ſuffice to convict a Man; who can be ſecure of his Life or Property but for a ſingle Day? What a Leſſon of Encouragement were this to hold out to bloody-minded and ill-diſpoſed Men! What a Security and Indemnity were here promiſed and inſured to them in the Commiſſion of their Crimes!

Were not this plainly to ſay to them in ſo many expreſs Words, "See "that you commit your Crimes with tolerable Secrecy and Cau-"tion, and you may be aſſured of Impunity; only take Care that "none be preſent to behold you execute them: And then, though a "thouſand and a thouſand Circumſtances ever ſo loudly proclaim your "Guilt; though it ſhould be evinced by ever ſo many and ever ſo "glaring Tokens; though every body believes, ſees, and aſſuredly "knows, that you did, and muſt have committed the Fact; yet "all

" all this is but Circumſtance and Preſumption, and by no Means " Evidence to convict, or at all affect you; but, with all the plaineſt " and cleareſt Marks of your Guilt about you, you may laugh at your " Proſecutors, and ſet the whole World at Defiance."

Is not this the plain and palpable Language, is it not the neceſſary and inevitable Conſequence of ſuch a Doctrine? Is it to be ſuppoſed, that ill Men can be ſo mighty dull, as not to take ſo very plain a Hint? or is it to be imagined they will be checked and reſtrained by Juſtice and the Laws, when they are taught how they may ſo eaſily, and with uſing ſo little Caution, put themſelves out of their Reach?

I hope, therefore, we ſhall hear no more of this ſenſeleſs and pernicious Doctrine; pretended to be grounded on Scrupulouſneſs and Tenderneſs of Conſcience; but the mere Effect of Falſeneſs of Judgment, or Perverſeneſs of Will. For,

What Sort of Conſcience muſt that be, which thus combats itſelf? or by what unaccountable Kind of Reaſoning muſt it be, that a Man perſuades himſelf he is bound in his Conſcience to find that to be the Caſe, which in his Conſcience he believes, and is perfectly aſſured, is not the Caſe?

A Man that can argue at this Rate, let his Pretence be what it will, perverſely believes the Truth, and equivocates and plays double with God Almighty, and Juſtice, and his own Conſcience.

But now, if it ſhould be aſked, if then any Thing leſs than poſitive and abſolute Proof of the Commiſſion of the Fact will avail, and a Man may be convicted on circumſtantial Evidence only, how ſhall we know what Circumſtances are ſufficient to convict an Offender? I ſay, if this be aſked, I anſwer, in the Words which I obſerved to be wont to be uſed in the Cloſe of a Charge, " when, upon the whole Matter, you believe in " your Conſciences that the Priſoner committed the Fact of which he " ſtands indicted;" or, (which is ſtill better) when (as it is ſo happily and ingeniouſly expreſſed in the Part of the Charge I have juſt read to you) I ſay, " when Circumſtances ſpeak ſo ſtrongly, that to believe the con- " trary, would be abſurd." For,

It is not barely what this or that Witneſs, or theſe two or three, or any other preciſe Number of Witneſſes ſay, that ſhall acquit or condemn. No; 'tis the joint Reſult of the whole Evidence taken and conſidered together; and what, upon examining and weighing that, ſhall appear to you, or (as the well-known Term is) you ſhall find to be the Truth.

To pretend to lay down any general Rule of what is, or is not, ſufficient Evidence, were ridiculous and abſurd.

Every Fact is to ſtand on its own Circumſtances; and that, and that only, is to be taken to be proved, of which the Conſciences and Belief of the Jury are convinced.

The Evidence that does not convince their Conſciences and Belief, though it conſiſt of a thouſand Particulars, is not enough: And,

The Evidence that does convince their Conſciences and Belief is enough, though it conſiſt of ever ſo few.

Gentlemen, you may have obſerved how ſtrenuous both the Priſoner and his Counſel were in endeavouring to ward off the Force of one Piece of Evidence, which they perceived made ſo powerfully againſt him; and that was, that Coomy, the Deceaſed's Negro Boy, told M'Kenley, when he came down to the Bay, that it was Mr. Barbot who had killed his Maſter: This, they ſay, you are to give no heed to; as being what is called Hearſay Evidence only, and no more than what one Perſon tells another. But, Gentlemen, give me Leave to obſerve, there is a Diſtinction in this Matter; and that this is, in Truth, a very ſtrong Evidence indeed. That Hearſay Evidence is no Evidence at all, I do generally allow; and therefore had Coomy the next Day, or ſome Hours after, told this to M'Kenley, or any other Perſon, it ought to have no Weight at all with you, becauſe in that Caſe it might not be true; but in the preſent Caſe it ought to weigh with you, and powerfully too, becauſe it muſt have been true, as the Event, and what followed, invincibly demonſtrated.

A Gentleman is found murdered, and juſt expiring, and a Clamour is made, on the Spot and on the Inſtant, that ſuch an one was his Murderer; a Perſon is ſeen flying from the Place where the Murder was committed; and the Perſon ſo flying is purſued from the Place, and found to be the very ſame who was alledged on the Spot to have been the Murderer: I pray ye, does not this prove that the Clamour was, and muſt have been, true? and that the Perſons who made it ſpoke from abſolute Certainty, and were neither deceived themſelves, nor deceived others? Therefore, as Hearſay is generally no Evidence, becauſe it may be falſe; ſo that Coomy told M'Kenley is good Evidence, becauſe it muſt be true. And there is no Medium between theſe two Things, that either Coomy ſaw the Priſoner kill his Maſter, or he muſt have been inſpired.

The ſame Obſervation will hold, with regard to what Peter the Negro told Cribbe in the Morning at Nevis, viz. that he feared Mr. Barbot had done Miſchief; and againſt which too the ſame Objection was ſo ſtrongly preſſed, that it was only Hearſay, and what one Perſon told another. But as you heard, Gentlemen, this was ſaid by Peter before the News otherwiſe came from this Iſland to Nevis of this unhappy Event: And therefore Peter (who, as Jaſper Thomas ſwore, was one of the Negroes who rowed the Canoe which brought the Priſoner to Nevis) could not then ſpeak what he did, from the Information of others, but of his own Knowledge only; and as the Deceaſed actually was found murdered at that Time, either what he ſaid of the Priſoner was a neceſſary Truth, or he muſt have known that Miſchief was done, by Inſpiration. And now, Gentlemen, as either of theſe two Circumſtances ſingly, ſpeaks ſo exceeding ſtrongly, what is not the Force of them when put together? 'Tis plain there could be no Combination or Confederacy between theſe two Negroes, Coomy and Peter; and therefore for the former to ſay, on the Spot, and on the Inſtant of the Murder committed, that Mr. Barbot had killed his Maſter; and the latter ſo ſoon after, at the Diſtance of ſeveral Leagues, that he feared Mr. Barbot had done Miſchief; amounts to a Demonſtration that both muſt have ſpoke Truth: And when to this we join all the intermediate Circumſtances, and the tracing the Priſoner from Place to Place, the Whole compoſes the fulleſt and moſt invincible Proof, without a Poſſibility of Perjury or Miſtake in the Matter, that ever was made of any Fact whatſoever. And therefore,

It is to little Purpoſe that the Priſoner has aſked, Did no other Perſon than himſelf make a Will ſuch a Day? Did no other Perſon go in a Canoe? Was no other Perſon out at ſuch an Hour of the Night? Did no other Perſon fire at a Mark with Piſtols? For were theſe Queſtions ſingly aſked, there is no Doubt but there might be many Perſons, of whom each of theſe Matters might with Truth have been ſeparately affirmed: But, alas! that is not the Matter! For of what Avail were this to the Pr ſoner's Defence, unleſs there were other Perſons of whom all theſe together might be alſo affirmed? And therefore, the only Way of aſking theſe Queſtions materially to this Purpoſe, were in this Manner: Was there any other Perſon who had Words of Heat with the Deceaſed on the 7th of November? Who made ſuch a Declaration on the 10th? Who was firing at a Mark with Piſtols on the 12th? Who haſtily made a Will at a Tavern, and delivered it out of his own Cuſtody on the 18th? Who the ſame Night left his Bed and Houſe at Midnight; and the next Morning was ſeen flying from the Place where the Deceaſed was murdered, juſt after he was ſo? And then, if there be any one elſe, of whom only Half theſe Circumſtances can with Truth be affirmed, we may ſafely allow all theſe, in the Caſe of the Priſoner, to go for nothing.

And here, in ſpeaking of flying from the Place of the Murder committed, I cannot but obſerve how vaſtly ſtronger is the preſumptive Proof againſt the Priſoner, than that in the Caſe put by my Lord Coke, and which I juſt now read to you: For there was only that ſingle Circumſtance; but here is the ſame accompanied with twenty others, which of themſelves had availed to convince any reaſonable Perſon's Mind, who muſt have committed the Murder, even without the ſeeing him fly from the Spot.

Gentlemen, I ſhall but juſt add; the Priſoner cautioned you againſt ſuffering your Paſſions to be unduly worked upon by the Eloquence of the Counſel, and being miſled by their Rhetoric into a Belief of his Guilt. For my own Part, I pretend to no Maſtery over the Paſſions, or other Talent of the Sort; and did I even imagine I were poſſeſſed of ſuch, ſhould think myſelf not warranted to uſe it on an Occaſion like this. The preſent Caſe is a Caſe of Blood, where the Ornaments of Speech, and the Arts of Rhetoric, to inflame the Paſſions, and blind the Reaſon, however juſtifiable they may be in a Priſoner on his Defence, are certainly not candid or allowable on the Part of the Proſecution. The ſingle Queſtion in the Caſe is of mere Fact, to wit, whether the Priſoner committed the Murder? and therefore I have confined myſelf to ſuch Reaſonings and Arguments only, as I thought conduced to the better finding out the naked Truth of that; and can truly ſay, I have urged nothing to your Conſciences, which did not ſeem right and juſt to my own. For,

I ſhould think the offering to miſlead or abuſe yours, were doing my own the greateſt Injury.

You will therefore, Gentlemen, conſider the Whole together; and if, upon the whole, you believe in your Conſciences the Priſoner did not commit this Murder, God Almighty forbid you ſhould condemn him; and if you believe in your Conſciences he did commit it, God Almighty forbid you ſhould acquit him.

Mr. Kerr. May it pleaſe your Honours,

Mr. Sollicitor, in his Reply, has ſo fully anſwered every Objection of the Priſoner, that it were needleſs to trouble your Honours further on this Occaſion. I ſhall only beg Leave to obſerve one Thing which has been omitted by Mr. Sollicitor, and that is, that the Caſes which have been quoted by the Priſoner, I will venture to affirm, are not in any Book of Authority now extant; ſo that I am really inclined to believe they are Caſes of Mr. Frye's own making.

Mr. Preſident. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Trial has taken up a great deal of Time, and been attended with a Variety of Circumſtances. I ſhall therefore, as briefly as poſſible, ſum up the Evidence, and make ſuch Obſervations as occur to me, with as much Perſpicuity as I am able.

The firſt Witneſs produced by the Counſel for the King, was Mr. Carew, who ſays, that at the Sale of the Eſtate called Bridgwater's, on the 7th of November laſt, the Priſoner and the Deceaſed being preſent, he heard the Priſoner ſay to the Deceaſed, that he expected to be treated like a Gentleman, or Words to that Effect. Theſe Words, the Witneſs ſays, were ſpoke, he believes, in Anſwer to ſomething the Deceaſed had ſaid to the Priſoner, which the Witneſs did not hear.

The next Witneſs is Mr. Thomas Mills, who was alſo preſent at the Sale of Bridgwater's Eſtate. He ſays, that the Priſoner objected to the Conditions of Sale, and that the Deceaſed (apprehenſive that he did it with Deſign to protract the Time 'till Sun-ſet, after which the Eſtate could not be ſold on that Day) ſaid to the Priſoner, Mr. Barbot, the Conditions of Sale are very fair, why will you cavil about them? To which the Priſoner replied, I expect to be treated like a Gentleman, or Words like theſe; that to this the Deceaſed made no other Anſwer, than that he ſhould always treat him and all Mankind as ſuch. This Witneſs ſays alſo, that the Priſoner's whole Behaviour appeared to be calculated to delay the Sale. He ſays too, that he verily believes the Priſoner and the Deceaſed never ſaw each other from the Day of the Sale, 'till that of the Murder; for that he either ſaw the Deceaſed, or heard from him, every Day after the Sale, 'till he was killed; but he does not know whether they had any other Converſation the Day of the Sale; for he left them together in the Room where the Eſtate was ſold. You will obſerve, Gentlemen, that the Teſtimony of Mr. Carew and Mr. Mills corroborate each other.

The next Witneſs is Mr. Armour, who ſays, that between the 3d and the 7th of November laſt, he was in Company with the Priſoner at Mr. Conſtantine's Door, and heard him ſay, that Mr. Mills had treated him in ſuch a Manner as ought never to be forgiven. Mr. Armour indeed ſays, that the Priſoner did not particularly mention which of the Mills's it was that had treated him thus; but he underſtood that it was the Deceaſed he meant. I would make one ſhort Remark here. The Priſoner himſelf has declared he never had any Difference with either Mr. Thomas Mills, or Mr. William Mills; and as there was no other Man of the Name of Mills in this Iſland but the Deceaſed, you you will judge from the Event, who it was the Prisoner meant in that Conversation with Mr. Armour.

The next Witness that is called on the Part of the Crown is Patience Dorset: She tells you, that on the King's Birth-day she saw the Prisoner standing under the Gallery at M'Cabée's Tavern, talking to two Persons whom she does not know, and in passing by she heard him say, There was a certain Gentleman in this Island, that within a Fortnight he would either kill or be killed by. She is very positive that it was on the King's Birth-day she saw the Prisoner, and heard him say these Words, from two Circumstances; the first, That Mrs. M'Cabée sent for her that Day to assist in providing an Entertainment for the Lieutenant-General and his Company; and the other, That she heard a great many Guns fired. The King's Birth-day, you all remember, (I suppose) was celebrated on the 10th of November. Now, if you will compare what the Prisoner said to Mr. Armour before the 7th, his Behaviour to the Deceased upon the 7th, and the Declaration he made on the 10th, in the Hearing of Patience Dorset; I think there is too much Reason to imagine it was the Deceased he meant, when he threw out that Menace.

Dr. James Webbe is then called. Before this Gentleman was examined, I confess, I expected he would have fully proved the Fact upon the Prisoner; for, from the close Connexion and Intimacy between them, I thought it highly probable he might have known something, if not the Whole of this Matter. And from the Character of the Doctor, his Education, and Rank in Life, I took it for granted he would have candidly and ingenuously related all that he knew concerning this unhappy Affair. But, I own, I was no less surprized than concerned, to find that every Thing which came from him, tending to bring this Matter to Light, was extorted with seeming Violence; and that he readily told all that he thought would obscure and hide the Fact. He says, That he has known the Prisoner between four and five Years; that he has frequently employed him as an Attorney; and that he lives in great Intimacy with him. That he was present at the Sale of Bridgwater's Estate on the 7th of November last, where the Deceased and the Prisoner also were; that the Estate then belonged to himself, and was sold for his Debts. He does not know what were the Conditions of Sale; but he remembers to have heard the Prisoner say, We will be bound as far as by Law we can be bound. He does not recollect any other Words passing at the Sale, only hearing the Deceased say to the Prisoner, Let us have no School-boy's Play, or something to that Effect. He did not hear the Prisoner make any Answer to this; for he was at that Time, he says, so distracted and confused at having his Estate sold, that he gave very little Attention to what passed. He tells you, that the Prisoner, at his Request, purchased the Estate for him. This really seems strange and unaccountable, that a Man whose Estate was then selling, and who had procured a Friend to purchase it for him, should be so inattentive, as not to recollect what the Conditions of Sale were; and it is as extraordinary, that a Man should buy an Estate without knowing on what Conditions. He says, he does not know how long the Deceased stayed at Nevis after the Sale, or whether the Prisoner ever saw him after. That the Day after the Sale he saw the Prisoner, but does not recollect that any Conversation passed between them on the Business of the preceding Day, or that the Name of the Deceased was mentioned by the Prisoner. This is very amazing, that a Man, in an Affair so near his Heart, and which had thrown him into such Confusion and Distraction of Mind, should not the next Day, on seeing his Friend who purchased his Estate for him, make some Enquiry about the Event of the preceding Day. But this Gentleman's Memory is fatally treacherous to him; for he, in almost the same Breath, says, he thought the Terms of Sale hard too, and advised the Prisoner not to sign them. From hence it plainly appears, that Dr. Webbe was well acquainted with the Conditions of Sale, and must have had some Conversation with the Prisoner about them, or he could not have thought them hard, nor have advised the Prisoner not to sign them. He tells you, that the Prisoner came to his House on the 16th of November, and stayed there 'till the 18th, on which Day they dined together at Jacob Saunders's, and executed a Bond of Indemnity to Saunders, for having indorsed the Prisoner's Bills for the Deposit of the Purchase-Money of the Estate; that from thence, in the Evening, he went with the Prisoner to O Donnell's Tavern, where the Prisoner sat down to write; that the Prisoner desired him to get three Witnesses to attest the Paper he was writing; and that he did procure three Witnesses, which were Potts, O Donnell, and Springett, in whose Presence the Prisoner executed the Paper he was writing; and immediately after delivered it to him (Webbe). He tells you, that he neither read the Paper while the Prisoner was writing it, nor since it has been in his own Custody: and that he is quite ignorant of the Contents of it. In this he is manifestly contradicted by his own Deposition which you have heard read, and which, as has been proved to you, was taken before Judge Herbert, at Nevis. In that Deposition he swears, that the Prisoner made his Will at O Donnell's on the 18th of November in the Evening, and delivered it to him (Webbe), informing him at the same Time that he had made him a Legatee in it. He tells you, that after this Paper (for he will not now call it a Will, though it has been fully proved he knows it to be so) was executed and delivered to him by the Prisoner, they both went Home together to this Witness's House; that the Prisoner at about Nine o'Clock went to Bed; that having Occasion to get up at about One o'Clock, as he was passing through the Hall, the Prisoner called to him, and asked him what o'Clock it was; but that he did not see the Prisoner from the Time he went to Bed, 'till the next Morning, at about Nine o'Clock, he saw him riding up to the House on one of his (Webbe's) Horses, attended also by his Negro Boy Pope; that he had on a white Coat, a dark-coloured Waistcoat, and a silver-laced Hat; that he did not ask the Prisoner, nor does he know, where he had been; but thinks there was Time enough, from the Hour he spoke to him the Night before, 'till the next Morning that he saw him riding up, to have been at St. Christopher's and back again; that he knew nothing of the Prisoner's taking his Horse and Boy, but that it was very customary for him to take them whenever he wanted them, without asking his Leave. He remembers the Prisoner having a red Trunk, which he brought from Mrs. Dasent's on the 16th of November; that he did see the Prisoner's Boy Nero bring a red Trunk to his House the Morning of the 19th, at the same Time that the Prisoner was riding up to his House; but he does not know whether that Trunk was the same the Prisoner brought from Mrs. Dasent's on the 16th, or whether the Trunk now produced to him is the same. He tells you, that on the Sunday before the Murder, the Prisoner and he were firing at a Mark with a Pair of Pistols that belonged to Mrs. Dasent; that Mrs. Dasent, on missing a Pair of her Pistols, sent to him, to desire he would come to her House; that he did go and assist her in searching for the Pistols; that he found them under the Bed in a Pair of Holster Caps; but he knew not of their being in that Place, nor who put them there: That at the Time he was searching for the Pistols in the Chamber, he observed a red Trunk, which he believes belonged to the Prisoner, and which he saw opened afterwards by Judge Herbert; in which were found, he says, a Coat, Waistcoat, and some Linen, which were moist; that he cannot tell whether the Cloaths found in the Trunk were the same the Prisoner had on the 19th in the Morning, when he rode up to his House; that he believes the Trunk and Cloaths now produced to him, are the same which he saw at Mrs. Dasent's the Morning after the Murder. He tells you, that on the 19th the Prisoner dined at Mr. George Webbe's senior, and he himself dined at Mr. Maynard's; that in the Afternoon, while he was at Mr. Maynard's, a Negro came to him, and told him the Prisoner had killed the Deceased; that he went soon after to Mr. Symmonds's; that he did not mention there what the Negro had told him, though he had a very good Opportunity to do it; for while he was there, he says, Mr. Symmonds received a Letter, giving an Account of the Prisoner's having killed the Deceased; that he himself also received a Note from the Prisoner, pressing him to come immediately to him at John Herbert's; that he did not mention at Mr. Symmonds's, having received such a Note from the Prisoner, though he heard Mr. Symmonds say, he would go and assist the Posse in Pursuit of him; that he went immediately after to John Herbert's, where he found the Prisoner drinking Tea; that the Prisoner immediately took him out into the Necessary-house, and asked him if he had heard the Report of his having killed Mr. Mills; that he answered, Yes; that the Prisoner replied, he should not fly for it, for he knew nothing of it. He tells you, that this was all the Conversation that passed between them at that Time; that while they were in the Necessary-house, the Officers of Justice apprehended the Prisoner; that the Prisoner took him aside in Mr. Herbert's Hall, after he was apprehended, and desired him to get ten Pistoles from his Uncle Webbe for him; that he saw the Prisoner while he was in Goal at Nevis; that all the Conversation he had with him there was, desiring him to make over Bridgwater's Estate to him. He tells you, that he never knew that the Prisoner had any Resentment against the Deceased; that he knew nothing of his Boy Pope's having been at Bridgwater's Estate the Night before the Murder; that he did not send Pope out any where that Night, and did not know that he was gone out; that he himself was not sent for by any of his Patients that Night; and that it was so boisterous a Night, as he should not have gone out in for Pleasure.

Upon the Whole of Dr. Webbe's Evidence, his Inclination to serve the Prisoner very plainly appears: But from his Want of Candour and Ingenuity, from the many Prevarications he has been guilty of, and the manifest Contradiction between his Deposition at Nevis, and his Examination on the Trial; his Evidence, instead of answering the Intention of his giving it, serves rather to fix a strong Suspicion of Guilt on the Prisoner.

Mr. O Donnell, who was the next Witness, says, that the Prisoner and Dr. Webbe came to his House between Seven and Eight o'Clock in the Evening on the 18th of November; that the Prisoner called for Pen, Ink, and Paper, and sat down to write; that while he was writing, he called Dr. Webbe to him several Times, and they spoke together in a low Voice; that Dr. Webbe looked over the Prisoner frequently while he was writing; that as soon as the Prisoner had finished what he was writing, he went with Dr. Webbe into an inner Room; that after some little Time Dr. Webbe returned, and desired him, with Potts and Springett, to go in and witness a Paper; that the Prisoner did execute a Paper in the Presence of Potts, Springett, and this Witness; that he knows not what the Paper was, but believes it was a Will, because there were three Witnesses to it; that the Prisoner, after he had signed the Paper, put his Thumb on the Seal, and pronounced some Words, but so inarticulately, that he could not distinguish what he said; that the Prisoner covered with his Hand the Place where the Attestation is usually written, so that he could not see it. He tells you, that as soon as the Prisoner had executed this Paper, he delivered it to Doctor Webbe.

Charles Potts is then called. He says, that on the 18th of November last, being at O Donnell's in the Evening, somebody called to him, and told him he was wanted in the inner Room; that he went in, and the Prisoner desired him to witness an Instrument of Writing; that he, together with O Donnell and Springett, did witness a Paper, to which he saw the Prisoner sign his Name; that the Prisoner put his Thumb on the Seal, and took it off again, but does not recollect that he heard him say any Thing; that he took the Instrument of Writing to be some Deed to secure Jacob Saunders, because he met the Prisoner and Dr. Webbe coming from Saunders's that Day. I cannot help observing, that this is a very weak Reason for supposing it to be a Deed to secure Saunders; for had it been really so, there could be no Necessity for keeping it such a profound Secret; and, in the next Place, it is very natural to suppose, they would have executed any Deed of that Kind at Saunders's House, when they executed the Bond of Indemnity to him. He tells you, that he never knew that the Prisoner had any Resentment against the Deceased, but that, on the contrary, he has heard him often express great Regard for him.

The next Witness that is called is Thomas Hobson. He tells you, that on Saturday Night, the Night before he heard the Deceased was murdered, Dr. Webbe's Boy Pope came with a Horse of his Master's at Midnight, to the House where he (Hobson) lives, on Bridgwater's Estate, and said he had been round the Island looking for his Master; that Pope and the Horse were both wet; that Pope put the Horse in the Stable, and stayed there all Night. He tells you, that about Eight o'Clock the next Morning (which was the Day on which he heard of the Murder) he saw a little Man coming up to the House in a white Coat, and silver-laced Hat; that as soon as he came up to the Steps, he called for Pope, and ordered him to saddle the Horse; that he asked Pope which Road he should take; that Pope shewed him the shortest Way to Mr. Pinney's, where Dr. Webbe lives; and that he got on Horseback, and rode away: He believes he came from the Bay; and that his Shoes were wet. He tells you, that the Prisoner at the Bar is the very Man who came to his House on the 19th in the Morning, and whose Dress and Person, with the other Circumstances, he has described to you.

Sarah Hobson, the Sister of Thomas Hobson, is called next; but as her Evidence agrees in every Particular with that of her Brother, I think it is needless to repeat it to you.

The next Witness on the Part of the Crown is John M'Kenley. He tells you, that between Four and Five o'Clock in the Morning on the 19th of November, as he was lying on his Bed, Coomy, a Negro belonging to the Deceased, rushed into his Chamber, and, in great Fright, told him, that his Master was fighting at Frigate-Bay, with a Gentleman from Nevis; that he immediately got up, and ran down to the Bay, where Coomy, being on Horseback, had got before him; that he found Coomy supporting the Deceased; that he went up to him, and took hold of his Hand, and spoke to him; that he made him no Answer, nor had no Pulse; that he found then he was dead, though still warm, and was but just expired. He tells you, that on enquiring of Coomy who it was that had killed his Master, Coomy told him it was the Prisoner, and that he was just gone off in a Canoe; that he immediately ran down to the Sea-side, and saw a Canoe, with four Oars and a Paddle, making very fast from the Shore, and somebody in white sitting in the Stern of it, but he could not distinguish whether it was a white Person or a Negro; that the Deceased had on his great Coat and Gloves; that his Pistols were in the Holsters on his Horse; and his Sword in the Scabbard, wrapped in the Belt, at some Distance from him.

The next Witness is William Johnson. He tells you, that about Six o'Clock in the Morning, on the 19th of November last, as he was coming down from the Salt-Ponds, he saw the Prisoner in a Canoe, with four Oars and a Sail, between forty and fifty Yards distant from him; that the Canoe seemed coming from Frigate-Bay, and was rowing towards Nevis; that the Prisoner had on a white Coat, a silver-laced Hat, and a dark-coloured Waistcoat; that he knows the Prisoner very well; that he could see all the Way between the Place where he met the Prisoner, and Nevis; and that no other Canoe was in the Channel, but that in which the Prisoner was. The Prisoner and his Counsel have attempted to discredit the Testimony of Johnson, by saying he was publickly whipt for Petty Larceny at Montserrat; and that he could not positively swear before the Coroner's Inquest, that it was the Prisoner he saw in the Canoe. But they should, to have effected their Purpose, have produced the Record of Johnson's Conviction, without which, a bare Assertion of his Guilt ought to have no Weight with you. With regard to his refusing to swear positively to the Prisoner before the Coroner's Inquest, I think he swore as every cautious Man ought to do, that he verily believed it was the Prisoner he saw in the Canoe; but after he had, for his better Recollection, seen him in Goal, he was certain, and has now, as you have heard, positively sworn it was the Prisoner he saw in the Canoe. And besides, Mr. Wilson's Evidence does entirely acquit Johnson of any ill Design against the Prisoner, and does certainly strengthen his Evidence; for Mr. Wilson swears, that Johnson brought him a Letter from Montserrat the Morning the Deceased was murdered; that having heard the Report of the Murder, he told Johnson, that the Deceased was killed by the Prisoner; at which Johnson expressed a good deal of Surprize, and said, that he had met him that Morning in a Canoe going to Nevis. From this Circumstance, I think, Johnson's Evidence ought to receive its full Credit.

Jasper Thomas, and his Son John Thomas, are next called. They both agree in their Evidence, and tell you, that between Six and Seven o'Clock in the Morning, on the 19th of November last, they saw a Canoe belonging to John Cribbe land under the Manchioneal Trees, just under Lowland-Church, at Nevis; that as soon as the Canoe struck the Shore, the Prisoner jumped out of it; that a little yellow Negro Boy jumped out at the same Time, with a small red Trunk on his Head, and went towards the Town; that Hulburd's Peter, and Deverade's Joe, were in the Canoe; that the Prisoner had on a whitish Coat, and a silver-laced Hat; that they saw the Canoe above fifteen hundred Yards before she came to Land; that she was under Sail, and did not strike Sail 'till she landed; and that she seemed coming from the Salt-Ponds.

William White is then called. He tells you, that on the 19th of November in the Morning, as he was at Work at Mr. Woodley's Estate, he saw a little Man in a brown Coat and a laced Hat, which he knew to be the Prisoner, walking up the Road that leads to Bridgwater's Estate; that he believes he came from the Bay; that he knows the Prisoner very well, and is certain he is the Person he saw.

The next Witness is Mr. Bridgwater, who tells you, that between Nine and Ten o'Clock in the Morning, on the 19th of November, he saw the Prisoner, on a sorrel Horse belonging to Dr. Webbe, going the nearest Way to Dr. Webbe's House; that on the same Day in the Afternoon he went to Mr. Symmonds's; that while he was there, Dr. Webbe came in; that presently after, Mr. Symmonds received a Letter, giving him an Account of the Prisoner's having killed the Deceased; that as soon as Mr. Symmonds mentioned it, Dr. Webbe changed Countenance, and said that the Prisoner had lain at his House the Night before; that Mr. Symmonds asked Dr. Webbe if he had seen the Prisoner that Morning; that Dr. Webbe said he had not seen him since the Night before; at which this Witness expressed a good deal of Surprize, and said he had seen the Prisoner that Morning riding towards his (Webbe's) House, on one of his Horses; that to this Webbe made no Answer, but, in about five Minutes, went away, and said he was going up towards the Mountain.

John Cribbe is then called, who tells you, that on the Friday before the Deceased was killed, the Prisoner hired his Canoe to carry some Letters to St. Kitt's; that she returned the next Day in the Afternoon, and the Negroes that belonged to her, took her (as he thought) to go a-fishing; that he did not see them again 'till about Eight o'Clock the next Morning, which was the Day he heard the Deceased was killed; that he went to Peter, one of the Negroes belonging to the Canoe; and asked him, What Luck? (supposing he had been fishing;) that Peter answered him, Poor Luck! and seemed very melancholy and thoughtful; that upon enquiring the Reason of it, Peter told him he had been to St. Kitt's with Mr. Barbot, who, he was afraid, had done a great deal of Mischief, for he believed he had killed Mr. Mills. He tells you, it was about Ten o'Clock in the Morning when he had this Conversation with Peter; that at that Time he had not heard, either by common Report, or otherwise than from Peter, of the Death of the Deceased; and indeed from the Evidence of Quin, which immediately follows, he could not have heard it from common Report; for Quin tells you, he was the first that carried the News to Nevis, and that he did not arrive there 'till Eleven o'Clock. This makes it highly probable, that what Peter said was too true.

Mrs. Dasent is then called. She tells you, that on the 19th of November last, hearing that the Magazine was broken open, and of the Murder of the Deceased, she ordered all the Arms in her House to be searched for; that missing a Pair of Pistols, she sent to Dr. Webbe, who came to her, and after searching a good while, at last found the Pistols under the Bed; that the Prisoner's Trunk was in the Room where the Pistols were found, but she knew not of its being there 'till that Day, nor how it came there; that she saw the Trunk opened, in which were found a brown Waistcoat and a Pair of black Breeches, which she believes belonged to the Prisoner; that she believes the Trunk and Cloaths now produced to her, are the same she saw opened at her House by Judge Herbert.

Judge Herbert, who is the next Witness, tells you, that the Day after the Murder he went to Mrs. Dasent's, where he saw the Pistols, with the Trunk and Cloaths which have been produced to him; that the Cloaths were wet, and he believes with Salt-Water; for, on touching the Waistcoat with his Tongue, he found it salt. He also tells you, that being at Mr. Colhoun's, where the Body of the Deceased was brought on the Day of the Murder, he searched the Pockets of the Deceased, and found in his Breeches Pockets three Bullets.

Mr. Pringle and Mr. Baker are then called, who tell you, that being at Mr. Colhoun's on the Day the Deceased was killed, they examined his Pistols, which they know to be the same that are now produced; that they could not, upon the most careful Examination of them, perceive the least Stain of Powder on either of them, except about a Grain or two, which they supposed to have been bruised by the Hammer; that they are convinced neither of the Pistols had been lately discharged; for Mr. Baker having put his Finger into the Barrel, there came off on it a rusty Dirt, which he tells you would not have been there, if the Pistols had been lately fired out of. They also tell you, that upon examining the Cloaths of the Deceased, they found on the right Flap of his Coat, and the Inside of his great Coat, on the right Side, a Stain of dry Powder.

The Counsel for the Crown, to corroborate and support the Evidence of Patience Dorset, have produced Martha Scooper, Mary Sutton, and Mary Cockade, with whom they conclude their Evidence. The two last swear positively that the Prisoner was on this Island on the King's Birth-day, and are so very circumstantial in their Evidence, that I think they cannot be mistaken. For Sutton has very particularly described his Dress to you, and Cockade has also sworn to some particular Words she heard him say in M'Cabée's Tavern on the King's Birth-Day. The Evidence of Scooper is not so positive as that of the other two, but it serves to strengthen and give Weight to what they have sworn.

The Prisoner, in his Defence, positively denies his having had any Resentment against the Deceased; says, it was very easy for him to have made his Escape, if he had been guilty of the Crime laid to his Charge, and that it was natural to suppose he would have done so; that the firing the Pistols the Sunday before the Murder, was merely accidental, and to amuse himself; that he was not on this Island on the 10th of November. He then calls his Witnesses, the first of which is Mrs. Lowman. She is positive that the Prisoner was at her Father's on the 10th of November; that in the Morning of that Day he went with Daniel to Mr. Ottley's, and returned and dined at her Father's; that on that same Day she herself dined at her Brother George Webbe's, in Company with Mr. William Herbert. In the first of these Circumstances she is contradicted by the Evidence of Mrs. Ottley and Miss Anne Herbert, who tell you, that it was on the 9th of November the Prisoner and Daniel came to Mrs. Ottley's; in the other she is also contradicted by Mr. William Herbert, who tells you, that it was on the 9th of November he dined at young George Webbe's, in Company with Mrs. Lowman, and on the 10th he dined at Mr. Cole's; so that Mrs. Lowman must be mistaken in the Day. Mr. Josiah Webbe, the Brother of Mrs. Lowman, is next called. He cannot swear positively; but he believes the Prisoner was at his Father's on the 10th of November.

John Cornelius is the next Witness. He is positive that the Prisoner was at old Mr. Webbe's on the 10th of November; but the contrary has been proved by so many Witnesses on the Part of the Crown, supported with such strong Circumstances, that Cornelius must certainly be mistaken in the Day.

Mr. Julius was also called upon by the Prisoner to prove that Johnson, one of the Witnesses against him, could not swear positively to him before the Coroner's Inquest; but the Observations I have already made on that Part of Johnson's Evidence, will be sufficient, without repeating to you that I think Johnson's Evidence a good one, and ought to have its proper Weight with you.

These are the Witnesses produced by the Prisoner, that seem to be any ways material in his Favour: He has, indeed, called many others to prove his being at Nevis on the tenth of November; but they have all failed in this Circumstance, which would have been of great Consequence to him, if he could have established it; as it would have effectually invalidated the Evidence of Patience Dorset, and the rest, who swore to his being in this Island on that Day.

I have, as well as I have been able, Gentlemen, given you the Substance of the Evidence on both Sides, in which I hope I have omitted nothing material.

I must observe to you, that in Cases of Murder, and the like atrocious Crimes, the Law has relaxed much of its Severity and Scrupulousness in the Proofs, and does not so absolutely require such positive Proof as in Matters of meum and tuum, where they may be had, but in theſe cannot: For no Man who knows, or even imagines, that his Life muſt anſwer for the Perpetration of a Deed, will call Eye-witneſſes to it; but will, with as much Secrecy as his Invention can ſupply, execute his Intention; and to admit none but poſitive ocular Proof, would be rejecting all, and proclaiming Impunity.

It has been juſtly obſerved to you by the Counſel for the Crown, that the Law, where the Circumſtances are ſo cloſely connected and linked together, as in this Caſe, and amount ſo fully to what is called a violenta præſumptio, admits this as full Proof, and in my Opinion, more ſo than any one poſitive Evidence, whoſe Memory may be deceitful, or who may poſſibly be ſuborned; but in Facts made appear from Circumſtances which are dumb, we cannot be deceived; nor they falſly charge, or partially excuſe.

The Circumſtances of this unfortunate Affair hang ſo cloſely together, that they carry too glaring a Proof to admit of much Doubt, by whoſe Hand Mr. Mills fell.

Mr. Armour declares, that he heard the Priſoner ſay, between the 3d and 7th of November, that Mr. Mills had treated him cruelly, and in ſuch a Manner as ought never to be forgiven: The Priſoner has acknowledged, he had never any Difference with Meſſieurs Thomas and William Mills, it then could have been none but the Deceaſed he meant: Though this the Priſoner denies, and ſays, Mr. Armour muſt have miſunderſtood him.

Patience Dorſet ſwears, that ſhe heard the Priſoner declare, on the 10th of November, that he would either kill or be killed by a Perſon of Diſtinction in this Iſland, in the Courſe of ten Days. Mr. Mills is found dead in a remote Part of the Iſland on the 19th, within the Time limited; and by the Evidence now given in Court, by the Gentlemen who opened the Body before the Coroner's Inqueſt, it appears that he had been killed by a Bullet, or ſome other Subſtance diſcharged from a Fire-Arm. From the Evidence of Armour and Dorſet, a prepenſe Malice appears; and a Life taken away through ſuch Malice prepenſe, in the Eye of the Law and Man, is deemed Murder in the higheſt Degree.

The Priſoner too, in a precipitate Manner, and in a Tavern, the Night before Mr. Mills was found dead, executed his Will; in his Defence he acknowledges the Deed executed at O Donnell's to have been ſuch: Had he not been conſcious that he might have ran ſome Riſk of loſing his Life the next Morning, why in ſuch a Place, and in ſuch a Manner, draw and execute a Deed of ſo nice a Nature, and of ſuch Conſequence, as his Will? But the Time, by Mrs. Dorſet's Evidence, which it appears he had limited to his own Life, or a Perſon's of Diſtinction in this Iſland, was near expired, therefore neceſſary ſuch a Deed ſhould be executed.

The next Morning Mr. Mills is found dead. The Priſoner is declared by Coomy to be the Perſon by whoſe Hand his Maſter fell: And though by Law this is not Evidence; yet by Mr. M'Kenley's Evidence, who declares he ſaw a Perſon rowing in a Canoe, from the Place from whence Coomy had told him the Priſoner embarked, deſcribing his Dreſs; which Perſon is immediately after met by Johnſon, who perſonally knows him, deſcribes him to be dreſſed in the ſame Manner, and declares that no Canoe was then at Sea, but the one in which was the Priſoner; that he could diſtinctly ſee the whole Paſſage from Frigate-Bay, the Place where Mr. Mills then lay dead, to Nevis, where the Priſoner was ſeen to land by Jaſper Thomas and his Son, who declare that they ſaw the Canoe coming from St. Chriſtopher's, deſcribe his Dreſs to be the ſame as M'Kenley and Johnſon: Jaſper is ſo particular as to name two of the Negroes who rowed the Canoe, one of which (Peter), as appears from Cribbe's Evidence, and which ſtrengthens and is ſtrengthened by Coomy's Declaration, ſays, That he had been that Morning to St. Kitt's with Mr. Barbot, who he feared had done a great deal of Miſchief, for he believed he had killed Mr. Mills. And as this Declaration of Peter's was made to Cribbe, before the Account of Mr. Mills's Death had reached Nevis, as appears from Quin's Evidence, who was the Expreſs ſent up in ſearch of the Priſoner, and the two Slaves were four or five Leagues aſunder, and could not have ſeen each other from the Time of the Commiſſion of the Fact, to this Declaration of Peter's; this could not have been by them concerted, and of itſelf carries ſo much Weight, as to merit ſome Attention. Again, Thomas Hobſon and Siſter declare, that in the Morning of the Day on which they heard the Account of Mr. Mills's Death, they ſaw a little Man, whom they know to be the Priſoner, coming up from the Bay; that he came to their Houſe, and aſked for Dr. Webbe's Boy Pope: When the Boy appeared, he did not aſk if he had got a Horſe, but ordered him to ſaddle the Horſe: From this then it is evident that he knew the Horſe and Boy were there, or he would not have called ſo immediately for Pope, and ordered ſaddling the Horſe. Dr. Webbe too proves, that the Horſe and Boy muſt have been taken out of his Stable by the Priſoner; for he declares, that he himſelf had not that Night been called out by any Patient, nor had he ſent that Boy on any Meſſage. Theſe Evidences deſcribe the ſame Dreſs as the preceding ones. Other Evidences have been produced by the King's Counſel, who deſcribed the ſame Dreſs, and traced the Priſoner to Dr. Webbe's, where the Doctor acknowledges his Arrival, dreſſed alſo in the ſame Manner, as every other Evidence had.

From ſuch a Chain of Evidences, who were ſeparated from each other in different Iſlands, Perſons noways connected, and ſo exactly tallying with each other, little Room, as I ſaid before, can be left to doubt.

It was eſſentially incumbent on the Priſoner, for his own ſake, to prove where he was, from the Time he went to Bed at Dr. Webbe's, on the 18th of November at Night, to the Time he was ſeen to land at Nevis, on the 19th in the Morning; but this he has not attempted to do.

Leſt you ſhould have entertained a Notion, that the killing a Perſon in a Duel is not Murder in the Eye of the Law, as the Life of each in ſuch an Encounter runs an equal Riſk; I aſſure you, Gentlemen, the Law makes no ſuch Diſtinction, even in Caſes of fair Duels. If from the Evidences you are ſatisfied, that Mr. Mills fell by the Hands of the Priſoner, and that he had a malicious Intent, the Law makes it Murder as much in this Caſe as any other. The Priſoner in his Defence to clear himſelf, ſays, from his known and paſt Conduct in Life, there is no Reaſon why he ſhould be even ſuſpected of engaging in a Duel: But from the Evidences of Meſſieurs Pringle and Baker, that the Piſtols of the Deceaſed had never been diſcharged, or even were they loaded; and from his Sword's Belt being buckled round the Hilt, and at a Diſtance from him, as appears from M'Kenley's Evidence; and from the Direction of the Ball or Subſtance which pierced the Body of the Deceaſed, which entered ſo far backwards, and ſtruck on the oppoſite Side ſo far forwards; and of which Meſſieurs Hamilton and Edwards declare, to the beſt of their Knowledge and Belief, Mr. Mills died, and that he could not have received the Wound in a Poſture of Defence: From theſe Circumſtances it muſt be left to you, upon the Evidences, to conſider whether this was even a fair Duel.

I ſhall detain you, Gentlemen, with but one more Obſervation, which is, that no Perſon but the Priſoner has been proved or known to have declared a Reſentment to Mr. Mills; the Deceaſed; no Perſon but the Priſoner was ſeen going from the Place where Mr. Mills was found but juſt expired; and no Perſon of Diſtinction in this Iſland killed but Mr. Mills.

All Circumſtances of Perſons, Time, and Place, muſt be well conſidered. It is alſo your Duty to weigh the Evidences that have been offered to you, and to judge from thence, whether the Priſoner is guilty of the Murder wherewith he ſtands charged, or not guilty; and in conſidering this Matter, let me recommend to you, that you diveſt yourſelves of any Impreſſions that may have been made on you from the Relation of this Fact out of Doors, and that you conſider merely the Evidence given you here on the Trial.

If, upon the whole, you believe in your Conſciences, that the Priſoner committed the Fact of which he ſtands indicted, you will find him guilty: But if, upon the whole, you do not believe in your Conſciences that he committed it, you are to find him not guilty.

Then the Jury withdrew, and in about Half an Hour returned.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?—Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. John Barbot, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner: How ſay you, is John Barbot guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?———Jury. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the Time of the ſaid Felony and Murder committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge?———Jury. None.

Cl. of Arr. Hearken to your Verdict as the Court hath recorded it. You ſay that John Barbot is guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands indicted; and that he had not any Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the Time of the ſaid Felony and Murder committed, or at any Time ſince, to your Knowledge; and ſo you ſay all.

Cl. of Arr. John Barbot, hold up thy Hand. You have been indicted of Felony and Murder. You have been thereupon arraigned, and pleaded thereto Not Guilty, and for your Trial you have put yourſelf upon God and your Country, which Country have found you guilty. What have you now to ſay for yourſelf, why the Court ſhould not proceed to give Judgment of Death upon you according to Law?

Priſ. May it pleaſe your Honours, there is a Fault in the Indictment. The Fact is laid to have been committed at Frigate-Bay, in the Pariſh of St. George Baſſeterre; and Frigate-Bay is in the Pariſh of St. Peter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Honours, the Priſoner, admitting it were as he ſays, is too late in his Exception. That is a Matter of Fact, and if it had been material, (which it was not) ought to have been ſhewed on Evidence; but cannot be made uſe of in Arreſt of Judgment. However, the Truth is, there is no ſuch Miſtake as he mentions in the Indictment; for Frigate-Bay is actually in the Pariſh of St. George, and if it were neceſſary we could prove it.

Priſ. May it pleaſe your Honours, I have nothing more to ſay.

Mr. Preſident. John Barbot, you have been indicted for the Murder of Matthew Mills, Eſq. and for your Trial have put yourſelf upon God and your Country: That Country has found you guilty.

You have had a long and a fair Trial. You have challenged many who were called up as Jurors, though not the whole Number you were intitled to by Law; ſo that I may with Juſtice ſay, you have been tried by a Jury, to which you yourſelf had no Exception.

I am ſorry it falls to my Lot to acquaint you, that I am no longer at Liberty to ſuppoſe you innocent.

You are convicted of a Crime the moſt horrid and dreadful in itſelf: A Crime attended with the moſt aggravating Circumſtances. You have deprived the World of one of its moſt worthy and uſeful Members; and rendered unhappy Numbers of Perſons, who drew the Means of Subſiſtence immediately from the Bounty and Benevolence of the unfortunate Gentleman deceaſed.

It is hard to conceive what Provocation you could have received from a Gentleman of ſo mild and gentle a Diſpoſition as the Deceaſed was, to induce you to perpetrate an Act ſo ſhocking. But I would adviſe you, as ſome Kind of Atonement for the Crime you have been guilty of, to make a full Confeſſion of the whole Matter. Let me recommend to you alſo, to employ the little Time you are likely to continue in this World, in endeavouring to make your Peace with that great God, whoſe Mercy is equal to his Juſtice.

Nothing now remains, but to pronounce the Sentence of the Law upon you, which is,

That you are to be carried to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, where you are to be hanged by the Neck until you are dead: And may God of his infinite Mercy receive your Soul!

The Priſoner then addreſſed himſelf to the Court in this Manner:

May it pleaſe your Honours,

Since it can no longer avail me to conceal the Fact, I will make a frank Confeſſion of the Whole.

That I did kill Mr. Mills, is moſt true.----That I killed him fairly, is equally true----fairly according to the Notions of Honour prevailing among Men. From theſe falſe Principles of Honour I was induced to engage in the unhappy Duel, which in its Conſequences deprived deprived the World of so worthy a Gentleman, and has involved me in these unhappy Circumstances. False I am convinced they are, notwithstanding the Countenance they receive from the daily Practice of the World.

I make no Doubt but that the Words which Mr. Carew and Mr. Mills have sworn, did pass between the Deceased and myself at the Sale of Bridgwater's Estate, though I cannot now recollect that they did. But this was not the Cause of the Duel.

The Provocation I received from Mr. Mills was this:

After I was declared the Purchaser of the Estate, I sat down to draw the Bills of Exchange for the Deposite. While I was about them, Mr. Mills came and looked over me, and observing that I had made them payable at ninety Days Sight, he objected to them, and asked me if I knew what I was about, and insisted on having the Bills drawn at a shorter Sight: To which I answered, That I was sure he must know it was usual for Bills of so large a Size to be drawn at a long Sight. I told him further, that I apprehended he had no Right to object to the Bills at all, if the Marshal agreed to accept them as they were drawn. To this Mr. Mills replied, Sir, you are an impertinent Puppy. I took no Notice of this 'till after I had finished the Bills, and then I took him aside, and spoke to him to this Effect: That I little expected to receive such Treatment from a Gentleman of his known Politeness and Good-breeding; that, as I was not conscious of having deserved it, I desired he would make me some Apology for it. He replied, That he would not make me any Apology; but that, if I thought myself injured, he was at my Service when properly called upon. I made him no Answer, but immediately left him; and, on the Thursday following, I wrote him a Letter, telling him, that since he had done me the Honour to assure me he would be at my Service whenever I should call upon him, I expected he would meet me by Dawn of Day the next Morning, near Lowland-Church, armed with a Case of Pistols only. Mr. Mills sent me an Answer to this; and there were six Letters in all passed between us, three from him, and three from me, which I do not now recollect, for I destroyed them *, though I believe I shall be able to remember the Substance of them. The last I received from him was, that he would meet me at the Time and Place appointed, which was Frigate-Bay. The Night before the Duel, I made my Will at Mr. O Donnell's, and delivered it to Dr. Webbe. The Doctor put it in his Pocket without reading it, and we immediately went Home to the Doctor's House, where I went to Bed soon after I arrived. At about One in the Morning I heard the Doctor up, and called to him: He answered me, and went out; and as soon as he came in and returned to Bed, I got up, and went with Pope to the Stable, and saddled one of the Horses, which I immediately mounted, directing the Boy to follow me; and rode very fast 'till I passed Mr. Pinney's, where I was overtaken in a very hard Shower of Rain, that wet me through all my Cloaths. I rode with all the Speed I could 'till I came to Molton's-Bay, where I had ordered a Canoe to wait for me. At first I could not perceive the Negroes; but on looking round, I saw them lying under a Sail. They immediately got ready, and I jumped into the Canoe, and ordered Pope to carry the Horse to Bridgwater's Estate. The Night was very tempestuous, and the Canoe was several Times near filling with Water. I had a Phial of Rum with me, which I had filled at Dr. Webbe's, and finding myself excessive cold and chilly, I drank a Dram of it. When I got to Frigate-Bay, I jumped out of the Canoe, and ordered my Boy to follow me with my Trunk, in which were my Pistols. I then seated myself under a Privet-hedge, and sent my Boy to the Entrance of the Basseterre Road, to wait for Mr. Mills's Arrival. In the mean Time I examined my Pistols, and fresh primed one of them. I had no sooner done this, than I heard the Footsteps of a Horse. I arose immediately, and saw Mr. Mills riding fast up to me. As soon as he came near, we saluted each other; after which he immediately alit, and took his Pistols out of the Holsters, and primed them. While he was priming his Pistols, his Horse's Head being between me and himself, I told him, I had, as I had wrote to him, brought down the Letters he had wrote me, and I doubted not he had likewise with him those I had wrote him. I then took out the Letters from my Pocket-book, and offered them to him: He made me no Answer, but hastily ordered his Boy to lead away his Horse, and putting himself in a Posture of Defence, presented his Pistol at me. I gave his Letters then to my Boy, and ordered him, in case I should drop, to give them to Mr. Mills. I immediately then presented my Pistol at him; which he observing, cried out, Stay, stay! I instantly dropped my Pistol, and Mr. Mills said to me, Stay, let me give the Letters to the Boy; which he immediately did; and then recovering his Posture again, himself on one Side the Road, and I on the other, we presented our Pistols at each other. I observed Mr. Mills drew his Pistol near his Eye, from which I imagined he was near-sighted. About four or five Seconds after I had presented, I fired; and Mr. Mills cried, Sir, you have killed me, you have killed me, Sir. I was extremely shocked to see him fall, and I went up to him and said, Sir, I am heartily sorry, I pray God to bless you, but I can stay no longer here. I then ordered his Boy to take Care of him, and immediately went down to the Canoe and jumped in, and ordered the Negroes to row as fast as ever they could. I asked my Boy, when we were in the Canoe, whether Mr. Mills's Pistol had snapped. He told me it had; but for my own Part, I neither heard it snap, nor saw the Flash.

The Letters Mr. Mills wrote me on this unhappy Occasion were extremely polite; and those I wrote him were in as respectful Terms as I was Master of. It was Mr. Mills's Character, his Rank and Distinction in Life, that engaged me in this unfortunate Business; for I should not have accepted a Challenge from any Man inferior to him.

For myself, my Concern for the unhappy Fate I shall soon meet with is little, compared to that I feel for the Sorrow and Affliction it will bring on a tender Parent; and the Grief and Anguish the Consequences of this unfortunate Duel will occasion to an unhappy Lady, when she hears the shocking News of her Husband's Death.

I must, in Justice to Dr. Webbe, acquit him of any Concern in the Matter. He is perfectly innocent of the Cause of my Quarrel with Mr. Mills; neither did he know any thing of the Duel, either before or after it. One Gentleman was acquainted with it; a Gentleman whom I asked to be my Second, which he refused. I beg to be excused mentioning his Name, but he is neither of this Island, nor of Nevis.

I am obliged to your Honours for the Candour and Impartiality you have shewn in the Course of my Trial. You, Gentlemen of the Jury, I must acknowledge, have acted like upright honest Men. Had I been in your Place, I should have found the same Verdict you have done.

I have nothing now to ask of your Honours, but that you would please to allow me a little Time to settle my Affairs, and to make my Peace with God.

To which Mr. President replied,

To be sure, you shall have a proper Time allowed you.

On Saturday the 20th of January, 1753, the Prisoner was executed at the Town of Basseterre, according to the Sentence pronounced against him.

At the Place of Execution he delivered the following Paper to the Provost-Marshal.

My Friends and Fellow-Subjects,

" You see me this Moment a dreadful Instance, how much the human " Mind may be led away and imposed on by false and empty Notions " affecting Reputation in the Estimation of weak and fallible Men; " even so far as to commit the highest Crimes in the Sight of God, " and daringly to violate all human Laws, calculated for the Good and " Safety of Society. Let my Example be a Means to teach Men to " act more consistently with their Reason; and let my Punishment deter " them from the Commission of Crimes like mine. And then my Death, " and that of the unhappy Gentleman who fell by my Hand, will, I " hope, by the Benefit the World will receive from the Example, make " some Amends to the Community for the Loss of two Subjects, who " might, had it not been for the unhappy Fate which attended them, " have lived not unuseful Members of Society."

Mr. Barbot was born in London, where his Father, who is a Working Silversmith, (a Man of some Substance in the World, and, as it is said, of a good Character) still lives. At about fourteen Years of Age, he was put Clerk to Mr. Delaport, an Attorney in Staples-Inn in London; with whom he served a Clerkship for the usual Term of five Years. After that Time expired, he came from England, in the Year 1746, in Character of Clerk to a Gentleman of the Profession of the Law in Antigua. With this Gentleman he lived near two Years; and then, having not been very prudent in his Conduct, and having besides contracted some Debts there to the Amount of 2 or 300 l. Currency, he came to Nevis; where he made a very close Acquaintance with the Family of the Webbes. Having for some Time lived a very idle Life there; and given away, and otherwise unprofitably disposed of, a considerable Part of a small Cargo of Goods, of about the Value of 4 or 500 l. Sterling, which his Father had sent him to sell, and spent the Produce of the rest of it; and being at length reduced to extreme Necessity, he came, about three Years ago, to this Island; where, by a critical Scarcity of Attornies at Law, he got himself admitted one in the ordinary Court of Common Law; and in the very first Year, had such a Run of Business, as to enable him to clear off what Debts he owed in the West-Indies; which amounted to near 400 l. Currency; and to put a handsome Sum of Money in his Pocket besides. The first Year of his being here, he behaved with Industry and Fairness; but soon after, from a natural Dislike to Business, and too great a Disposition to get Money by the most likely Means that offered, he greatly neglected his Clients Affairs, and fell into a Way of buying up desperate Debts; which he commonly found Means so to turn and twist about, as to make them good in the End; by getting still better and better Security for them every Time he sued for them, and by adding each Time the Interest and Costs: By which means he made them at once larger and more secure. Thus, by the Dissatisfactions of many who employed him, and some small Imputations he drew on his Character; as also by Persons of less questionable Reputation, and more Industry, coming to practise as Attornies in the same Court, his Practice was greatly reduced: And yet, by one Means or another, he became at length worth, as he says, (and, I believe, truly) about 800 l. Sterling. His Age, by the Plate on his Coffin, appeared to be but twenty-five: Though I should think he must have been two or three Years older: But of this I have no Certainty.

For the rest, he had a good School Education; and knew Latin, and spoke French, very well. He had made some Progress in the Mathematics; and knew, and was very apt in, Figures; and was a tolerable Proficient in Music. He had a pretty good Taste of Literature in general; and a good deal of general light Reading: But his Judgment was by no Means solid; and his Mind of a romantic Cast; though not without something of ingenious in it, and some considerable Sprightliness of Parts. To which I must add, he was a very ready Writer, in either Sense of the Word; having both great Freedom and Quickness of Hand, and Fluency of Expression. He was remarkably courteous in his common Behaviour; but his Politeness and Deportment were of that Sort, which is usually distinguished by the Name of Priggism: which the Littleness of his Person (a Circumstance well worthy the Attention of Persons of the same Size and Turn) contributed to make much more observable, and thereby to set him in a more ridiculous and contemptible Light; as a certain Pertness in his Manner, and Forwardness in his Behaviour, with a Vanity conspicuous in all he said and did, rendered him often very troublesome and disgusting.

* The Prisoner, in a Conversation he had with the Publisher, while he was under Condemnation in Goal, told him, That he had destroyed the Original Letters which passed between Mr. Mills and himself; but that he had preserved Copies of them, which Copies he had put in a Bottle, and buried in Mr. Pinney's Garden (where Dr. Webbe lives) at Nevis. So remarkable a Circumstance as this, had it been true, one would think could hardly have escaped him on his Confession in Court. The Omission of this Circumstance therefore very justly calls in Question the Genuineness of the Letters, and inclines one too reasonably to believe, from that and some other Observations, that the Letters which he has given for those that passed between Mr. Mills and himself, are the Effect of an After-thought, and were probably formed, during his Condemnation in Goal, and sent up by him with Directions to bury them at Nevis.

L. The

L. The TRIAL of Timothy Murphy, for Felony and Forgery, on Saturday the 13*th Day of* January, 1753, before the Right Hon. Sir Criſp Gaſcoyne, Knt. Lord-Mayor of the City of London, the Right Hon. the Lord Chief-Baron Parker, and others of his Majeſty's Juſtices, &c. at Juſtice-Hall, in the Old-Bailey, for the City of London *.

Clerk of the Arraignments.

CRYER, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez! Oyez! Oyez! You good Men of the City of London, ſummoned to appear here this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoners that ſhall be at the Bar, anſwer to your Names as you ſhall be called.

Then the Jury were called over.

Cl. of Arr. Set Timothy Murphy to the Bar. (Which was done.)

Cl. of Arr. How ſayeſt thou, Timothy Murphy, art thou guilty of the Felony whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or not guilty?

Priſoner. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

Priſ. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

You, Timothy Murphy, the Priſoner at the Bar, hearken to what is ſaid to you.

Theſe good Men, who are now called, and do here appear, are thoſe that are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, you muſt challenge them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they are ſworn; and you ſhall be heard.

Cl. of Arr. Call Thomas Batten. (Who appeared.)

Cl. of Arr. Crier, give the Book to Mr. Batten.

You ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner at the Bar, whom you ſhall have in Charge, and true Verdict give, according to your Evidence: So help you God.

In like Manner the other Eleven were ſworn, viz.

Robert Holaday,	James Callings,	Richard Pargiter,
Thomas Godenough,	Edward Pope,	Robert Naſh,
Peter Bredal,	William Bitberny,	James Elliot,
John Goldſmith,	Gilpin Ruſſell,

Cl. of Arr. Count theſe. (They were counted.)

Crier. Are you all ſworn, Gentlemen?----Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Make Proclamation.

Crier. Oyez! Oyez! Oyez! If any of you can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney-General, or this Inqueſt now to be taken, of the Felony and Forgery of which the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard, for now the Priſoner ſtands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

Cl. of Arr. Timothy Murphy, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe: He ſtands indicted by the Name of Timothy Murphy, late of London, Yeoman, for that he, after the 29th of June, 1729, to wit, on the 9th of February, in the 24th Year of his preſent Majeſty's Reign, with Force and Arms, at London, viz. in the Pariſh of St. Benedict, near St. Paul's Wharf, in the Ward of Caſtle-Baynard, in London aforeſaid, felonioufly did falſely make, forge, and counterfeit, and cauſe and procure to be falſely made, forged, and counterfeited, and willingly act and aſſiſt in the falſe Making, Forging, and Counterfeiting, a certain Will and Teſtament, purporting to be the laſt Will and Teſtament of John Wilkinſon: The Tenor of which ſaid Will and Teſtament is as follows, that is to ſay,

In the Name of GOD, Amen. John Wilkinſon, late of the Princeſs Amelia, being of ſound and diſpoſing Mind and Memory, make this my laſt Will and Teſtament; firſt and principally commend my Soul into the Hands of the Almighty God, hoping for Remiſſion of all my Sins, through the Merits of Jeſus Chriſt, my bleſſed Saviour and Redeemer, and my Body to the Earth or Sea, as it ſhall pleaſe God; and as for ſuch worldly Eſtate and Effects which I ſhall be poſſeſſed of, or tilled (meaning entitled) unto at the Time of my Deceaſe, I give and bequeath the ſame followeth, that is to ſay, unto my loving Friend John Daunt, of Liſbon, in the Kingdom of Portugal, Victualler, all ſuch Salary or Salaries, Prize-Money, Bounty-Money, Wages, Tickets, Short-Allowance-Money, Smart-Money, and all other Sum or Sums of Money that ſhall be due to me at my Deceaſe: And I do hereby grant the ſaid John Daunt, whole and ſole Executor of my laſt Will and Teſtament, and I do hereby revoke and diſannul other Wills, at any Time by me before made: And I do hereby nominate, conſtitute, and appoint the ſaid John Daunt, Exctu^or (meaning Executor) of this my laſt Will and Teſtament; and I do give and bequeath unto my ſaid Executor, all the reſt and of my Eſtate whatſoever, both real and perſonal, hereby revoking and making void all others and former Wills by me heretofore made as aforeſaid, declare this to be my laſt Will and Teſtament. In Witneſs whereof, I have hereunto ſet my Hand and Seal, this 5th Day of May, in the Year of our Lord, 1747. Jo^n. Wilkinson.

L. S. Signed, ſealed, publiſhed, and declared, by the ſaid John Wilkinſon, (meaning by the ſaid John Wilkinſon) as and for his laſt Will and Teſtament, in the Preſents (meaning Preſence) of us who have hereunto ſubſcribed our Names, as Witneſs, in the Preſents (meaning Preſence) of the Teſtator. Thomas Carty, Dinish Collins.

With an Intent to defraud Thomas Noads, againſt the Form of the Statute in ſuch Caſe made and provided. There are ſeveral other Counts in the Indictment for publiſhing the ſaid forged Will; with the like Intention to defraud the ſaid Noads, &c.

Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to inquire whether he be guilty of the Felony and Forgery whereof he ſtands indicted, in Manner and Form as he ſtands indicted, or not guilty.

Mr. Bamber Gaſcoyne having opened the Indictment,

The Honourable Mr. Hume Campbell (Brother to the Earl of Marchmont) ſpoke as follows: May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counſel on the Side of this Proſecution. You have heard from the Indictment, that the Perſon who now ſtands a Priſoner before you, is charged with the Forgery of a pretended Will of one John Wilkinſon, in order to defraud Thomas Noads of a conſiderable Sum of Money. And, Gentlemen, was there nothing more requiſite in this Caſe, than to open the Evidence which ſhews the Priſoner's Guilt; had no Artifice been uſed, no extraordinary Attempts been made, to prevent or to prejudice this Trial, I ſhould ſcarce have appeared here to give you any Trouble at all. And now I am here, I ſhould have been glad, if the Conduct of a Perſon acting for the Priſoner, and who now hears me, had permitted me to ſtate only ſuch Facts, as prove the Juſtice of the Proſecution. But from what happened this Seſſion as well as the laſt, in relation to this Trial; from an Intimation that the baffled Attempt to try the Proſecutor on the Evidence of the Priſoner, would be turned into an Endeavour to avoid or diſcredit the Teſtimony of that Proſecutor; it becomes neceſſary for me to relate Facts of an earlier Date than I ſhould otherwiſe have done, and Circumſtances I ſhould have wiſhed not to mention: Theſe will prepare you for what may ariſe in the Courſe of the Trial, and enable you to underſtand what, I gueſs, the learned Gentlemen I ſee here on the other Side will inſiſt on.

You all, doubtleſs, have heard, that ſome Years ago, in the Time of War, ſeveral Privateers, four in Number, were fitted out by the Merchants of Briſtol and London, by the Name of the Royal Family: On Board one of theſe Ships (the Princeſs Amelia) one John Wilkinſon entered as a Midſhipman: The Ships put to Sea, and having taken Prizes of great Value, Mr. Henry Caſamaijor of Briſtol was appointed Agent for the Payment of the Sailors, for whom it was thought moſt convenient they ſhould be paid at Briſtol; but as ſome Perſons might have Occaſion to call for their Money in London, Mr. Caſamaijor employed a Perſon in Town, who was to write to him, that Money might be remitted to pay them; that Perſon was Thomas Noads, a Gentleman who has unfortunately, by that Situation, brought his Name into Queſtion in this Place, and is become (God only knows why) the Object of the Reſentment of a Man whoſe Name I muſt preſently mention to you, though much to his Diſcredit and Diſhonour.

Mr. Noads being thus employed, and in Auguſt 1750 Notice having been given that all the Sailors might receive their Prize-Money of the proper Agent; in the February following the Priſoner at the Bar conceived he might get Money by ſetting up the forged Will and Power of a Perſon he probably thought would never appear to call it in Queſtion, or at leaſt that he had ſo much Art as to avoid a Diſcovery, or evade the Juſtice and Laws of his Country.

The Priſoner happened to be at a Houſe near Charing-Croſs, a Houſe of bad Fame, with a Man whoſe true Name now comes out to be Thomas Williams: To him the Priſoner applied, and deſired he would co-operate with him, telling him he would get him Money enough; that he ſhould wear a Sword, and live like a Gentleman: The Man did not very well underſtand in what Manner this was to be contrived; but Murphy, who it ſeems is pretty ready at Invention, diſcloſed his Method of executing his Scheme in this Manner: If you will, ſays he to Williams, appear as the Executor, I will forge the Will of John Wilkinſon: We ſhall go together, you as recently arrived from Portugal, and I as your Acquaintance: We ſhall get the Money without Suſpicion. Williams was a Novice, and terrified at that which might reach his Life, he did not care to join in what the Priſoner propoſed. You don't know, ſays the Priſoner, how many there are in London that live by forging Wills and Powers: Why, you may dreſs like a Gentleman, appear in good Company, and wear a Sword. Go down Stairs, continues the Priſoner, and I'll make a Will and Power for this John Wilkinſon, that ſhall intitle you to his Prize-Money: Your Name ſhall be John Daunt. John Daunt! Who is John Daunt? replied Williams. He is a Man, anſwers the Priſoner, whom I knew when at Liſbon with the Privateers; he kept a Public-Houſe there, where Wilkinſon, myſelf, and others, uſed to reſort; this will make the Story tell; for we will ſay, that you, John Daunt, of Liſbon, a Houſe-Keeper, are come over with this Will and Power of Wilkinſon, in order to get the Money, and that he made his Will to you on the Account of a Debt of about Seventeen Moidores; and I'll go along with you as a Friend, and ſhall get the Money. By this Artifice, and ſome Threats, Williams was prevailed on to aſſent, and left Murphy to do as he pleaſed. Soon after, Murphy called him up, and read over to him the Will he had made. The Will, Gentlemen, is here to be ſhewn to you, with two Witneſſes Names to it. Then Murphy ſaid to Williams, Now, you are John Daunt, the Executor. After he had read over both the Will and Power, freſh forged, he conducted him to the Lodgings of Mr. Noads, where the Money was to be received. The Letter of Attorney was firſt produced. Mr. Noads aſked a very natural Queſtion, viz. Where is this Wilkinſon? Here Murphy made a Miſtake, by producing the Power firſt; but, I ſuppoſe, they thought to get it upon the Letter of Attorney; but finding that would not do, Murphy anſwered, Wilkinſon went from Liſbon to the Coaſt of Guiney, and there he died. Then, ſays Noads, I can't pay the Money on a Letter of Attorney. But we have his Will as well as Power, replies Murphy; and then the Will in Queſtion was produced, and Williams paſſed at this Time for Daunt the Executor. Mr. Noads told them, the Will was nothing 'till proved. Daunt was to paſs for a Stranger, and as unacquainted with what was to be done in this Country: and therefore the Priſoner took upon himſelf the Conduct of the Whole, and aſked Noads where they were to go to prove the Will, who recommended them to Mr. Creſpigny, (a Gentleman of very great Character in his Profeſſion, and employed by the Managers as their Proctor); therefore they deſired Mr. Noads to write the Name on the Back of the Will, and he wrote Creſpigny accordingly; then Murphy, and Williams, by the Name of Daunt, (for at this Time neither Mr. Creſpigny nor Mr. Noads had the leaſt Suſpicion that he bore any other Name) went to Mr. Creſpigny, where they produced this Will again as the Will of John Wilkinſon, who, they ſaid, was dead on the Coaſt of Guiney. Mr. Creſpigny's Clerk wrote it down, and went with them before a learned Doctor, where Williams (as Daunt) took the Oath uſual on ſuch Occaſions, and the Probate was granted; but not being able to pay for the Probate, they told Mr. Creſpigny's Clerk, that they were poor Sailors, and had nothing but what they were to get by the Will, and therefore they could not pay him then; but if he would be ſo good to ſend the Probate to Mr. Noads, the Money ſhould be paid out of the Prize-Money. After this they came again to Mr. Noads to receive the Money. The neceſſary Form was to give Mr. Noads a Letter of Attorney, to receive it in the Name of Daunt, and then he was to pay it to them: Mr. Noads wrote to Mr. Caſamaijor at Briſtol, to let him know of the Application made to him; and as Mr. Caſamaijor was always deſirous to avoid Clamour, on Account of detaining any Prize-Money, he immediately remitted to Mr. Noads what was due for Wilkinſon's Share; but the Letter of Attorney made to Noads not being executed before a Magiſtrate, Murphy, with Williams, by the Name of John Daunt, went before the then Lord-Mayor of this City, and Williams (as Daunt) there re-executed the Letter of Attorney, to which Murphy was a Witneſs: They then returned to Noads, and received the whole Money due to Wilkinſon, amounting to thirty-ſeven Pounds; and having given Noads a Guinea for his Trouble, and paid Mr. Creſpigny's Clerk his Bill for the Probate of the Will, a Receipt was given, and ſigned John Daunt, Executor, in the Preſence of Murphy. Dated the 20th of February, 1750-1. It is in theſe Words:

* Taken with Leave of the Court by T. Gurney, Short-Hand Writer, at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Bailey.

Received of Thomas Noads 37*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* being ſo much he received from Mr. Caſamaijor, per Probate of the Will of John Wilkinſon, in full Balance of his Account. Signed John Daunt, Executor.

You will obſerve the Date, it is the 20th of February, 1750-1. Thus the Matter reſted without Suſpicion. Mr. Noads had paid the Money, little imagining what he had been thus tranſacting as a Servant, was paying 37*l.* out of his own Pocket, in his own Wrong, or that he ſhould, by the Artifice of any Man, be called in Queſtion, not only for his Character, but even for his Life; yet ſuch a Man there is in this Country: But I truſt in God it will not be long before Vengeance overtakes him.

There was not a Suſpicion of the Tranſaction 'till January 1752, or thereabouts, when John Wilkinſon, whoſe Will was proved as dead, and his Prize-Money paid, arrived in England. Then Mr. Noads found he had been cheated, and therefore he determined to do, what every body will commend him for, to diſcover and bring to Juſtice the Contrivers and Perpetrators of this Iniquity, little imagining, that he ſhould by that Means incite a capital Proſecution againſt himſelf. Murphy, at the Time of the Tranſaction, in order to impoſe upon Noads, pretended that he acted only as a Friend to aſſiſt a Stranger from Liſbon, and therefore, in the Preſence of Noads, demanded Half a Guinea of Daunt for his Trouble. You perceive, Gentlemen, the Artifice of the Priſoner: From this ſmall Demand it was natural for Mr. Noads to think that Mr. Murphy acted as a Friend and Aſſiſtant only; but as ſoon as he got out of Noads's Houſe, he made a very different Demand; he inſiſted upon Half the Money received, beſides two Guineas for making the Will, and he threatened Daunt with Hanging, if he refuſed to pay it.

Mr. Noads was now endeavouring to find out the Men, and bring them to Juſtice. He inquired of all the Sailors whom he knew. Murphy had gone by his own Name, but John Daunt had imported his from Liſbon; therefore it is plain, Murphy might be diſcovered, though Daunt might long lie hid: Accordingly, Mr. Noads having got Information that Murphy was in London, (this was about two Years after the Forgery) he inſtantly applied to one of the worthy Aldermen of this City for a Warrant to take him up; but the Bird was flown, not to be found in that Juriſdiction. He got at laſt Intelligence that he was in Surry, and immediately had the Warrant backed by a Juſtice of the Peace of that County, put it into the Hands of a Conſtable, who with other Aſſiſtants ſecured him. Murphy knew not at firſt for what he was taken; perhaps he flattered himſelf that this Iniquity, committed ſo long ago, was not diſcovered; but as ſoon as Noads appeared, which was after he was in Hold, his Conſcience ſtruck him; he then knew what the Matter was, that it was a capital Offence, and therefore broke from the Officer and ran away; but he was ſoon taken again, and brought before the Sitting Alderman at Guildhall; and upon the Oath of Mr. Noads, upon his Charge, and at his Proſecution, he was committed for the Forgery now to be tried. The Defence he then made, was not that he was perſuaded by his Proſecutor to commit this Forgery, but that he was innocent, and went only as a Friend of John Daunt's, whom he knew at Liſbon, to receive of Noads what Daunt pretended to be due to him as Executor of Wilkinſon; that he knew nothing at all of any Forgery, and therefore it was a very cruel Caſe, and hard upon him. However, he was committed to the Compter. He had not long been there, before a Perſon got Acceſs to him, whoſe Profeſſion I know not, but his Buſineſs was to perſuade Murphy, that it was in his Power to pervert the Laws, to ſcreen the Guilty, and ſpill Innocent Blood. This Perſon's Name is Goddard. What was the Artifice made uſe of? It makes me tremble to think of it; it was an Attempt to make the Priſoner a Witneſs againſt his Proſecutor, and puniſh him for the other's Guilt. If this ſhould be ſuffered to prevail, farewell all Proſecutions for Iniquity. If ſuch a Perſon can have the Ear of a Magiſtrate, and get a Priſoner admitted an Evidence againſt his Proſecutor; if a Felon may be allowed to charge his Proſecutor with the very Felony he ſtands committed for, the Law is made in vain, and Magiſtracy will only be a Terror to the Injured.

This Attempt Goddard conceived and perpetrated. He procured the Priſoner to be carried from the Gaol to turn Evidence againſt Mr. Noads. One would ſcarce believe any Juſtices could be found to join in ſuch a Scheme; yet he impoſed on two Juſtices ſo far, that they not only admitted the Information of the Felon, but went in Perſon to the Grand Jury to procure a Bill to be found to hang that Man who had been injured, who had ſeized and proſecuted that Evidence. Shocking as this is, yet ſuch was the Attempt, and it is this ſtrange Iniquity which calls me to this Place.

Thus far Iniquity proſpered: But there is a ſuperintendent Power, and we may thank the Almighty for it, who here ſtopped its Progreſs.

Mr. Noads continued his Inquiry after Daunt, for Murphy never would inform him who he was: At laſt he providentially diſcovered, that John Daunt's true Name was Thomas Williams, and that he was confined in the Gaol of Corke in Ireland: From thence he has been brought, and is now here to be produced as a Witneſs before you.

After Goddard and his Aſſociates had got Information that Williams was diſcovered, and might be produced; that Mr. Noads was a Perſon whoſe Character could be eſtabliſhed beyond the Power of any Stain from Goddard, (though I am informed he has attacked many higher Characters) the next Contrivance was to defeat all the Evidence; and for this Purpoſe a Bill of Indictment was procured againſt Mr. Noads, the original Proſecutor; againſt Williams, a Witneſs they knew for the King; and againſt another Man, who knew nothing of the Offence; but Conſcience told them he might be a Witneſs, as he was acquainted with Murphy's Hand; he was therefore clapped into the Indictment. Having effected this Stratagem, of putting the King's three Witneſſes into one Indictment, for the identical Offence with which the Priſoner is charged, they endeavoured to impoſe upon this Court, and ſtruggled hard to get theſe three Men tried firſt upon the Evidence of Murphy.

It came before the Court the laſt Seſſions, and the Court did that which was juſt. The preſent Indictment was ordered to come on firſt, that you, Gentlemen, might have the Whole of this Caſe laid before you by thoſe who were the original Proſecutors, and who brought this Tranſaction to Light. And it will be proved to you, with this additional Circumſtance, that when the other Indictment was found againſt Noads, Williams, and Carter; the Will being produced from Doctors-Commons; and Murphy having declared before Goddard, and other Perſons then preſent, that it was all of his own Hand-Writing; Goddard ſoon after had the Aſſurance to apply to Peter Edwards, (who brought the Will from the Prerogative-Office, and heard Murphy's Declaration) and importuned him to conceal that Part of his Evidence.

This, Gentlemen, is the Nature of the Caſe. You are only to try whether the Priſoner forged the Will of John Wilkinſon, with Intent to defraud Mr. Noads, whom he has defrauded of 37*l.* We ſhall produce the Will, and prove the actual doing of it by the Priſoner, his Confeſſion of its being his own Hand-writing, and that Wilkinſon is now alive.

When that is done, I make no Doubt but you will be ſatisfied that you ought, according to your Oaths, to find the Priſoner guilty.

I have ſaid nothing, I hope, to bear harder upon him than the Facts will warrant.

As to that Man Goddard, whom I have ſo often named to you, I could not do leſs than place him in the Light I have done: If I gueſs right, the Queſtion will not be, whether the Priſoner is guilty or not, but whether the Artifices which Goddard has uſed ſhall be ſufficient to ſtifle the Evidence, and prevent its being offered for your Conſideration. For that Reaſon I have ſtated the Caſe at large.

My Lord will give us an Opportunity, I doubt not, to ſupport the Character of Mr. Noads, if they attack it, I have not the leaſt Doubt but they will repent it, if they do, as I hope they will every Part they have acted in this Affair. We ſhall now proceed to call our Witneſſes.

Peter Edwards ſworn.

Edwards. I am an Officer in the Commons in the Prerogative-Office.

[He produces a Will of John Wilkinſon.]

Coun. Where had you that?

Edwards. I had it out of the Prerogative Office, it was filed there.

Coun. Who delivered it to you?

Edwards. It was delivered to me by the Record-keeper's Clerk; he has them Wills in his Cuſtody always.

Coun. for the Priſ. Did you ſee the Record-keeper's Clerk take it off the File?

Edwards. Yes, I did. [It is read in Court to this Purport.]

'In the Name of God, Amen. John Wilkinſon, late of the Princeſs Amelia, 'being of ſound and diſpoſing Mind, &c. as ſet out in the Indictment. In 'Witneſs whereof I have hereunto ſet my Hand and Seal, this 5th Day 'of May, in the Year of our Lord 1747. John Wilkinſon.'

'Signed, ſealed, publiſhed, and declared, by the ſaid John Wilkinſon, 'as and for his laſt Will and Teſtament, in the Preſents of us who have 'hereunto ſubſcribed our Names, as Witneſſes, in the Preſents of the 'ſaid Teſtator.

Thomas Carty, Diniſh Collins.'

Coun. Has the Priſoner ſeen this Will?

Edwards. He ſaw it the laſt Seſſions, I was preſent, it was at the Coffee-houſe in the Old-Bailey.

Coun. Who delivered it to him?

Edwards. I gave it to Mr. Goddard, and Mr. Goddard handed it to him.

Coun. Did he read it over?

Edwards. He looked it over, and owned he wrote the Body of the Will.

Coun. What were his Words?

Edwards. He said he wrote the Body of the Will, but that Noads either signed the Name John Wilkinson, or one of the Witnesses Names.

Coun. Did he say Thomas Noads?

Edwards. He said Noads, I cannot be positive whether he mentioned Thomas.

Coun. Did Mr. Goddard come to you afterwards, and what was the Conversation?

Edwards. He came to the Office some Time afterwards, I believe the next Week after, and told me not to take any Notice of what passed: That I only attended with the Will as an Officer of the Court; and he desired me not to take in the Conversation at any time.

Coun. Did he give you any Reason?

[Here his Lordship interposed, because what Goddard said, was not Evidence to affect the Prisoner.]

Cross-Examination.

Coun. for the Pris. Did you attend as an Officer of the Court last Sessions?

Edwards. I did, I attended with the Will before the Grand Jury, when the Prisoner at the Bar was there as a Witness.

Coun. for the Pris. What did you attend for?

Edwards. To produce the Will as I have done now.

Coun. for the Pris. Was it before or after you went to the Grand Jury, you heard the Prisoner own he wrote the Body of the Will?

Edwards. Before I went to the Grand Jury, the Prisoner spoke to Goddard, and then he confessed writing the Body of the Will.

Coun. for the Pris. Which Name did he confess he wrote?

Edwards. I cannot be certain; if I could, I would tell it.

Coun. for the Pris. How do you know that a Probate has been granted?

Edwards. Here is a Memorandum of a Probate being granted on the Back of it.

Coun. for the Pris. What is the other Mark on the Back for?

Edwards. It is that the Testator was late belonging to his Majesty's Ship the Amelia.

Coun. for the Pris. Have you seen the Probate?

Edwards. No, I have not.

Coun. for the Pris. Whose Hand-writing is that Memorandum?

Edwards. It was Mr. Crespigny's Clerk. That is filled up by the Proctor's Clerk, in order to fix the Seal. Before it is sealed, there is an Entry made by some Officer, to shew that this is a Person that died beyond Sea.

Coun. for the Crown. What is that Entry made on the Back of it for?

Edwards. That is the Foundation of granting out the Administration.

Thomas Noads called.

Prisoner's Counsel, Mr. (afterwards Serjeant) Nares.

My Lord, though I am of Counsel in this Case with the Prisoner at the Bar, I shall think myself no farther bound to defend him, than he shall actually appear to be, or at least may be presumed to be, innocent of this Accusation. On which Side soever the Villainy is, I sincerely wish it may be detected; and if I knew, or was at Liberty to presume, that the Facts now stated by Mr. Hume are as he represents them, I would throw up my Brief directly.

But every Man, my Lord, is by Law presumed to be innocent, 'till he is proved to be guilty; therefore it would ill become me, who am of Counsel with the Prisoner, to presume him otherwise; and therefore your Lordship will excuse me, if I take such Objections in point of Law, in the Course of this Trial, as either are, or at least my weak Judgment induces me to believe, may be of Service to the Prisoner.

In the first Place, my Lord, Noads, who is now offered as an Evidence on Behalf of the Prosecution, stands indicted for the same Crime for which the Prisoner at the Bar is now on his Trial. The Indictment is found, and principally, if not solely, upon the Prisoner's Evidence; therefore I must first desire the Indictment may be read. [It is produced.]

I must submit it to your Lordship, that Noads in this Case is not a Witness. I will not take upon me to say, that no Accomplice can be a Witness; to be sure it is laid down in many Cases that he may, and it is often absolutely necessary he should be so; therefore I shall not take up your Lordship's Time in insisting on a Point which seems now to be settled: But it seems to me by no Means settled, that an Accomplice, against whom an Indictment is found, is admissible as a Witness; therefore I beg Leave to state what are my Reasons why the Law appears to be doubtful in this Particular.

I shall very candidly own, that in Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown, it is said, that although an Accomplice be indicted, he may be a Witness; but then it is likewise said, in the same Paragraph, that he may be a Witness, if he is not indicted; and that Mr. Serjeant Hawkins seems to lay down in the first Place as Law, and cites Authorities for it; and from the Expression, if he be not indicted, this Conclusion seems plainly to be deduced, that if he is indicted he cannot be a Witness.

Supposing then the Authorities are both Ways, I shall think myself justified in saying, there is a Doubt in the Case; and if it should remain a Doubt with your Lordship, I dare say your Lordship will determine on the merciful Side, in Favour of Life.

My Lord Hale, in his first Volume of his History of the Pleas of the Crown, 305, takes Notice of the same Doctrine that is laid down by Mr. Serjeant Hawkins, and after stating the several Instances in which an Accomplice may be admitted, he goes on and says, "But that Person "must never be indicted;" and speaks of his Capacity of being a Witness, in case he is indicted, with so much Diffidence, that he seems to have a great Doubt whether he is to be admitted or not; and I cannot help saying, that there is, in point of Reason, great Weight in such an Objection; for it seems exceeding strange to me, if not absurd, to say, that in point of Law, the most minute pecuniary Interest in the World, though ever so remote, shall take off a Man's Testimony, and render him incapable of being a Witness, as not being unbiassed and impartial, and at the same Time to say, a Person can be an unbiassed and impartial Witness, who is indicted for the same Crime, and is swearing to save his own Life (which must necessarily be the Consequence in the present Instance), for if the Prisoner is convicted, there can be no Evidence against the Witness.

As to the Minuteness of a pecuniary Interest to take away a Person's Capacity of being a Witness, I shall only mention one Instance, which I have known in Practice; which is, that on an Indictment for stopping up or obstructing an Highway, which is laid to be used for Carts and Carriages, no one of the Inhabitants, who are bound to repair, can be admitted as a Witness to prove it is not a Way for Carts and Carriages, but only for Horses; because it is to diminish an Expence to which he is liable. And this Rule holds, though the Number of Inhabitants who contribute to the Repairs amount to ten thousand.

But supposing your Lordship should think that the View of saving Life, or securing personal Safety, though immediate, is not considered, in point of Law, as having the same Influence on a Witness, as so small and so remote a pecuniary Interest as I have mentioned, there is an Objection to Noads's being an Evidence arising from such an Interest.

It has been opened by Mr. Hume, and Noads is now called to prove, that he hath been defrauded of 37 l. which Sum he paid out of his own Pocket, by an Imposition put upon him by the Forgery of this Will, it being produced to him as the Will of John Wilkinson, who was on Board the Amelia Privateer, by his pretended personal Representative; and it is likewise laid in the Indictment to be to Noads's Damage.

And I must submit it to your Lordship, that 'tis a Rule of Evidence, that no Person can possibly be admitted as a Witness to overturn a Fact, the Overturning of which may be anyways beneficial to himself.

In order to state this Objection as fully as I can, I beg Leave to mention the Words of Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown, 433, and apply what is there said to the present Objection.

It is there laid down as a good Exception against a Witness, that his Interest is concerned; "That he is either to be a Gainer or a Loser by "the Event of the Cause, whether such Advantage be direct and immediate, or consequential only: And this seems to be the Reason, why "he who is Bail for the Defendant cannot be a Witness for him without "Consent. Also upon the same Ground it is agreed, that he who borrows Money upon an usurious Contract, cannot be a Witness upon an "Information for the Usury, unless he hath paid the Money, whether "such Information be brought by himself, or any other; for, if in such "case a Man might be a Witness, he would in effect swear for himself, "by proving a Matter which may avoid his own Contract. And upon "the like Reason it hath been ruled, that he who has been imposed upon "by a Sleight, to set his Hand to a Note for more Money than he intended, is no Witness on an Information for the Cheat, because a "Conviction may be a Means to avoid the Note, by being made use of "as a Motive to influence the Jury: And for the like Reason it is generally agreed, that he whose Property may be prejudiced by a Forgery, "is no Evidence to prove it: And it hath been adjudged, that he, "against whom a Verdict is given, cannot be a Witness to prove Perjury "in the Evidence; so that, if there be but the remotest Possibility even "of its being thrown out to a Jury, that the Witness can avail himself "by his Testimony, he can be no legal Witness."

These are the Words of the Book: Let us then apply the Doctrine here laid down to the present Case.

It is very plain, Noads, as it has been opened, has paid 37 l. upon this Will being produced to him as a real Will. This certainly was an Imposition on him. Now the Question is, how far any Advantage can arise to Noads one Way or the other, from the Consequence of this Conviction: The Money was paid to Williams, who personated one Daunt, the pretended Executor of Wilkinson's Will: Noads might bring an Action for the Money against Williams, as Money had and received to his Use, being procured by a Deceit: In order to prove the Deceit, it may be necessary to shew the Will, of which Williams pretended to be Executor, and by Colour of which he received the Money, was forged; and though I will not contend that Verdicts in criminal Prosecutions are in general to be given in Evidence in Actions, yet I cannot see why the Copy of the Indictment, in which the Will is set forth, and of the Conviction in consequence of it, might not be a proper, if not necessary Evidence to prove the Deceit; if not, the mentioning it to the Jury would have a great Influence on them; and if that is Law which is laid down in Hawkins, an Advantage, even of that Sort only, would be sufficient, in point of Law, to take away a Man's Testimony.

For these Reasons, my Lord, I beg Leave to insist that Noads is not a proper Witness, as being an Accomplice indicted; and if he is as such, yet if he hath that Interest or Advantage arising to him from the Consequence of this Trial, in respect of the Money he has paid, as I have hinted at, that will be sufficient to destroy his Testimony.

Second Counsel for the Prisoner, Mr. (afterwards Serjeant) Davy.

I do assure your Lordship, the Matter hinted at by Mr. Hume is entirely new to us, and if we had any Reason to believe it to be Truth, your Lordship would not have been troubled with the Appearance of either of us here; and without doubt, we cannot be justified in deserting the Prisoner, as he is to be tried for his Life, so he may be sure of all the Assistance we can give him under your Lordship's Directions.

Where a Man is at all influenced in the Evidence he is to offer to your Lordship, by any Interest he may receive, either pecuniary, or any Advantage he may have in escaping Punishment, or what not, it will be such a Bias, that will take off that Credit to his Testimony, and therefore be the Cause of his Rejection.

The first Objection is, that he himself stands indicted. I take this to be a Rule, that if he had been indicted in the same Indictment, he might come in as a Witness, supposing he would confess himself guilty, as in Sir Peter Crosby's Case, 1 Hale's P. C. 303. It was held in the Star-Chamber, That if two Defendants be charged for a Crime, one shall not be examined against the other to convict him of an Offence, unless the Party examined confess himself guilty, and then he shall be admitted.

This will account for the Distinction made by my Lord Chief Justice Hale, mentioned by Mr. Nares; for my Lord Hale's Idea of it is, that no Man can turn Evidence for himself; if that is so, your Lordship will see whether there is any Distinction in the Case, when there are two Indictments in the same Case.

This will come still stronger, when it is considered that the Prisoner stands as an Accuser on the Back of that Indictment which is found against

Noads,

Noads, and that which Noads is by and bye to be tried for. If he can give Evidence againſt Murphy, and convict him, he will prevent that: No Intereſt can be more immediate, than that he ſhould give Evidence to take off the Teſtimony of another Man from convicting him of a capital Crime immediately.

The Order was, Murphy being firſt indicted, ſhould be firſt tried: Your Lordſhip will obſerve who ſqueaked firſt. This Indictment againſt Murphy was never found 'till ſuch Time that there was a Charge againſt Noads for this very Forgery: And, my Lord, this Objection comes in ſome meaſure ſtronger by the Evidence of Mr. Edwards: He has been called in to prove a Kind of Confeſſion of the Priſoner of this Forgery. Now all Confeſſions muſt not be taken in Part, but together: The ſame Evidence proves Noads alſo to have a Hand in it, becauſe Murphy confeſſed he wrote the Body of it, and Noads either the Atteſtation or another Name. An Objection will come here in Point of Intereſt: Mr. Noads is the Perſon charged in the Indictment to have been defrauded by this Murphy; for ſo it has been opened by the Gentlemen on the Part of the Proſecution: Can't he avail himſelf of this afterwards? And as he is immediately concerned in this to ſave his own Life, he will diſable Murphy by his Conviction, who is Proſecutor againſt him in the other Indictment; and under ſuch a Bias he ought not to be received as a Witneſs.

The Caſe in Hawkins, about a Woman who had indicted her Son for fraudulently obtaining from her a Note of 100 l. intending to give her 50*l.* Lord Hardwicke in the Caſe of the King and Bray mentions that Caſe; my Lord Hardwicke's Words are, That nothing but that great Authority could ſupport it; but he ſays this too in that Caſe of the King and Bray, That nothing is more unſettled than the Rule of Evidence: The Determinations often turn upon ſome right or wrong Application of that Rule I have mentioned, and that is, the Bias Witneſſes are under when they come to give Evidence.

Whether Noads is not under ſuch a Bias, is not the Queſtion; but whether that Bias is not ſo ſtrong, that it is a material Objection to his being received as a Witneſs, I leave to your Lordſhip.

Mr. Hume Campbell's Reply.

My Lord, I ſhould ſcarce think it juſtifiable to take up any of your Lordſhip's Time to anſwer the Objections, which the Gentlemen, by ſtating with ſo much Candour, have really anſwered themſelves, was it not that the preſent Queſtion is of the utmoſt Importance to Futurity, in the Attainment of the great Ends of Protection and Juſtice. We are now to conſider it as a Matter of Doubt, whether every Criminal by turning the Charge againſt his Proſecutor, may not evade Juſtice, and prevent the Court from having any Evidence produced on the Part of the Crown.

There are always two Ways in which Objections to Evidence are made; one is to the Competency of a Witneſs, which is a total Rejection of his Teſtimony; and the other is to his Credit, which is proper only for the Conſideration of the Jury.

In the preſent Caſe, the Gentlemen don't chuſe their Objection ſhould be directed at Mr. Noads's Credit; that would not anſwer their Purpoſe, becauſe we can eſtabliſh his Credit beyond a Doubt. Their Attempt, therefore, is totally to reject his Teſtimony; nothing leſs can afford a Poſſibility of ſupporting the Scheme of turning the Priſoner's Evidence againſt his Proſecutor, or of making the extraordinary Behaviour of the two Juſtices, to bring this Matter about, of any Effect.

I have watched to hear if they could produce an Inſtance, wherein it was ever held, that a Proſecutor's Teſtimony ſhould be rejected, to receive that of a Priſoner charged and committed originally upon ſuch Proſecutor's Oath; and my learned Friends have not offered to ſtate to your Lordſhip a ſingle Authority for it: The Authority quoted out of Hawkins is ſtrongly againſt them: My Lord Chief Juſtice Hale puts it rightly; it may go to his Credit, and may be weighed by the Jury, but it never can go to the total Rejection of his Evidence. There is no Colour therefore, why your Lordſhip ſhould not hear the Witneſs.

The next Objection is very ſingular; it is, that becauſe, by a forged Will of a living Man, Williams has defrauded Noads of 37 l. and Noads may bring an Action againſt him for impoſing upon him, therefore Noads cannot be a Witneſs to prove Murphy guilty of forging that Will, which, whether counterfeit or genuine, leaves Mr. Noads equally defrauded.

I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, that there is not a ſufficient Foundation to ſupport either of the Objections, which, your Lordſhip obſerves, may be attended with thoſe perilous Conſequences which I pointed out, and endeavoured to prepare the Court for, in the Opening of the Caſe.

Mr. (afterwards Lord Chief Juſtice) Pratt's Reply.

In a common Caſe, I think, I ſhould hardly have thought it worth while to give your Lordſhip any Trouble; but the preſent Objection is of the laſt Conſequence to the Juſtice of this Kingdom; for, if it prevails, it will teach every Criminal a Method how to ſkreen himſelf from the Law, and no Proſecutor will ever be able to apprehend a Felon, without running the Riſque of putting his own Life in Danger.

This therefore is a Point which deſerves a very ſerious Conſideration. Murphy, who appears now the Priſoner on this preſent Indictment, was, upon hearing Counſel on both Sides, ordered to be tried firſt in favour of Mr. Noads. Now, if the Objection prevails, it will not only go to Noads, but likewiſe to Williams and Carter, who are both indicted with Mr. Noads by the Priſoner, and theſe are all the Witneſſes who are capable of proving the Forgery upon him; the Conſequence then will be, that not only the preſent Priſoner muſt be acquitted for want of the King's Evidence being heard, but Mr. Noads muſt be tried immediately after, and this very Priſoner's Evidence muſt be admitted againſt him. Your Lordſhip will obſerve, what ſtrange perverted Proceedings there would be upon theſe Occaſions, if, where two croſs Indictments are depending, one brought by the Proſecutor, and the other by the Criminal himſelf, it ſhould be held juſt to render the Proſecutor's Teſtimony incompetent upon the firſt Indictment that comes to be tried. If this be the Caſe, Mr. Noads would have done right to have come to the Court, and deſired to have been firſt tried; becauſe then, the Priſoner being ſet aſide as having been indicted for the ſame Offence, Mr. Noads would have been clearly acquitted; and upon the ſecond Indictment, being clear of Objection by the Acquittal, muſt have convicted the Priſoner.

But to conſider the Principle of Law upon which this Kind of Teſtimony ſtands. This then I take to be a clear Maxim and Ground of Law, and is univerſal, That every Man in this Kingdom is a competent Witneſs on an Indictment in Behalf of the Crown, unleſs he is convicted or attainted of ſome ſcandalous Offence. There muſt be a Conviction before the Witneſs can be diſqualified; which proves that a mere Accuſation or Indictment cannot render him incompetent, however it may affect his Credit; for, in point of Law, every Man is preſumed innocent 'till he is proved guilty: Nor is this denied, but admitted by my Lord Chief Juſtice Hale, though what has been cited upon the preſent Occaſion, is confined to Caſes of confeſſed Accomplices and joint Indictments; as to which his Words are, that ſuch Perſons, though indicted, may be admitted as Witneſſes if they confeſs themſelves guilty, but their Teſtimony is not concluſive to the Jury; for they may as well conſider the Credibility or not Credibility of the Witneſs, as the Matter he ſwears. And this is all the Diſtinction he makes even in this Caſe, that though one be indicted, it is not an Objection to his Competency, but may be to his Credit. Nay, in Caſes of Treaſon, he is clear, that ſuch a Perſon is not barely a competent Witneſs, but may be one of the two Witneſſes required by the Statute to an Overt-Act of Treaſon. The only Qualification to the Rule is this, that ſuch a Witneſs, ſo indicted, ſhould confeſs himſelf guilty of the Crime for which he ſtands indicted, which undoubtedly is right; for, if the Court was to admit him a Witneſs to prove his own Innocence, that would be a clear Objection to him; but, if he confeſſes, he comes only to charge another, and not to clear himſelf. But theſe are not like the preſent Caſe. What is the Caſe here?

Mr. Noads is the original Proſecutor, and preferred the firſt Indictment. The Priſoner afterwards indicts the ſame Mr. Noads, by a ſeparate Indictment, for the ſame Offence. Mr. Noads does not come here to give Evidence that he in Conjunction with the Priſoner forged this Will; he does not come under the Light of an Accomplice, but inſiſts upon his Innocence, and muſt at this Time be deemed in Law as innocent, with regard to this Fact, as any Man in Court. This then is a material Difference between joint and ſeparate Indictments; to which Purpoſe my Lord Hale in that very Book puts this Caſe, that if A, B, and C, are ſeparately indicted, A, one of the Perſons indicted, may be Evidence for B and C, and they may both be acquitted on his Teſtimony. Mr. Noads is indicted in one ſeparate Indictment, and the Priſoner in another. Can there be any Ground to ſay, that Mr. Noads, the Perſon defrauded, and the firſt Indictor, ſhall be no Witneſs againſt the Priſoner, for this Reaſon only, becauſe he has been afterwards indicted by him? Was ever a Caſe like this before? That ſix Weeks after the Priſoner had been committed he ſhould be permitted to turn Evidence againſt Mr. Noads, who was the only Perſon defrauded, in the firſt Inſtance, by the Forgery; who took him up, and confronted him before the the Alderman; who charged him upon his own Oath with this Offence uncontradicted; who cauſed him to be committed, who indicted him? Shall this Priſoner now, to ſave his own Life, give Evidence againſt his Proſecutor (for the ſecond Indictment is the Evidence of the Priſoner), to ſet aſide that Indictment upon which he himſelf is to be tried? If this be the Caſe, the Lord have Mercy upon every Man that attempts to proſecute a Felon for the ſake of Juſtice! for, if this ſhould be allowed, no Man, except the Proſecutor, will ever be convicted.

[Mr. Moreton was going to enforce what had been ſaid, when his Lordſhip declared it was unneceſſary, and that the Court was clearly of Opinion, Mr. Noads ought to be admitted a Witneſs, and therefore over-ruled the Objections to his Competency.]

Thomas Noads ſworn.

Noads. The Priſoner at the Bar was one of the Sailors on board one of the Royal-Family Privateers; he came to me in the Beginning of February 1750-1, about the 3d or 4th, with a Perſon by the Name of John Daunt.

Q. Where did you live then?

Noads. I lived then in the New-Buildings, Coleman-Street.

Q. What is your Buſineſs?

Noads. I act as a Book-keeper or Clerk to the Managers of the Royal-Family Privateers.

Q. Had you ſeen the Priſoner before February 1750-1?

Noads. He has been frequently at our Office: I was by when he received his own Part: The firſt of his coming was to ſollicit for 20*l.* before the Accounts were ſettled.

Q. Had you ever ſeen that Perſon before, that came in the Name of John Daunt?——Noads. No, I never had.

Q. What did they come about?

Noads. The Priſoner brought Daunt, and a Will and Power, and told me it was the Will and Power of John Wilkinſon. I knew by our Book there was ſuch a Perſon on board. The Priſoner told me that Daunt kept a Public-Houſe in Liſbon, and that he had frequently drank at his Houſe at Lisbon with Wilkinſon; and ſaid it was a Houſe that he and ſeveral other Sailors uſed while the Ships lay there; and that he knew Daunt to be a very honeſt and worthy Man: He deſired I would write to Mr. Caſamaijor of Briſtol, (who was the Agent appointed to pay the People for their Services on board) for the Money due to John Wilkinſon for his Service on board the Royal-Family Privateers. I aſked him ſome few Queſtions with regard to the Ships: Both of them told me, that John Wilkinſon lodged with John Daunt at Lisbon, at the Time the Ships were fitting out for a ſecond Cruize. I aſked them, what was become of Wilkinſon, that I had heard nothing of him for upwards of two Years; Murphy replied, he died on the Coaſt of Guiney: I ſhould otherwiſe have paid them the Money on the Power of Attorney, which they had firſt produced; but as I underſtood the Man was dead, I could not then pay the Money upon the Power. Murphy then immediately propoſed to go to the Commons to prove the Will, ſaying, at the ſame Time, he knew very well how to go about it; for that he had proved the Will of one Miles Maſterſon, I think the Name was; he then mentioned ſome Proctor's Name, I think it was Hughes; I then told him he might as well go to Mr. Creſpigny.

Q. Do you know the Day of the Month you had this Converſation?

Noads. I believe this was the 9th of February. They were ſeveral Times with me from the Beginning of February to the 9th, In the Afternoon the the ſame Day they returned to me, and told me that the Will was proved, and deſired me to make out a Power of Attorney for me to receive the Money of Mr. Caſamaijor, he living at Briſtol. I made one out accordingly, Murphy was a Witneſs to it. (He produces it.) They went away from me, and came in two Days after. I believe this was on Saturday, and they returned on the Monday, and brought it re-executed before the then Lord Mayor. I then wrote to Mr. Caſamaijor, and he remitted me the Money on the 18th or 19th of February: They both called again on the 20th, and on that Day I paid the Money to Thomas Williams, the Man who calls himſelf John Daunt: I took a Receipt for it; (He ſhewed a Receipt) This is it. Thomas Williams ſigned it by the Name of John Daunt, and Murphy was preſent at the Time. I paid down the whole Money on the Table, 37 l. 12 s. 6 d. They paid back the Deductions, which was about forty Shillings, for proving the Will; they had not Money to pay for the proving the Will, ſo Mr. Creſpigny's Clerk ſent the Will to me, to take the Money for him.

Q. What did they give you for your Trouble?

Noads. I believe they gave me about a Guinea; it was not more than twenty-five Shillings, for the Trouble I had in writing Letters, paying Poſtage, and drawing the Letter of Attorney.

Q. Who received the Money of you?

Noads. It was received by the Perſon who went by the Name of Daunt, in the Preſence of Murphy. Murphy at that Time deſired that Daunt would give him ſomething for his Trouble in ſhewing him the Way to Doctors-Commons, ſo Daunt gave him Half-a-Guinea; Murphy muttered and grumbled, and ſaid it was too little; then they went out of the Houſe.

Q. Had you ever ſeen the Will of Wilkinſon, or Power of Attorney, before that Time they brought it in February?—Noads. No, I had not.

Q. Who wrote Creſpigny at the Back of the Will?

Noads. I might write it very likely, but it is ſo much erazed that I can't ſay. I ſhould have in courſe ſent them to Mr. Creſpigny; I ſent every Body that came to have any Thing done in his Way to him; he is the Perſon employed by the Gentlemen as their Proctor.

Q. Have you ſeen Wilkinſon ſince that Time?

Noads. I have: I believe him to be the ſame that was on the Books.

Q. Has there been any Demand by him for this Money ſince?

Noads. No, there has not, neither by him or any body elſe.

Q. When did you firſt hear that Wilkinſon was living?

Noads. I heard it when the Cauſe came on in Chancery about a Year ago, then he appeared.

Q. Have you ſeen him?—Noads. I ſaw him in this Court in the Parlour with Mr. Goddard, the Seſſions before laſt.

Q. Did you ever ſee him before?

Noads. I have ſeen him at Liſbon among the Ships Crews, and I talked with him ſince about his being there, and about two or three of the Ships, and believe him to be the Man.

Q. How long was it after you paid the Money, when you ſaw him firſt?

Noads. It was a Year and an half after, and that was at this Court, as I mentioned before.

Q. To which Ship did he belong?

Noads. He was one of the Crew of the Princeſs Amelia.

Q. Upon your hearing he was alive, and you having paid the Money, what was the firſt Thing you did?

Noads. I made Inquiry after this Daunt, but could not find him. I then began to inquire for Murphy; and one Carter, who had been intimate with Murphy, and was on board the Privateers commanded by Commodore Talbot, was the firſt Perſon that gave me any Information of him: He at firſt thought I wanted to arreſt him, 'till I told him the whole Affair. Carter went to ſeveral Places to make Inquiry after him. When we got an Account of him, which was in about a Fortnight, I got a Warrant from Mr. Alderman Ironſide, and then I heard he was at Tooting; I got the Warrant backed by Juſtice Clarke, and went there, and found he had been there, but was gone: Then I heard he was at Dulwich; there I got the Warrant backed by another Juſtice, and found he had been at the Green-Man there, but was gone a few Days: I applied to the Maſter of the College, and, by the Aſſiſtance of a Servant to that Gentleman, he was taken at Newington on that Side the Water. After he was taken, I appeared. As they were bringing him round the Corner, the Priſoner made his Eſcape from the Conſtable, and ran, but was taken again in a few Minutes after. We took him into a Publick-Houſe there: He aſked what he was taken up for: I told him he might well imagine for what; I ſaid it was for forging ſuch a Will, and that I was very confident it was his Hand-writing, I had compared it with ſome of his. He took me to one Corner of the Room, and ſaid, Dear Sir, (lifting up his Hands) do you think I had any Thing to do with it? But upon my telling him I was confident it was his Hand-writing, and that ſeveral People knew it, he ſaid he threw himſelf at my Feet, and hoped I would not take away his Life, or to that Purpoſe.

Q. What were his Words, as near as you can recollect?

Noads. He ſaid, I beg my Life. I told him I did not want to take his Life away, I only wanted to have common Juſtice done.

Q. Did you underſtand him to mean he wrote the Will and Letter of Attorney?—Noads. I did underſtand him ſo; he allowed he wrote it, but did not immediately ſay he did.

Q. During all this Converſation which you had with him, did you inquire after John Daunt?

Noads. I aſked him, if it was not one Thomas Williams that perſonated John Daunt, becauſe I underſtood from Carter that it muſt be him; and he ſaid but very little afterwards, and called for ſome Water, and was ready to faint; he never made me any Anſwer to that, whether it was he or not. We then took him before Juſtice Clarke, and he ſent him to Guildhall; there he was committed to the Poultry-Compter by Mr. Alderman Chitty, the Sitting Alderman.

Q. Was you by at his Examination before the Alderman?

Noads. I was.

Q. Who made the Charge againſt him?—Noads. I did.

Q. Did you make it upon Oath?—Noads. I did.

Q. What was the Charge?

Noads. It was with the Forgery for which he now ſtands indicted. I had ſeveral Opportunities of comparing Hand-writings of his that I had got during the Time of my knowing it was a Forgery, and the Time I took him up; and by ſeveral Compariſons, I believe the whole to be his Hand-writing. When we had him before the Alderman, he was aſked after Daunt; he ſaid he could prove he lived at Liſbon, but ſaid he could not tell where he then was; afterwards he inſiſted upon his Innocency, and ſaid he knew nothing of the Matter; he did own he met Daunt in the Street, and ſaid he had ſeen him at Liſbon, and that Daunt told him he had a Right of receiving that Money from that Will.

Q. When did you prefer a Bill of Indictment againſt him?

Noads. I did the very next Seſſions, which was in September.

Q. Were Mr. Wilkinſon and Mr. James Goddard there at that Time?

Noads. They were: I believe that to be Wilkinſon.

Q. Who elſe were there?——Noads. There were Peter Edwards and Anthony Devoyer. That Bill was not found.

Q. How long have you been informed that the Perſon who called his Name John Daunt was Thomas Williams?

Noads. Carter would have it to be him; but I was not confident 'till I went over to Ireland, after that Bill was thrown out, to ſee whether a Man, who I was informed was in Corke Gaol, was the Man that I paid the Money to; I found him to be the ſame Perſon, I remembered him immediately, and am ſure he is the ſame Man that I paid the Money to by the Name of John Daunt, who was recommended to me by the Priſoner as an honeſt Man.

Croſs-Examination.

Coun. for the Priſ. Who was you Agent to?

Noads. I was Agent under Mr. Henry Caſamaijor, I tranſacted Buſineſs for him.

Coun. for the Priſ. Did you know Murphy before?

Noads. I had ſeen him frequently before he came with that Perſon who called his Name Daunt; he was one of the Seamen on board the Royal-Family Privateers; he at laſt got to aſſiſt the Captain's Steward as a Kind of Cabbin-Boy.

Coun. for the Priſ. You ſay he came to receive his own Money, what was it?

Noads. The Balance of the Account came to about 7 or 8 l. a Share was 36 l. 8 s. 1 d. each, and I believe he had a Share and an Half.

Coun. for the Priſ. Did he produce the Will and Power of Attorney both together?---Noads. He did; I believe he took them out of the other Man's Hand, and gave them to me.

Coun. for the Priſ. Did you direct them to make Uſe of your Name to Mr. Creſpigny?---Noads. No, I did not.

Coun. for the Priſ. Pray recollect yourſelf, did you write that Name on the Back of the Will or not?---Noads. I might, but I don't know; that which is not erazed looks like my Writing.

Coun. for the Priſ. Do you know how it came to be ſcratched out?

Noads. No, I do not, nor when it was ſcratched out.

Coun. for the Priſ. Did you read over the Probate?

Noads. No, I did not, I only looked to ſee whether the Name John Wilkinſon was there.

Coun. for the Priſ. Is it not uſual to read the Probate over?

Noads. I don't know that ever I read over one in my Life, I don't know that it is cuſtomary.

Coun. for the Priſ. Is this the Probate produced here?

Noads. This is the very Probate.

Coun. for the Priſ. Had you ever ſeen Williams before that Time he came with the Priſoner, as you ſay, in the Name of Daunt?

Noads. I never did, as I know of: The firſt Time I ſaw him was in the Beginning of February 1750-1.

Coun. for the Priſ. Have you ſeen him ſince?——Noads. I have ſeveral Times; I was with him eight or ten Times in Ireland.

Coun. for the Priſ. What was your Buſineſs when you went to Ireland?

Noads. I went on purpoſe to find him out.

Coun. for the Priſ. How came you to miſtruſt him being the Perſon?

Noads. I ſhewed the Receipt to Carter, and he ſaid he was very confident the Name John Daunt was his Hand-writing.

Coun. for the Priſ. Have you no other Witneſs to prove that than Carter?

Noads. No, I have not.

Coun. for the Priſ. Did you make uſe of any Threats?

Noads. No, I did not.

Coun. for the Priſ. Did you mean the Will and Power was the Hand-writing of Murphy?

Noads. The Will and Power, Signing and all; I mean all in general.

Coun. for the Priſ. Did you think the Name Diniſh Collins is of a different Writing to the other Names?

Noads. I think it is all the Writing of one Hand.

Coun. for the Priſ. What is Carter?---Noads. He was on board the Privateers, not the ſame Cruize, but the Cruize before.

Coun. for the Priſ. Did you ſhew him the Will?

Noads. I did, and he ſaid the Name John Wilkinſon in particular was Murphy's Hand-writing.

Thomas Williams ſworn.

Mr. Hume Campbell to Noads. Do you know this Witneſs?

Noads. This Thomas Williams is the ſame Man that came to me, and received the Money in the Name of John Daunt.

Mr. Hume Campbell to Williams. Do you know Timothy Murphy?

Williams. I do, it is the Priſoner at the Bar.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with him?

Williams. I was acquainted with him about a Month or five Weeks before the Beginning of February 1750-1. I met him near Charing-Croſs in the Street; we went to a Houſe of ill Fame there; I believe the Man of the Houſe his Name is Mullings, he is a Scotchman: This was the Month of January; he took me a-walking round the Park, and to ſeveral Places, and told me he had ſomething to relate to me, and if I would be ruled by him, he would do for me, and in the Park he ſwore me to Secrecy (not by Book, but by Word). He firſt ſwore, then I ſwore; I told him, if it be any thing except Robbery or Murder, I'd ſtand true to him; the next Day in the Morning we came to this Mullings's Houſe again.

Q. Can you recollect what Time in January 1750-1 this was?

Williams; It was about the latter End of January. Then he ſaid, Come, Williams, God, I'll do for you now. He took me up Stairs into a large Room, and called for a Bowl of Punch, ſaying, This is cold Weather, we muſt drink ſomething that will make us warm; he made me drink pretty heartily. At laſt he pulled out a whole Parcel of Papers, ſome of them were Prints, ſome with Stamps, and ſome without; he began to laugh and ſmile; he ſaid, I told you, I had ſomething to do for you, now I'll do for you, ſaid he; there's one Wilkinſon that belongs to the Princeſs Amelia private Ship of War, that is dead on the Coaſt of Guiney, and his Money can be taken by any Body; and ſaid, I will go for it; ſaid I, I don't underſtand that way of getting of Money; ſaid he, D—n it, what a Fool you are, not to conſent to get Money at ſo ſafe a Rate! There are ſeveral of my Acquaintance (if you were to know as well as I) that get Money enough in forging Seamen's Wills and Powers, and receiving Wages and Prize-Money due to them; and if you'll be ruled by me, you ſhall not want Money, for you ſhall dreſs like a Gentleman, and wear a Sword; then he rubbed his Hands, and ſaid, Drink t'other Glaſs, and go down and warm yourſelf by the Fire: I went down, and left him with Pen, Ink, and Paper; and in a ſhort Time after he called me up Stairs again, and told me he had Writings drawn up, purporting to be the Will and Power of John Wilkinſon; he made them to me in the Name of John Daunt, and he called for a Candle, which was brought lighted; he took a Piece of Sealing-Wax, and clapped the Seal on it, before the Name John Daunt was wrote; then he wrote John Wilkinſon, Thomas Carty, and Diniſh Collins; then he put a Seal on them.

Q. How many Seals were there?

Williams. I believe there were more than one; there was one to each Paper, that is, the Will and the Power. After he had ſealed them, he aſked for a Penknife; I lent him one; he made two or three different Pens, and ſaid, that this will not do well, to have theſe Witneſſes all of one Hand-writing. The Names Thomas Carty and Diniſh Collins were for two ſubſcribing Witneſſes.

Q. What were theſe Pens made for?

Williams. To write the Names with different Pens, that they ſhould not look alike.

Q. Did he write all, both on the Will and Power?

Williams. He wrote it all over, every Word, both the Will and Power, and then took and ſealed them up, and put them into his Pocket.

Q. Did he ſay any Thing about Wilkinſon owing Daunt any Money?

Williams. He ſaid John Wilkinſon owed John Daunt ſeventeen Moidores; theſe were the Reaſons which he gave to me for my going by the Name of John Daunt, ſaying, if a Reaſon ſhould be required why it was left to me, it ſhould be repreſented, that this Wilkinſon was indebted to me theſe Moidores. After this, we went to ſome other Houſe of his Acquaintance, where we drank that Afternoon, and I went to Bed pretty merry; the next Morning early he came and called me out of Bed, and deſired me to come along with him to the Houſe of Thomas Noads in Coleman-Street. I ſaid, I had not got my Breakfaſt. He ſaid, Come along; what a Block-head you are! We will get a Pint of Purl, and go about our Buſineſs: Then he hurried me out. After we had had a Draught of Purl at the Caſtle and Horſe-ſhoe, Charing-Croſs, we took Boat at Whitehall Stairs, we landed at the Old Swan, and went to the Houſe of Mr. Noads; there the Priſoner introduced me by the Name of John Daunt, and ſaid I was a very honeſt Man, and that he had known me a great while to keep a Houſe at Liſbon, and that he had drank at my Houſe ſeveral Times in Company with John Wilkinſon; then he produced this forged Will and Power, and deſired he'd pay the Money due to John Wilkinſon, for his Services on board the Princeſs Amelia, a private Ship of War, to me, in the Name of John Daunt. Mr. Noads and he talked a little while together; he told the Priſoner, I believe I can't pay it upon this Power; then the Priſoner ſaid, This Wilkinſon is dead. How long has he been dead? ſaid the other: Said Murphy, I believe he has been dead two Years, he died upon the Coaſt of Guiney: Then Murphy propoſed to go to the Commons (I think he ſaid to a Proctor) to prove the Will; but Mr. Noads told him to go to Mr. Creſpigny to do it; we went, and on our Way thither I ſtopped, and ſaid, Murphy, I don't underſtand what you are about, I believe you are going to play the Rogue with me, I'll not go a Step farther; I'll return back, and tell Mr. Noads my Name is not Daunt; I'll divulge the whole Affair to him. With that he ſwore vehemently, and took up a great Stick, and ſaid, he'd daſh my Brains out, or have me hanged, if I did not go that Minute, and prove the Will in the Commons.

Q. Where were you when you had this Converſation?

Williams. It was in a little Alley not far from Coleman-Street.

Q. Did you go?

Williams. By the Fright I went along with him, and by his Deſire and Directions, and there in his Preſence I proved the Will.

Q. To what Proctor did you go?

Williams. To Mr. Creſpigny; there the Will was produced and proved.

Q. Look at this Paper, do you know it?

Williams. That is the very Will; the Hand-writing is Murphy's; if I was to die this Minute, I am ſure no Man wrote it but he; here are the Names, I ſaw them wrote; he wrote this Name John Wilkinſon, with a fine Pen, which he made with my Knife; he wrote alſo the other Names, Thomas Carty and Diniſh Collins, and I am ſure I ſaw him have ſuch a Seal in his Pocket as is here put on the Wax.

Q. What did you do after the Will was proved?

Williams. Then he came back to Mr. Noads's Houſe, and told him, the Will was proved at the Commons.

Q. Who told him ſo?

Williams. Murphy did; then there was a Letter of Attorney made by Murphy's Deſire, for Mr. Noads to have Power to receive the Money of Mr. Coſamaijor, who he told us was in Briſtol at that Time.

Q. Who ſigned that Power?

Williams. I did, and Murphy was the only ſubſcribing Witneſs to it; then we took it along with us, (this was I believe on Saturday Afternoon) and on the Monday he called me very early, and by his Deſire, I went along with him to my Lord-Mayor's Office, and there I think this Letter of Attorney was re-executed; then we went again to Mr. Noads's Houſe, and gave him the Power of Attorney, to receive the Money of Mr. Coſamaijor; then we went away, and went again two or three Times between that and the 19th or 20th of February: On one of them Days we received the Money, he ſaid, he had from Mr. Coſamaijor, and then he paid me 37 l. 12 s. or thereabouts, in the Name of John Daunt, in the Preſence of Murphy, and took a Receipt for the Money, ſigned by me; I wrote John Daunt; if you'll pleaſe to look, you'll ſee a Sort of a Boggle, there is a Letter not made right; inſtead of the Letter a, I was going to write o, and was forced to make it an a afterwards; I did not know how to write Daunt cleverly. [His Lordſhip, Jury, and Counſel, looked at it; and it appeared as he ſaid.] Murphy ſaid to Mr. Noads, I have taken a d——d deal of Trouble, he ought to give me ſomething for my Trouble (we had made that Bargain before we came there, that I was to give him Half a Guinea in the Preſence of Mr. Noads, to induce Mr. Noads to believe he was only to have that for his Trouble). I gave him Half a Guinea in Mr. Noads's Houſe, then we went away, and at a little Diſtance he ſaid to me, Don't you remember you are to give me two Guineas for my Trouble in making the Writings, over and above the Half of the Money? I was very much diſheartened, and ſaid, Murphy, I'll go back and give him the Money back, ſaying, It is a very unjuſt Thing, I will not carry it any farther; he ſwore Damnation to his Soul, if I ſhould go a Step farther, he'd give a Judge or Jury no Trouble, but he'd daſh my Brains out if I did not go forward, and had a great Stick in his Hand at the Time, he puſhed me along before him; I was afraid of my Life, for he threatened me both one Way and t'other, either to kill me or get me hanged: Then I ſaid, Take all the Money, and gave it him all in his Hand, I'll have nothing to do with it: He anſwered to that, No, no, I have revealed all my Secrets to you, and now you are going to have me hanged; he ſaid, I'll take two Guineas, and Half the whole Money; which he did, and gave me the Remainder of it.

Q. When was the firſt Time you ſaw Mr. Noads?

Williams. I never ſaw him 'till I went with the Priſoner to his Houſe, nor never ſaw Wilkinſon, or knew that there was ſuch a Man living.

Q. When did you hear Wilkinſon was alive?

Williams. I never heard it 'till Mr. Noads came to me in Corke in Ireland, where I was a Priſoner for Debt.

Q. Had you ſeen Mr. Noads between the Time you took the Money and the Time you ſaw him in Corke?

Williams. No, I never did.

Croſs-Examination.

Counſ. for the Priſ. How much Punch might you drink at the Houſe near Charing Croſs, when you ſay this Will was made?

Williams. I believe we drank about three Shillings-worth.

Counſ. for the Priſ. Did you call for a ſecond Bowl?

Williams. No, we did not.

Counſ. for the Priſ. What had you been drinking before?

Williams. We had been drinking a Dram each, and a Pint of Purl.

Counſ. for the Priſ. Then you was a little in Liquor, was you not?

Williams. I was tolerably warm.

Counſ. for the Priſ. Was there a Fire above Stairs?

Williams. No, there was not.

Counſ. for the Priſ. What Time of the Day was it that you was there?

Williams. It was in the Morning.

Counſ. for the Priſ. Did either of you ſmoke Tobacco?

Williams. No, we neither of us did.

Counſ. for the Priſ. What did you do with your Candle then?

Williams. That was brought up by the Priſoner's Deſire, after he had drawn the Writings up.

Counſ. for the Priſ. How long had you been in the Houſe before the Candle was brought you?

Williams. We might have been in the Houſe two Hours before the Maid brought it up.

Counſ. for the Priſ. How long had you been in the Houſe in all?

Williams. I believe we might have been in the Houſe two Hours and an Half in all.

Counſ. for the Priſ. How long was you in the Houſe before you went above Stairs?

Williams. It might be above Half an Hour before I went up, which was when he called me.

Counſ. for the Priſ. When did you hear the Name of John Daunt firſt?

Williams. I never heard it before that Day.

Counſ. for the Priſ. Where did he get the Wax?

Williams. He had Wax in his Pocket, and I believe a Seal too.

Counſ. for the Priſ. Did you ſee him put the Seal to the Wax?

Williams. I did, he put it to one of them before he wrote the Name.

Counſ. for the Priſ. Did he to the other, do you remember?

Williams. I can't ſay whether he wrote the other firſt or not.

Counſ. for the Priſ. Which did he ſeal before he wrote the Name?

Williams. It was the Will.

Counſ. for the Priſ. What Sort of a Table were they wrote upon?

Williams. It was a Table big enough for Half a Dozen Men to dine at.

Counſ. for the Priſ. Did you ſee him write all the Will?

Williams. I ſaw him write Part of it, that is the latter End, that is Part of one Side, where the Witneſſes are; he had not finiſhed it when he called me up.

Counſ. for the Priſ. Had he Ink of his own, or was there any other that he made uſe of?

Williams. There was a Pewter Ink-ſtand in the Room?

Counſ. for the Priſ. Are you ſure you ſaw him write the Name to the Will?

Williams. I ſaw him write them three ſame Names on it.

Counſ. for the Priſ. Was there but one Ink-ſtand?

Williams. No, there was but one Diſh with Ink.

Counſ. for the Priſ. Were theſe three Names wrote with the ſame Ink?

Williams. They were, but with different Pens.

Counſ. for the Priſ. How long do you think you might be above Stairs?

Williams. We might be there about an Hour.

Coun. for the Prif. Where did you beſtow your Time the other Part of the Day?

Williams. We went and walked, and ſmoked, and drank moſtly, for it was very cold Weather.

Coun. for the Prif. Then you muſt go near being fuddled, was you not?

Williams. I went to Bed brave and heavy, I know.

Coun. for the Prif. Where did you live then?

Williams. I lodged near Mr. Manning's at Charing-Croſs, at the Thiſtle and Crown: Bob Carter lodged over-againſt me.

Coun. for the Prif. You ſay you never ſaw Mr. Noads 'till that Time the Priſoner and you went to his Houſe the Beginning of February 1750-1; recollect yourſelf whether you had not ſeen him before?

Williams. I had not.

Coun. for the Prif. Did not he once lend you Half-a-Crown on your Chatham-Cheſt Ticket?—Williams. No, he never lent me any Thing.

Coun. for the Prif. Do you know one Margaret Williams?

Williams. I lodged at her Houſe ſeveral Nights; but my proper Place of lodging was at Mr. Fox, on the Back of the Haymarket.

Coun. for the Prif. Did you ever pawn your Chatham Ticket?

Williams. No, I never did; I might, but I don't remember I did; I am almoſt ſure I never did; it is a 4*l.* Ticket, that is, 4*l.* a Year for my Life.

Coun. for the Prif. Upon your Oath, did you, or did you not borrow Money on your Ticket of Mr. Noads?

Williams. Upon my Oath, I never did, nor never let it go out of my Poſſeſſion to any body.

Coun. for the Prif. In your Way going along, you ſay your Conſcience ſeized you, and you told the Priſoner you would not go a Step farther; was that the firſt Remorſe you felt?

Williams. No, I had a Remorſe of Conſcience that Morning, when he deſired me to go.

Coun. for the Prif. Did you believe he would be as good as his Word, when he ſaid he'd knock your Brains out, and threatened you?

Williams. I did by his Countenance.

Coun. for the Prif. Was he with you all the Time you was proving the Will?—Williams. He was.

Coun. for the Priſoner. Did not you go into a particular Office to prove it by yourſelf?----Williams. No.

Coun. for the Prif. Were there any Threats made uſe of in Doctors-Commons?—Williams. No, there were not.

Coun. for the Prif. Was you under any Surprize when you was there?

Williams. I was under much Fear.

Coun. for the Prif. How many People were there in the Room?

Williams. There was but one Gentleman there.

Coun. for the Prif. Why did you not tell the Gentleman the Affair, that he might aſſiſt you?

Williams. I was ſhocked ſo, that I did not know what I had beſt to do.

Coun. for the Prif. Did you ſwear there that your Name was John Daunt?

Williams. I did, by the Priſoner's Directions and Deſire.

Coun. for the Prif. Was any body with you and Murphy, when you were with Mr. Noads?—Williams. There was not a Soul with us.

Coun. for the Prif. Why did not you tell Mr. Noads that it was a Forgery?

Williams. I did not indeed; I did not know what to do, I was ſo confounded.

Coun. for the Prif. Who wrote the Word Extor, after the Name John Daunt, on the Receipt?

Williams. I wrote the Name John Daunt, but I don't know who wrote the Word Extor, either Murphy or Noads.

Coun. for the Crown. Which do you believe wrote it?

Williams. I believe Murphy did.

Coun. for the Prif. Whether your Remorſe and Threatening to go back again was not becauſe he demanded two Guineas of you?

Williams. No, it was not.

Coun. for the Prif. Did he demand two Guineas of you before, or after you ſaid you'd go back?

Williams. I told him I'd go back, and return the Money, before he demanded the two Guineas, and after too.

Coun. for the Prif. How long did you ſtay in England after this Tranſaction?

Williams. But a very little Time, about a Fortnight; I was obliged to go down to Chatham to receive my Penſion-Money that was due to me there.

Coun. for the Prif. In this great Remorſe of Conſcience that you had before and after you had received the Money, how came you to remain a Fortnight out of the Power of Murphy, and did not make a Diſcovery of it?

Williams. I was afraid to go about it myſelf, and I had no Opportunity to do it 'till Mr. Noads came to me in Goal in Ireland; I thought the very Stones would fly in my Face about it, and he hunted me out of the Way as faſt as he could.

Q. from his Lordſhip. Why did not you open the Affair before my Lord-Mayor?

Williams. I had not the Senſe to do it; I was directed and led like a Child by him, as he pleaſed.

[The Receipt read to this Purport].

Received the 20*th of* February 1750-1, of Thomas Noads, 37*l.* 12*s.* 6*d. being ſo much he received of Mr.* Caſamaijor, per Probate of the Will of John Wilkinſon, in full Balance of his Account.

£. 37 12 6 John Daunt, Extor.

Coun. for the Prif. to Noads. Who added the Word Extor to the Receipt, after the Name John Daunt?

Noads. I did.

Prif. I deſire Mr. Noads may be put out, while I aſk Williams a Queſtion or two.

[It was granted, and he went out.]

Q. from the Prif. How came Williams to be ſo perfect as to the Day of the Month that he mentions of the Money being paid? Whether the Papers were not ſhewn to him by Noads ſince?

Williams. No, they never were ſince I came to England; I have not ſeen one of them 'till I ſaw them now, nor Mr. Noads never told me what Day of the Month the Money was paid.

Q. from the Prif. Whether that Witneſs ever went to Mr. Noads with Mrs. Williams?

Williams. No, I never did.

Q. from the Prif. Whether he ever heard Margaret Williams ſay her Dependance was upon Mr. Noads?

Williams. I heard her ſay there was ſome Prize-Money due to her.

Q. from the Prif. Did you ever hear her mention one Jones?

Williams. I don't know that ever I heard her mention the Name of Jones.

Q. from the Prif. Did not he borrow Money on your Ticket? Where did you get the Money you paid her?

Williams. I pawned my Watch in St. Martin's-Lane.

Q. from the Prif. Where did he and I agree upon this?

Williams. At Mac Mullins's, a Bawdy-houſe.

Q. from the Prif. Did I pay for the Punch there?

Williams. No, the Priſoner took Care of that, he made me pay.

Q. from the Prif. Where did he get the Money?

Williams. The Priſoner found rogueiſh Money for me.

Noads called in.

Coun. for the Prif. to Noads. Whether or no you ſhewed either the Power of Attorney or Will of Wilkinſon to Williams ſince he came to England?

Noads. No, I have not.

Coun. for the Prif. Whether or no you told him the Month in which you paid the Money to him?

Noads. I ſhewed it him in Ireland.

Coun. for the Prif. Whether you have not ſince he came to England?

Noads. No, I have not.

Coun. for the Prif. Did ever Thomas Williams come to your Houſe along with one Mrs. Williams?

Noads. No, never.

Q. from the Prif. Do you know Mrs. Williams?

Noads. She came to me two or three Times, and told me the Priſoner had robbed her of her Prize-Money.

Q. from the Prif. When did you ſee her laſt?

Noads. I believe I ſaw her in the Court-Yard this Morning.

Coun. for the Prif. Do you know where ſhe is now?

Noads. No, I don't know that.

Q. from the Prif. Was not this Mrs. Williams at your Houſe in Bell-Alley?—Noads. She never was, to my Knowledge.

Mr. Alderman Cokayne ſworn.

[He is ſhewed a Letter of Attorney made to Mr. Noads.]

Mr. Alderman. This was re-executed before me; here is the Name Timothy Murphy, a Witneſs; I believe the Priſoner is the Man that wrote it. [It is read to this Purport:]

"Know all Men, by theſe Preſents, that I John Daunt, Executor of "John Wilkinſon, deceaſed, late of the Princeſs Amelia Privateer, for cer-"tain good Cauſes and Conſiderations me hereunto moving, have, and do "hereby name, make, and in my Stead and Place, put and conſtitute Tho-"mas Noads of London, Gentleman, my true and lawful Attorney, re-"vocable, for me, in my Name, and to my Uſe, to aſk, claim, demand, "recover, take, and receive of and from the Agent for the Royal-Family "Privateers, or whom elſe it may concern, all and ſingular ſuch Salary, "Wages, Tickets, Bounty-Money, Prize-Money, Short-Allowance-"Money, Smart-Money, Penſions, and all other Sum and Sums of Mo-"ney whatſoever, as now is, or at any Time or Times hereafter ſhall be "due, payable, and belonging unto me, for my own, or any other Per-"ſon's Service, or otherwiſe, in any of his Majeſty's Ships, Frigates, or "Veſſels, or any Merchant-Ship, or Ships; and alſo of all other Perſon "or Perſons whatſoever, all and ſingular ſuch other Sum and Sums of "Money, Salary, Wages, Goods, Wares and Merchandize, Freight, "Profits, Rents, and Arrears of Rent, Debts, Dues, Duties, Claims and "Demands whatſoever, which now is, or at any Time or Times here-"after ſhall be due, owing, payable, and belonging unto me by any "Ways or Means, Right or Title whatſoever or howſoever; giving, and "hereby granting unto my ſaid Attorney, his Subſtitutes and Aſſigns, "all my Authority and lawful Power in the Premiſes, for receiving, re-"covering, obtaining, compounding and diſcharging the ſame, as fully "and effectually as I myſelf might or could do, being perſonally preſent, "and Acquittances, Releaſes, or any other Diſcharges in my Name, to "make, ſeal and deliver; and one Attorney, or more, to make, ſubſtitute, "and at Pleaſure to revoke; ratifying, and hereby confirming all and "whatſoever my ſaid Attorney, his Subſtitutes and Aſſigns, or any of "them, ſhall lawfully do, or cauſe to be done in and about the Pre-"miſſes by Virtue of theſe Preſents. John Daunt. +

Sealed and delivered (being firſt duly ſtamped) in the Preſence of Timothy Murphy.

London, re-executed the 11th Day of February, 1750, before me,

F. Cokayne, Mayor.

Anthony Devoyer ſworn.

Anthony Devoyer. I am Clerk to Mr. Creſpigny the Proctor; in February 1750-1, I don't remember the Perſons, but there were two Men applied to me in the Abſence of Mr. Creſpigny, to prove a Will of J. Wilkinſon.

Q. What was the Executor's Name?

Devoyer. It was John Daunt; the Perſon pretending to be ſo was one of the two that deſired me to get a Probate of the Will. We always do inquire where the Teſtator died, and when, and we write that under the Jurat, that it ſhould be paſſed to the Seal. The Deſcription of the Teſtator was, that he was a Batchelor, and belonged to ſome Ship, I don't remember the Name; that he died on the Coaſt of Guiney, within the Time there limited.

[He is ſhewed the Will.]

Devoyer.

Devoyer. This is my Hand-Writing on it, and this is the very Will brought to me at that Time; I attended the Perſon who called his Name John Daunt before the Surrogate, who ſubſcribed his Name.

Q. Was he ſworn?

Devoyer. He was, I think, in my Preſence, as Executor to the Will, as is uſual on ſuch Occaſions, and upon that the Probate was put under Seal afterwards, which is now upon it.

Croſs-Examination.

Coun. for the Priſ. You ſay, you can't ſwear to the Perſons of the two Men that came?——Devoyer. No, Sir, I cannot.

Coun. for the Crown. Can you recollect what paſſed at the Compter, when you ſaw the Priſoner there?

Devoyer. I was at the Compter; the Priſoner there told me he remembered me; he there told me, while I was gone to get the Executor ſworn, he was in Converſation with Mr. Creſpigny.

Coun. for the Crown. Did he mention any Thing of his being the Perſon that came along with the pretended Executor?

Devoyer. Yes, Sir, he did.

Coun. for the Priſ. When was this Converſation?

Devoyer. This was the Day that the firſt Bill was thrown out.

Coun. for the Priſ. When you carried Daunt in to be ſworn, did that other Perſon go with you into the Room?

Devoyer. I believe we left him in the Office.

Thomas Dyer ſworn.

Dyer. I was Conſtable. Mr. Noads applied to me to take the Priſoner at Newington on the other Side the Water; I was at my Houſe over-right the Black Prince, and Mr. Noads was at the Black Prince, and one Frith brought me the Warrant. On the Saturday Morning Murphy had been with me to Juſtice Hammond to aſſiſt me with a Priſoner; I promiſed to pay him; he came on the Monday Morning for his Money; I ſaid, I'll pay you preſently, but I have got a Warrant againſt you: He ſaid, For what? and wanted to ſee the Warrant: I told him, I would not ſhew it him. The other Man (Frith) ſaid, it was for Forgery, and aſked him if he knew Mr. Noads; he ſaid, Yes. This was as we were going along: He deſired to walk by my Side. Frith, at the ſame Time, went out to fetch Mr. Noads from the Black Prince; the Priſoner turned on his Heel and ran away, and kept calling out, A poor Debtor! A poor Debtor! I ran after him, and called, Stop Thief! knock him down!

Q. Was Mr. Noads in Sight when he turned to run away?

Dyer. I cannot ſay whether he was or not; but if he was at the Black Prince Door, the Priſoner might ſee him very well.

Q. How far did he run?

Dyer. He ran into a Brick-Field; there we took him again, and we carried him to the Black Prince; then I went to get my Breakfaſt 'till they were ready to go; then we took him before 'Squire Clarke, and from thence to Alderman Chitty. I delivered him up to Mr. Ward on London-Bridge as we were going, and went with him before the Alderman as an Aſſiſtant; then the Priſoner was charged by Mr. Noads for forging a Seaman's Will; the Priſoner ſaid, he knew nothing of it.

Q. Do you recollect he ſaid any Thing about Half a Guinea?

Dyer. Yes; he ſaid he had Half a Guinea for ſigning a Letter of Attorney.

Croſs-Examination.

Coun. for the Priſ. Had he been told what he was taken for, before he ran away?——Dyer. He had.

Coun. for the Priſ. He ſoon ſtopped, I ſuppoſe, did he not?

Dyer. He ſtopped when he could run no farther; there was one Fielder went to ſtop him, and he ran againſt him to knock him down, and turned him round.

Coun. for the Crown. When he ſtopped, did he ſurrender; or what did he do?——Dyer. No, he then took up a Brickbat, and ſwore he'd kill the firſt Man that oppoſed him.

John Frith ſworn.

John Frith. I am Servant to the Maſter of Dulwich College; I was applied to by Mr. Noads to endeavour to diſcover and take up Timothy Murphy, the Priſoner at the Bar; and was by when the Conſtable, Mr. Dyer, took him at Newington.

Q. Was Mr. Noads by at the Time?

Frith. No, he was not; the Priſoner aſked, what he was taken up for? Mr. Dyer would not tell him: He ſaid, Pray, Gentlemen, what am I taken up for? I deſire to know: Then ſaid I, If you muſt know, it is for Forgery; ſaid he, Upon what Account? I ſaid, I can't tell, but I'll go to a Gentleman hard by, and he'll tell you. Then I went for Mr. Noads; and when I was at a little Diſtance, I heard the Conſtable call out, Stop Thief! then I turned again, but I was too far behind; he was taken and ſecured before I came up.

Q. How far was you from the Place where Mr. Noads was, when he ran away?——Frith. I was about 200 Yards from him.

Q. Where was Mr. Noads when you heard the Cry, Stop Thief?

Frith. He was at the Black Prince.

Q. Was he within or out of the Houſe?——Frith. I can't tell which.

Q. Did he attempt to break away 'till you had informed him it was for a Forgery?——Frith. No, he did not.

Mr. Woodman ſworn.

Woodman. I am Keeper of the Poultry-Compter.

[He is ſhewed a Commitment.]

Woodman. I remember this being brought to me with the Priſoner on the 27th of July laſt, the Day it bears Date, to the Poultry-Compter.

Q. What is he charged with in that Commitment?

Woodman. He is charged before Alderman Chitty, by the Oath of Thomas Noads, upon a violent Suſpicion of being concerned with one John Daunt, not yet taken, in publiſhing and uttering a falſe, forged, and counterfeit Will. It is ſigned, Thomas Chitty.

Mr. Hume Campbell.

My Lord, In the general Courſe of Buſineſs, Witneſſes are not produced to ſupport the Character of a Proſecutor, unleſs his Character is impeached either by Evidence or the Nature of the Tranſaction itſelf; in the preſent Inſtance, the Gentlemen have taken an Objection to Mr. Noads's Competency as a Witneſs; it has been, with great Juſtice, over-ruled in that Reſpect, but left to operate on his Character with the Jury: The Indictment againſt him has been read in Evidence: It is an Indictment againſt him, together with the other Witneſs to the Fact, and upon the Back of it ſtand Mr. Goddard and two or three more. This being admitted Evidence againſt his Character, we are proper to produce Evidence in Support of Mr. Noads's Character, and I hope your Lordſhip will be of Opinion we are regular in ſo doing.

Lord Chief Baron. You have a Right to it under the Circumſtances of this Caſe.

To the Character of Thomas Noads.

Nicholas Magens, Eſq. ſworn.

Mr. Magens. I have known Thomas Noads ever ſince he came to London, which is about ſeven or eight Years: it was about the Beginning of the breaking-out of the Spaniſh War.

Q. What is his general Character?

Magens. I have always known him for a very diligent, ſober, promiſing young Man; I have all the Reaſon in the World to believe him ſo, and don't doubt his Integrity in the leaſt.

Croſs-examined.

Coun. for the Priſ. Do you think he would not ſay what is falſe to ſave his own Life?——Magens. I can't anſwer to that.

James Laroche, Eſq. ſworn.

Mr. Laroche. This is the ſecond Time I have come from Briſtol to London to ſpeak to Mr. Noads's Character: I have known him eight Years. I knew him at Briſtol, where he was under the Direction of a Gentleman there (that Gentleman is ſo infirm he can't come up). Mr. Noads behaved ſo well there, that the Gentleman recommended him to my Brother-in-Law, Mr. Henry Caſamaijor, to tranſact his great Affairs, being Agent for very rich Prizes; he behaved diligently through the whole Tranſaction. I have heard many ſpeak well of him in Briſtol, and never heard any Thing reflecting on his Character in my Life. I don't think he'd be guilty of a Forgery.

John Ellis, Eſq. ſworn.

Mr. Ellis. I have known Mr. Noads theſe ſix Years; I believe him to be as honeſt a Man as any Man whatſoever; I don't think he'd do a ſcandalous Thing; I don't think he is capable, for any lucrative Views whatſoever, to be guilty of a Forgery.

Mr. Alderman Ironſide ſworn.

Mr. Alderman Ironſide. I have known Mr. Noads about ſeven or eight Years; he has been concerned in an Affair where I am intereſted, in which he has always acted with great Diligence and Prudence; I have truſted him with large Sums of Money; it has been in his Power to have injured us, but I never had any Occaſion or Room to doubt his Honeſty; I don't believe he'd be guilty of a Forgery on any Conſideration.

Henry Caſamaijor, Eſq. ſworn.

Mr. Caſamaijor. I have known Mr. Noads I believe ten Years.

Q. What is his general Character?

Mr. Caſamaijor. As good as any Man's in Being, both for Honeſty and Induſtry; I have had great Experience of him; he was with me from a Child: I, from my good Opinion of him, recommended him to my Brother; he might have wronged me of large Sums of Money; I never found a Diſpoſition in him either to wrong me or any body elſe.

Mr. Nares. I deſire the firſt Part of the Will may be read.

[It is read]

"In the Name of God, Amen. I John Wilkinſon, late of the "Princeſs Amelia Privateer."

Coun. for the Priſ. Now read in the Probate.

[It is read.]

"The laſt Will and Teſtament of John Wilkinſon, of his Majeſty's "Ship the Princeſs Amelia."

Coun. for the Priſ. There is a Difference between his Majeſty's Ship and a Privateer.

Lord Chief Baron. The Probate being a wrong Deſcription does not alter the Caſe; ſuppoſe there had been no Probate at all, the Priſoner is indicted for forging the Will.

The Priſoner being called upon to make his Defence, ſaid only, that they had ſwore as they thought proper.

Whereupon the Lord Chief Baron ſummed up the Evidence to the Jury, who, in leſs than a Minute, gave in their Verdict, Guilty, Death.

Immediately after this Trial, Mr. Thomas Noads and Mr. Robert Carter were tried for this Forgery; but were honourably acquitted, and Copies of their Indictments granted them by the Court.

The Confeſſion of Timothy Murphy.

I WAS taken up in the Month of July by the Orders of Thomas Noads, Clerk to the Managers of the Royal-Family Privateers, for forging the Will of John Wilkinſon, late belonging to the Princeſs Amelia Privateer, being one of the Ships that compoſed the ſaid Royal-Family, and was committed to the Poultry-Compter for the ſaid Offence; and on that Day, and the Day after, one Patrick Flanigan came to me, and aſked what Motive induced me to ſign a general Releaſe for my Share of my Prize-Money, to the ſaid Managers? I made Anſwer, that Mr. Belchier, and the reſt of the Gentlemen, had long before that Time advanced me twenty Pounds, when I was in want of Money, and that they had behaved to me with the greateſt Honour. The ſaid Flanigan further aſked me, how came I to give a Receipt for 54*l.* and upwards, and inſinuated ſo much was not due to me, and deſired me not to conceal it from him, for that he was acquainted with the whole Affair: And ſaid, if I had a Million of Lives, unleſs I would do one Thing, I was a loſt Man. I then went on my Knees, and begged for Heaven's Sake he would let me know what that was. He made Anſwer, Not yet; and ſaid, I know you have been a Tool to Mr. Noads a long Time, and aſked me, who came to me from him or any of the ſaid Managers? I told him, I had not ſeen or heard from any of them. He then ſaid, Keep your own Mind from them: I commiſerate your preſent Situation, I will call at another Time. And gave me 18*d.* In a few Days after, he came again, and aſked me, whether the ſaid Noads, or any of the ſaid Gentlemen, men, had been with me. I anſwered, They had not. He then gave me Half-a-Crown, and ſaid ſome of them would ſend to me with Directions to write to Mr. Belchier, and adviſed me not to anſwer that I would, and ſaid, Do not write at your Peril: And promiſed to come next Night, which he accordingly did, and adviſed me to get ſome Perſon in Priſon to write a Letter to Mr. Belchier, but not to have any Thing mentioned in relation to the ſaid Will (I ſo unfortunately forged of the ſaid John Wilkinſon). He went away, and promiſed to come again. He came again the ſame Night, when I ſhewed him the Letter I cauſed to be wrote, which he deſired I would ſend to Mr. Belchier; and after many Aſſurances of Friendſhip, he went away, and ſaid he would come the next Night. The Day after, Mr. Robinſon, Clerk to Mr. Belchier, came and ſhewed me the Letter I ſent, and aſked me, if it was not my Hand-writing; I told him, it was not. He deſired me to write my Mind freely to Mr. Belchier, in my own Hand-writing, which, after he went away, I accordingly wrote, with a full Reſolution to ſend to Mr. Belchier, in order to open the whole Affair, and rely on his Mercy. He the ſaid Flanigan called ſoon after, and told me Mr. Robinſon had been with me, and aſked what he ſaid: I told him, that he brought back the Letter he directed me to ſend, and aſked me, if it was my Hand-writing; I told him it was not; and that he had directed me to write in my own Hand; and that I had wrote ſuch, but had not ſent it. He then replied, Did not I tell you that was a dead Sett for you? That a Letter under your own Hand is what will caſt you in Court? And told me, that he had been with Mr. Belchier, and the reſt of the Gentlemen, the ſaid Managers, and that he was in great Friendſhip with them, and knew all their Secrets; and ſaid, I was a dead Man if I ſent ſuch Letter, or acted contrary to his Advice. Then I ſaid, The Lord have Mercy upon my Soul, I fear my Life is gone at any Rate. Replied Flanigan, If they can, you Fool, do you know how far it lies on them to do ſo? I ſaid, I did not; neither did I know what Service my Life could be to them: And ſaid, it was the general Character of Mr. Belchier, that he was merciful, and that the Gentlemen Priſoners in the Compter had ſo aſſured me. Flanigan then replied, What a great Fool you are! Take ſpecial Care of them; as ſure as Death, they are ſet upon to get Words out of your own Mouth; and adviſed me to keep my Room, and keep my Secrets, otherwiſe it would not be in his Power to have me ſaved. I then went down on my Knees, and prayed to the Almighty to have Mercy on my Soul, and that he (Flanigan) would aſſiſt me: He deſired me to get up, and aſſured me that I ſhould be ſaved, if I took his Advice, and that he had been that Day about me; and told me, I need not fear, for there was one of the Perſons was a Duke of very great Intereſt; and told me, he had cauſed a Letter to be preſented to the Duke, which he received, and declared he would ſtick to that Cauſe, and that he would acquaint his Majeſty thereof, and that I ſhould have his Intereſt: I deſired him to explain himſelf, what he meant by that Cauſe. He ſaid he would not then tell me, but again adviſed me to keep my Room, and avoid ſpeaking to any Perſons, and gave me one Shilling, and went away: Came again, and told me he had been at Doctors-Commons, and ſaw the forged Will, and that he knew the Name Diniſh Collins, ſubſcribed as a Witneſs to the ſaid Will, to be the Hand-writing of ſaid Noads, and ſaid it was in vain for me to deny it; and inſiſted it was ſo, and that he would ſwear it to be ſo, and that it muſt be ſo, and ſaid, You are now under no Reſtraint, and might and ſhould be admitted a King's Evidence, provided I would impeach the ſaid Noads; and ſaid, it was in vain for me to deny the Forgery, ſaying, I can and will prove the Body of the ſaid Will to be all of your Hand-writing, when ſubpœna'd on the Trial; but ſaid, If you impeach Noads, and are admitted an Evidence, you'll make him ſqueak; and aſſured me that nothing elſe could ſave my Life: And aſſured me afterwards, that all the Managers would be proſecuted by the King and Government, but did not explain for what; and ſaid, if I did not hang, they muſt; and if it coſt them ten thouſand Pounds, they would caſt me; and deſired me to give him one of the Buttons out of my Sleeve, and ſaid, The Man to whom this is to be given, is a Perſon whoſe Intereſt will ſave your Life; repeating at the ſame Time, that the Dependance of 78,000 l. was on the ſaid Will. I then ſaid, The Lord have Mercy on me, I am a loſt Man. He then ſaid, the Managers want you to ſubmit to be caſt; and they will promiſe to ſave you, (they will tell you ſo) I know it to be what they are upon, but for your Life don't ſend them a Scroll from under your Hand; if you do, it will be impoſſible to ſave you; and ſaid, he knew all their Secrets, and that they could do nothing without his Knowledge, and gave me Half-a-Crown, and went away. He came next Morning, and told me that one Robert Carter's Hand-writing was procured, and compared with the Names to the ſaid Will, and that it appeared he the ſaid Carter was alſo concerned in ſaid Forgery; and ſaid, there was a Decree granted againſt the Managers for all the Money; and unleſs I was hanged, they never could get over the Decree: Now, ſays Flanigan, if you flinch, I ſhall be ſubpœna'd to prove the Will to be your own Hand-writing, and ſaid he would not perjure himſelf for any Man; and then inſinuated my Life was in his Hands. He then went away, and came the next Day, and produced me a Letter from Commodore Walker, giving me a ſtrict Charge to ſtand on my Defence, aſſuring me his Intereſt with the Duke of Argyll would ſave my Life; and Flanigan then gave me a ſtrict Charge to ſtick to whatever ſhould be preſcribed to me, and that he would let me know from Time to Time all the ſaid Managers Secrets. He then ſwore me on a Book not to make Uſe of his Name, or to diſcover what Converſation had or ſhould paſs between him and the Perſon who ſhould produce to him the ſaid Sleeve-button, and that I ſhould not call him by any other Name than Mr. Friend, and told me he had alſo ſworn that Perſon, meaning Goddard, not to mention his Name before me. That on the ſame Day, after Flanigan went away, Mr. James Goddard came to me, and introduced himſelf, and called for a Pint of Wine, and aſked me how I did; and bid me have a good Heart, and then preſented the ſaid Sleeve-button, and told me he was a Man of as good a Fortune and as great Intereſt as any of the Managers were; and ſaid, he thought it was a lucky Thing for me that he had purchaſed the Intereſt of the ſaid Flanigan, whom he named by the Name of Mr. Friend; and ſaid ſuch Purchaſe coſt him fifty Pounds, in order to get at all the Secrets of the ſaid Managers; and told me the ſaid Friend was very great with the ſaid Noads, and all of them, and without his Intereſt, my Life could not be ſaved. He ſaid, he was Maſter of all that paſſed between me and Friend, and ſaid that Friend could and would prove the Forgery againſt Carter and Noads, as well as I, and that I might freely ſpeak to him; and ſaid, that Friend was to be ſubpœna'd as an indifferent Perſon againſt Noads, and that he would ſwear that Noads wrote the ſaid Name Diniſh Collins, and that Friend had ſeen the ſaid Will in the Commons, and could prove the Body to be my Hand-writing; and expreſſed himſelf much in the ſame Manner as Friend had repeated, before he told me that Friend acted as Attorney for Commodore Walker: He gave me a Crown, and ſaid he would call again. He came the next Day, and expreſſed himſelf to the Purport aforeſaid, and ſaid he would call the Day after; and charged me at my Peril, not to write to the ſaid Mr. Belchier: Then went away, and neglected coming according to Promiſe, which made me very uneaſy in Mind, and induced me to write a Letter to the ſaid Friend, purporting, I thought it was a Scheme laid between him and Goddard to take away my Life; and that I would write to Mr. Belchier. Soon after, Goddard came to me, and told me of the ſaid Letter, and ſaid it frighted him and Friend, and deſired I would not write in that Manner any more, aſſuring me I need not be afraid, and requeſted I would not communicate to any body what paſſed; telling me I was ſafe. He then took a Paper out of his Pocket, which he read to me, purporting what I was to ſwear to; and told me I had no Buſineſs to deny it, for Friend knew it to be true, and that he would alſo prove it; and ſaid, the ſame Seal which was to the Will, Friend aſſured him was the ſaid Noads's. He then took another Paper out of his Pocket, and got me to ſign it, purporting to be admitted an Evidence, and addreſſed to Alderman Chitty: He wrote ſomething more to the other Paper he brought, and ſaid my Irons ſhould be knocked off, and aſſured me it was by Mr. Belchier's Directions that I was ironed, that I might eaſily judge by that what they were upon; aſſuring me of his Friendſhip, and went away. The next Morning he came, and told me I ſhould be ſent for to Sir Joſeph Hankey's, and that my Irons ſhould be taken off, which accordingly were. He then read over the ſaid Paper he had ſo firſt produced as aforeſaid, and deſired me to recollect the Contents, when examined; and to ſtick to it, otherwiſe my Life would be loſt. I was carried to Sir Joſeph Hankey's, and in the Preſence of Alderman Chitty, Goddard appeared, and Mr. Lock; Goddard took out the ſaid Paper, and aſked me ſeveral Queſtions, as did alſo the Juſtice, and ſent me back: Goddard came to me, and had me in private, and told me I ſhould be ſent for again to be examined the next Day, and then produced the ſaid Papers, and made ſome Amendments, and deſired me to ſtick to it. The next Day I was carried to Sir Joſeph's, Alderman Chitty was there; Goddard, Lock, and the ſaid John Wilkinſon, attended; and Wilkinſon ſhewed me a Subpœna he was ſerved with by Noads, to proſecute me at the Old-Bailey; and Goddard there aſked me ſeveral Queſtions, as did alſo the Juſtice; and the Anſwers I gave, were calculated by the falſe Counſel, Inſtructions, and Advice the ſaid Goddard and Friend gave me, without doing which, they aſſured me, my Life could not be ſaved. I was ſent back. Goddard frequently came to me, and advanced me Money from Time to Time; and one Morning he told me he had thought of a Thing which would prevent the Bill being found againſt me, which he afterwards told me was, that the forged Will was proved at the Commons, as the Will of John Wilkinſon, who belonged to his Majeſty's Ship the Princeſs Amelia. The Day the Bill was thrown out by the Grand Jury, that was preferred againſt me, ſoon after Goddard came to me, and told me, that Alderman Chitty made it appear to the Grand Jury, I was admitted an Evidence, and that the Bill was thrown out; and told me, I ſhould be ſent for the next Day to Guildhall, to ſwear to a Paper that was drawn up, and prepared according to Form in Law, and ſaid, he would ſhew it me at Guildhall. The next Morning I was ſent for to Guildhall, where Goddard attended before the Sitting Alderman came, and called me into a Cloſet there, and took out a Paper, and gave me to read, and ſaid, he had got it drawn up, and that it was what I muſt ſwear to, in order to ſave my Life; and ſaid, I muſt ſtick to that Paper, or my Life would be loſt. He went out of the Room, and Mr. Lock came in, and ſaid, Mr Murphy, was you not afraid before the Bill was thrown out? I replied, I was. He then ſaid, You are a free Man, and deſired me to conſider what I was about. I had not Time to converſe with Mr. Lock, to know how I was free, before Mr. Goddard came in, and interrupted us; and Lock and Goddard went out, and Goddard ſoon returned, and deſired me not to ſpeak to Mr. Lock, or to the Alderman, but to ſwear to that Paper; and ſaid, he would give Mr. Lock Half a Guinea for his Trouble. I was ſoon after brought into the Room where Alderman Chitty was, and ſome other Perſon, and was ſworn to the ſaid Writing, which I never ſaw, 'till produced in the ſaid Cloſet, and declared ſuch Writing was calculated by the ſaid Goddard. I was ſent back. Goddard came to me, and produced a Paper ready drawn, which he deſired me to copy in my own Hand, which was of his Hand-writing, and directed me to give it to the Judge or Recorder at the Old-Bailey, the next Day, which he ſaid would clear up all to Satisfaction. I copied the ſame, and the Day after delivered it at the Old-Bailey to the Recorder, and was ſent back to the Compter. Goddard came there to me, and aſked me what paſſed: I told him I had delivered the Paper as he directed. That Goddard and Mr. Woodman had a Pint of Wine together, and had ſome Converſation in reſpect of having me detained in the Compter, and it was agreed a friendly Action to be laid, which Goddard aſſured me was in order to preſerve my Life, aſſuring me, if I went abroad, I ſhould certainly be knocked on the Head, poiſoned, or a Robbery ſworn againſt me, by the Contrivance of the ſaid Managers, to prevent my Evidence. Goddard put me on the Maſter-Side, for which he paid Woodman. I grew very uneaſy at not being at my Liberty. As the Bill was thrown out, and I admitted, as Goddard told me, a King's Evidence, being in a bad State of Health, of the Gaol-Sickneſs, of which many died, I requeſted Goddard, when he came again, to have me bailed out, and ſent into the Country, to the ſame Place where he kept the ſaid Mr. Wilkinſon; at which Goddard ſeemed uneaſy, and declared he knew of no Place in England

England ſo ſafe to preſerve my Life as the Place where I was, and repeated, as aforeſaid, that if I went abroad before I was examined as a Witneſs, I ſhould certainly loſe my Life; and promiſed to get me on the Debtors Side, with the Aſſiſtance of Mr. Woodman, provided I could get a Friend that could be confided in to keep Things ſecret, who would bring a friendly Action againſt me, and promiſed he would allow me a Shilling a Day, and pay for my Lodging, till diſcharged; at which I was more reconciled to ſtay than I was before, apprehending what Goddard had ſo repreſented was intended in order to preſerve my Life. I then told him, that I believed Timothy Mahony, who was my Relation, and whom Goddard knew, and was in the Secret, would be the only proper Perſon to bring ſuch Action. Then Goddard took a Direction where the ſaid Mahony lived, and told me, he would go to him. The ſaid Mahony came to me in a Day or two after, and told me, Mr. Goddard had been with him, and addreſſed himſelf to him, by telling him, he had ſomething to ſay to him to ſave my Life, and wanted him to go and ſwear a Debt againſt me, in order to keep me on an Action in the Compter: And that he aſſured him, that though the Bill was thrown out againſt me, yet if I went abroad, I ſhould be knocked on the Head, poiſoned, or a Robbery ſworn againſt me, and that my Life would certainly be taken away, by the Party who were againſt me. The ſaid Mahony told me he ſaid to the ſaid Goddard, he would not take ſuch an Oath on any Account: And that Goddard aſked him, Would he not do ſuch a Thing as to take an Oath to ſave my Life, being my Relation? and ſaid, he told the ſaid Goddard, he would not take a falſe Oath for the World. And that Goddard, at length, by many fair Speeches, importuned him to go to take out ſuch Action, and had directed him to his Brother's Houſe in St. Chriſtopher's Church-yard, for 15*s.* on that Account, and promiſed to leave Directions with his Brother to give the Money, and deſired Mahony, when he got the Money, to come to me, in order to take out ſuch Action. The ſaid Mahony alſo told me, he had received the 15*s.* which he offered to give me, and ſaid, he would not take out any ſuch Action, as I was not indebted to him in any Sum that amounted to an Arreſt: Then I preſſed and intreated the ſaid Mahony to bring ſuch Action, as it was intended to ſave my Life, and told him I would give him a promiſſory Note for as much as he was to take the Action for, and he would be ſafe in ſo doing, which he then complied with; and I drew a Note for 5 or 6*l.* which I antedated, payable to him or Order; and it being then too late to take out any Action, in a Night or two after Mahony came again to me, and I directed him to go to the Office and lodge ſuch Action, which he did; and he afterwards gave him 15*s.*—That the ſaid Mr. Friend, at different Times, came to me, and aſſured me he would attend at the Trial, and ſwear that Noads wrote the ſaid Name Diniſh Collins; and he alſo aſſured me, that if I went abroad before the Trial was over, I ſhould be murdered or poiſoned, or have a Robbery ſworn againſt me, by the Contrivance of the ſaid Managers. That Goddard frequently came to me, and kept me full of Spirits, aſſuring me I ſhould be an Evidence againſt Noads and Carter; and if Thomas Williams, who was the ſuppoſed Executor of the ſaid Wilkinſon, and went by the Name of John Daunt, ſhould not be produced on my Trial, the ſaid Mr. Friend was to ſwear falſely againſt the ſaid Noads. I do declare, that the ſaid Mr. Noads and Robert Carter were innocent of what I ſwore againſt them, relating to any Knowledge they had in any Forgery; and that I, and the ſaid John Williams, otherwiſe Daunt, were the only Perſons concerned in forging and publiſhing the ſaid Will of the ſaid John Wilkinſon. And I do alſo declare, that I never had any Intention whatſoever to charge the ſaid Mr. Noads, or the ſaid Carter, with the ſaid Forgery, until I was ſpirited and prompted up in the Manner aforeſaid, by the Art, Management, and Contrivance of the ſaid Goddard and Flanigan. And I do alſo ſolemnly declare, that the ſaid James Goddard has often, ſince my Conviction, ſent ſeveral Meſſages to me, to deſire I would not reveal any of the ſecret Tranſactions that paſſed between us as aforeſaid, and ſent, in his own Hand-writing, a falſe Paper to be publiſhed, which he requeſted I would ſign, but refuſed ſo to do. I had ſeveral Letters and Papers of Conſequence, which, being adviſed and requeſted, I burnt, leſt I ſhould be ſearched, which would have given a very full and ſatisfactory Diſcovery in this Affair. That Word was ſent to me laſt Night by Goddard, that if I kept it ſecret, in caſe my Life could not be ſaved, I ſhould be decently buried, provided I would ſend back to him ſigned the falſe Confeſſion, which he ſent me in his own Hand-writing, as alſo another Writing that would be ſent me. Mr. Vicors, Chaplain to the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, being my Father, this Day told me, that he dined with the ſame James Goddard Yeſterday, and that he had deſired him to bring back to him from me the ſaid Confeſſion, and propoſed to ſend by him another Writing to be ſigned by me, which the ſaid Mr. Vicors told me he informed the ſaid Mr. Goddard he would not be any wiſe concerned therein; but he ſaid he would charge me to make an open Confeſſion of the Truth before Life parted. And I declare the ſaid Mr. Vicors adviſed me ſo to do; and, as a dying Man, being deſirous to diſcharge my Conſcience, have made this Declaration, which is nothing but the Truth. Given under my Hand, from my Cell in Newgate, the 27th of January, 1753.

LI. Proceedings againſt Dr. ARCHIBALD CAMERON, at the King's Bench, May 17, 1753, on the Bill of Attainder paſſed againſt him 19 Geo. II. for being in the Rebellion 1745.

" THIS Dr. Cameron * was younger Brother to Donald Cameron of " Lochiel, and Son of Evan Cameron, who was in the Rebellion " in 1715, and was one of the Seven that came from France with " the Young Pretender, and who, on their landing in July 1745, went to " the Houſe of Donald Macdonald of Kenloch-Moidart, and from thence " Orders were iſſued for the Clans to join the Young Pretender: On which " Donald Cameron, after much Intreaty, waited on him, and expreſſed his " Surprize to ſee him ſo weakly attended, and refuſed to raiſe his Clan, " 'till the Young Pretender could produce in Writing the French King's " Reſolution to aſſiſt him with a proper Number of Forces, &c. and be- " ing aſſured that he would, he ſummoned his Clan, and ſet up his Stand- " ard with this Motto, TANDEM TRIUMPHANS, At length Triumphant; " though, at the ſame Time, he told the Young Pretender, that his " Scheme was ſo ill concerted, that he feared no Succeſs would happen " from it, and that the Iſſue of it would be the Ruin of his Friends; as in " the End it proved.

" Dr. Cameron was in himſelf of a quiet and peaceable Temper; and, " had he not been Brother to Lochiel, it is very probable he would never " have gone into the Rebellion.

" His Father gave him the beſt Education Scotland could afford, deſign- " ing him for the Bar; which Profeſſion he did not like, and applied " himſelf to the Study of Phyſic and Anatomy, and put himſelf under the " Direction of Dr. Alexander Monro, of the Univerſity of Edinburgh, a " Gentleman of eſtabliſhed Reputation; and when he had acquired a " competent Skill in Anatomy, he applied himſelf to Phyſic, and was " inſtructed therein by Dr. Sinclair, a Gentleman very eminent in the Fa- " culty; after which he travelled abroad, and ſtudied in thoſe Branches at " Paris; and after ſtaying ſome Time there, returned to Lochaber, and " married a young Lady of the Name of Campbell, by whom he left Se- " ven Children.

" This Dr. Cameron might have made a conſiderable Figure in his Pro- " feſſion, had he ſettled at London or Edinburgh; but choſe his Reſidence " near his Brother's, among the Highlands, where he took great Pains to " cultivate the Minds and Manners of the Highlanders, who by his Means " were greatly improved. He was a Man of no Ambition, but of an ea- " ſy, quiet Temper. His chief Buſineſs in the Rebel Army was to attend " his Brother, and to aſſiſt him with his Skill, if any Accident ſhould be- " fal him in Battle; and he did attend not only ſeveral of the wounded " Rebels, but likewiſe ſeveral of the King's Troops that fell wounded in- " to the Hands of the Rebels. But the Battle of Culloden put a final End " to the Rebellion, and all the Pretender's Hopes, and ruined vaſt Num- " bers of Families, that put their Truſt in French Faith: Lochiel was " wounded in the Ancle in the Battle, and carried off by his Clan, and at- " tended daily by the Doctor his Brother, wandering about for ſome Time " after the Battle; 'till at laſt the Young Pretender, Lochiel, his Brother " the Doctor, and ſome other of his Followers, embarked on board a " Veſſel in the Harbour of Flota in the Iſle of South-Uiſt, and landed at " Boulogne in France about the Middle of September 1746, to their great " Joy, having ſuffered innumerable Hardſhips.

" Lochiel had immediately a Regiment given him by the King in the " French Army, and the Doctor was made Phyſician to it; but on the " Death of his Brother, in September 1748, he was appointed Phyſician " to Lord Ogilvie's Regiment, then quartered at Liſle in Flanders.

" About the Year 1749, a Collection was made among the Jacobites " for their Friends abroad; and, it was ſaid, Dr. Cameron came over, " and received a Part of it: After this, another Collection was made for " theſe unhappy People; and the Doctor repreſented, that his Pay would " not keep him and his Family: But, after many Sollicitations, receiving " no ſatisfactory Anſwer, he came over himſelf to Scotland, and was there " diſcovered, and was ſeized by a Party of Lord George Beauclerk's Regi- " ment, who were ſent from the Fort of Inverſnaid in ſearch of him, and " brought Priſoner to Edinburgh, March the 26th, 1753; and being " brought before the Lord Juſtice Clerk, he told him, You are the only " Man in your Circumſtances, that ever I had Occaſion to ſpeak to ſince I have " been engaged in Buſineſs, whoſe Anſwers to me could be of no Prejudice to him; " becauſe you are to be carried to London, and there are Witneſſes ready to ap- " pear againſt you at the Court of King's Bench, to prove that you are the identi- " cal Dr. Cameron, mentioned in the Bill of Attainder: This will condemn " you, and you are to have no other Trial.——This ſtruck him; and, af- " ter ſome Pauſe, he replied, That he did not come over with any political De- " ſign, but only to tranſact ſome Affairs relating to Lochiel's Eſtate.

" Upon his Arrival at London, he was examined by the Council at the " Cockpit, and committed Priſoner to the Tower."

PLEAS before our Lord the King at Weſtminſter of Eaſter Term, in the 26th Year of the Reign, &c.

Amongſt the Pleas of the King Roll.

ENGLAND. Our preſent Sovereign Lord the King hath tranſmitted to his beloved and faithful Sir William Lee, and others his Fellows Juſtices, &c. [as in the Caſe of Mr. Murray, of Broughton, mutatis mutandis, Vol. IX.]

Dr. Archibald Cameron, who was one of the Perſons attainted by the Act of the 19th of the King, was, on the 17th of May 1753, brought to the Bar by Habeas Corpus directed to the Lieutenant of the Tower; and being arraigned by the Secondary on the Crown Side, the Writ of Mittimus, with the Certiorari, and Return, were read to him by the Secondary. The Attorney-General then prayed that Execution might be awarded; and the Secondary demanded of the Priſoner, what he had to ſay why Execution ſhould not be done upon him?

The Priſoner, who, during the whole Time he ſtood at the Bar, behaved with great Propriety, not inſenſible of his Condition, nor greatly diſconcerted, ſaid, That he was led to take a Part in the Rebellion againſt his own Judgment and Inclination, by ſome upon whom his All depended: That he ſtill flattered himſelf he ſhould appear not unworthy of his Majeſty's Mercy; and mentioned ſome Facts which he hoped might intitle him to it. He ſaid, he did not offer theſe Things as a Defence he relied on in point of Law, but as Facts which he hoped might have ſome Weight in another Place, for he was determined to throw himſelf entirely on his Majeſty's Mercy.

Whereupon Proclamation being made for Silence, the Chief Juſtice, after a ſhort Exhortation to the Priſoner, pronounced the uſual Judgment in Caſe of High Treaſon, as an Award of Execution grounded on the Act of Attainder. And a Rule was made for his Execution on the 7th of June, and Writs for that Purpoſe to the Lieutenant of the Tower and the Sheriff of Middleſex were ordered, as in the Caſe of Mr. Ratcliffe, Vol. IX.

The Court, in pronouncing Judgment in this Caſe, followed the Precedents in the Caſes of Humphrey Stafford, (1 H. VII. 23, 25.) and of Barkſtead, Okey, and Corbet, (1 Sid. 72. 1 Lev. 61. State Trials, Vol. VIII. p. 363.) The Caſes of Holloway and Sir Thomas Armſtrong, in Charles the Second's Time, (State Trials, Vol. III. Edit. 1741. p. 944, 984.) and of Lord Griffin †, in the late Queen's Time, were mentioned at a Conference among the Judges of the King's Bench on this Occaſion; but little Regard was paid to them.

For in Holloway's, which was the leading Caſe, the Opinion of the Court ſeemeth to have been given haſtily, and againſt the Senſe of the Bar. And in Lord Griffin's Caſe, Chief Juſtice Holt, who was at that Time abſent, was of a contrary Opinion, and, as I have heard, conſtantly perſiſted in it; and I do not ſee how an Attainder by Outlawry at Common Law, is, in this reſpect, diſtinguiſhable from the Caſe of an Attainder by Act of Parliament, which, in the preſent Caſe, is but in Nature of a Parliamentary Outlawry.

Indeed, in Caſes within the Act of the 19th of the King, c. 34. where the Proceeding is upon a Suggeſtion on the Roll, that the Priſoner did not ſurrender to Juſtice purſuant to that Act, the conſtant Courſe hath been to award Execution, without pronouncing Sentence of Death, as in Caſes of Felony: But that Practice is grounded on the Words of the Act; "And it ſhall be lawful for the Court to award Execution againſt ſuch "Offender, in ſuch Manner as if he had been convicted and ATTAINTED "in the ſaid Court."

The Record in the Caſe of Barkſtead, &c. was ſearched, and the Judges had Copies of it. It is of Eaſter Term, in the Fourteenth of King Charles the Second; it agreeth, mutatis mutandis, with the Record in Mr. Murray's Caſe, Vol. IX. and after ſetting forth the Act of Parliament by which the Priſoners ſtood attainted, it proceedeth, "Et modo ſcilicet "die Mercurii prox' poſt Quinden' Paſch' iſto eodem Termino coram "Domino Rege apud Weſt' veniunt prædict' Johannes Barkſtead, Jo"hannes Okey, & Milo Corbet, per Johannem Robinſon Mil. & Bar. "On Dr. Cameron's receiving Sentence, he made a genteel Bow, and "only deſired he might have Leave to ſend for his Wife, who, with "ſeven Children, entirely dependent on him for Support, were at Liſle "in Flanders; which was granted. He ſaid, that in 1746 he came from "France to ſurrender himſelf, agreeable to the Proclamation, but was "prevented by an Accident happening in his Family: He behaved with "great Reſolution and Decency before the Court ‡.

"During the Interval between the Sentence and his Execution, his "Wife uſed all poſſible Means to obtain a Pardon, by delivering a Pe"tition to his Majeſty, another to her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs of "Wales, and to ſeveral of the Nobility, but without Effect: For, on "Thurſday, June 7th, about Ten o'Clock in the Forenoon, he was "brought out of the Tower, guarded by a Party of the Horſe-Guards, "and delivered to the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex: As ſoon as he "was out at the Tower-Gate, he was put into the Hurdle, to which he "was faſtened by the Executioner. In this Manner he was drawn thro' "the City, attended by Sir Richard Glynn, one of the Sheriffs, and under "the Care of the Sheriff's Officers and Conſtables, to the Place of Exe"cution. Sir Charles Aſgill, the other Sheriff, left the Priſoner at the "Tower.

"The Doctor being arrived at the Place of Execution, and helped into "the Cart, deſired to ſpeak to the Sheriff, who came to him: The "Doctor intreated the Favour of him, that he would give Orders to let "his Body hang 'till he was quite dead, before the Executioner began "his further Operation, and the Sheriff promiſed to oblige him in his "Requeſt; and accordingly the Body hung three Quarters of an Hour "before cut down, when no Remains of Life was in him.

"While in the Cart, a Gentleman in a Lay Habit came and prayed "with him, and then left him to his own private Devotions; by which "it was imagined the Doctor was a Roman Catholic, and the Gentleman "who prayed with him a Prieſt. He died with great Decency and Re"ſolution, without any viſible Alteration in his Countenance or Beha"viour, but perfectly reſigned to the Will of Heaven. He left no Paper "behind him. After his Body was taken from the Gallows, the Exe"cutioner cut off his Head, and took out his Bowels, but did not "quarter the Body. His Body and Head were put into a Coffin, with "this Inſcription on the Lid of it, Dr. Archibald Cameron ſuffered the "7th of June, 1753, aged 46."

† The Caſe of Lord GRIFFIN, from a MS. Report of the late Lord Chief Baron Dod. Paſch. 7 Annæ 1708.

Lord Griffin, who had been outlawed for High-Treaſon, was this Term brought to the King's Bench; and the whole Record of the Indictment and Outlawry was read to him, and he was demanded, if he had aught to ſay why Execution ſhould not be done; and he not making any material Objection, the Court ordered Execution to be done. But note, Sir James Montagu, Sollicitor-General, (there being then no Attorney-General) prayed that Judgment as in Caſe of High-Treaſon might be pronounced; or that at leaſt it might be entered on the Roll in the Award of Execution: And ſaid, this was the Opinion of Holt, Chief Juſtice, then at Bath propter Ægritudinem. But Powell and the Court held, that the Award of Execution ſhould be general; for the Judgment in the Outlawry implieth all the Particulars, and no ſecond Judgment ought to be given. And ſo they ſaid it was held in the Caſes of Holloway and Sir Thomas Armſtrong. Mes per auters dubitatur, quia le Livre del 1 H. 7. fo. 24. eſt contra; and it was ſaid that in the Caſe of Barkſtead, Okey, and Corbet, the Court followed the Precedent of that Book.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, Make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, oyez, oyez! If any one can inform my Lords the King's Justices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney, on this Inquest to be taken, of any Crimes or Misdemeanors done or committed by the Defendant at the Bar, let them come forth, and they shall be heard.

God save the King.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen of the Jury; The Defendant at the Bar stands indicted by the Name of Elizabeth Canning, late of London, Spinster; and the Indictment sets forth, that at the General Session of the Peace holden for the County of Middlesex, at Hicks's-Hall, in St. John's-Street, in the County aforesaid, on Monday the 19th Day of February, in the twenty-sixth Year of the Reign of our present Sovereign Lord George the Second, by the Grace of God, of Great-Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth; before Luke Robinson, Esquire, Sir John Cross, Baronet, Thomas Lane and Pierce Galliard, Esquires, and others their Fellows Justices of our said Lord the King, assigned to keep the Peace in the County aforesaid, and also to hear and determine divers Felonies, Trespasses, and other Misdeeds committed in the same County, by the Oath of Edmund Kane, Gent. John Jennings, George Fry, David Reynolds, Thomas Foreman, Arthur Hancock, Isaac George, Lewis Powell, William Meads, Henry Haines, John Greenhill, Thomas Hibbins, John Brooke, Thomas Bowman, Richard Westmerland, Elias Lock, Henry Colman, John Knowles, Henry Carthrup, William Fort, Thomas Woorell, Job Blandford, and Robert Rewell, good and lawful Men of the County aforesaid, then and there sworn and charged to enquire for our said Lord the King, for the Body of the said County; it was presented that Mary Squires, late of the Parish of Enfield, in the County of Middlesex, Widow, on the second Day of January, in the twenty-sixth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, King of Great-Britain, &c. with Force and Arms, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, in the Dwelling-House of one Susannah Wells, there situate, upon one Elizabeth Canning, Spinster, in the Peace of God and our said Lord the King then and there being, feloniously did make an Assault, and her the said Elizabeth in bodily Fear and Danger of her Life then and there feloniously did put; and one Pair of Stays of the Value of ten Shillings, of the Goods and Chattels of the said Elizabeth, from the Person and against the Will of the said Elizabeth, in the Dwelling-House aforesaid, then and there, violently and feloniously did steal, take, and carry away, against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity: And thereupon such Proceedings were had, that afterwards (to wit) at the Delivery of the Gaol of our said Lord the King of Newgate, holden for the County of Middlesex, at Justice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, in the Suburbs of the City of London, on Wednesday the 21st of February, in the twenty-sixth Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, before Sir Crisp Gascoyne, Knight, Mayor of the City of London; Sir Martin Wright, Knight, one of the Justices of our said Lord the King, assigned to hold Pleas before the King himself; Nathaniel Gundry, Esquire, one of the Justices of our said Lord the King of the Court of Common Pleas; Sir Richard Adams, Knight, one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer of our said Lord the King, and others their Fellows Justices of our said Lord the King, assigned to deliver his Gaol of Newgate of the Prisoners therein then being; and before whom the Indictment aforesaid, against the said Mary Squires, was then depending; came the said Mary Squires in the same Indictment named, under the Custody of Sir Charles Asgill, Knight, and Sir Richard Glynn, Knight, Sheriffs of the said County (into whose Custody in the Goal of Newgate aforesaid, she the said Mary Squires, for the Cause aforesaid, had been before committed): And the said Mary Squires being then brought to the Bar there in her proper Person, and being then and there asked how she would be acquitted of the Premisses specified in the said Indictment as aforesaid, she the said Mary Squires did then and there say, that she was not guilty thereof; and thereupon for Good and Ill she put herself upon the Country: Whereupon such Proceedings were had, that afterwards (to wit), at the same Session of the Delivery of the Goal aforesaid, holden for the County aforesaid, at Justice-Hall aforesaid, on the said Wednesday the 21st Day of February, in the twenty-sixth Year aforesaid, and before the same Justices of our said Lord the King, in that behalf above-named, and others their Fellows aforesaid, by a certain Jury of the County between our said Lord the King, and the said Mary Squires in that behalf in due Manner chosen, tried and sworn, the Issue aforesaid was tried. And the said present Jurors for our said Lord the King, now upon their Oath aforesaid, do further present, That upon the said Trial between our said Lord the King and the said Mary Squires, at London aforesaid, (that is to say) at the Parish of St. Sepulchre, in the Ward of Farringdon Without, in London aforesaid, (to wit) at Justice-Hall aforesaid, in open Court aforesaid, the said Elizabeth Canning, late of London, Spinster, did appear as a Witness for and on behalf of our said Lord the King, against the said Mary Squires; and the said Elizabeth Canning then and there did, before the said Justices last named, in open Court aforesaid, take her corporal Oath, and was duly sworn upon the Holy Gospel of God, to speak the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, of and upon the Premisses so as aforesaid put in Issue between our said Lord the King and the said Mary Squires (the same Justices then and there having a competent Authority to administer an Oath to the said Elizabeth Canning in that behalf). And the said Elizabeth Canning being so sworn, and not having the Fear of God before her Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, and having no Regard for the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, nor fearing the Punishments therein contained, and unlawfully, wickedly, maliciously, and deliberately advising, contriving, and intending to pervert the due Course of Law and Justice, and to cause and procure the said Mary Squires untruly to be convicted of the Felony and Robbery charged upon her in and by the Indictment aforesaid, afterwards, (to wit) upon the 21st Day of February, in the twenty-sixth Year aforesaid, before the Justices of our said Lord the King last above-named, at the same Session of Delivery of the Goal aforesaid, at London aforesaid, (that is to say) at the Parish of St. Sepulchre aforesaid, in the Ward of Farringdon Without aforesaid, in London aforesaid, did falsely, wickedly, voluntarily, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Consent, and of her own most wicked and corrupt Mind, upon her said Oath, so by her taken as aforesaid, say, depose, swear, and give in Evidence (among other Things) to the Jurors of the Jury, who were then and there in due Manner chosen, tried, and sworn to try the said Issue, That she the said Elizabeth Canning had been at Salt-Peter

* Taken in Short-hand by Thomas Gurney, Samuel Rudd, and Isaac Harman, all eminent Short-hand Writers, appointed by the Court for that Purpose; and after being carefully examined together, faithfully transcribed by the said Thomas Gurney, many Years Short-hand Writer at the said Court. Bank to ſee an Uncle and Aunt, and ſtayed there till about nine at Night, on the 1ſt Day of January (meaning the Month of January in the ſaid Indictment mentioned): That then her Uncle and Aunt came with her as far as Aldgate, when they parted: That ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning was then alone, ſo came down Houndſditch and over Moorfields by Bedlam Wall: That there two luſty Men, both in great Coats, laid hold of her: That they took her to the Priſoner Wells's Houſe (meaning the Dwelling-Houſe of the ſaid Suſannah Wells in the ſaid Indictment mentioned, ſituate at Enfield aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid). And the ſaid Elizabeth Canning being then and there, at and upon the ſaid Trial, aſked and examined upon her ſaid Oath, at what Time ſhe thought it might be that ſhe was taken to the ſaid Suſannah Wells's Houſe; ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning then and there, in the ſaid Court, at that Trial, falſly, wilfully, and corruptly, upon her ſaid Oath, ſaid, depoſed, anſwered, and gave Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, ſo as aforeſaid choſen, tried and ſworn to try the ſaid Iſſue, That as near as ſhe could think, it was about Four o'Clock in the Morning (meaning the Morning of the ſaid 2d Day of January). The Indictment, Gentlemen, farther ſets forth, That the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, being ſo ſworn as aforeſaid, did then and there, upon the ſaid Trial, further falſly, voluntarily, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, and of her own moſt wicked and corrupt Mind, upon her ſaid Oath ſo by her taken as aforeſaid, ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence (among other Things) to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, ſo choſen, tried, and ſworn to try the ſaid Iſſue as aforeſaid, that ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning ſaw the Gypſey Woman Squires (meaning the above-named Mary Squires) ſitting in a Chair (meaning ſitting in a Chair in the ſaid Dwelling-Houſe). That as ſoon as ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning was brought in, (meaning into the ſaid Dwelling-Houſe) the ſaid Mary Squires took her by the Hand, and aſked her if ſhe choſe to go their Way, ſaying, that if ſhe did, ſhe ſhould have fine Cloaths. That ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning ſaid, No. That then ſhe the ſaid Mary Squires went and took a Knife out of a Dreſſer-Drawer, and cut the Lace of her the ſaid Elizabeth Canning's Stays, and took them (meaning the ſaid Elizabeth Canning's Stays) from her. That ſhe the ſaid Mary Squires gave her the ſaid Elizabeth Canning a Slap on the Face: That ſhe the ſaid Mary Squires puſhed her up Stairs (meaning certain Stairs leading from the Kitchen of the ſaid Dwelling-Houſe) into a certain Room called the Workſhop, belonging to the ſaid Dwelling-Houſe from out of the Kitchen (meaning the Kitchen of the ſaid Dwelling-Houſe) where they were. And the ſaid Elizabeth Canning being then and there, upon the ſaid Trial, aſked and examined upon her ſaid Oath, concerning the Name of the Place ſhe was put into; ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning then and there, at that Trial, falſly, wilfully, and corruptly, upon her ſaid Oath depoſed, anſwered, and gave in Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, ſo as aforeſaid choſen, tried, and ſworn to try the ſaid Iſſue, That they call it (meaning the ſaid Room called the Workſhop) the Hay-loft (meaning by ſuch Anſwer ſo given to ſuch Queſtion, that ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning had been puſhed up the ſaid Stairs by the ſaid Mary Squires into the ſaid Room called the Work-ſhop). The Indictment, Gentlemen, further ſets forth, that the ſaid Elizabeth Canning being ſo ſworn as aforeſaid, did then and there, upon the ſaid Trial, further falſly, voluntarily, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, and of her own moſt wicked and corrupt Mind, upon her ſaid Oath, ſo by her taken as aforeſaid, ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence (among other Things) to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury ſo choſen, tried, and ſworn to try the ſaid Iſſue as aforeſaid, That the Room-Door was ſhut as ſoon as the ſaid Elizabeth Canning was put up: That after ſhe the ſaid Mary Squires ſhut the Door, ſhe ſaid, that if ever ſhe heard the ſaid Elizabeth Canning ſtir or move, ſhe would cut her the ſaid Elizabeth Canning's Throat. That when the Day-light (meaning the Day-light of the 2d of January) appeared, ſhe could (meaning that ſhe did) ſee about the Room (again meaning the ſaid Room called the Work-ſhop): That there (again meaning the ſaid Room called the Workſhop) was a Fire-place and Grate in it: That there (again meaning the ſaid Room called the Work-ſhop) was a black Pitcher not quite full of Water and about twenty-four Pieces of Bread; and that a certain Pitcher then and there produced to the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, at the Time of her giving her Evidence as aforeſaid, was the Pitcher, and that it was full (meaning full of Water) to near the Neck. And the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, being then and there, at and upon the ſaid Trial, alſo aſked and examined upon her ſaid Oath, how long ſhe continued in the ſaid Room called the Workſhop; ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning then and there, in the ſaid Court, at that Trial, falſly, wilfully, and corruptly, upon her ſaid Oath, ſaid, depoſed, anſwered, and gave in Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, ſo as aforeſaid choſen, tried, and ſworn to try the ſaid Iſſue, a Month by the Weeks, all but a few Hours. The Indictment, Gentlemen, further ſets forth, that the ſaid Elizabeth Canning being ſo ſworn as aforeſaid, did then and there upon the ſaid Trial, further falſly, wickedly, voluntarily, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, and of her own moſt wicked and corrupt Mind, upon her ſaid Oath, ſo taken as aforeſaid, ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence (amongſt other Things) to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, ſo choſen, tried, and ſworn to try the ſaid Iſſue as aforeſaid, That on the Wedneſday (meaning Wedneſday the 24th Day of the ſaid Month of January) before the ſaid Elizabeth Canning came away, ſhe ſaw ſomebody look through the Crack of the Door (again meaning the Door of the ſaid Room called the Workſhop): That ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning got out, (meaning out of the ſaid Room called the Workſhop) about Four o'Clock in the Afternoon, on a Monday (meaning Monday the 29th Day of the ſaid Month of January), after ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning had been confined there four Weeks, all but a few Hours: That ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning broke down a Board that was nailed up at the Inſide of a Window, (meaning a Window of and belonging to the ſaid Room called the Workſhop) and got out there (meaning out of the ſaid Window): That ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning took an old ſort of a Bed-gown, and a Handkerchief, that were in the ſaid Hay-loft, (again meaning the ſaid Room called the Workſhop) and lay in a Grate of the Chimney (meaning the Chimney of the ſaid Room called the Workſhop). And the ſaid Elizabeth Canning being then and there, at and upon the Trial, aſked and examined upon her ſaid Oath, concerning the Time ſhe drank all her Water, (meaning the Water ſhe ſo as aforeſaid gave in Evidence to have been in the ſaid Pitcher) ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning then and there, in the Court at that Trial, falſly and corruptly, upon her ſaid Oath, ſaid, depoſed, anſwered, and gave in Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, ſo as aforeſaid choſen, tried, and ſworn to try the ſaid Iſſue, That ſhe drank all that (meaning all the Water ſhe ſo as aforeſaid gave in Evidence to have been in the ſaid Pitcher) about Half an Hour before ſhe got out of the Room (meaning the ſaid Room called the Workſhop): Whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning was not, about Four of the Clock in the Morning of the ſaid 2d Day of January, taken by two Men to the ſaid Dwelling-Houſe of the ſaid Suſannah Wells; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning was not taken or brought into the ſaid Houſe on the ſaid 2d of January; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning was not on the ſaid 2d Day of January, or at any other Time in the ſaid Month of January, in the ſaid Houſe; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did not, on the ſaid 2d Day of January, ſee the ſaid Mary Squires in the ſaid Houſe; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did not, at any other Time in the ſaid Month of January, ſee the ſaid Mary Squires in the ſaid Houſe; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Mary Squires, on the ſaid 2d Day of January, was at Abbotſbury in the County of Dorſet, and was not on that Day in the ſaid Houſe; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not take her the ſaid Elizabeth Canning by the Hand, and aſk her if ſhe choſe to go their Way, ſaying, that if ſhe did ſhe ſhould have fine Cloaths; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not take her the ſaid Elizabeth Canning by the Hand, and aſk her if ſhe choſe to go their Way; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact the ſaid Mary Squires did not go and take a Knife out of a Dreſſer-Drawer, and cut the Lace of her the ſaid Elizabeth Canning's Stays, and take them from her; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not cut the Lace of her the ſaid Elizabeth Canning's Stays; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not take the ſaid Elizabeth Canning's Stays from her; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not give the ſaid Elizabeth Canning a Slap on the Face; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not puſh the ſaid Elizabeth Canning up the ſaid Stairs leading from the ſaid Kitchen into the ſaid Room called the Workſhop; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not puſh the ſaid Elizabeth Canning upon the ſaid Stairs into the ſaid Room called the Workſhop; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not puſh the ſaid Elizabeth Canning up any Stairs into the ſaid Room called the Workſhop, or Hay-loft, or into any other Room or Place whatſoever; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not ſay, that if ſhe ever heard the ſaid Elizabeth Canning ſtir or move, ſhe would cut her Throat; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, when the Day-light of the ſaid 2d Day of January appeared, ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning could not ſee about the ſaid Room called the Workſhop; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did not, on the ſaid 2d Day of January, ſee about the ſaid Room called the Workſhop; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Elizabeth Canning was not, on the ſaid 2d Day of January, in the ſaid Room called the Workſhop, or in any Room or Place belonging to the ſaid Dwelling-Houſe; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Elizabeth Canning was not, at any other Time between the ſaid 2d Day of January, and the ſaid 29th Day of January, in the ſaid Room called the Workſhop, or in any other Room or Place belonging to the ſaid Dwelling Houſe; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, there was not, on the ſaid 2d Day of January, any black Pitcher, and about twenty-four Pieces of Bread, or any other Number of Pieces of Bread, in the ſaid Room called the Workſhop; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the Pitcher ſo produced to the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, at the Time of her giving Evidence as aforeſaid, was not, on the ſaid 2d Day of January, in the ſaid Room called the Workſhop; and whereas the ſaid Pitcher ſo produced to her the ſaid Elizabeth Canning as aforeſaid, was not, on the 2d Day of January, full of Water, to near the Neck; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did not drink all the Water, in and by her ſaid Evidence pretended to have been in ſuch Pitcher, about Half an Hour before the Time, ſhe ſo as aforeſaid gave in Evidence, that ſhe got out of the ſaid Room called the Workſhop; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did not, at any Time on the ſaid 29th Day of January, or at any other Time between the ſaid 2d Day of January and the ſaid 29th Day of January, drink any Water out of the ſaid Pitcher, in the ſaid Room called the Workſhop, or in any other Place or Room belonging to the ſaid Houſe; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did not continue in the ſaid Room called the Workſhop a Month by the Weeks, all but a few Hours; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Elizabeth Canning was not, at any Time in the ſaid Month of January, confined in the ſaid Room called the Workſhop; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Elizabeth Canning was not, in the ſaid Month of January confined in any other Room of or belonging to the ſaid Houſe of the ſaid Suſannah Wells, for one Month by the Weeks, all but a few Hours, or for any other Space of Time; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did not, on the ſaid Wedneſday the ſaid 24th of January, ſee any Perſon look through the Crack of the Door of the ſaid Room called the Workſhop; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did not get out of any Window of or belonging to the ſaid Room called the Workſhop; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did not take an old Sort of a Bed-gown and a Handkerchief, that were in the ſaid Room called the Workſhop, and lay in a Grate of the Chimney of the ſaid Room; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did not take any Bed-gown or Handkerchief out of a Grate in the Chimney in the ſaid Room; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, there was not any Grate in the Chimney of the ſaid Room on the 2d Day of January; and whereas there was not any Grate in the Chimney of the ſaid Room, at any other Time, during the Time ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning ſo as aforeſaid gave in Evidence that ſhe continued or had been confined in the ſaid Room called the Workſhop; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, there was not, on the ſaid 2d Day of January, or at any other Time between that Day and the ſaid 29th Day of January, any Grate in the Fire-place of the ſaid Room called the Workſhop, as ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, by her falſe and corrupt Teſtimony aforeſaid, at and upon the ſaid Trial, did moſt falſely, voluntarily, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, upon her ſaid Oath, ſo taken as aforeſaid, ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, in manner aforeſaid. And then, Gentlemen, the Indictment in this Place concludes, That ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, at and upon the ſaid Trial, upon the ſaid 21ſt Day of February, in the 26th Year aforeſaid, at London aforeſaid, (that is to ſay) at the ſaid Pariſh of St. Sepulchre, in the ſaid Ward of Farringdon Without, in London aforeſaid, before the ſaid Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King laſt above-named, and others their Fellows aforeſaid, by her own proper Act and Conſent, and of her own moſt wicked and corrupt Mind, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, did falſely, voluntarily, and corruptly, upon her ſaid Oath, ſo taken as aforeſaid, commit wilful and corrupt Perjury, to the great Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, in Contempt of our ſaid Lord the King and his Laws, to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. The Indictment, Gentlemen, further charges, That at the Seſſion of the Delivery of the Gaol of our ſaid Lord the King of Newgate, holden for the County of Middleſex, at Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, in the Suburbs of the City of London, on Wedneſday the 21ſt Day of February, in the 26th Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord George the Second, King of Great Britain, &c. before Sir Criſp Gaſcoyne, Mayor of the City of London; Sir Martin Wright, Knight, one of the Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King, aſſigned to hold Pleas before the King himſelf; Nathaniel Gundry, Eſq. one of the Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King of the Court of Common Pleas; Sir Richard Adams, Knight, one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer of our ſaid Lord the King, and others their Fellows Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King, aſſigned to deliver the ſaid Gaol of Newgate of the Priſoners therein being; one Mary Squires was in due Form of Law, tried by a Jury of the Country, duly taken between our ſaid Lord the King and the ſaid Mary Squires in that Behalf, upon another Indictment, for the Robbery of Elizabeth Canning, Spinſter, of a Pair of Stays of the Value of Ten Shillings, of the Goods and Chattels of her the ſaid Elizabeth, in the Dwelling-Houſe of one Suſannah Wells, Widow, ſituate in the Pariſh of Enfield, in the ſaid County of Middleſex, on the ſaid 2d Day of January, in the 26th Year aforeſaid; and that upon the ſaid laſt-mentioned Trial, Elizabeth Canning, late of London, Spinſter, did then and there appear as a Witneſs for and in behalf of our ſaid Lord the King, againſt the ſaid Mary Squires; and ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did then and there, before the ſaid Juſtices laſt-mentioned, in open Court aforeſaid, take her corporal Oath, and was duly ſworn upon the holy Goſpel of God, that the Evidence which ſhe ſhould give for our ſaid Lord the King, againſt the ſaid Mary Squires, ſhould be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth (the ſame laſt-mentioned Juſtices then and there having a competent Authority to adminiſter the ſaid Oath to her the ſaid Elizabeth Canning in that Behalf); and ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning being ſo ſworn, and not having the Fear of God before her Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, upon the ſaid 21ſt Day of February, in the 26th Year aforeſaid, at London aforeſaid, (to wit) at the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre, in the Ward of Farringdon Without aforeſaid, in London aforeſaid, before the ſaid Juſtices laſt-named, in the open Court aforeſaid, did falſely, willingly, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, according to the Purport and Effect following; I (meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) had been to Salt-Petre-Bank to ſee an Uncle and Aunt, his Name is Thomas Colley: I (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) ſet out from Home about Eleven in the Forenoon, and ſtayed there till about Nine at Night, on the 1ſt Day of January (meaning the 1ſt Day of January now laſt paſt): Then my Uncle and Aunt came with me (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) as far as Aldgate, where we parted: I (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) was then alone, ſo came down Houndſditch, and over Moorfields by Bedlam Wall; there two luſty Men, both in great Coats, laid hold of me. And that the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, being ſo ſworn, did then and there, upon the ſaid laſt-mentioned Trial, falſely, willingly, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, according to the Purport and Effect following, (that is to ſay) They (meaning the ſaid two Men) took me (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) to the Priſoner Wells's Houſe (meaning the Dwelling-houſe of the ſaid Suſannah Wells, ſituate at Enfield aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid). And that ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning being then and there, upon the ſaid Trial, aſked and examined upon her ſaid Oath, concerning the Time of her being ſo taken to the ſaid Houſe of the ſaid Suſannah Wells; ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, being ſo ſworn, did then and there further falſely, willingly, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, ſay, depoſe, anſwer, and give in Evidence, according to the Purport and Effect following, (that is to ſay) as near as I (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) can think, it was about Four o'Clock in the Morning (meaning the Morning of the 2d Day of the ſaid Month of January). And that ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning being then and there, upon the ſaid Trial, aſked and examined upon her Oath, concerning what ſhe ſaw at the ſaid Houſe of the ſaid Suſannah Wells, at the Time that ſhe aforeſaid gave in Evidence that ſhe was taken there; ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, being ſo ſworn, did then and there further falſely, willingly, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, ſay, depoſe, anſwer, and give in Evidence, according to the Purport and Effect following, (that is to ſay) I (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) ſaw the Gypſey Woman Squires (meaning the ſaid Mary Squires), who was ſitting in a Chair (meaning ſitting in a Chair in the ſaid Houſe). And that ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, being ſo ſworn, did then and there, upon the ſaid laſt-mentioned Trial, falſely, willingly, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, according to the Purport and Effect following, (that is to ſay) As ſoon as I (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) was brought in (meaning into the ſaid Houſe), Mary Squires (again meaning the ſaid Mary Squires) took me (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) by the Hand, and aſked me (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) if I (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) choſe to go their Way, ſaying, if I (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) did, I (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) ſhould have fine Cloaths; I (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) ſaid, No. And that ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, being ſo ſworn, did then and there, upon the ſaid laſt-mentioned Trial, falſely, willingly, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, according to the Purport and Effect following, (that is to ſay) Then ſhe (again meaning the ſaid Mary Squires) went and took a Knife out of a Dreſſer-Drawer, and cut the Lace of my (meaning her the ſaid Elizabeth Canning's) Stays, and took them from me (meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning). And that ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, being ſo ſworn, did then and there, upon the ſaid laſt-mentioned Trial, falſely, willingly, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, according to the Purport and Effect following, (that is to ſay) She (meaning the ſaid Mary Squires) puſhed me (meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) up Stairs, (meaning certain Stairs leading out of the Kitchen of the ſaid Houſe, up into a certain Room adjoining and belonging to the ſaid Houſe) from out of the Kitchen, (meaning the Kitchen of the ſaid Houſe) where we (meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, and the ſaid Mary Squires) were. And that ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, being then and there, upon the ſaid Trial, aſked and examined upon her ſaid Oath, concerning the Name of the Place ſhe was put in; ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, being ſo ſworn, did then and there further falſely, willingly, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, ſay, depoſe, anſwer, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, according to the Purport and Effect following, (that is to ſay) They call it the Hay-loft, (meaning a certain Room belonging to the ſaid Houſe, into which the ſaid Stairs lead). And ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning being then and there, upon the ſaid Trial, aſked and examined upon her Oath, how long ſhe continued in that Room; ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, being ſo ſworn, did then and there further falſely, willingly, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, ſay, depoſe, anſwer, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, according to the Purport and Effect following, (that is to ſay) A Month by the Weeks, all but a few Hours. And that ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, being ſo ſworn, did then and there, upon the ſaid laſt-mentioned Trial, falſely, willingly, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, according to the Purport and Effect following, (that is to ſay) I (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) got out (meaning out of the ſaid Room) about Four o'Clock in the Afternoon, on a Monday (meaning Monday the 29th Day of the ſaid Month of January), after I (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) had been confined there (meaning in the ſaid Room) four Weeks, all but a few Hours. And that ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, being ſo ſworn, did then and there, upon the ſaid laſt-mentioned Trial, falſely, willingly, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, according to the Purport and Effect following, (that is to ſay) I (again meaning herſelf the ſaid Elizabeth Canning) took an old Sort of a Bed-gown and a Handkerchief, that were in the Hay-loft (meaning the ſaid Room), and lay in a Grate in the Chimney (meaning the Chimney of the ſaid Room). Whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning was not taken by two Men to the ſaid Houſe of the ſaid Suſannah Wells, about Four o'Clock in the Morning of the ſaid 2d Day of January, or at any other Time of that Day; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did not, at any Time on the ſaid 2d Day of January, ſee the ſaid Mary Squires in the ſaid Houſe; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires, on the ſaid 2d Day of January, was at Abbetſbury in the County of Dorſet, and was not at any Time on that Day in the ſaid Houſe; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not, on the ſaid 2d Day of January, take the ſaid Elizabeth Canning by the Hand in the ſaid Houſe, and aſk her if ſhe choſe to go their Way, ſaying, if ſhe did, ſhe ſhould have fine Cloaths; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Mary Squires did not, on the ſaid 2d Day of January, take the ſaid Elizabeth Canning by the Hand; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Mary Squires did not take a Knife out of any Dreſſer-Drawer, or any other Drawer, and cut the Lace of her the ſaid Elizabeth Canning's Stays, and take them from her; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not cut the Lace of her the ſaid Elizabeth Canning's Stays; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not puſh the ſaid Elizabeth Canning up any Stairs belonging to the ſaid Houſe; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did not continue, or was in anywiſe confined in the ſaid Room belonging to the ſaid Houſe, into which the ſaid Stairs lead, for a Month by the Weeks, all but a few Hours; and whereas the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did not continue, or was anyways confined in the ſaid Room, or in any other Room belonging to the ſaid Houſe, for a Month by the Weeks, all but a few Hours, or for any other Space of Time; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Eliz. Canning did not get out of the ſaid Room about 4 o'Clock in the Afternoon of the ſaid 29th Day of Jan. or at any other Time of that Day; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning did not take any Bed-Gown or Handkerchief out of any Grate in the Chimney of the ſaid Room; and whereas, in Truth and in Fact, there was no Grate in the Chimney of the ſaid Room on the ſaid 2d Day of January, or on the 29th Day of January, or at any other Time between the 2d and 29th Days of January, as ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning by her falſe and corrupt Teſtimony aforeſaid, at and upon the ſaid laſt-mentioned Trial, did moſt falſely, voluntarily, and corruptly, by her own proper Act and Conſent, upon her ſaid Oath, ſo taken as aforeſaid, ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, in Manner aforeſaid. And ſo the Jurors aforeſaid, now here ſworn, upon their Oath aforeſaid, do ſay, That ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Canning, at and upon the ſaid Trial, upon the ſaid 21ſt Day of February, in the 26th Year aforeſaid, at London aforeſaid, (that is to ſay) at the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre, in the Ward of Farringdon Without, in London aforeſaid, before the ſaid Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King laſt above-mentioned, and others their Fellows aforeſaid, by her own proper Act and Conſent, and of her own moſt wicked and corrupt Mind, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, did falſely, voluntarily, and corruptly, upon her ſaid Oath, ſo taken as aforeſaid, commit wilful and corrupt Perjury, to the great Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, in Contempt of our ſaid Lord the King and his Laws, to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Mr. Gascoyne.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am Counſel in this Caſe for the King, againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, who ſtands before you indicted of wilful and corrupt Perjury: And the Indictment ſets forth, that, at the General-Seſſion of the Peace held for the County of Middleſex, on the 19th of February, in the 26th Year of his preſent Majeſty's Reign, an Indictment was found againſt one Mary Squires, for having, on the 2d Day of January, in the ſame Year, with Force and Arms, aſſaulted the Priſoner at the Bar, and having put her in Fear of her Life, feloniouſly and with Force took and ſtole from her Perſon, and againſt her Will, in the Dwelling-Houſe of one Suſannah Wells, in the Pariſh of Enfield, in the County of Middleſex, a Pair of Stays of the Value of Ten Shillings, the Property of the Priſoner at the Bar: And the Indictment charges, that at the Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, on the 21ſt Day of February, in the ſame Year, which was the Year 1753, Mary Squires was arraigned upon the Indictment ſo found againſt her, and having pleaded Not Guilty, the Priſoner at the Bar appeared at the Trial, and being duly ſworn as a Witneſs, did maliciouſly and deliberately, and in order to procure the ſaid Mary Squires to be convicted of the Felony and Robbery charged on her, falſely and corruptly depoſe and give in Evidence, that ſhe the Priſoner at the Bar, on the 1ſt Day of January 1753, had been at a Place called Saltpetre-Bank, to ſee an Uncle and Aunt; that ſhe ſtayed there till about Nine at Night; that her Uncle and Aunt came with her from thence as far as Aldgate, where they parted; that ſhe the Priſoner at the Bar being then alone, and coming over Moorfields by Bedlam Wall, two Men laid hold of her, and took her by Force from thence to the Houſe of Suſannah Wells at Enfield; and being there, that Mary Squires took her by the Hand, and aſked her if ſhe would go their Way, ſaying, that if ſhe did, ſhe ſhould have fine Cloaths; that ſhe refuſed; and that thereupon Mary Squires, with a Caſe-Knife, cut the Lace of her Stays, and took them from her, gave her a Slap on the Face, and puſhed her up Stairs into another Room, which they called the Hay-Loft; that as ſoon as ſhe was there, the Door of the Room was ſhut upon her; and that ſhe was threatened by Mary Squires, that if ſhe heard her ſtir or move, ſhe would cut her Throat: And the Indictment charges, that the Priſoner at the Bar being aſked on the Trial of Mary Squires, how long ſhe had continued in that Room, ſhe falſely and wilfully ſwore, that ſhe was kept there a Month, all but a few Hours; and that upon the 29th of January ſhe broke down a Board that was nailed up at the Inſide of the Window, and got out there: Whereas in Truth, as the Indictment charges, the Priſoner at the Bar was never taken or carried to the Houſe of Suſannah Wells; and that, in Truth and in Fact, Mary Squires was at that Time at Abbotſbury, in the County of Dorſet: And the Indictment charges, that in Truth and in Fact, Mary Squires did not cut the Lace of the Priſoner's Stays, and take them from her, or ſlap her on the Face, or puſh her up Stairs into another Room, or ſay, that if ſhe heard her ſtir or move, ſhe would cut her Throat; and that in Truth, the Priſoner at the Bar was not in any Room or Place belonging to the Houſe of Suſannah Wells; and therefore, that ſhe was on the Trial of the ſaid Mary Squires guilty of wilful and corrupt Perjury: All which is ſaid to be done, to the great Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, in Contempt of the Laws of this Land, and to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this, Gentlemen, the Priſoner has pleaded Not Guilty: We ſhall call our Witneſſes, and if we prove her guilty, you will find her ſo.

Mr. (now Serjeant) Davy.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury,

I am Counſel for the Proſecution againſt the Defendant at the Bar, who now comes before you to be tried for wilful and corrupt Perjury; attended with ſo many Circumſtances of Aggravation, and calculated to produce ſuch fatal Effects, that it is to be lamented the Law has not made it capital.

For it was committed to ſupport a groundleſs Proſecution for Felony, and, under Colour of Juſtice, to take away the Life of an innocent Perſon.

Than which it is hard to conceive an Offence more ſhocking to Humanity, or more dreadful.

Gentlemen, the Indictment ſets forth, that the Defendant maliciouſly and deliberately intending to pervert the due Courſe of Law and Juſtice, and to procure one Mary Squires untruly to be convicted of a Robbery, did, upon the 21ſt of February 1753, in this Court, give falſe Teſtimony againſt her. It contains ſeveral Particulars of the Defendant's Evidence upon that Occaſion, and avers, that in each Particular ſhe was guilty of Perjury.

What could tempt one ſo young to ſuch accumulated Wickedneſs, tho' the Proſecution is not concerned to account for it, may be eaſily conceived upon recollecting what had happened.

And, indeed, one would give Way to any charitable Suggeſtion, rather than ſuppoſe her Heart ſo thoroughly polluted, as at firſt to deſign a Sacrifice!

To preſerve her Character, it became neceſſary to frame an Excuſe for her Abſence from her Maſter's Service during the Space of a Month, from the 1ſt to the 29th of January. To what ſuch Abſence was really owing, I am not inclined to ſuggeſt, leſt I ſhould wrong her. But her Flight was ſudden, unexpected, and alarming.

An ill-concerted Story for this Purpoſe, or the forgetting ſome material Circumſtances in one invented with a greater Appearance of Truth, was, in all likelihood, her firſt Step to the Crime ſhe is now to anſwer for. And a too great Forwardneſs in ſatisfying unexpected Inquiries, the Effects of Diſtruſt and Curioſity, might lead her unwarily into a Deſcription of Places and Perſons, unthought of before, from which, once fixed, ſhe thought it dangerous to deviate.

But an additional Temptation fell in her Way, a Temptation too ſtrong to be reſiſted in the Situation to which ſhe was reduced; and this was a Scheme to raiſe Money.

For thoſe, who were weak enough to believe all the Abſurdities to which their own Credulity had given riſe, were ſo affected with her unprecedented Sufferings, that they propoſed a general Subſcription, as well to puniſh the infamous Wretches, who, it was ſaid, had endeavoured to ſtarve her out of her Chaſtity, as to reward her Purity.

Here then ſhe was under a Neceſſity, either to renounce thoſe golden Hopes, by retracting what ſhe had declared, and ſo to ruin her Character, or to perſiſt in it through Perjury. And having by this Time ſubdued all Remains of Virtue, ſhe preferred the Offer of Money, though ſhe muſt wade through innocent Blood to attain it.

The Project ſucceeded to the utmoſt of her Wiſhes. For, by the Help of Prejudices moſt artfully, induſtriouſly, and (I may add) infamouſly inculcated, ſhe made her Way to the Conviction of Mary Squires, and Suſannah Wells, (the former for robbing her of her Stays, and the other for being an Accomplice in that Robbery) and ſo ſhe became the Object of almoſt univerſal Compaſſion.

The unfair Means made uſe of upon that Occaſion, by Advertiſements in the Daily Papers, and in printed Bills, every where diſperſed, with the Names of ſix reputable Tradeſmen, atteſting the Truth of a Story, of which they were not able to prove a ſingle Syllable; and all this for the Sake of prejudging thoſe unhappy Women, who in Conſequence of it fell a Sacrifice; would paſs unnoticed in this Trial, had not the ſame unjuſtifiable Methods been continued to the preſent Hour.

An Appeal to the Public concerning Matters triable by Juries, has a direct Tendency to ſhut up the Avenues to Conviction, and to enervate the Arm of Juſtice.

But it is the Happineſs of this Proſecution to be brought before a Jury of Citizens, whoſe Characters give the greateſt Room to hope for an impartial Trial, notwithſtanding all the Arts which have been practiſed to inflame their Paſſions and corrupt their Judgment.

And if I am not greatly miſ-inſtructed, the Prejudices muſt be ſtrong indeed, that can reſiſt the Proofs of this Woman's Guilt.

Gentlemen, before I open the Evidence we have to offer, I muſt beg Leave to trouble you with repeating what the Defendant ſwore upon the Trial of Mary Squires, and with remarking ſome of the Objections to which it ſtands expoſed, without any other Proofs to contradict it.

She ſwore, "That on the 1ſt of January 1753, about Nine at Night, "two Men ſeized her in Moorfields; and without ſpeaking, robbed her "of Half a Guinea, and Three Shillings, and her Gown, Apron, and "Hat, which they folded up, and put into a Great-Coat Pocket.

"That ſhe ſcreamed out, and then one of the Men ſtopped her Mouth "with a Handkerchief.

"That they then tied her Hands behind her; after which one of them "gave her a Blow on the Temple, which ſtunned her, and threw her "directly into a Fit.

"That this Tranſaction in Moorfields laſted Half an Hour; but no-"body paſſed by in all that Time.

"That ſhe remained totally inſenſible for ſix Hours after; when ſhe "found herſelf by a large Road, with the two Men who had robbed her.

"That they dragged her to the Houſe of one Suſannah Wells (who was "at the ſame Time tried as an Acceſſary to Squires) at Enfield-Waſh, (which "is between eleven and twelve Miles from Moorfields) where ſhe arrived in "half an Hour after the Recovery of her Senſes. And it was then about "four o'Clock in the Morning.

"That ſhe there ſaw Mary Squires, and two young Women in the "Kitchen. And as ſoon as ſhe was brought in, Squires took her by the "Hand, and aſked her, If ſhe choſe to go their Way, ſaying, if ſhe did, ſhe "ſhould have fine Cloaths.

"That upon anſwering, No, Squires cut off her Stays, and took them "from her. And immediately the two Men went away.

"That Squires then called her Bitch, gave her a Slap in the Face, "puſhed her up Stairs into a Hay-loft, (a few Steps from the Kitchen) "and ſhutting the Door upon her, threatened to cut her Throat if ſhe "heard her ſtir or move.

"That when Day-light appeared, ſhe ſaw about the Room, in which "there was a Fire-place, and a Grate in it, no Bed or Bedſtead, nothing "but Hay to lie upon, a Pitcher almoſt full of Water, and about twenty-"four Pieces of Bread, to the Amount of a Quartern Loaf in the whole.

"That theſe Pieces of Bread, and this Water, between three and four "Quarts, was all ſhe had to ſubſiſt on, (except a Penny Mince-pye, "which ſhe had in her Pocket) for the whole Time ſhe remained in "that Room; which was from Tueſday the 2d of January, at four in the "Morning, till Monday the 29th at four in the Afternoon. And that "ſhe had no Stool in all that Time.

"That no one came to her, nor did ſhe ſee a human Creature, except "once ſhe ſaw ſomebody look through a Crack of the Door.

"That

" That she had eat up all her Bread on Friday the 26th, and had drank " up all her Water on Monday the 29th, at Half an Hour after Three " in the Afternoon; and at Four o'Clock she made her Escape, which " she had never attempted (nor did it ever once come into her head to " attempt) till that Day.

" That the Manner of her Escape, was by breaking down a Board " which was nailed up at the Inside of a Window, about eight or ten " Feet from the Ground; from which she jumped down, without the " least Hurt, it being soft clay Ground.

" But before she left the Room, she took a Bed-Gown and a Hand- " kerchief, which she found in the Chimney Grate.

" That having never been on that Road before, she inquired her Way " of People she met, and so walked on the great Road to her Mother's " House, (about twelve Miles) without seeking Refuge in any of the " Houses on the Road, for fear she should meet with somebody belong- " ing to the House she had escaped from.

" That she arrived at her Mother's in Aldermanbury, at a Quarter past " Ten at Night; and she told her Friends that her Confinement was " somewhere in the Hertfordshire Road, which she had discovered while " she was under Confinement; by seeing a Coach go by; which she knew " frequented that Road.

" And being called upon by the Court to particularize the Furniture " of the Room she was confined in, she mentioned a Barrel, a Saddle, a " Basin, and a Tobacco-mould."

This, Gentlemen, was her Evidence.

Now I would ask any reasonable, unprejudiced Man in the World, whether he ever heard a Story so intirely destitute of all human Probability

Is it not a Heap of monstrous Absurdities, with Falshood glaring in every Circumstance?

What could induce the two Ruffians in Moorfields to behave in this extraordinary Manner?

Did they mean to rob, or kidnap her, or both?

If only to rob, why did they kidnap her? If only to kidnap, why rob her? If both, why lose Half an Hour in stripping her in so publick a Place, when Multitudes of People were continually passing by; since they might have done it securely at the End of their Journey?

Having robbed and stripped her, what Temptations had they to take the Pains and run the Hazard of carrying her twelve Miles, in a Fit, (supposing it possible) through several Turnpikes and Villages, where it was a thousand to one, that they would be discovered and apprehended?

The same Difficulties occur at Enfield-Wash. While she was in the House, was any Thing transacted, whereby one can trace the Motive of her being brought or confined there?

At first, indeed, she was asked, whether she would go their Way; and if she would, she should have fine Cloaths.

Their Meaning in this was left unexplained, and no further Persuasions were used to tempt her!

Advantage taken of a concise Refusal,—she was instantly locked up for a Month upon Bread and Water!

Not the least Inquiry in all that Time, what Effect this hard Usage had upon her; or what was become of her!

Whether she was dead, which might have been expected, if she remained in the Room; or had escaped, which it was more reasonable to suppose. For,

SEE HOW WONDERS MULTIPLY!

The Means of Escape were left open to her every Moment of the Time, at the Hazard of their Lives! Those Means unemployed, and unthought of, for the Preservation of her own!

Is it not amazing she should manage her Allowance of Bread and Water (scarce sufficient for a Week's Subsistence) with such Providence, that the former lasted till within three Days, and the latter, (which she could less endure the Want of) tho' less in Proportion, till within Half an Hour of her coming away!

And yet she had never received the least Intimation, how long she was to remain in Confinement, or whether she was to have any Supplies!

That she should survive all this Treatment, too hard for the best Constitution, and find Strength to walk twelve Miles immediately afterwards, without the least Refreshment or Rest!

These are not all, nor the fiftieth Part of the Objections, to which this unexampled Tale is liable. It would be mispending Time to enumerate them—they are obvious to every Understanding.

Does there need much Evidence to contradict this? Does not common Sense, and the Observation of all Mankind upon the Course of Nature, refute it in every Instance?

Yet such Arts have been practised to engage Men to believe it, that there are, at this Day, thousands who embrace it as zealously, as an Article of religious Faith.

Insisting upon the mere Possibility of this romantic Story, and having an implicit Faith in the Defendant's Sincerity, because her Character (they say) is clear of any other Imputation, they have been drawn in to conclude upon the Truth of all she has sworn.

Such are incapable of Conviction; upon whom neither Argument nor Evidence can have any Effect.

Let me imagine a Case, better authenticated than this before you, but in Favour of which Men have no Prejudices; and see what Reception it would meet with.

Suppose a Pretender to the Art of Flying (an Art which some soaring Geniuses of the last Age thought practicable) should swear to have taken a Month's Tour round the Extremity of the Atmosphere, without breathing in all that Time.

Were no Arts used to mislead Men's Understanding, were they left to judge for themselves, no one would believe this even upon the Faith of fifty Witnesses.

For, however unlikely it is, that fifty disinterested Men should concur in a Falshood, it would be still more unlikely, that a Man should be flying for a Month without drawing Breath.

But, Gentlemen, this Prosecution will not rest upon Improbabilities. It was commenced upon the clear Proof of Facts; sufficient to convince every Man, whose Judgment is not captivated by Prejudice.

The Evidence to be produced against the Defendant is of several Kinds.

First, To shew that Mary Squires was in another Place, above 130 Miles from Enfield Wash, at the Time of the supposed Robbery there.—But lest the Believers in Wonders should think this insufficient, and insist upon the Possibility of Squires' being in two Places at once; we shall,

In the next Place, under various Heads of Proof, attack the whole of the Defendant's Evidence, and shew that in every Part of it she is foresworn.

Gentlemen, because there may be no Uncertainty in that Part of the Case which relates to Squires, she will attend here in Person, to be referred to by the Witnesses. And you will observe, (to use her own Language to the Defendant, when she first charged her with the Robbery,) that the Almighty has not created her Likeness. So it is impossible, either for the Witnesses, or the Defendant, to mistake her for another.

She is one of that Tribe of People called Gypsies, and strolls about the Country as a Hawker and Pedlar. She is a Widow, and has a Son George, a young Man, and two Daughters, Lucy and Mary, both young Women.

It happened, that in the latter End of the Year 1752, this Gypsey, with her Son and her Daughter Lucy, travelled on Foot into the West of England with smuggled Goods, such as they meet with in Sea-port Towns, and sell again to People in the Country.

The material Questions with respect to these People will be, Where were they upon the 1st and 2d of January 1753? And when did they arrive at Enfield-Wash?

In order to give you the clearest Satisfaction in this Matter, it will be necessary to go a little farther back than the 1st of January, and trace them down to the Time of their being apprehended on the 1st of February.

Gentlemen, it will be worth your Observation, with what Degree of Certainty the Witnesses swear, not only with regard to the Identity of the three Persons, (who will be all in Court to be referred to) but also as to the precise Times of seeing them.

And, if it should appear to you, that they can be under no Mistake, either as to Persons or Times; it will only remain for your Consideration, what Credit should be given to their Oaths.

They are forty in Number; they are totally disinterested; and of unexceptionable Characters.

Upon Friday the 29th of December 1752, in the Evening, these three Foot-Travellers, Mary Squires, George and Lucy Squires, came to lodge in a little Inn at South-Parrot, in Dorsetshire; and went forward towards Abbotsbury, the next Morning. The Landlady of the Inn will tell you, she is certain as to the Time, from an Accident of some Guests leaving a Reckoning to pay, which she entered in her Book that Evening: A Book, wherein she had seldom occasion to make Entries; but whenever she did, it was her Custom to ascertain the Time by her Almanack: And she remembers to have referred to the Almanack; while they were in the House.

You will find them the next Morning, Saturday the 30th of December, between Eight and Nine o'Clock, taking Refreshment upon the Road, at a Place called Winyard's Gap, about a Mile from South-Parrot. The Person who proves this, saw them the Evening before as they were going to South-Parrot, and was so struck with the old Woman's hideous Face, that she compared her to a Picture then in her House of Mother Shipton.

The same Day, at Two in the Afternoon, they came to Litton, about nine Miles from Winyard's Gap, and three from Abbotsbury. There they lay at an Ale-house, and stayed till Monday Afternoon the 1st of January. This will be proved by five Witnesses, who will give you a particular Account of them during all that Time.

Monday the 1st of January, in the Evening, they came to Abbotsbury, a Sea-port Town in Dorsetshire; where they were very well known by a great many People, having been often there before. There they stayed till Tuesday the 9th. This will be proved by no less than eleven Witnesses: And as it is impossible these People should be under any Mistake as to their Persons, it will be material to observe, that it is equally impossible they should mistake as to the Time. It happened, that the Exciseman, stationed at Abbotsbury, was taken ill a few Days before the coming of these People there; and another Officer was placed in his stead, who lodged in the same House with them, at one Gibbons's, and came there on the very same Day. You will find this, not only by the Exciseman himself, and several of the Witnesses who remember his and their coming; but we shall also produce the Books from the Excise-Office, by which the Time of this Man's coming to Abbotsbury will appear with absolute Certainty. There are, besides, several other Circumstances, which lead the Witnesses to Exactness of Time, as well here, as at the other Places beforementioned.

Before we leave Abbotsbury, it will be proper to let you know that Lucy Squires, though the Daughter of such a deformed Woman, is very far from disagreeable, and had an Acquaintance there, who was dear to her. This was one William Clarke, a Shoe-maker of that Place, who met them at Litton, and travelled on a Day and a half's Journey with them from Abbotsbury. The Reason of my taking Notice of this Circumstance will appear hereafter, when you find them at Basingstoke.

With this Clarke they left Abbotsbury on Tuesday the 9th of January, and went to Porterham, where they lay that Night.

Wednesday the 10th they went to Ridgway; where Clarke took an unwilling Leave of his Lucy, after obtaining her Promise to send him a Letter soon; they lay at Ridgway that Night; and,

The next Day, Thursday the 11th, you will find them crossing the Waters by Dorchester, which were very high after great Rains.

They had received an Account, that the other Daughter Mary was ill, and so travelled faster from this Time, to hasten Home.

Friday the 12th they lay at Chettle.

Saturday the 13th at Martin, in a Farmer's Barn.

Sunday the 14th at Coombe: From whence they proceeded the next Day in the Road to London.

The next Account you will receive of them will be Thursday the 18th at Basingstoke; which you will observe, according to their Rate of Travelling, to be four Days Journey from Coombe.

And here you will find a Piece of Evidence very material, and conclusive with regard both to Persons and Times, and which will confirm the rest of the Evidence before it to the utmost Degree of Certainty.

I mentioned before, that Lucy Squires had promised her Sweetheart, William Clarke, to send him a Letter on the Road. It was at this Place she performed her Promise.

But being an illiterate Girl, she was obliged to have Recourse to the Landlady of the Inn to write for her.

The Letter is dated from Basingstoke, the 18th of January 1753. The Landlady, Mrs. Morris, will tell you it was wrote by her at the Time it bears Date. It will appear with the Baſingſtoke Poſt-Mark upon it.

There being no direct Poſt from Baſingſtoke to Dorcheſter, the Letter was put into the London Bag; and therefore the London Poſt-Mark is alſo upon it, by which it will appear, that it came into the General Poſt-Office on the 19th of January.

It happens that this Letter (which will be read to you in the Courſe of the Evidence) refers to the Circumſtance of Clarke's travelling with them from Abbotſbury.

Friday the 19th they went to Bagſhot; and

Saturday the 20th to Brentford; where George left his Mother the Sunday Morning, to go to his Siſter Mary, whom he found well enough recovered to go with him to Brentford the Monday to her Mother.

Tueſday the 23d they lay at a Houſe called The Seven Siſters at Page-green by Tottenham. And the next Day, Wedneſday the 24th of January, they went to Enfield-Waſh.

Here they were Strangers; and, inquiring for Lodging, had the ill Luck to be recommended to Suſannah Wells, whom they had never ſeen before.

Happy for that Woman, that theſe unfortunate Strangers came to her Houſe! In all likelihood ſhe owes her Life to that Accident. For,

Had there been no old Woman in her Houſe, beſides herſelf; nay, had ſhe not (another Accident for which ſhe is indebted to Providence!) changed Seats with the old Gypſey at the Fire-ſide, five Minutes before the Defendant's Arrival there on the 1ſt of February—there is too much Reaſon to believe, that Wells herſelf had been accuſed of this Felony.

Had it ſo happened, the ſame Evidence, which was applied to Squires, would have ſerved for her Conviction. And ſhe had no alibi to ſave her Life.

The Defendant had then been proſperous in Perjury; and the Means of detecting her had been borne down by popular Clamour.

Squires, her Son and Daughter, remained at Wells's, from the 24th of January till the 1ſt of February; when they were apprehended.

What happened that Day, will fall under another Head of Evidence.

I have now done with that Part of the Proſecutor's Caſe, ſo far as it relates to the Innocence of Mary Squires.

Upon which I ſhall only obſerve, that, if the Evidence brought to ſupport it is clear and convincing, it will be too late for the Defendant to ſhelter herſelf under any Pretence of a Miſtake.

For whether ſhe was robbed by Squires, or not, was the moſt material Queſtion upon that Woman's Trial, and her Fate depended upon the Defendant's poſitive Teſtimony.

And it is worthy Obſervation, that there was not the leaſt Doubt ſuggeſted, when ſhe was giving Evidence againſt the moſt remarkable Perſon in the World.

Gentlemen, the next Head of Evidence will be to ſhew, (what would of itſelf be ſufficient to convince all Mankind) that the Defendant could give no Account of the Room ſhe pretended to have been confined in for a whole Month together; and that the Place ſhe afterwards fixed upon, and poſitively ſwore to, was not in any Reſpect anſwerable to her firſt Deſcription of it; and that her Deſcription of the Room upon the Trial of Squires, was in Conſequence of its being ſhewn to her ſome little Time before. You will alſo find her Evidence flatly contradicted, in a Variety of material Circumſtances, by her own Information upon Oath at another Time.

It has been urged in the Defendant's Behalf, with much Shew of Reaſon, that her giving an exact Deſcription of the Place of her Confinement is a ſtrong Proof of her having been there.

But on the other hand, if her Deſcription of the Place of her Confinement was as unapplicable to the Room ſhe ventured afterwards to ſwear to, as it was to St. Paul's Cathedral, is it not an unanſwerable Proof, that ſhe was not there?

For can it be imagined, ſhe ſhould be alone in a Room for twenty-eight Days, without any Obſtruction of her Senſes, and at the End of that Time as ignorant of it, as if ſhe had never ſeen, or heard of ſuch a Place?

It was on Monday Night the 29th of January, according to her Account, that the Defendant returned to her Mother. On Wedneſday the 31ſt ſhe applied, with ſeveral of her Friends, to Mr. Chitty, the Sitting Alderman, for a Warrant againſt Wells, upon Suſpicion of having robbed her. For at that Time ſhe did not pretend to Certainty.

The Alderman having heard her Story, then declared his Doubts, and called upon her to authenticate it by a particular Deſcription of the Place ſhe had been in.

She ſwore it was a little, ſquare, dark Room, in which was an old Stool or two, an old Table, and an old Picture over the Chimney. And this was all the Deſcription ſhe gave. No Mention of any Baſon, Saddle, Tobacco-mould, or Barrel; and ſo far from any Pretence of Hay, that ſhe complained of having been forced to lie every Night upon the bare Floor.

She alſo ſwore, that her Modicum of Bread was in five or ſix Pieces, (not four-and-twenty) and that ſhe left ſome of the Water in the Pitcher, when ſhe came away: That ſhe eſcaped by the Help of a Pent-houſe under the Window, upon which ſhe ſlid down, and from thence jumped upon a Bank on the Back-ſide of the Houſe.

A Warrant being obtained from the Alderman, it was agreed upon by her Friends, who had heard this, to go down to Wells's the next Morning; and after ſecuring all the People in the Houſe, to inquire whether any Room there was anſwerable to the Account ſhe gave; reſolving, if they found ſhe ſpoke Truth, to ſupport her to the utmoſt of their Power; if otherwiſe, to drop her.

The next Morning they all ſet out for Enfield-Waſh, and immediately ſecured all the People in Wells's Houſe; there were Mrs. Wells, Mary Squires, her Son and two Daughters, Virtue Hall, and Fortune Natus, and his Wife Judith Natus.

It will be proper here to deſcribe this Houſe, and the ſeveral Rooms in it.

At the Entrance into the Houſe there is a Stair-caſe, the Bottom of which is within two or three Yards of the Street-door; this Stair-caſe leads to three Rooms on the firſt Floor, in one of which lay the old Gypſey and her two Daughters, in another George Squires, and in the third Mrs. Wells and her Daughter, and Virtue Hall.

Below Stairs, on the left Side of the little Paſſage from the Street-door, is a Parlour, in which all the Family were placed, as ſoon as they were ſeized.

On the right Hand of the Paſſage is the Kitchen, from which a Door opens to a little Flight of ſeven or eight Steps, leading into a Sort of Lumber-room or Workſhop, where Natus and his Wife lay upon a Bed of Hay. Theſe Steps or Stairs are incloſed in the Room, there being no Door but at the Foot of the Steps, which ſeparates it from the Kitchen. And this Place, which ſome call a Workſhop, and others a Hay-loft, (on Account of ſome Hay uſually kept there) the Defendant was pleaſed to fix upon as the Place of her Confinement.

The Arrival of the Defendant's Friends was above an Hour before her; but no Room could be found like what ſhe had repreſented.

There were two Perſons, one called Adamſon, the other Scarrat, who (for Reaſons beſt known to themſelves) were extremely deſirous of reconciling every Difficulty; and they would have it, that this Lumber-room muſt be the Place of Confinement.

But ſome Obſtacles were to be removed.

There was a Quantity of Hay, not leſs than Half a Load, in the Room; and not a Word of Hay had been mentioned. Theſe two Gentlemen imagined ſhe might have forgot it, and propoſed that one of them ſhould ride back to meet the Defendant upon the Road, in order to aſk her about it. They caſt Lots, who ſhould go upon this honeſt Errand, and it fell to Mr. Adamſon.

In a little Time Adamſon returned brandiſhing his Hat, and exulting, We are all right; ſhe ſays, there is Hay in the Room!

She had never ſaid ſo before; and, if ſhe forgot to mention it, ſhe alſo forgot the Uſe of it, for the whole Month while it was before her Eyes. For ſhe lay upon the bare Boards!

But this was not the only Difficulty which required the Skill of Adamſon and Scarrat to ſolve.

The Room is neither ſquare, nor dark, nor little. It is thirty-five Feet three Inches and a half long, by nine Feet eight Inches wide: it is extremely light, not only from the Windows, (but one of which ſhe pretended was boarded up) but alſo from the Roof itſelf, which is of Pantiles, raiſed above the Walls, ſo as to let in a great deal of Light from the Top.

There was no Grate in the Chimney, nor the leaſt Sign that a Grate had been there. For, in the firſt Place, there was no Hearth to it; and beſides, the whole Chimney, from the Bottom upwards to the Mantle-piece, was full of Cobwebs and Naſtineſs. It is impoſſible therefore that a Grate or any Thing elſe could have been there within three Days before, or indeed, as many Months.

There was a large Cheſt of Drawers by the Side of the Wall, which ſhe had ſaid nothing of. Did ſhe forget this too?

Perhaps it had been put there ſince her Eſcape the Monday before. Remove it, and ſee whether it has the Marks of long ſtanding. The Experiment was made, and immediately fifty Spiders ran out, to give Teſtimony of a long, undiſturbed Poſſeſſion.

Inſtead of any Pictures over the Chimney, there was an old broken Caſement, which filled the whole Place, and had the like Vouchers for its long ſtanding; the Cobwebs uniting it to the Wall.

Where was the Stool and Table ſhe ſpoke of? Nothing like either to be found.

Where was the Pent-houſe, or Shed of Boards under the Window, by which ſhe eſcaped? The Wall on both Sides perpendicular; the Windows but eight Feet from the Ground on the Outſide; and there never was either Pent-houſe, or Shed, or any Thing elſe by the Wall.

On the right-hand Side coming into this naſty Room, was ſome Hay made in the Form of a Bed, with a little Bag of Wool by way of Bolſter. And Natus's Wife was ſeized juſt riſing from this Bed.

Near this Bed's-head was a Hole, through which a Jack-line had formerly run from the Kitchen. The Hole was almoſt large enough to thruſt her Head through, and looked quite over the Kitchen. This ſhe never obſerved; for ſhe ſaw Nobody, but once during the whole Month, and then it was through a Crack of the Door.

Over this Hole were the Pullies of the Jack-line, which ſhe alſo forgot to mention.

In ſhort, ſhe forgot almoſt all the Things that were there, and ſupplied her Defect of Memory, by naming ſeveral Things which had never been in the Room.

By this Time there was a great Company of People in the Houſe; ſome led by Curioſity, ſome by Juſtice, and ſome by Motives which muſt be left to themſelves to aſſign.

At laſt the Defendant arrived with her Mother in a Coach. She was immediately conducted to the Kitchen, and ſet on the Dreſſer.

The Door leading to the Lumber-room was then open, on her left Hand, and within three Yards of her, ſo that ſhe could then ſee all the Stairs, and a conſiderable Part of the Room; yet ſhe took no Notice of it. Nor did ſhe drop the leaſt Hint that the Kitchen ſhe was then in, was the Place where her Stays were cut off; though ſhe remained in the Kitchen five or ſix Minutes.

She was then placed on a Chair, with the Door of the Lumber-room open on her right Hand, where ſhe could ſee up into other Parts of the Room. Still, not the leaſt Notice taken of it.

It was then propoſed to carry her into the Parlour, where all the Family were Priſoners, in order for her to fix upon the Perſon who cut off her Stays.

In the mean while the Priſoners were diſpoſed in the Room ſo, as ſhe might have a diſtinct View of them all. Mother Wells was placed on the right Side of the Chimney, and the Gypſey on the left. But, a few Minutes before the Defendant's coming into the Parlour, the two old Women had changed Places, and the Gypſey then ſat on the right Side of the Chimney, leaning over the Fire, almoſt double, and ſmoaking her Pipe.

In this Situation were they, when the Defendant entered the Room; and in a Moment, without ſeeing her Face, pointing to the Gypſey, ſhe ſaid, This is the Woman who robbed me of my Stays.

The poor old Woman, ſmoaking her Pipe, was inattentive to what was ſaid. But one of her Daughters exclaimed, Lord! Mother, the young Woman ſays you robbed her.

Immediately the Gypſey ſtarting from her Chair, and looking in Aſtoniſhment full at her, expoſed her hideous Face, which till then was almoſt almoſt covered with a Clout. I rob you! Take care what you ſay; if you have once ſeen my Face, you cannot miſtake it, for God never made ſuch another! And being told that this Fact was committed on the 1ſt of January, the old Woman immediately, without the leaſt Heſitation, declared ſhe was then above one hundred Miles off, in Dorſetſhire. And George Squires then ſaid, they were at Abbotſbury on the 1ſt of January, and for ſeveral Days after.

Proteſtations of Innocence were to no Purpoſe; the Defendant remained poſitive, and Mary Squires muſt ſuffer for it.

The next Thing to be done, was to fix upon the Room.

In the firſt Place, the Defendant ſuffered herſelf to be led up the great Stair-Caſe from the Street-Door, and ſo into all the Rooms forward. But neither of theſe was the Room.

Not the leaſt Notice taken that the Place ſhe was confined in was contiguous to the Kitchen, and but a few Steps from it; not at all like this Stair-Caſe.

At laſt ſhe was conducted to the Lumber-Room; and, after pauſing for ſome Time, ſhe declared this was the Place; but that there ſeemed to be more Hay than ſhe had obſerved during her Confinement there.

The Witneſſes, who had heard what ſhe ſwore before Mr. Alderman Chitty, and had made their Obſervations upon this Room juſt before her coming down to Enfield-Waſh, were aſtoniſhed.

She then recollected one of the three Saddles, and the Barrel, Baſon, and Tobacco-Mould; neither of which ſhe had mentioned before. But ſhe remembered nothing of the Cheſt of Drawers, the broken Caſement over the Chimney, the Hay-Bed, the Hole in the Wall, nor the Pulley.

One aſked her, Why ſhe had not opened the Window Caſement, and eſcaped that Way, ſeeing ſhe might have done it without the leaſt Difficulty? Her Anſwer was, ſhe took it for granted it was nailed, but had never tried it.

The Effect theſe Obſervations had upon ſuch of her Friends, as did not go there with a Reſolution to aſſiſt her in all Events, is eaſy to imagine. They were ſatisfied ſhe was an Impoſtreſs, and withdrew their Aſſiſtance.

Their Names are Mr. Gawen Naſh, Mr. ——— Hague, and Mr. —— Aldridge, Citizens of eſtabliſhed Reputation; who will give you a very faithful and circumſtantial Account of this whole Tranſaction.

Though what has been already opened would be abundantly ſufficient to maintain this Indictment, yet this is not all.

For, inſtead of relying upon Circumſtances, however ſatisfactory, we ſhall go further, and ſhew by direct, poſitive Evidence, that the Defendant was not in this Room in the Month of January.

Natus, a poor labouring Man, and his Wife, will tell you, that this Bed of Hay was their only Lodging during that whole Month, and for five or ſix Weeks before; and that they lay in this very Room every Night: And this will be confirmed by the Evidence of ſeveral other Witneſſes.

They will all tell you, that this Room, being the Repoſitory of Mrs. Wells's Hay, with which her Horſe was fed, and of Pollard for the feeding her Pig, was viſited by ſome or other of them every Day.

That this black Pitcher, which the Defendant ſays was in the Room for all the time ſhe was there, was in conſtant Uſe in the Family, and filled with Water from a Neighbour's Pump almoſt every Day, during the Time the Defendant pretends to have been in the Houſe.

That none of them ever ſaw the Defendant, or heard of her, till ſhe came down on the 1ſt of February with Mr. Alderman Chitty's Warrant.

Ezra Whiffin, who keeps an Inn in the Neighbourhood, will be produced a Witneſs to prove, that he bought of Mrs. Wells a Sign, which formerly hung at her Door, when ſhe kept a Public-Houſe; and on the 18th of January he took it out of this Workſhop, and Natus's Wife was then lying there upon a Hay-Bed.

He will fix the preciſe Day by a very particular Circumſtance, in which he will be confirmed by another Witneſs.

John Whiffin, his Son, went with him to bring away the Sign; and ſtayed below in the Parlour, while his Father went up into the Room for it.

Three Witneſſes will be produced to prove their lopping Trees by the Side of Mrs. Wells's Houſe on the 8th of January; and at that very Time they had ſome Converſation with two Women, Virtue Hall, and Sarah Howit, another Witneſs, then looking out at the Window of this very Room, where the Defendant is ſuppoſed to have been confined.

And the Time of their lopping theſe Trees will be fixed alſo by a fifth Witneſs to this Fact.

Such of theſe Witneſſes, as have been in the Workſhop, will give you the ſame Account of it, as you will find by the other Witneſſes to the former Head of Evidence.

After proving the Defendant perjured, not only with regard to the Perſon whom ſhe charged with having robbed her, but alſo as to the Place in which ſhe ſwore ſhe was confined; we ſhall need an Apology for proceeding further.

But to cut off all Pretence for Excuſe, we ſhall beg Leave in another Inſtance to ſhew the Defendant's Guilt, by her own Teſtimony.

In her Evidence at the Old-Bailey, ſet forth in this Indictment, ſhe ſwore that ſhe had drank up all the Water in the Pitcher, about Half an Hour before the Time of her Eſcape.

Before Mr. Alderman Chitty ſhe ſwore that ſhe did not drink it all, but ſome of it remained in the Pitcher when ſhe came away.

But in an Information ſhe made before Mr. Fielding, a Juſtice of Peace for Middleſex, (which we ſhall produce for this Purpoſe) ſhe ſwore that ſhe had drank up all the Water on the Friday, and ſo had not a Drop to drink from that Time till the Monday, on which Day ſhe eſcaped.

The Pain of Thirſt has been felt by almoſt every one, at ſome Time or other; and whoever has endured it for three Days and Nights, will be ſure to remember it as long as he lives.

Theſe Self-contradictions therefore could not ariſe from mere Miſtake; except only it was forgetting at one Time, what ſhe had ſworn at another.

A Lyar, ſays the Proverb, ſhould have a good Memory. But he who is reſolved to ſpeak Truth, needs take no Pains to recollect in what Manner he had told his Story before.

Gentlemen, to all this Evidence we ſhall add two Circumſtances, which you may poſſibly think worth your Attention.

Soon after the Defendant's ſuppoſed Return to her Mother, ſhe was viſited by a Midwife, who was an old Acquaintance; to whom the Mother, in the Daughter's Preſence, related the whole Story.

The Midwife's Curioſity took Place of her Pity, and ſhe deſired to ſee the Shift which the Defendant was ſuppoſed to have worn for a Month.

The Obſervations made upon it will beſt become the Witneſs herſelf to tell you. They lead to ſuſpect ſtrongly that it had not been worn ſo long as was pretended. On the contrary, it looked as clean, as if it had not been worn three Days.

The other Circumſtance is a ſtriking one. After the Conviction of Squires, there was a Re-examination of the Caſe before the late Lord-Mayor, in order to pave the Way to the Throne for Mercy, which proved effectual.

The Defendant was preſent at that Inquiry, and the Bed-Gown which ſhe pretended to have taken out of the Workſhop, as alſo the Pitcher, were both produced.

She was very deſirous of taking them with her, which my Lord-Mayor objected to, and propoſed that they ſhould be depoſited in ſome publick Place to be ſeen by any body, becauſe they might poſſibly lead to a Diſcovery.

What induced the Defendant to be ſo extremely anxious for the Poſſeſſion of this tattered Bed-Gown, and broken Pitcher, is hard to ſay; but ſhe was ſo much bent upon it, that ſhe unwarily claimed a Property in the Bed-Gown, and ſaid, It was her Mother's.

If it was her Mother's Bed-Gown, how did it get to Mrs. Wells's?

This, Gentlemen, is the Nature of the Evidence we have to lay before you; upon the Weight of which there can be no Doubt but you will find the Defendant guilty.

Mr. WILLES.

I AM Counſel in this Caſe for the Crown; and though I cannot help feeling ſome Concern for the unhappy Situation of the Priſoner at the Bar, yet I own I rejoice, for the Sake of Truth, and for the Sake of the deluded Multitude, that this Matter is at length to receive the moſt ſolemn and impartial Examination.

For, in what Light ſoever we conſider the Priſoner's Hiſtory of herſelf, either as a groſs Impoſition on the World, or, as others would have it, a wonderful and miraculous Truth; moſt certainly 'tis a Fact about which Mankind have been much divided, which has been the Cauſe of great Uneaſineſs and Diſtraction in this Country, and concerning which the Minds of the People ought to be quieted.

Nor can we wonder at theſe Diſſentions among the Populace, when many able and great Magiſtrates have engaged in this Diſpute; ſome of whom have with great Warmth and Eagerneſs declared themſelves implicit Believers of this amazing Story, whilſt others have looked upon Elizabeth Canning as the moſt vile and abandoned Impoſtreſs.

I do not mention this with an Intent to throw Reflections on the Patrons of either Side of the Queſtion; the wiſeſt of Men have been deceived, nor will it be any Imputation on their Character, that they have been ſo; unleſs there is any Reaſon for conjecturing, that either through Partiality, Prejudice, or other ſtill worſe Motives, they have wilfully ſhut their Eyes to the Truth.

Far is it from me to inſinuate that any thing of this Sort has happened in the preſent Inſtance: I verily believe that the Fountain of Juſtice in this Kingdom has flowed, through all its Channels, unſtained, uncorrupted, and clear from all Manner of Pollution. I hope that thoſe who have ſat under his Majeſty's Commiſſion of the Peace, have acted merely and ſingly in that Capacity, and have not deſcended from the Dignity of Magiſtracy, to become Advocates for either Party.

But be that as it will, it is not our Duty, as Counſel for the Proſecution, to take Notice of collateral Circumſtances or extrajudicial Behaviour in any one; 'tis our Buſineſs only to lay the Particulars of the Charge againſt the Priſoner before you; and if the Weight of Evidence appears clearly to be on the Side of the Crown, I don't doubt but that the Truth will be irreſiſtible, and that we ſhall have your Verdict for the Conviction of the Priſoner.

And, Gentlemen, the Priſoner ſtands indicted of one of the moſt heinous of Crimes; an Endeavour, by wilful and corrupt Forſwearing herſelf, to take away the Life of a guiltleſs Perſon; and without Aggravation, in the black Catalogue of Offences, I know not one of a deeper Dye. 'Tis a Perverſion of the Laws of her Country to the worſt of Purpoſes; 'tis wreſting the Sword out of the Hands of Juſtice to ſhed innocent Blood.

Let us reflect a Moment on the ſad Cataſtrophe which might have enſued. On her Evidence Mary Squires was condemned to be executed, and had ſuffered the Judgment of the Law, but for the Wiſdom and Clemency of his Majeſty, ever careful, ever tender of the Lives even of the meaneſt of his Subjects. During the Application that was made to the Throne for Mercy, did the Priſoner abate aught of her Reſentment againſt the unhappy Convict? No; her cruel Heart never in the leaſt relented. God forbid, that the Meaſure ſhe has meted another, ſhould this Day be meaſured to her again!

When I think of the Age of the Priſoner at the Bar, ſcarcely yet above nineteen Years old, I can hardly perſuade myſelf that human Nature could ſo early attain to ſuch a Pitch of Wickedneſs: But when I attend to the very ſtrong and convincing Proofs we have to produce againſt her, I muſt give up my Reaſon to my Incredulity, if I any longer doubted, whether ſhe was guilty or not.

And, Gentlemen, the Whole we have to lay before you in Support of this heavy Charge, will naturally ariſe under one or other of theſe Conſiderations:

The numberleſs Inconſiſtencies, and even Contradictions of herſelf in her own Evidence, as taken at different Times before different Magiſtrates:

The Improbability of her Story:

The Teſtimony of a Multitude of Witneſſes of Credit and Character, who contradict her materially in almoſt every Circumſtance ſhe has related:

And, Gentlemen, in order to make you ſenſible how frequently Canning has varied in her own Account of theſe Facts, it will be neceſſary to inform you that ſhe has been examined on Oath four ſeveral Times. On the 31ſt of January before Alderman Chitty, when a Warrant was granted, granted for the apprehending Mrs. Wells; on the 1ſt of February before Juſtice Tuſomaker, after ſhe had been down at Enfield-Waſh; on the 7th of February before Juſtice Fielding; and on the 21ſt of February at the Trial of Squires; on which laſt Examination we have aſſigned the Perjuries mentioned in the Indictment.

In tracing her through theſe ſeveral Examinations, we ſhall have an Opportunity of diſcovering what Variations from Time to Time there are in her Story, what new Circumſtances, Supplements, or Embelliſhments were added to her firſt Relation; and then we ſhall be able to judge impartially whether all theſe are reconcileable with Truth.

Before Alderman Chitty her Evidence was ſimply this; That ſhe was robbed by two Men in Moorfields of her Money, Hat, Gown, and Cap: That there ſhe received a Blow on her Head, which ſtunned her, but did not ſo far deprive her of her Senſes, but that ſhe remembers her being afterwards carried through Biſhopſgate-Street: That ſhe then was dragged to Mother Wells's, and there ſtript of her Stays, and becauſe ſhe would not go their Way, (as it is termed) confined in a little, ſquare, dark, or darkiſh Room, which had nothing in it but an old Grate, an old Table, a Stool or two, and ſome Pictures over the Chimney: That there were four or five Pieces of Bread and ſome Water, on which ſhe lived till ſhe made her Eſcape; and that ſhe lay all the Time on the bare Boards: That ſhe got out of the Window on a ſmall Shed of Boards or Pent-houſe, down which ſhe ſlid, having cloathed herſelf with an old Bed-gown and Handkerchief, which ſhe took from the Grate.

This is the ſhort Account ſhe gave at firſt before the Alderman, for her Story had not then received Half its Decorations. The Circumſtance of her being ſubject to Fits was not then mentioned: No Hint of any Gypſey's being concerned, much leſs any Deſcription of Mary Squires, the moſt remarkable Woman in her Perſon that ever perhaps exiſted: Not a Word of any Hay being in the Room; though it appeared, on her coming down to Enfield, that there was above Half a Load, which had been laid in the Summer before. Let any one then believe, if they can, that, during her long Confinement, ſhe could overlook ſuch a Quantity of Hay, and continue Night after Night to take up her hard Lodging on the bare Boards!

In her Examination before Juſtice Taſhmaker, her Story receives ſeveral new Improvements. She had ſeen Mrs. Wells's little Work-houſe, ſo now drops the unfortunate Circumſtance of its being a little, ſquare Room: Had ſhe ever ſeen it before, ſhe could not have ſo deſcribed it. She now recollects more Particulars of what the Gypſey ſaid to her: That ſhe promiſed her, if ſhe would go their Way, ſhe ſhould have fine Cloaths enough. This Attack (if it deſerves the Name of an Attack) on the poor innocent Girl's Virtue, was a proper Subject to excite the Compaſſion of the Public, and a pretty Uſe was made of it in the ſeveral Advertiſements, which were printed at that Time, to raiſe Subſcriptions for her.

She now ſwears, that after ſhe came to Mrs. Wells's, a Man unknown to her took away her Cap. This expreſsly contradicts her former Evidence, in which ſhe ſays ſhe was robbed of her Cap in Moorfields.

She now introduced, for the firſt Time, the Circumſtance of the famous broken-mouth'd black Pitcher, on the Water in which, and ſome Pieces of Bread, ſhe lived till the Wedneſday before ſhe made her Eſcape, when the Whole was conſumed. No Wonder ſhe could now deſcribe the Pitcher, which was artfully conveyed into the Work-ſhop by her Friend Adamſon before her Arrival at Enfield-Waſh.

As to the Circumſtance of her Proviſion laſting her only till Wedneſday, it neither agrees with what ſhe afterwards ſwore before Juſtice Fielding, nor with her Evidence on the Trial of Mary Squires. Truth is always conſiſtent, but Falſhood and Fiction muſt be judged by another Criterion.

We are now come to her Examination before Juſtice Fielding: I know not through what Medium they were conveyed, but ſhe had certainly then received ſome new Lights, and is infinitely more learned and artful in the Manner of her telling her Story. The Men, ſhe ſwears, in Moorfields feloniouſly and violently took from her a Shaving Hat, &c. Theſe Words, feloniouſly and violently, are not the Expreſſions of a poor illiterate Girl, perhaps they are the Suggeſtion of her Solicitor.

She now ſwears, that the Blow in Moorfields threw her into a Fit, which deprived her of her Senſes; and that ſhe was uſed to have Fits, which laſted ſix or ſeven Hours. This was an uſeful and neceſſary Embelliſhment of her Story, as a Fit accounted much more naturally for a ſix Hours Inſenſibility, than a Blow which only ſtunned her could do.

That on her Recovery ſhe found herſelf in a high Road, but that ſhe was ſo intimidated, ſhe durſt not call out. 'Twas proper to give a Reaſon for not doing what any body in her Circumſtances naturally would have done. I own I always admire and ſuſpect an Affidavit, which aſſigns a Reaſon for every Thing which is ſworn in it.

She then ſwears ſhe was ſhoved into a back Room without any Furniture at all in it. I will not dwell on this trivial Miſtake in her Account; and yet ſurely, in the Imagination of a Girl who had had her Education at an Alehouſe, Stools, Tables, and Pictures, would be deemed Furniture.

But 'tis material to obſerve, ſhe now ſays, that on Friday, and not Wedneſday, ſhe had conſumed all her Bread and Water. This Alteration of her Evidence from Wedneſday to Friday muſt have its Deſign: Weak and ill as ſhe was, could ſhe have been able to walk from Enfield to London in leſs than ſix Hours, which is eleven Miles, if ſhe had received no Suſtenance for five Days before? Whereas ſhortening the Time of her being without any Refreſhment, took off a good deal from the Improbability of this Part of her Story.

In her Evidence on the Trial of Mary Squires, ſhe adds ſtill ſome new Circumſtances. She ſays, on her Recovery from her Fit, ſhe found herſelf in a great Road, where there was Water. This Addition was not without ſome View, and I think there is no Difficulty in finding out what it was. It ſupplied the World with a Reaſon, why ſhe and her Friends at firſt directed their Inquiries towards Enfield-Waſh.

A Barrel, Saddle, Baſon, and Tobacco-mould, are now recollected to have been in the Room: Strange, we ſhould never hear any Thing of them before!

She now ſwears, ſhe had not drank all the Water till about a Quarter of an Hour before ſhe eſcaped. This Amendment of her Evidence was with the ſame Intention as the former Alteration from Wedneſday to Friday; that is, to leſſen the Improbability of her being able to walk from Enfield to Town, without once ſtopping to take the leaſt Refreſhment.

Theſe are ſome of the moſt glaring Contradictions in her own Evidence, which muſt ſtrike every body, who reflects that theſe were Particulars in which ſhe could not err either through Forgetfulneſs or Miſtake; I will not ſay more.

But to this we may add the Improbability of her whole Story, which is as it were felo de ſe; at leaſt, 'tis ſuch a Tale as requires the ſtrongeſt Proof in the World to compel us to believe one Tittle of it.

The two Ruffians to continue with her Half an Hour in ſo public a Place as Moorfields, and tho' it was ſo early in the Evening, (an Holiday-Evening too) yet when ſhe ſcreamed out, for nobody to hear her! But why firſt rob her, and afterwards kidnap her? Was it their Deſign to rob her only? or, to rob her, and afterwards carry her where (in the Gypſey Language) they hoped they ſhould oblige her to go their Way?

If a Robbery only was deſigned, would they have carried with them the ſtrongeſt Evidence of their Guilt? If their Purpoſe was only to add this poor Girl to the Herd of wicked Wretches at Mother Wells's, what Reaſon was there to begin their Seducement with a Robbery? At theſe Kind of Houſes a young Woman may be eaſily ſtripped of her Money, and yet no Robbery committed: Mother Wells might ſoon have made herſelf Canning's Caſh-keeper, without the Aid of a Blow to ſtun her, or the Terrors of a Caſe-knife.

If her Murder was intended, why not have done it on the Road? Why not on her firſt Arrival at Enfield-Waſh? Why was ſhe ſupplied with any Bread and Water at all?

Her Fit likewiſe is of the marvellous Kind; it continued on her near ſix Hours; went away in an Inſtant; and though ſhe was uſed to have Fits on any Fright, yet ſhe never had another during her long and terrifying Confinement. How amazing this! What! a Girl uſed to Fits on Frights not have a Fit for a Month together, when ſhe might naturally expect, during all that Time, every next Minute would be her laſt!

But let us now follow this wonderful Girl to Enfield; not forgetting one very extraordinary Circumſtance in her Evidence before the Alderman, that though ſhe was ſtunned in Moorfields, yet ſhe remembers afterwards her being carried through Biſhopſgate-Street.

Is it credible, on her coming thither, that the Gypſey, an artful Procureſs, hackneyed in the Ways of Women, ſhould only ſlightly aſk her to go their Way, and, becauſe ſhe faintly ſaid No, ſhould give over all further Attempts? Was this acting like the Preſident or Lady Abbeſs of ſuch a Houſe as Mother Wells's? Was this any proper Trial of the Priſoner's Virtue? I hope, for the Honour of the Female-Sex, that there hardly ever was a young Woman not above eighteen Years of Age, who did not ſay No, once at leaſt, eſpecially if ſolicited by an ugly, old, decrepid Hag. And yet this faint, this half-conſenting, no-Refuſal, is the only Reaſon given for her long and barbarous Confinement. Her Confinement! To what Purpoſe was it? What! ſtarve a young Woman out of her Virtue? Rich Food and ſtrong Liquors may do much; but Bread and Water, Cold and Hunger, are not apt to inflame the Paſſions.

This Bread and Water; a broken Pitcher of Water, and juſt twenty-four Pieces of Bread, about equal to a Quartern Loaf; before Alderman Chitty theſe twenty-four Pieces were not above four or five. But be they more or leſs, when was the Pitcher of Water and theſe conveyed into the Room? Was there any Expectation of ſuch a Gueſt? No. Were they carried in after Canning came thither, and before ſhe was ſhoved into the Work-ſhop? There was not Time enough to make ſuch a particular Proviſion. As to the Suppoſition that they might be conveyed into the Room after Canning was there, ſhe herſelf expreſly ſwears, that nobody came into the Room from the Time of her being ſhut up till ſhe made her Eſcape. Virtue Hall indeed in her Information ſays, that the Pitcher of Water was conveyed in there afterwards; but I ſhall lay her Evidence out of the Caſe, eſpecially as ſhe is in this Circumſtance abſolutely contradicted by the Priſoner.

But having mentioned Virtue Hall's Name, I cannot help taking Notice of an Argument I have heard in Favour of the Priſoner's Innocence, which is this, That Canning and Virtue Hall were never together before Virtue Hall's Examination, and yet they agree in almoſt every Circumſtance of the Story, and therefore Canning's Evidence muſt be true. But the Anſwer to this is a very eaſy and obvious one. It does not at all appear, but that Canning and Virtue Hall were together before Virtue Hall's Examination; at leaſt, 'tis certain they might have found out ſome Means of communicating their Sentiments to each other, which would anſwer the ſame End. 'Tis very remarkable, that Virtue Hall's Confeſſion was not taken at firſt (for what Reaſon I know not) vivâ voce before Juſtice Fielding. She was ſent out of the Room to retire with her Solicitor, who was alſo Canning's Solicitor: Her Information was reduced into Writing, and was two Hours in preparing. After this, what mighty Wonder is there, that when ſhe came into the Juſtice's Preſence again, ſhe ſhould repeat her Leſſon without the leaſt Heſitation?

But to purſue the Train of Improbabilities: Was it not ſtrange, that Canning ſhould ſubſiſt ſo long on ſo ſmall a Quantity of Bread and Water; four Weeks, wanting only a few Hours? Stranger, that ſhe ſhould huſband her Store ſo well as to have ſome of her Bread left, according to her firſt Account, till the Wedneſday; according to her laſt, till the Friday before ſhe made her Eſcape; and that ſhe ſhould ſave ſome of her miraculous Pitcher till the laſt Day? Was the twenty-fourth Part of a Six-penny Loaf a-Day ſufficient to ſatisfy her Hunger? If not, why ſhould ſhe defer the immediate Gratification of her Appetite, in order to make Proviſion for a precarious uncertain Futurity? Shall we ſuppoſe ſome Revelation from above in Favour of one of the Faithful? Perhaps an Angel from Heaven appeared to this Mirror of modern Virtue, and informed her, if ſhe eat above one Piece of Bread a Day, her ſmall Pittance would not laſt her till the Time ſhe was to make her Eſcape. Her Mother, we know, is a very enthuſiaſtical Woman; a Conſulter of Conjurors; a Dreamer of Dreams; perhaps the Daughter dreamed alſo what was to happen, and ſo, in Obedience to her Viſion, would not eat when ſhe was hungry, hungry, nor drink when ſhe was thirſty. However that was, I would riſk the Event of the Proſecution on this ſingle Circumſtance, that, without the Interpoſition of ſome preternatural Cauſe, this Conduct of the Priſoner's muſt appear to exceed all Bounds of human Probability.

That ſhe ſhould have no Evacuations except by Urine, is another ſtrange Circumſtance, which decorates this romantic Girl's Story.

But another Thing: How came ſhe to make her Eſcape ſo eaſily at laſt, and yet never before once attempt it? Were theſe Dragons always on the Watch? Surely, if they ſat up all Night, they muſt ſleep in the Day-time, and the Priſoner tells you the Houſe was then very quiet. Even the Evening ſhe made her Eſcape, it muſt aſtoniſh us to find, that a Girl, who had been kept ſo long without her proper Nouriſhment, ſhould ſtop no where on the Road to take the leaſt Refreſhment, though ſhe paſſed by ſeveral Houſes, and met ſeveral Perſons.

But theſe Wonders, if poſſible, will grow more and more wonderful, when we come next to examine the Place of her ſuppoſed Impriſonment. This Room, what was it but a weak Erection of Lath and Plaiſter? Cracks and Crannies innumerable in the Sides of it, and the whole Building ſo ſlight, that a Boy of ten Years old might in an Hour's Time have demoliſhed any Part of it. The Window towards the Eaſt neither boarded nor faſtened; but three Feet from the Floor, and but nine from the Ground. The Caſement ſo large, that a very fat Man might have got out of it; ſo little a Way from the Ground, that a Child might have ſlipped down without hurting himſelf. And yet in this Cage, with the Door open, was this extraordinary Girl confined for a Month, without once trying to get out. The Story indeed is all of a Piece, 'tis all Witchcraft and Enchantment.

But, if ſhe was afraid of breaking out, why ſhould ſhe not call out of the Window for Aſſiſtance? It was near at Hand; the Hertfordſhire Road was not above ſixty Yards from the North Window, and ſhe frequently ſaw the Coachman paſs by, who uſed to drive her former Miſtreſs. Beſides this, there is a little Lane directly under that Window, which was uſed every Morning and Night by the Farmers and their Servants, who went that Way with their Cattle to the Marſhes. There is likewiſe a Pond not above ſeven or eight Yards from the Window, where the Townſmen watered their Horſes, and in froſty Weather it was a Sliding-place for all the Boys and Girls in the Village. Had ſhe made the leaſt Alarm, there were many ready to have come to her Aſſiſtance; but we hear of no Endeavours of this Kind; may be, the Gypſey had put a Spell upon her.

But perhaps I am talking of Impoſſibilities to Perſons, whoſe Credulity is great enough to believe whatever is artfully told them, how monſtrous and abſurd ſoever it may be in reality. I know the preſent Age to be, in ſome Reſpects, a very credulous one. Mr. Davy's Story of a flying Man might now, for aught I know, be credited; 'tis not long ſince the Bottle Hero drew after him a numerous Attendance; this Heroine likewiſe has had her Admirers and Protectors; but, for my own Part, I would as ſoon believe either of thoſe Stories, as hers, which is equally incredible.

But ſhould theſe Improbabilities, I might almoſt ſay Impoſſibilities, find Credit with you; yet ſurely, Gentlemen, you cannot be totally inattentive to the Teſtimony of ſeveral Perſons of Credit and Character, who contradict the Priſoner in almoſt every Circumſtance of her Narrative.

As to her Deſcription of the Room, what ſay Mr. Naſh, Hague, Aldridge, and Mr. White the Sheriff's Officer? They will give you ſuch an Account of it, as muſt amaze you. The three firſt were her Friends, who went down to Enfield-Waſh on the 1ſt of February, with her Maſter Mr. Lyon, to aſſiſt in this notable Diſcovery; they will give you the Reaſons why they have not continued to be her Friends: That the Room Canning fixed upon as the Place of her Confinement, was a long, light Room, not a little, dark, ſquare one: That the Dimenſions of it were above thirty long, and only about nine Feet broad: That there was a large Quantity of Hay there, and an old ruſty Hay-bed: That there was no Grate in the Room, and the Chimney ſo overſpread with Cobwebs, that it was impoſſible there ſhould have been a Grate there for ſome Months before: No Pictures over the Chimney, nor any Marks that there ever had been any, but in their Place an old Caſement joined to the Wall by Cobwebs: That there were in different Parts of the Room three old Saddles, a Neſt of old-faſhioned Drawers, and a Tub of Pollard: That, on removing the Cheſt of Drawers from the Side of the Wall, they found it ſo affixed to it by Filth and Naſtineſs, that they are certain it could not be lately brought there: That they obſerved, under the Pulley of an old Jack-line, a large Hole in the Wall, which had Communication with the Kitchen, and commanded a View of every thing that was done there. This Hole likewiſe had eſcaped Canning's Notice, though it will be proved to have been in the ſame Condition for many Years paſt. That, on the moſt careful Examination, they could not find that there either was, or ever had been, any Shed or Pent-houſe under the North Window, or any thing which could poſſibly be miſtaken for it: That the Room had a light Caſement in it, large enough for a Perſon to get out; and that Canning being aſked, why ſhe did not make her Eſcape this Way, ſaid, ſhe believed it was faſtened, but that ſhe had never tried.

Theſe were the Circumſtances that ſtaggered their Belief; nor could they account for the Priſoner's remembering none of theſe Things, tho', during her long Continuance there, ſhe had Leiſure enough to have marked every Cranny in the Room, and to have counted every Nail in the Floor.

Theſe Witneſſes and others will inform you, that on her coming down to Enfield, ſhe was firſt carried into the Kitchen, and ſet on the Dreſſer; and though the Door was open which led to the Hay-loft, yet ſhe never once intimated that this was the Place where her Stays were cut off, but ſuffered herſelf afterwards to be carried over the reſt of the Houſe in Search of the Place of her Impriſonment. Theſe Witneſſes, and particularly White, will ſpeak to the buſy Officiouſneſs of Scarrat and Adamſon, in pulling down the Boards of the North Window, and in conveying the Pitcher into this Room before Canning came there; and that one of them was then diſpatched to meet her on the Road,---with what View one may eaſily gueſs.

But in order to give you more convincing Proofs that Canning never was at Mother Wells's in the Month of January, Fortune Natus and Judith his Wife will aſſure you, that they lay in this very Room at the Time the Priſoner pretends ſhe was there. This Fact they both aſſerted on the 1ſt of February, and this they would have given in Evidence on Squires's Trial, if the furious Temper of the Times would have permitted them, without the Hazard of their Lives, to have come into Court and given their Teſtimony. I will not ſay what are the uſual Attendants of Fraud and Impoſture; but thus much is certain, Truth wants not a Party-Mob to ſupport it.

Another very remarkable Piece of Evidence to this Purpoſe, is the Atteſtation of three honeſt day-labouring Men, who on the 8th of January were lopping a Tree juſt over-againſt the Eaſt Window of this Room, and ſaw Virtue Hall and Sarah Howit looking out of the Caſement; they had a deal of Chat with theſe Girls, and in Sport threw Dirt at them: Sarah Howit will confirm this, who is one of Mother Wells's Daughters. The Time will be fixed by John Cantril, a Publican, who uſed at that Seaſon of the Year to give his Neighbours and Cuſtomers a cold Entertainment.

One Ezra Whiffin will tell you, he went into this Workhop with Mother Wells herſelf on the 17th of January, to fetch out the Irons of a Sign-arm he had bought of her, and that he then obſerved Fortune Natus's Hay-bed, at the Feet of which lay this Sign-arm. His Evidence will be ſupported likewiſe by his Son's; and the Time will be aſcertained by a Note of Hand, which was juſt then become payable, and for the Diſcharge of which he was going to Wormleigh to borrow ſome Money. Ezra Whiffin will acquaint you how he came not to be examined at Mary Squires's Trial. I am ſorry he has ſo good a Reaſon for his Abſence. If the Avenues which lead to the Seat of Juſtice are to be ſurrounded and guarded by an inflamed Mob, what Security is there for our Lives and Properties; where is all our boaſted Liberty?

Robert White, a poor labouring Man, will prove, that in the Month of January he was at Mother Wells's almoſt every Night in the Week, and that he frequently ſaw the People of the Family-go in and out of this Room; though 'tis true he was never in it himſelf.

John Howit, and indeed all the People who were at the Houſe, will affirm that Mother Wells kept Hay in this Room for her Horſe, and Pollard for her Poultry, and that ſome one or other of them went in there every Day. If all this laſt Sett of Witneſſes are not forſworn, if but one of them ſpeaks the Truth, what muſt we think of Canning's Aſſertion, That there was nobody in the Room during the whole Time ſhe was kept there?

As to the taking of the Bed-gown out of the Grate, two Gentlemen of Figure and Reputation will acquaint you, that the Priſoner, on her Examination at the Manſion-Houſe, inſiſted upon taking away the Bed-gown with her, and ſaid, It was her Mother's. If her Mother's, how could it be found at Mrs. Wells's, or taken out of the Grate, when there was no Grate in the Chimney?

Old Mrs. Canning's Midwife will inform you, that the Daughter's Shift, which ſhe pretended ſhe had worn a Month in that naſty Place, was not dirty enough to have been worn by a cleanly Perſon a Week; that it was not draggled in the leaſt, nor had any Spots of Dirt on it. Some other Particulars you will hear from her own Mouth, which perhaps may lead you to gueſs what was the Priſoner's Employment during this long Receſs from the World and her Friends.

But if to all theſe Circumſtances we add the inconteſtable Proof we have to produce of Mary Squires, and her Son George and Daughter Lucy, being at Abbotsbury on the 1ſt of January, what Opinion ought we to have of the Priſoner's Veracity? Let it be remembered likewiſe, that this is no new-invented Story; for at Enfield-Waſh, as ſoon as the Gypſey was charged by Canning with having cut off her Stays on the 1ſt of January, ſhe immediately anſwered, That can't be, for I was at that Time above a hundred Miles off, at Abbotſbury. This Fact of the Gipſey's being then at Abbotsbury will be atteſted by above thirty Witneſſes. The Unexceptionableneſs of their Characters, the amazing Conſiſtency of their Evidence, their Remoteneſs of Habitation, and Ignorance of each other, as well as their having no Inducement to ſwear falſely, will, I am certain, not eſcape your particular Obſervation.

Theſe Witneſſes ſpeak not only as to the Perſon of Mary Squires, but alſo to the Perſons of the Son and Daughter, who travelled with her; they converſed with them; and ſeveral of them have known the old Woman for many Years laſt paſt, which removes all Poſſibility of imagining they are miſtaken.

Theſe Witneſſes take up the Gypſies at South-Parrot, on the 29th of December, about eight or ten Miles beyond Abbotsbury; and from thence from Place to Place, Step by Step, bring them to Enfield-Waſh, but not till the 24th of January.

At Abbotsbury they ſtayed from the 1ſt of January till the 9th, appeared publicly, and were preſent at ſeveral Dancing-Matches: Lucy had a Sweetheart there, who accompanied her Part of her Journey, and was an Evidence for the old Woman on her Trial. The Time will be fixed to a Degree of Demonſtration by the Exciſe-Books, to which Gibbons, who keeps the Ship Ale-houſe there, referred himſelf on his former Examination. The young Man who officiated for the Exciſeman lay in the ſame Room with George Squires, and is now attending to be examined. A Number of little Circumſtances will confirm their Teſtimony, and leave the Truth of it inconteſtable. A Piece of Nankeen left at one Place, a dead Horſe ſeen at another, a Letter wrote by Lucy's Direction at Baſingſtoke, and which will be produced with the Poſt-mark on it, are ſome of thoſe unerrring Tokens, by which Truth is always to be diſtinguiſhed from Falſhood.

If the Gypſey was at Abbotsbury on the 1ſt of January, God (I hope) will forgive the Priſoner, for ſhe has ſworn that both the Mother and Daughter were then at Enfield-Waſh.

After all theſe Contradictions, Abſurdities, and glaring Falſhoods, need I remark that the Priſoner (conſcious of her Guilt) did not ſurrender herſelf till ſhe was in Danger of an Outlawry? The fugam fecit is by our Law conſidered always as a ſtrong Proof of Guilt, and is allowed as Evidence in all Criminal Proſecutions. And now a Queſtion may be aſked, What could be the Priſoner's Inducement to all this? Mr. Davy has ſuggeſted Gain; and doubtleſs ſhe and her Aſſociates have had a plentiful Harveſt. Perhaps this was only a ſecondary Motive; the primary one might be the Concealment of ſome Things from the World, which would have placed her Conduct in no very advantageous Light.

Light. But another Queſtion may be aſked, Where was ſhe all this Time? Certainly it will appear ſhe was not at Mother Wells's, which is all that is neceſſary for us to ſhew in order for the Conviction of the Priſoner.

It was agreed upon by the Counſel on both Sides, that the Witneſſes ſhould be examined apart, and, when examined, not to return to the others. And they gave each other a Liſt of their Witneſſes Names.

William Chetham. (He produced the Copy of the Record of the Conviction of Mary Squires.) This I examined at the Office at Hicks's-Hall; it is a true Copy.

Croſs-examined.

Mr. Williams. How did you examine it?

Chetham. I examined it with the Clerk of the Peace. I read this, and the other was read to me.

Mr. Williams. Did you read the Record?

Chetham. I looked upon it when the Copy was read over, and ſaw that it was right.

The Copy read in Court. The Purport of which was, that Mary Squires had a Bill of Indictment found againſt her at Hicks's-Hall before the Grand Jury for the County of Middleſex, for putting Eliz. Canning, Spinſter, in bodily Fear, in the Houſe of Suſannah Wells, Widow, at Enfield-Waſh, and ſtealing a Pair of Stays, Value ten Shillings, on the 2d of January, 1752. And that ſhe was tried for the ſame at the Old-Bailey, in the February Seſſions 1753, and found guilty of the Indictment *.

When he was aſked, if he ſaw Elizabeth Canning ſworn upon that Trial, Mr. Davy anſwered, That was admitted.

Thomas Gurney ſworn.

Mr. Davy. You are the Short-hand Writer, I believe, that took the Evidence here at the Old-Bailey, upon the Trial of Mary Squires for the Robbery of Elizabeth Canning?

Gurney. Yes.

Mr. Davy. I ſuppoſe you have got the Minutes you took at that Time?

Gurney. I have.

Mr. Davy. Pleaſe to mention the Evidence ſhe gave.

Gurney. The Contents are in the Seſſions-Paper.

Mr. Davy. You are to give an Account of all the Evidence ſhe gave at that Time; you may refreſh your Memory by looking on your Minutes.

Gurney. She ſaid, ſhe had been at Salt-Petre Bank to ſee her Uncle and Aunt there; her Uncle's Name was Thomas Colley. She went from Home about eleven o'Clock, and ſtayed there till about Nine at Night, on the 1ſt of January; then came homewards; her Uncle and Aunt came with her as far as Aldgate, there they parted with her; and ſhe had Nobody in Company with her; ſhe came down Houndſditch, over Moorfields by Bedlam Wall; two Men came to her by Bedlam Gate, better than a Quarter after Nine o'Clock; they took hold on her, and ſaid nothing. Then ſhe was aſked, what Sort of Men they were? She ſaid, they were luſty Men. She was aſked, if ſhe loſt any Thing? She ſaid, Half a Guinea in a little Box, and three Shillings. She ſaid, the Man that ſtood on the right Hand took it, and took her Gown, Apron, and Hat, folded them up, and put them into a Great-coat Pocket; ſhe ſcreamed out; then one of them put a Handkerchief, or ſome ſuch Thing, in her Mouth; it was the Man who took her Gown that did that, and that ſhe ſaw no other Perſons by at that Time; they then tied her Hands behind her; after that one gave her a Blow on the Temple, and ſaid, D——n you, you B——h, we will do for you by and bye. Then ſhe was aſked about her having Fits; ſhe ſaid, ſhe had been troubled with Fits four Years, that they were convulſive Fits. She gave an Account, that the Blow ſtunned her, and flung her into a Fit. She was aſked, whether thoſe Fits were attended with Struggling? She ſaid, ſhe could not tell. The next Account ſhe gave was, ſhe found herſelf by a large Road where there was ſome Water, and the two Men that robbed her were with her: She ſaid, they lugged her along, and ſaid, You B——h, why don't you walk faſter? that one held her by one Arm, and the other by the other, while they pulled her along, and took her to the Houſe of Suſannah Wells, which was about Four o'Clock in the Morning. When ſhe was aſked, if ſhe could form any Judgment of the Manner in which ſhe was carried to the Place? ſhe ſaid they dragged her along by the Petticoats, ſhe thought, they being ſo dirty: That when ſhe came there, it was not Day-light; that it was Day-light about three Hours after; that ſhe believed it was then about Four o'Clock, and that ſhe then ſaw the Gypſey-Woman. She was then aſked the Woman's Name; and ſhe ſaid Mary Squires.

Mr. Davy. Was Mary Squires then at the Bar?

Gurney. She was. She then went on and ſaid, There were two young Women there, but ſhe did not ſee the Priſoner Wells then; that the young Women were ſtanding up, and the Gypſey-Woman was ſitting in a Chair: That when ſhe was brought in, ſhe took her by the Hand, and ſaid, if ſhe choſe to go their Way, ſhe ſhould have fine Cloaths; that ſhe ſaid, No. She was then aſked, if ſhe explained the Words, go their Way? She ſaid, ſhe did not: That then the Gypſey took a Knife out of the Dreſſer-Drawer, and cut the Lacing of her Stays, and took them from her. She was then aſked, if ſhe was under Apprehenſions of Danger at that Time? She ſaid, ſhe thought they were going to cut her Throat. She was aſked, if ſhe ſaw Wells there? She ſaid, No; and that Mary Squires looked at her Petticoat, and ſaid, Here, you B——h, take that, or I will give you that, and gave her a Slap on the Face. She was aſked, if ſhe had the Petticoat in her Hand? She ſaid, No, it was on me: Afterwards, ſhe ſaid, ſhe puſhed her up Stairs. She was aſked to deſcribe the Kitchen; ſhe ſaid, it was on the right Hand going in, and the Stairs by the Fire-ſide. She was aſked, what they called the Place where ſhe was? She ſaid, the Hay-loft, and that it was not then Day-light. She gave an Account that the Room-door was ſhut, but ſhe did not know whether it was faſt or no; that the Door was at the Bottom of the Steps in the Kitchen. She ſaid, that if

* To make this Trial of Canning's more complete, we ſhall here add the Trial of Mary Squires and Suſannah Wells, from the Seſſions-Paper; alſo the Lord-Mayor's Memorial, delivered to the King on Squires's Behalf, &c.

The TRIAL of Mary Squires, and Suſannah Wells, Widows, at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Bailey, before the Right Hon. Sir Criſp Gaſcoyne, Knt. Lord-Mayor of the City of London, the Hon. Mr. Juſtice Wright, the Hon. Mr. Juſtice Gundry, the Hon. Mr. Baron Adams, William Moreton, Eſq. Recorder, and others his Majeſty's Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer of the City of London, and Juſtices of Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the ſaid City and County of Middleſex, on Wedneſday the 21ſt of February, and continued till Monday the 26th, 1753.

MARY SQUIRES, Widow, and Suſannah Wells, were indicted; the firſt, for that ſhe, on the 2d of January, in the Dwelling-Houſe of Suſannah Wells, Widow, on Elizabeth Canning, Spinſter, did make an Aſſault, putting her the ſaid Elizabeth Canning in corporal Fear and Danger of her Life, and one Pair of Stays, value ten Shillings, the Property of the ſaid Elizabeth, from her Perſon, in the Dwelling Houſe, did ſteal, take, and carry away. And

The latter, for that ſhe, well knowing her the ſaid Mary Squires to have done and committed the Felony aforeſaid on the ſaid 2d of January, her the ſaid Mary did then and there feloniouſly receive, harbour, comfort, conceal, and maintain, againſt his Majeſty's Peace, and againſt the Form of the Statute.

Elizabeth Canning. I had been to Salt-Petre Bank to ſee an Uncle and Aunt; his Name is Thomas Colley. I ſet out from Home about Eleven in the Forenoon, and ſtayed there till about Nine at Night, on the 1ſt of January; then my Uncle and Aunt came with me as far as Aldgate, where we parted; I was then alone, ſo came down Houndſditch, and over Moorfields by Bedlam Wall; there two luſty Men, both in Great-coats, laid hold of me, one on each Side; they ſaid nothing to me at firſt, but took Half a Guinea in a little Box out of my Pocket, and three Shillings that were looſe.

Q. Which Man took that?

E. Can. The Man on my right Hand. They took my Gown, Apron, and Hat, and folded them up, and put them into a Great-coat Pocket. I ſcreamed out; then the Man that took my Gown put a Handkerchief, or ſome ſuch Thing, to my Mouth.

Q. Were there any Perſons walking near you at that Time?

E. Can. I ſaw nobody. They then tied my Hands behind me; after which one of them gave me a Blow on the Temple, and ſaid, D—n you, you B—h, we'll do for you by and bye. I having been ſubject to Convulſion-Fits theſe four Years, this Blow ſtunned me, and threw me directly into a Fit.

Q. Are theſe Fits attended with a Struggling?

E. Can. I don't know that.

Q. What happened afterwards?

E. Can The firſt Thing that I remember after this was, I found myſelf by a large Road, where was Water, with the two Men that robbed me.

Q. Had you any Diſcourſe with them?

E. Can. I had none; they took me to the Priſoner Wells's Houſe.

Q. About what Time do you think it might be?

E. Can. As near as I can think, it was about Four o'Clock in the Morning. I had recovered from my Fit about Half an Hour before I came to the Houſe. They lugged me along, and ſaid, You B—h, why don't you walk faſter? One had hold on my right Arm, and the other on the left, and ſo pulled me along.

Q. Can you form any Judgment in what Manner you was conveyed to the Place before you recovered of your Fit?

E. Can. I think they dragged me along by my Petticoats, they being ſo dirty.

Q. When you came to Wells's Houſe, was it Day-light?

E. Can. No, it was not; I think it was Day-light in about three Hours, or better, after I was there; which is the Reaſon I believe I was carried in about Four o'Clock.

Q. When you was carried in, what did you ſee there?

E. Can. I ſaw the Gypſey-Woman Squires, who was ſitting in a Chair, and two young Women in the ſame Room; Virtue Hall (the Evidence) was one; they were ſtanding againſt a Dreſſer.

Q. Did you ſee the Priſoner (Wells) there?

E. Can. No, I did not. As ſoon as I was brought in, Mary Squires took me by the Hand, and aſked me if I choſe to go their Way, ſaying, if I did, I ſhould have fine Cloaths. I ſaid, No.

Q. Did ſhe explain to you what ſhe meant by going their Way?

E. Can. No, Sir. Then ſhe went and took a Knife out of a Dreſſer-Drawer, and cut the Lace of my Stays, and took them from me.

Q. Had you, at that Time, any Apprehenſions of Danger?

E. Can. I thought ſhe was going to cut my Throat, when I ſaw her take the Knife.

Q. Did you ſee the Priſoner (Wells) at that Time?

E. Can. No, I did not.

Q. Was any thing elſe taken from you?

E. Can. There was not then; but Squires looked at my Petticoat, and ſaid, Here, you B—h, you may keep that, or I'll give you that, it is not worth much, and gave me a Slap on the Face.

Q. Had ſhe the Petticoat in her Hand?

E. Can. No, it was on me. After that, ſhe puſhed me up Stairs from out of the Kitchen, where we were.

Q. Deſcribe the Kitchen?

E. Can. The Kitchen was at the right Hand going in at the Door, and the Stairs are near the Fire.

Q. How many Steps to them?

E. Can. There are Four or Five of them.

Q. What did they call the Name of the Place where they put you in?

E. Can. They call it the Hay-loft. The Room-door was ſhut as ſoon as I was put up.

Q. Was it faſtened?

if ſhe (the Gypſey-Woman) heard her ſtir or move, or Words to that Purpoſe, ſhe ſaid ſhe would cut her Throat. She was aſked, if ſhe ſaw any Thing brought up to eat or drink? ſhe ſaid, No: That when Day-light appeared ſhe could ſee about the Room. She was aſked, what Sort of a Room it was? ſhe ſaid, a long Room, with a Fire-place and a Grate; that there was no Bed or Bedſtead, only Hay to lie upon; that ſhe ſaw a black Pitcher, which was produced in Court; then ſhe ſaid, This is the Pitcher, it was full up to near the Neck with Water, and about twenty-four Pieces of Bread. She was then aſked, how great a Quantity of Bread there was? ſhe ſaid, about a Quartern Loaf; and that ſhe had a Penny Mince-pye in her Pocket, that ſhe bought to carry Home to her Brother. Then ſhe gave an Account that ſhe was confined there a Month by the Weeks, all but a few Hours; and that ſhe ſaw Nobody in the Room all that Time, only ſhe once ſaw a Perſon look through the Crack of the Door, but did not know who it was. Then ſhe was aſked, if ſhe had made any Attempt to get out before? ſhe ſaid, No. Then ſhe was aſked, what Time ſhe got out? ſhe ſaid, about Four o'Clock in the Afternoon on a Monday. Then ſhe was aſked again, how long ſhe had been confined there? ſhe ſaid, four Weeks, all but a few Hours; ſhe ſaid, ſhe broke down a Board from the Window, and got out. She was then aſked, how high that Window was from the Ground? ſhe then pointed to a Place in the Court, which was about eight or ten Feet high: She gave an Account, that ſhe firſt put her Head out, and got faſt hold on the Wall, then got her Body out, and then jumped into a little narrow Place by a Lane. She was aſked, if ſhe did not hurt herſelf? ſhe ſaid, there was ſome ſoft Clay: Then ſhe gave an Account that it was Day-light. She was aſked, what ſhe had for Cloathing? ſhe ſaid, ſhe took a Bed-gown and Handkerchief, which lay in the Grate in the Chimney. Then ſhe was aſked, if ſhe ſaw any Body when ſhe got out? ſhe ſaid, ſhe did not. Then ſhe went up the Back of the Houſe, croſſed a little Brook over two Fields, as ſhe thought, and there got into the Road-way, then ſhe went ſtraight up the Road to London. She gives an Account, that ſhe did not know the Way, therefore aſked her Way to London. Then ſhe was aſked, if ſhe called by the Way? ſhe ſaid, ſhe did not call at any Houſe; but coming over Moorfields, the Clock ſtruck Ten. She was aſked, if ſhe acquainted any Body with it? ſhe ſaid, No, ſhe got to her Mother's in Aldermanbury a Quarter after Ten o'Clock; the firſt Perſon ſhe met with was the Apprentice, then ſhe ſaw her Mother and the Children; her Mother, ſhe ſays, went into Fits directly.

Mr. Davy. As far as you have mentioned, are you able to ſay, upon your Oath, that That was the Evidence that the Girl, upon her Oath, then gave in Court?

Gurney. The Subſtance of it is the Evidence ſhe gave in Court.

Croſs-examined.

Mr. Mereton. What Day did ſhe ſay ſhe was robbed?

Gurney. I have it in my Minutes that it was the 1ſt of January, which was the Day ſhe went to ſee her Uncle.

Mr. Davy. Now deſcribe what ſhe obſerved in the Hay-loft.

Gurney. There was a Barrel, a Saddle, a Baſon, and a Tobacco-mould, in the Room where ſhe was. She was aſked, what ſhe meant by a Tobacco-mould? ſhe ſaid, what People do up Papers of Tobacco in.

Mr. Davy. Now pleaſe to go on where you left off.

Gurney. She was then aſked, if ſhe had given the Account to any Body at that Time? ſhe ſaid, Yes, to Mrs. Woodward, who came to ſee her; ſhe told her ſhe had lived upon Bread and Water.

Mr. Davy. Did ſhe ſay Mrs. Woodward was ſo frightened ſhe could not aſk her any Queſtions?

Gurney. She ſaid, ſhe did not aſk her any more Queſtions then. Then ſhe ſays, Mr. Wintlebury came in, with whom ſhe had lived Servant: He took her by the Hand, and aſked, where ſhe had been? ſhe ſaid, on the Hertfordſhire Road: He ſaid, Bet, how do you know that? ſhe ſaid, Becauſe I have ſeen my Miſtreſs's Coachman go by, knowing them to go to Hertfordſhire; ſhe ſaid, ſhe knew it, for ſhe uſed to carry Things to the Coach, and fetch them back again. Then ſhe was asked, if ſhe was asked any Queſtions that Night about the Room or Jug? ſhe ſaid, ſhe had told them there was a Jug not quite full: That they asked her, how much? ſhe ſaid, better then a Gallon. She was asked, how ſhe got out of the Window? then gave an Account how ſhe tore her Ear in getting out.

Upon her Croſs-Examination, ſhe gave an Account, that the two Men were with her about Half an Hour in Moorfields, and that Nobody elſe was by, and there was a Box taken out of her Pocket: Then ſhe gave an Account, that ſhe had a Handkerchief which ſhe did not loſe. She was asked, if there was any Light near the Place where ſhe was firſt attacked? ſhe ſaid, there was a Lamp. She was asked, how long it was before ſhe came to herſelf? ſhe could not be ſure, but ſhe came to herſelf Half an Hour before ſhe came to the Houſe of Wells. She was then asked, if ſhe had any Degree of Senſe? ſhe ſaid as before, ſhe had none, only about Half an Hour before ſhe got to Mrs. Wells's Houſe: Then ſhe was asked the Queſtion again, to which ſhe anſwered as before. Then ſhe was asked, if ſhe had Senſe enough of any Sort to know by what Means ſhe was conducted there? ſhe ſaid, ſhe thought they dragged her along by the Petticoats, for they were dirty. Then ſhe gave an Account, that ſhe was in a great Surprize and all of a Tremble, and the Terror made her ſenſible. Then ſhe gave an Account, that the two Men ſtayed there no longer than till they ſaw her Stays cut off; then they went away, before ſhe was put in the Hay-loft. She ſaid, ſhe did not attempt to get out of the Hay-loft, till Monday: She was asked, why ſhe did not? ſhe ſaid, ſhe thought they might let her out, and that it never came into her Head till that Morning. Then ſhe was asked, where ſhe was ſitting, when ſhe

---

E. Canning. I don't know that; it was at the Bottom of the Stairs in the Kitchen. After ſhe ſhut the Door, ſhe ſaid, if ever ſhe heard me ſtir or move, or any ſuch Thing, ſhe'd cut my Throat.

Q. Did you ſee any Thing brought up to eat or drink?

E. Can. I ſaw nothing brought up. When Day-light appeared, I could ſee about the Room; there was a Fire-place and a Grate in it, no Bed nor Bedſtead, nothing but Hay to lie upon; there was a black Pitcher not quite full of Water, and about twenty-four Pieces of Bread (a Pitcher produced in Court). This is the Pitcher, which was full to near the Neck.

Q. How much in Quantity do you think theſe twenty-four Pieces of Bread might be?

E. Can. I believe about a Quartern Loaf.

Q. Had you nothing elſe to ſubſiſt on?

E. Can. I had in my Pocket a Penny Mince-pye, which I bought that Day to carry Home to my Brother.

Q. How long did you continue in that Room?

E. Can. A Month by the Weeks, all but a few Hours.

Q. What do you mean by a Month by the Weeks?

E. Can. I mean a four-weeks Month.

Q. Did any Body come to you in the Room during that Time?

E. Can. No, Sir, Nobody at all. On the Wedneſday before I came away, I ſaw Somebody look through the Crack of the Door, but don't know who it was.

Q. Did you, during the Time you was in this Confinement, make any Attempts to come down Stairs, or make your Eſcape?

E. Can. No, Sir, I did not till the Time I got out.

Q. Had you any Thing to ſubſiſt on during the Time, beſides the Pieces of Bread, Penny-Pye, and Pitcher of Water?

E. Can. No, I had not.

Q. At what Time did you get out?

E. Can. I got out about Four o'Clock in the Afternoon on a Monday, after I had been confined there four Weeks, all but a few Hours.

Q. How did you get out?

E. Can. I broke down a Board that was nailed up at the Inſide of a Window, and got out there.

Q. How high was the Window from the Ground?

E. Can. (She deſcribed it by the Height of a Place in the Seſſions-Houſe, which was about eight or ten Feet high.) Firſt I got my Head out, and kept faſt hold by the Wall, and got my Body out; after that I turned myſelf round, and jumped into a little narrow Place by a Lane, with a Field behind it.

Q. Did not the Jump hurt you?

E. Can. No, it was ſoft clay Ground.

Q. Was it light then?---E. Can. It was.

Q. What did you do for Cloathing?

E. Can. I took an old Sort of a Bed-gown and a Handkerchief, that were in this Hay-loft, and lay in a Grate in the Chimney. (Produced in Court.) I made my Ear bleed at getting out; the Handkerchief I tied over my Head inſtead of a Cap, it was very bloody.

Q. Did you ſee any Body when you jumped out at the Window?

E. Can. No, Nobody at all; then I went on the Backſide the Houſe up a Lane, and croſſed a little Brook, and over two Fields, as I think, but I did not take Notice how many Fields; the Path-way brought me by the Road-ſide. Then I went by the Road ſtraight to London.

Q. Did you know the Way?---E. Can. I did not.

Q. Did you call at any Houſe?

E. Can. No, I did not. It ſtruck Ten o'Clock juſt as I came over Moorfields. I got Home about a Quarter after to my Mother's Houſe in Aldermanbury.

Q. Did you acquaint any Body with your Misfortune coming along?

E. Can. No, I did not.

Q. Who did you meet with firſt?

E. Can. I met with the Apprentice firſt; then I ſaw my Mother and the Children. She went into a Fit directly.

Q. Did you give an Account to any Body how you had been treated?

E. Can. Yes, I did to Mrs. Woodward, who came to ſee me, that I had lived on Bread and Water. She was ſo affrighted, ſhe could not aſk me many Queſtions then: then Mr. Wintlebury came in, with whom I lived Servant before I went to live with Mr. Lyon; he took me by my Hand, and aſked me where I had been? I ſaid, Sir, in Hertfordſhire Road; he ſaid, Bet, how do you know that? I ſaid, Becauſe I ſaw my Miſtreſs's Coachman go by, which ſhe uſed to go into the Country into Hertfordſhire, that was Mrs. Wintlebury; I knew the Coach, becauſe I uſed to carry Things to it, and fetch them back again.

Q. Was you aſked any Queſtions about the Room or Jug that Night, and what you had to ſubſiſt on?

E. Can. Yes, there were many People came in, and I told them I had a Jug which was not quite full of Water; they aſked me how much? and I ſaid, I believed better than a Gallon of it: They aſked me alſo, how I got out? and I ſaid, I broke out of the Window, and had torn my Ear in getting out, which bled all the Way coming Home.

Q. What Things did you obſerve in this Hay-loft?

E. Can. There was a Barrel, a Saddle, a Baſon, and a Tobacco-mould.

Q. What do you mean by a Tobacco-mould?

E. Can. I mean ſuch a Thing that they do up Pennyworths of Tobacco with.

Croſs-Examination.

Q. How long might theſe two Men continue with you in Moorfields?

E. Can. About Half an Hour.

Q. Did any Body paſs by at the Time?---E. Can. Nobody at all.

Q. Was this Box, that contained your Half Guinea, taken out of your Pocket?---E. Can. Yes, Sir, it was.

Q. Had you any Thing elſe in your Pocket?

E. Can. I had a Pocket-handkerchief with a Pye in it, which I did not loſe.

Q. Was there any Light near this Place where you was firſt attacked?

E. Can. There was a Lamp.

Q. Have you recollected how long you lay in this Fit before you came to yourſelf?

ſhe ſaw ſomebody peeping through the Door? ſhe ſaid, ſhe was walking along the Room: She ſaid, there were four or five Steps up, and that ſhe did not in all the Time perceive where ſhe was, till about a Week after ſhe was there, and that was by looking out of the Window and ſeeing the Coach. She was aſked, if ſhe was not extremely weak? ſhe ſaid, ſhe was; her Words were, I was pretty weak. Then ſhe was aſked, whether ſhe was that Way before? ſhe ſaid, ſhe was not. She gives an Account of paſſing by many Houſes, and aſking the Way of the People on the Road. Then ſhe was aſked, why ſhe did not go into any Houſe? ſhe ſaid, ſhe thought ſhe might meet ſomebody belonging to that Houſe, that might know her, and take her back again. Then ſhe was aſked over again, the firſt Time of her making the Diſcovery: She ſaid, it was in her Mother's Houſe; and then ſhe gave an Account where her Mother's Houſe is, the Corner of Aldermanbury. Then ſhe gives an Account to Queſtions aſked before, whether ſhe ſaw Mrs. Wells at the Time ſhe was there? ſhe then ſaid, ſhe ſaw her afterwards when ſhe went down to the Houſe. She was aſked again about it, whether ſhe is certain to the Priſoner Squires? and ſhe ſays, ſhe is ſure ſhe is the Perſon who cut her Stays off, and ſhe was ſitting in a Gown and a white Handkerchief about her head. She was aſked, during her whole Confinement, whether ſhe tried to ſee if the Door was faſt? ſhe ſaid, ſhe had puſhed againſt it, and found it faſt. She was aſked, whether ſhe heard any Noiſe in the Kitchen? ſhe ſaid, ſhe heard People blowing the Fire, and paſſing in and out; and there was another Room ſhe heard a Noiſe in of Nights, but that it was very quiet of Days, being a Houſe of Entertainment in the Night. She ſaid, that ſhe eat all her Bread on the Friday before ſhe got out. Then ſhe was aſked, how ſhe eat it? ſhe ſaid, it was quite hard, that ſhe was forced to ſoak it in the Water, and that ſhe drank all her Water about Half an Hour before ſhe got out. Then ſhe was aſked, where ſhe did her Occaſions? ſhe ſaid, ſhe had never a Stool during the Time ſhe was there, only made Water.

Mr. Davy. Was the Apprentice ſhe ſays ſhe ſaw firſt, examined as a Witneſs on that Trial?—Gurney. No.

Croſs-examined.

Mr. Moreton. Were Mr. Naſh, Mr. Hague, and Mr. Aldridge, examined as Witneſſes?

Gurney. They were not.

Eſther Hopkins ſworn.

I live in Dorſetſhire, at South-Parret.

Mr. Willes. How far is that from Abbotſbury?

Eſther Hopkins. I don't know, it is the loweſt Part of Dorſetſhire; it is about a Mile from Winyard's Gap. I keep a Houſe of Entertainment for Travellers of all Sorts.

Mr. Willes. Look at that old Woman ſitting there; do you know her?

E. Hopkins. I really believe in my Conſcience, this is the old Woman that was at my Houſe on the 29th of December 1752, with her Son. I remember the Son particularly well: They lodged there one Night, and went away the next Morning.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember what Day of the Week it was?

E. Hopkins. I cannot ſay that I can.

Mr. Willes. How do you remember the Day of the Month?

E. Hopkins. Becauſe there were ſeveral Gentlemen there in Company at that Time, and two of them left the Reckoning to pay, and I put down the Day of the Month, and I keep my Book by the Almanack.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember any Thing of her Daughter being there?

E. Hopkins. I don't remember whether it was the Daughter or not; I remember the old Woman; I think I never ſaw a Woman more particular in my Life; ſhe told me the young Woman was her Daughter, and the other was her Son.

Mr. Willes. Did they tell you where they were going next Morning?

E. Hopkins. No, they did not.

Mr. Willes. Look at the young Man and young Woman behind her; do you know them, or either of them?

E. Hopkins. That is the Man (pointing to George Squires) to the beſt of my Knowledge.

Croſs-examined

Mr. Moreton. I think you did not ſeem to ſpeak poſitively to the old Woman.

E. Hopkins. I never ſaw a Woman more like her in all the Days of my Life, and I really believe ſhe is the Woman.

Mr. Moreton. Have you not many Paſſengers lie at your Houſe?

E. Hopkins. Some or other lie at my Houſe every Night.

Mr. Moreton. What was her Buſineſs? did ſhe ſell any Thing?

E. Hopkins. I aſked them what they ſold? they told me, Hard-ware.

Mr. Moreton. Did they ſell any Thing in your Houſe?

E. Hopkins. No.

Mr. Moreton. Did you ſee any Thing they had to ſell?

E. Hopkins. The Man carried a Bundle or Bag, not very large, under his Arm.

Mr. Moreton. Had they a Horſe?—E. Hopkins. I ſuppoſe they had not.

Mr. Moreton. Had you ever ſeen the old Woman before?

E. Hopkins. No, I had not.

Alice Farnham ſworn.

I live at Winyard's Gap; It is a Mile South from South-Parret, in the lower Part of Dorſetſhire, and about ten from Abbotſbury; it lies between them.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. How far is it from Litton?

A. Farnham. I don't juſtly know, I believe it is about ten or eleven Miles.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Look at that old Woman; do you know her?

A. Farnham. I remember I ſaw her once on a Saturday Morning, between Eight and Nine o'Clock, a little after New Chriſtmas 1752: She came in at my Houſe for Refreſhment: I keep a Public Houſe: I took particular Notice of her, and compared her to a Picture that I had in the

---

E. Canning. I cannot be ſure, but it was about Half an Hour before I arrived in Wells's Houſe.

Q. During the Time of your firſt being attacked, whether you had any Degree of Senſe at all?

E. Can. Not till Half an Hour before I came to that Houſe.

Q. Had you Senſe enough of any Sort to know by what Means you was conducted?

E. Can. I think they dragged me along by my Petticoats, they were made ſo dirty; but I was not ſenſible.

Q. Was you in any Surprize when ſhe took your Stays?

E. Can. I was in a great Surprize, and all of a Tremble.

Q. Then how can you tell who was there at the Time?

E. Can. The Terror made me look about me to ſee what Company was there.

Q. How long did the two Men ſtay in the Room?

E. Can. They ſtayed no longer than till they ſaw my Stays cut off, then they went away, before I was put up in the Loft.

Q. Did not you make an Attempt to get out before that Monday you talk on?—E. Can. I did not.

Q. How came you not to make an Attempt before?

E. Can. Becauſe I thought they might let me out; it never came into my Head till that Morning.

Q. Where was you ſitting, when you ſaw ſomebody peep through the Crack of the Door?

E. Can. I was walking along the Room.

Q. How wide was this Crack?

E. Can. It was about a Quarter of an Inch wide.

Q. Did not you, in the whole twenty-ſeven Days, perceive where you was?

E. Can. I did in about a Week after, by ſeeing the Coach go by.

Q. Was not you extreme weak?—E. Can. I was pretty weak.

Q. Was you ever that Way before?—E. Can. No, I never was.

Q. Did not you paſs many Houſes in your Way Home?

E. Can. I did, and aſked my Way of People on the Road.

Q. How came you, being in that deplorable Condition, not to go into ſome Houſe, and relate the Hardſhips you had gone through?

E. Can. I thought, if I did, may be I might meet ſomebody belonging to that Houſe.

Q. Did you ſee the Priſoner (Wells) while you was in that Confinement?

E. Can. I never ſaw her in the Houſe at all till I went down afterwards.

Q. Had you any of your Fits while in that Room?

E. Can. I had not, but was fainting and ſick.

Squires. I never ſaw that Witneſs in my Lifetime till this Day three Weeks.

Q. How was the Priſoner (Squires) dreſſed, when you was carried in?

E. Can. She was ſitting in her Gown, with a Handkerchief about her Head.

Q. Did you never, during all the Time, try if the Door was faſtened or not?

E. Can. I did once puſh againſt it with my Hand, and found it faſt.

Q. Had you uſed to hear any body in the Kitchen?

E. Can. I heard People ſometimes blowing the Fire, and paſſing in and out. There was another Room in which I heard a Noiſe at Nights, but the Houſe was very quiet in the Day-time.

Q. Did you eat all your Bread?

E. Can. I eat it all on the Friday before I got out; it was quite hard, and I uſed to ſoak it in the Water.

Q. When did you drink all your Water?

E. Can. I drank all that about Half an Hour before I got out of the Room.

(Upon being aſked where ſhe did her Occaſions while in the Room, ſhe anſwered, ſhe never had had any Stool while in Confinement, ſhe had only made Water.)

Virtue Hall. I know the two Priſoners at the Bar; Wells lived at Enfield-Waſh; I went and lived there as a Lodger. Mary Squires lived in the Houſe, and had been there about ſeven or eight Weeks.

Q. How long before E. Canning was brought in?

V. Hall. About a Fortnight before, which was on the 2d of January, about four in the Morning; ſhe was brought in there by two Men; John Squires was one of them, he is Son to Mary Squires; the other Man I don't know any thing of; I never ſaw him before.

Q. How was ſhe dreſſed when brought in?

V. Hall. She had no Gown on, or Hat or Apron.

Q. Who was in the Houſe at the Time?

V. Hall. There was I and Mary Squires, the Priſoner, and her Daughter. The Gypſey-Man ſaid, Mother, I have brought you a Girl, do you take her: Then ſhe aſked E. Canning, whether ſhe would go her Way?

Q. What did ſhe mean by that?

V. Hall. She meant for her to turn Whore; but ſhe would not.

Q. Do you mention this by way of Explanation, or as Words that ſhe ſaid?

V. Hall. As Words that ſhe ſaid; then Mary Squires took a Knife out of a Dreſſer-drawer in the Kitchen, and ripped the Lace of her Stays, and pulled them off, and hung them on the Back of a Chair in the Kitchen, and puſhed her up into the Room, and ſaid, D---n you, go up there then, if you pleaſe; then the Man that came in with the Gypſey's Son, took the Cap off E. Canning's Head, and went out a doors with it; the Gypſey-Man John Squires took the Stays off the Chair, and went out with them.

Q. Where was E. Canning, when the two Men took away the Things?

V. Hall. She was then up in the Room.

Q. Had you ever been in that Room?

V. Hall. I had, before ſhe was brought there, ſeveral Times.

Q. What was the Name they call it by?

V. Hall. They call it by the Name of the Workſhop; there was a great deal of Hay in it; they only put Lumber in it; there was a great many Pieces of Wood, a Tobacco-mould, and this black Jug; about three Hours after the young Woman was put up, Mary Squires filled the Jug with Water, and carried it up.

Q. How

the Room of old Mother Shipton; there was a young Man and Woman with her.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Look at that Man.

A. Farnham. I ſee him; I know him perfectly well; it is her Son.

Mr. Gaſ. Look at the young Woman near him.

A. Farn. I think, to my Knowledge, ſhe is the ſame Perſon; they ſtayed with me almoſt an Hour that Morning; I never ſaw them before or ſince; they had one Quart of Beer and ſome Bread and Cheeſe, and told me they would come to ſee me again in Old Chriſtmas Holidays; they aſked me how far it was to Litton, and went up the Road all three of them together towards it; I am certain I know the old Woman and her Son.

Mr. Gaſ. How far is Litton from your Houſe?

A. Farn. It is ten or eleven Miles.

Mr. Gaſ. Had you ſeen them before they came to your Houſe?

A. Farn. I was coming out of South-Parrot on the Friday Night, and met them as they were going in, and the next Morning they came to my Houſe; I told my Mother, as we were laughing and talking, that I had met three Gypſies; and ſhe aſked me, if I was not affrighted.

Mr. Gaſ. How do you know that this was before Old Chriſtmas?

A. Farn. My Mother was a-brewing, and I went and aſked her, if ſhe would let me go to Crookhorne Market, which is on a Saturday: She told me, ſhe could not ſpare me, and ſaid it would be rare enough to go on Monday to buy ſome Things againſt Old Chriſtmas; and this was juſt as thoſe People went out at the Door.

Croſs-examined.

Mr. Nares. When was the firſt Time you ſaw them?

A. Farn. It was on the Friday Night.

Mr. Nares. Do you know where they lay that Night?

A. Farn. No, I cannot tell; when they came into my Houſe, they aſked me, how far it was from South-Parrot, and I ſaid, one Mile.

Mr. Nares. What Sign is yours, you keep?

A. Farn. I keep the Sign of the Three Horſe-ſhoes; it is a Public Houſe.

Mr. Nares. What made you think they were Gypſies?

A. Farn. Becauſe they were all three together; one had a little Bag in his Hand, not a large one nor a ſmall one; it was about as much as I could carry under my Arm; it was a little Fardle.

Mr. Nares. Which had that?

A. Farn. To the beſt of my Knowledge, the Man had the Bag.

Mr. Nares. How was this old Woman dreſſed?

A. Farn. She had a Sort of a drab-coloured Cloak on, and a ſort of a Serge Gown.

Mr. Nares. Was it whole or ragged?

A. Farn. It was not Rags.

Mr. Nares. How was the Daughter dreſſed?

A. Farn. She had a white Gown on and a red Cloak; it was a Sort of a Holland Gown, very clean and neat.

Mr. Nares. Then ſhe did not look like a Traveller or Gypſey by her Dreſs?---A. Farn. No, ſhe did not.

Mr. Nares. Did you inquire of them what Buſineſs they were of?

A. Farn. No, I did not inquire that; they aſked me for one Mug of Beer, and I drawed it them; they ſtayed almoſt an Hour.

Mr. Nares. Was you with them all the Time they ſtayed?

A. Farn. Yes, I was.

Mr. Nares. Look at them, and tell us from the Dreſs they are in now, and the Dreſs they were in then, whether you are certain they are the ſame Perſons?

A. Farn. To the beſt of my Knowledge, they are the ſame Perſons.

Mr. Moreton. I think it is opened that the young Man and young Woman (meaning George and Lucy Squires) are to be examined; if ſo, they ought not to be in Court to hear the other Witneſſes examined.

Mr. Davy. Then I'll either call them next, or not at all, which you chuſe.

Mr. Moreton. Then call them next.

Mr. Nares. Did they make the ſame Appearance they do now, or a different one?

A. Farn. They were very well dreſſed, as they are now; they were clean and fitty.

Mr. Nares. Did the old Woman appear to be as weak as ſhe is now?

A. Farn. She was very unhealthy ſeemingly, coming up againſt the Hill.

Mr. Nares. Could ſhe walk without Aſſiſtance?

A. Farn. She did not hold by them, they walked before her.

Mr. Nares. Can you take upon you to ſwear to the Identity of her Perſon?

A. Farn. I do think ſhe is; I took a true Obſervation of her; ſhe had a great Noſe and Lips.

Mr. Nares. Did you take Obſervation of her Daughter?

A. Farn. I did; ſhe ſeem'd to be a very clean Sort of a Body, and of a black Complexion.

Mr. Nares. What did you think them to be?

A. Farn. I took them to be Travellers; I did not know whether they ſold any Thing for a Livelihood; they offered me nothing, and I aſked them for nothing; they paid for what they had.

Mr. Davy. Lucy muſt go out while George is examined. (She goes out of the Court.)

George Squires ſworn.

Mr. Davy. What Relation is that old Woman to you?

G. Squires. My own Mother, and the young Woman that is turned out is my Siſter Lucy.

Mr. Davy. Where was you on the Chriſtmas before your Mother was taken up?

G. Squires. Really I cannot tell you.

Mr. Davy. Was you ever in Devonſhire?

G. Squires. I am not acquainted there; I was in Somerſetſhire in Queen-Camneal.

Mr. Davy. Was you ever in South-Parrot?---G. Squires. I was.

Mr. Davy. Can you remember the Time?

George Squires. I came there on a Friday Night.

Mr. Davy.

Q. How do you know it was three Hours after?

V. Hall. Then it began to be lightiſh.

Q. Did you hear any Talk between them after ſhe was in the Room?

V. Hall. They took care I ſhould know but little.

Q. Has Suſannah Wells a Huſband?

V. Hall. No, ſhe has not: When I went out of the Kitchen, I went into the Parlour; Wells ſaid, Virtue Hall, the Gypſey-Man came in and told me, that his Mother had cut the Stays off the young Woman's Back, and he had got them; and ſhe bid me not to ſay any thing to make a Clack of it, fearing it ſhould be known.

Q. How long was you in that Houſe?

V. Hall. I was there a Quarter of a Year in all, if not more; I was there the whole Time E. Canning was there; but I never ſaw her once after ſhe was put up into that Room. I was the firſt that miſſed her; I aſked the Gypſey-Woman once, whether that Girl was gone? She anſwered, What is that to you, you have no Buſineſs with it: But I durſt not go to ſee if ſhe was gone; if I had, very likely they would have ſerved me ſo.

Q. Did you ever ſee the other Man after that Night?

V. Hall. No, I never did.

Q. Who lodged in the Houſe at the Time beſides?

V. Hall. There was Fortune Natus did.

Q. Did Mary Squires continue in the Houſe long after this?

V. Hall. She did, till we were all taken up, which was, I think, on the Thurſday after the young Woman was gone.

Q. What was you in that Houſe?

V. Hall. I went there as a Lodger; but I was forced to do as they would have me.

Q. from Mary Squires. What Day was it that the young Woman was robbed?

Court. She ſays on the Morning of the 2d of January.

M. Squires. I return Thanks for telling me, for I am as innocent as the Child unborn.

Q. from Wells. How long were theſe People (meaning the Gypſies) at my Houſe in all, from firſt to laſt?

T. Hall. They were there ſix or ſeven Weeks in all; they had been there about a Fortnight before the young Woman was brought in.

Q. Did you ever ſee this Cap or Bed-gown before?

V. Hall. Not to my Knowledge.

Thomas Colley. I am E. Canning's Uncle; I live at Salt-Petre Bank; on the New-year's Day ſhe dined and ſupped at my Houſe, and went away about Nine in the Evening, as near as I can gueſs; I and my Wife went along with her to Houndſditch, almoſt to the Blue-Ball; there we parted with her, about a Quarter or very near Half an Hour after Nine o'Clock.

Q. How was ſhe cloathed?

Colley. She had a Gown, Hat, and white Apron on.

Elizabeth Canning. E. Canning that has given her Evidence is my Daughter; after ſhe was miſſing from New-Year's Day, I advertiſed her three Times; ſhe came back on the Day before King Charles's Martyrdom; about a Quarter after Ten o'Clock at Night; ſhe had nothing but this ragged Bed-gown and a Cap; I fell into a Fit directly; my Daughter is ſubject to Fits; there was a Garret-Ceiling fell in upon her Head, which firſt occaſioned them; and at Times, when any body ſpeaks haſtily to her, or at any Surprize, ſhe is very liable to fall in one; ſhe has ſometimes continued in one ſeven or eight Hours, ſometimes three or four; ſhe is not ſenſible during the Time ſhe is in one, no more than a new-born Babe; when I came to myſelf, my Daughter was talking to Mrs. Woodward and Mr. Wintlebury; they aſked her where ſhe had been? ſhe ſaid on the Hertfordſhire Road, which ſhe knew by ſeeing a Coach going by; ſhe gave the ſame Account ſhe has here. When ſhe came into her warm Bed, ſhe was very ſick, and had no free Paſſage through her for Stool or Urine, till ſhe was ſupply'd with Glyſters, for ſeven Days after ſhe came Home, but what was forced by half a Cup-full at a Time.

John Wintlebury. I ſaw Elizabeth Canning the Night ſhe came Home; ſhe appeared in a very bad Condition, and had this dirty Bed-gown and Cap on. Hearing ſhe was come Home, I went to her Mother's Houſe, and ſaid, Bet, How do you do? She ſaid, I am very bad. Said I, Where have you been? She ſaid, I have been ſomewhere on the Hertfordſhire Road, becauſe I have ſeen the Hertfordſhire Coach go backwards and forwards.

Q. Have you heard the Evidence ſhe has given here in Court?

Wintlebury. I have; ſhe gave the ſame Account that Night, but not quite ſo fully that Night, as ſhe did before the Sitting Alderman on the Wedneſday after; but all agrees with what ſhe has ſaid here. I found her in a great Flurry, ſo did not aſk her many Queſtions that Night.

Joſeph Adamſon. I have known Elizabeth Canning the younger ſome Years. I never ſaw her after ſhe came Home, till the Day we went down to take the People up. I, and ſeveral Neighbours of us, agreed to go to the Place, ſome on Horſeback, and ſome in the Coach with E. Canning. I was down about an Hour, or an Hour and half, before the Coach came, and had ſecured all the People we found there. I ſeeing the Room before ſhe was brought in, thought ſhe was capable of giving ſome Account of it: I returned to meet her and aſked her about it; ſhe deſcribed the Room with ſome Hay in it, a Chimney-place in the Corner of it, an odd Sort of an empty Room. I went with her to the Houſe, and carried her out of the Chaiſe into the Kitchen, and ſet her on the Dreſſer, and ordered all the People to be brought to her, to ſee if ſhe knew any of them; ſhe was then very weak. I took her in my Arms like a Child. Upon ſeeing Mary Squires, ſhe ſaid, That is the Woman that cut my Stays off; and threatened to cut my Throat if I made a Noiſe.

Q. Did any of the People ſeem unwilling to be inſpected?

Adamſon. Yes, they were very unwilling to be ſtopped, when we went down in the Morning, particularly Mary Squires; after the Girl had ſaid

Mr. Davy. What Day of the Month was it?

G. Squires. It was on the 29th of December; my Mother and Sister Lucy were there with me.

Mr. Davy. What makes you certain as to the Time?

G. Squires. It was after New Christmas, that made me take an Account of it.

Mr. Davy. At whose House was you?

G. Squires. I put up at the Sign of the Red Lion, to the best of my Knowledge; her Name is Hopkins; I have been there since, we stayed there but one Night.

Mr. Davy. From whence did you come to that Place?

G. Squires. We came from it by Yeovil.

Mr. Davy. What was the last Village you came from, when you came to South-Parrot?

G. Squires. I cannot recollect it.

Mr. Davy. Where did you lie the Night before you came to South-Parrot?

G. Squires. I cannot tell the Place's Name.

Mr. Davy. How long had your Mother, Sister, and you been travelling together?——G. Squires. I came from Home at Newington-Butts in Southwark, and I went from thence, as near as I can guess, about seven or eight Weeks before Michaelmas.

Mr. Davy. Can't you recollect the Place you lay at before you came to South-Parrot?——G. Squires. It was a pretty large Village.

Mr. Davy. How many Miles had you travelled that Day?

G. Squires. We had travelled about seven or eight Miles.

Mr. Davy. Where did you go the next Day, that is the Saturday?

G. Squires. I went to Litton.

Mr. Davy. Is not there a Town between South-Parrot and Litton?

G. Squires. There is Winyard's Gap.

Mr. Davy. How far is South-Parrot from Litton?

G. Squires. It is ten or twelve Miles, to the best of my Knowledge; I lay at Litton on the Saturday, and left my Sister and Mother there on the Sunday Morning, and went to Abbotsbury.

Mr. Davy. What Day of the Month was the Sunday?

G. Squires. It was the 31st Day of the Month; my Mother stayed there one Night after me; Mr. Clarke had then a good Regard for my Sister Lucy; he was a Sweetheart of her's, and she of his; I went to him at Abbotsbury, and lay at Gibbons's House one Night; then in the Morning, which was on a Monday the 1st of January, Clarke and I went to Litton; there we dined upon two Fowls, which I bought: My Mother was surprised at my staying all Night at Abbotsbury, and she went in Pretence to see what was the Matter with me, thinking I was sick; there she heard I was gone with Clarke to Litton, and she came back again to Litton before we had dined.

Mr. Davy. How far is Litton from Abbotsbury?

G. Squires. It is three or four Miles.

Mr. Davy. Who walked with your Mother to Abbotsbury?

G. Squires Nobody, that I know of; after Dinner, my Mother, Sister, Clarke, and I walked to Abbotsbury, and we danced there that Night in Mr. Gibbons's Parlour; he keeps the Sign of The Ship.

Mr. Davy. What Company had you there?

G. Squires. There were a great many of my Acquaintance; I can't call them all to Mind; there was Mr. Wallace a Shop-keeper, and Mr. Bond a School-master, he got fuddled that Night; Mr. Wallace generally drinks Cyder, he came in for a Penny Pot of Cyder.

Mr. Davy. Who was your Partner?

G. Squires. I danced with Gibbons's Sister, and Mr. Clarke with my Sister Lucy; I can't mention all the Company, it is impossible; we danced Country Dances till about Eleven or Twelve at Night; we danced several Nights there after the first Night.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever been at Abbotsbury before?

G. Squires. Yes, I had several Times; and know several People in the Town.

Mr. Davy. How long did you continue at Abbotsbury?

G. Squires. We came there on the 1st of January, and went away on the 9th.

Mr. Davy. Did your Mother stay with you there all the Time?

G. Squires. She did; and when we went away, Mr. Clarke went with us to a little Village they called Portersham, about a Mile or a Mile and Half from thence; this was on a Tuesday.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember one Andrew Wake, an Excisеman, at Abbotsbury?

G. Squires. I do; he borrowed a Great Coat of me one Day, in order to survey in it, being a very wet Day.

Mr. Davy. What Day was that.

G. Squires. I cannot take upon me to say that; it was one Day while we were there.

Mr. Davy. What House did you go to at Portersham?

G. Squires. To the best of my Knowledge, it was The Chequer, an Alehouse; it is on the left Hand going down the Village; we lay there, Mr. Clarke lay with me, and we all went the next Day to Ridgway, which was Wednesday the 10th, which is about five or six Miles from Abbotsbury; we breakfasted there the next Morning, and, to the best of my Knowledge, went from thence about Eight or Nine o'Clock.

Mr. Davy. At what House did you lie at Ridgway?

G. Squires. At the House of Mr. Bewley, the Sign of The Ship; his Son, and he, and a Maid-servant, keep the House.

Mr. Davy. Did any Thing happen remarkable at Ridgway while you was there?

G. Squires. There was a dead Horse, and a Man skinning him as we came by; and I left a Piece of Nankeen, about three Yards and a Quarter, for my Reckoning with my Landlord. I was afraid that Silver would fall short; so I went to his Bedside, and told him I was afraid Money would fall short before I came Home, and desired he would take that till I fetched it. My Mother, Sister, and I went from Ridgway to Dorchester on Thursday the eleventh, which is about three Miles Distance; we did not lie there, but went forward almost all Night; for this of Squires, Squires said to her, she hoped she would not swear her Life away, for she never saw her before: E. Canning pointed to Virtue Hall, and said, That young Woman was in the Kitchen when I was brought in: She pointed also to another young Woman, and said, she was there at the Time. Then we carried her up to examine the House; she said, none of the Rooms she had seen, was the Room in which she was confined: Then I asked if there were any other Rooms; they said, Yes, out of the Kitchen (I had before been in it, but did not say so then, because I had a mind to see if she knew it). We had her up into it: She said, This is the same Room in which I was, but here is more Hay in it than there was then: I laid my Hand upon it, and said, It has lately been shook up, it lay hollow. She was then pretty near a Casement; said I, If you have been so long in this Room, doubtless you are able to say what is to be seen out here. She described a Hill at a Distance, which is Chinkford Hill: I believe she could not see it at the Time she spoke about it, for I was between her and the Casement, with my Back towards the Casement. She also said, there were some Houses on the other Side the Lane; then I opened the Casement, we looked, and it was as she had described. I asked where was the Window she broke out of? she shewed it us (there were some Boards nailed up against it), and said, That is the Window I used to see the Coach go by at: Then we pulled down the Board; it was big enough for me to have got out of it; it appeared to me to be the same Window, before she came to the House, for I saw some of the Plaister broke off on the Outside; that Window was one Story high.

Edward Lyon. The young Woman lived Servant with me till she was missing. I live in Aldermanbury. I was one of the Persons that went down to Wells's House. I went after the rest of the Gentlemen on the 1st of February; we were there some time before she came, and had taken the People up; when she came, she was carried into the Kitchen, and set on a Dresser, and the People set all round her: I said to her, Bet, don't be frightened or uneasy, you see your Friends about you, and on the other Hand don't be too sure, without you really can swear to what you say, therefore be very careful: She pitched upon Mary Squires to be the Person that cut her Stays off; she pitched upon a young Woman that was said to be Daughter to Mary Squires, and said, she was in the Kitchen at the Time, and likewise Virtue Hall, but said they did nothing to her. This black Jug was brought down, a Bason, and the Tobacco-mould: She said, they were both in the Room where she was confined; she had described this Jug before, and said it was broken at the Mouth, as it now appears to be.

Robert Scarrat. I went down to Enfield-Wash; there were six of us in all: Her Mother and two Women were with her in the Chaise; she described the Fields, and likewise a Bridge, that Night she came Home, near the House; I asked her, if she perceived a Tanner's House near? she said, she believed there was.

Q. Have you heard the other Evidences that went down give their Evidence?

Scarrat. I have, and what they have said is the Truth, which I heard also; I also heard E. Canning examined before the sitting Alderman, she gave the same Account she has done here.

Q. Was John Squires in the Room at the Time she pitched upon his Mother and the rest?

Scarrat. He was; she said she could not swear to him; he had his great Coat on at our first going there, but he had pulled it off; she said, he looked like the Person, but she could not swear to him; they made him put his great Coat on before the Justice; then she said, he looked more like one of the two Men that brought her there.

Edward Rossiter. I went down with the rest on the Thursday. I heard E. Canning examined before Mr. Tashmaker the Justice; she gave the same Account then as now; she said, John Squires was much like one of the Men, when he had got his great Coat on; she said, she did not see Wells in the House, but she once saw her out at a Window, but did not know she was the Woman that belonged to the House.

Sutherton Backler. I am an Apothecary; I saw E. Canning the Day after she came Home, on the 30th of January about Noon; she was extremely low and weak; I could scarcely hear her speak, her Voice was so low, and her Pulse scarcely to be felt, with cold Sweats; she told me she had no Passage during the whole Time of her Confinement; she was then in such a Condition, she had a Glyster administered the same Day; she had many Glysters given her, which after some Time relieved her.

Q. Whether a Person that is extremely costive cannot subsist longer without Food, or with less Food, than a Person that is not so?

Backler. I cannot answer to that. (Each of the Persons that said they went down to take the Prisoners, were asked where they went to? and answered, to Enfield-Wash, the House of the Prisoner Wells.)

Mary Squires said nothing in her Defence, but called the following Witnesses.

John Gibbons. I live at Abbotsbury, six Miles from Dorchester; I am Master of the House called The Old Ship; on the 1st of January, 1753, the Prisoner Squires came into the House; there was George her Son, and Lucy her Daughter with her, as she called them; she came with Handkerchiefs, Lawns, Muslins, and Checks, to sell about Town; she stayed there from the 1st to the 9th Day of the Month, and lay at my House.

Q. How long have you kept that House?

Gibbons. I have kept it two Years, come Lady-Day.

Q. Look at the Woman, are you sure that is her?

Gibbons. He looks at Squires, and says, I am sure it is.

Cross-Examination.

Q. How long have you known her?

Gibbons. I have known her three Years, and have seen her there three Years ago.

for we had received a Letter from my Sister Mary, who was at London, that she was extremely ill, and desired us to come Home as soon as possible; there was a very great Water out at Dorchester, and the Miller's Man carried my Sister Lucy over it on Horseback, behind him; for which I told him I'd give him a Pint of Beer; and I took my Mother, and carried her on my Back through the Water; there is a Mill just by the Place; my Sister stayed till we came to her, then we all three walked on together.

Mr. Davy. Where did you stop?

G. Squires. The next Day we got to a Place called Tawney-Down, and we went into a little Ale-house on the Road, and had some Bread and Cheese, and a Pint of Beer: We lay at a Place called Chettle that Night, which was the Friday.

Mr. Davy. How many Miles is Chettle from Dorchester?

G. Squires. I cannot tell, because we went through Blandford.

Mr. Davy. What Time did you get to Chettle on the Friday?

G. Squires. We got there in the Evening; my Mother was very weary, and I asked a Shepherd on the Downs for an Ale-house, and he said there was never a one to Chettle: On the Saturday we went from thence to Martin; there I asked at an Ale-house for Lodging, and could get none; so a Gentleman let us lie in his Barn.

Mr. Davy. Do you know his Name?

G. Squires. I do not recollect it.

Mr. Davy. Was it Farmer Thanes?

G. Squires. It was; we lay there; my Mother and Sister were with me, we never were a Minute from each other all the Time to London.

Mr. Davy. Where did you go when you went from Martin?

G. Squires. We went from thence to Coombe on the Sunday Night, to the House of Widow Greville; her Son Thomas Greville is dead of the Small-pox.

Mr. Davy. When did you leave Coombe?

G. Squires. We left that on the Monday, but can't recollect where we lay.

Mr. Davy. Where did you lie on the 15th?

G. Squires. I cannot tell; I went to Basingstoke on the Tuesday, I think.

Mr. Davy. Recollect again.——G. Squires. I cannot recollect it.

Mr. Davy. How many Places did you lie at, or how many Days were you in going from Coombe to Basingstoke?—G. Squires. I cannot tell.

Mr. Davy. What Day of the Week did you get to Basingstoke?

G. Squires. I cannot tell: We travelled about ten Miles a-Day.

Mr. Davy. Where did you put up at Basingstoke?

G. Squires. At the Spread-Eagle; a Widow Woman keeps it; she wrote a Letter for my Sister Lucy to Mr. Clarke; Mr. Clarke and we had parted a long Time, and he desired Lucy to send a Letter to him.

Mr. Davy. Where did Clarke and you part?

G. Squires. We parted at Ridgway.

Mr. Davy. What is the Landlady's Name who wrote this Letter?

G. Squires. I don't know her Name; the Letter was sent to the Post-Office at Dorchester, directed to Mr. William Clarke at Abbotsbury; we did not lie at the Spread-Eagle, we could not have Lodging there; but she directed us about a Mile or Mile and Half farther on our Way to London.

Mr. Davy. What is the Name of the Place you lay at?

G. Squires. It is called Old Basing, it is a little out of the Way.

Mr. Davy. Were did you go the next Day?

G. Squires. We went, I believe, to Bagshot, and lay at the Greyhound there; and on the Saturday we went to Brentford, to the House of Mrs. Edwards; I lay there one Night, and on Sunday I went to London to look after Sister Mary; I stayed there one Night, and the next Day, which was on a Monday, I brought my Sister Mary to Lucy and my Mother at Brentford; we all stayed there till Tuesday.

Mr. Davy. What Sign does Mrs. Edwards keep?

G. Squires. She keeps no Sign, but there is the Sign of the Drum just by it; there we were all four together; and to the best of my Knowledge, we all left Brentford on the Tuesday, and went to the Seven Sisters by Tottenham, to the Sign of the Two Brewers.

Mr. Davy. Is not there another Name to that Place?

G. Squires. I don't know; there is a Green; they call it by some Name, but I don't know it.

Mr. Davy. What Day of the Week was this?

G. Squires. It was on a Tuesday.

Mr. Davy. Where did you go the next Day?

G. Squires. Then we went to Mrs. Wells's House; this was on a Wednesday.

Mr. Davy. How came you to go there?

G. Squires. I was recommended to her House for Lodging; they said she was a very civil Woman: I never saw her in my Life before this Time, if I was to be racked to Death. There is an Acquaintance of mine that owed me seven Pounds fifteen Shillings in London, and I went there to stay till I could receive it, to Mrs. Wells's House: We went to a Woman's House who sells Pease-soup at Edmonton; we would have lodged there; but my Mother wanted to wash, and the Woman said that was not customary, so she recommended us farther, to a Place called Cheshunt; upon that we went to Mrs. Wells's House, being recommended there by Mrs. Long's Daughter; I left my Mother and two Sisters at Mrs. Wells's House, and went to London to receive my Money about two or three Days after we got there; I lay in London one Night, and came back the next Day, and we all remained there till we were taken up.

Mr. Davy. Describe particularly the Rooms you lay in at Mrs. Wells's House.

G. Squires. The Room my Mother and two Sisters lay in, is as you go by the Kitchen Door up a Pair of Stairs, and turn short on the right Hand; it is a large Room, with one Bed in it, in which they all three lay; it is the handsomest Room they have in the House.

Mr. Davy. What Room was under that?

G. Squires. There is a Parlour under it; I lay in a little Room facing the Stair-head.

Mr. Davy. Where did Mother Wells lie?

G. Squires. She lay in a Room on the left Hand of mine, as you go up Stairs.

Mr. Davy. Who lay in that Room with her?

G. Squires. There was a Daughter of hers, and Virtue Hall.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember any body else that lay in the House?

G. Squires. There was Fortune Natus and his Wife lay in a Place where there is a vast deal of Hay.

Mr. Davy. What do you call that Room?

G. Squires. It was a Shuffle-board Room, as they say; you go up two or three Steps to it out of the Kitchen; they had a Bed made of Hay on the right Hand going up.

Mr.

Q. How long have you lived there?

Gibbons. I was born at that Town: I am a married Man, have a Wife and one Child; I was bred in the Farming Way at Fisherton.

Q. By what do you recollect the Day?

Gibbons. There came an Excisemen to officiate there for one John Ward that was sick, and I put the Day of the Month down when he came; the Excise-Office is kept at my House; the Man that came was Andrew Wicks, or Wick.

Q. Did you see the Prisoner sell any of these Goods you mentioned?

Gibbons. No, I did not; they offered them to sell to me, and others; my Wife bought two Check Aprons.

William Clarke. I live at Abbotsbury, and have for seven Years; I remember seeing the Gypsey there; the last Time I saw her was on the 10th of January last; I met with them on the Road; we went some Way together; we parted at Crudeway-foot, four Miles from Abbotsbury, and three from Dorchester.

Q. Where were they going?——Clarke. I cannot tell that.

Q. Had you ever seen her before?

Clarke. I saw her, and her Son and Daughter, three Years ago come March, at Abbotsbury; they came with Handkerchiefs, Lawns, and Muslins to sell: I saw the Landlord's Wife at the Ship buy some Aprons of them the last Time they were there.

Cross-Examination.

Q. How came you to take particular Notice of the Day?

Clarke. By keeping my other Accounts; I carried Goods out with me the same Day to Portersham.

Q. Have you your Book with you?——Clarke. No, I have not; but I can't forget the Day, because I don't go so often.

Q. Which Way were they going?

Clarke. They were making for London; they talked so.

Q. Did they give you any Account to what Place they were bound next?

Clarke. They did not; they lodged at this Man's House (pointing to Gibbons) at Abbotsbury.

Q. Did you see them there?

Clarke. I did, on the 1st of January: I commonly go there of an Evening, to have a Pot of Liquor.

Q. Do you remember when you kept Christmas-Day?—Clarke. I do not.

Q. Can you give any Account of New Stile or Old?

Clarke. No, I cannot; but if I was to die for the Woman, I'll speak the Truth.

Q. How was she cloathed there?

Clarke. The same as now, and the Son in a blue Coat and a red Waistcoat, and had a great Coat with him.

Q. What Size is he?——Clarke. He is about five Foot seven or eight Inches high; the Girl was in a Camblet Gown.

Q. You are sure you saw her the Time you mention?

Clarke. I undertake to swear positively to that, that I saw her there on the 1st of January last, and either on the 9th or 10th afterwards; and saw them going about the Town in the Time, to sell Things.

Q. What are you?

Clarke. I am a Housekeper, and have been in Business about six Years; I am a Cordwainer.

Thomas Greville. I live at Coombe, three Miles from Salisbury; I keep a Public House there, the Sign of the Lamb; I saw Mary Squires at my House on the 14th of January.

Q. How many Miles is Coombe from Dorchester?—Greville. I cannot tell.

Q. Who was with her there?

Greville. There was her Sister and her Brother, as she said; they sold Handkerchiefs, Lawns, and such Things.

Q. How long did she stay at Coombe?

Greville. They stopped there but one Night.

Cross-Examination.

Q. What January do you mean?

Greville. I mean last January, five Weeks ago last Sunday.

Q. How came you to take such particular Notice of it?

Greville. There was a Carpenter at my House; he had spent the biggest Part of his Money; it being Sunday Night, I would have him go about his Business, and put him out of the House two or three Times, and after that he went over the way to another House, and pawned his Ax. (These three Witnesses shewed their Subpœna's, as the Cause of their coming to give their Evidence.)

For the Crown.

John Inifer. I sell Fish and Oysters about Waltham-Cross and Theobalds. I know the Prisoner Squires very well by Sight; the last Time I saw her before now, was at the Time she was taken at Susannah Wells's House; before that I had seen her several Times every Day up and down, before she was taken.

Q. Are you very certain of that?

Inifer. I am, that I saw her three Weeks before; that she walked into People's Houses, pretending to tell Fortunes. She told me mine once.

Q. Did you see any Goods she had to sell?

Inifer. No, I did not; I always saw her by herself. I saw a young Man in blue-grey when she was taken up, and two young Women, all taken in the House of Wells.

Wells being called upon to make her Defence, said, As to her Character, it was but an indifferent one; that she had an unfortunate Husband, who was hanged; and added, she never saw the young Woman (meaning E. Canning) till they came to take us up; and as to Squires, she never saw her above a Week and a Day before they were taken up.

Squires Guilty, Death. Wells Guilty.

Mr. Davy. At the Time you was at Enfield-Waſh, how did you ſupply yourſelves with Priviſion?

G. Squires. I bought my own Victuals myſelf; there is a little Chandler's Shop over the Way; the Man's Name is Larney; he is a Bricklayer; they ſell Butter, Tea and Coffee, Soap and Candles; I went there ſeveral Times for Tea.

Mr. Davy. Where did you buy your Butchers Meat?

G. Squires. It was in Herring Time; we lived on Fiſh, and did not buy Meat there; there was an old Man came to the Door, Mrs. Wells bought Fiſh of him, and ſo did I.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee this young Woman at the Bar when you was there?

G. Squires. No, I did not; I never ſaw her before we were taken up in my Life, if I was to be racked to Death; I'll ſtand with a Sword put to my Heart, if ever I ſaw her till ſhe came in the Chaiſe; we came there on a Wedneſday, and at the End of a Week and a Day my Mother was taken up.

Croſs-examined.

Mr. Moreton. At ſetting out on your Examination, you ſaid you could not tell where you was at Chriſtmas.

G. Squires. Not the New Chriſtmas.

Mr. Moreton. You ſaid you was not at London before.

G. Squires. I mean, not before ſix or ſeven Weeks before Michaelmas.

Mr. Moreton. From what Place did you ſet out?

G. Squires. I went down into Hampſhire.

Mr. Moreton. When did you ſet out on your Journey, and where is your Home?

G. Squires. We ſet out from Newington to Somerſetſhire and Dorſetſhire.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you leave your Siſter Mary, when you ſet out?

G. Squires. She was with a particular Acquaintance, with Mrs. Squires's Brother-in-law; I left her in Kent; Mrs. Squires in the Borough has a Brother, and his Wife was very ill, and I left my Siſter Mary with her, in order to do what was in her Power for her; they ſell Goods in the Country, and travel about as we do.

Mr. Moreton. At what Houſe, or in what Town did you leave her?

G. Squires. I had not a Thought of being called to ſuch Queſtions as theſe.

Mr. Moreton. I ſhall aſk you a great many Queſtions you have not heard yet: Can you give me any Anſwer, at what Houſe, or what Town you left your Siſter Mary? —— G. Squires. It was in Kent.

Mr. Moreton. Was your Mother and Siſter with you when you parted with her? —— G. Squires. We were all three together; I don't know at what Town, or whoſe Houſe; when I left my Lodgings, I went into Kent, and happened to meet with them. I went into the Wild of Kent.

Mr. Moreton. Did you come back again then to Newington?

G. Squires. I went from Kent into Suſſex.

Mr. Moreton. Name a Town there. —— G. Squires. Lewes, Battel.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go through either of them?

G. Squires. No, I did not.

Mr. Moreton. Name the firſt great Town that you went through in Kent.

G. Squires. I don't know which I went through firſt; I went through Lewes; I made the beſt of my Way into the Weſt.

Mr. Moreton. After you left Lewes, what is the firſt Town you came to that you did know?

G. Squires. Really I do not know; it is ſo long ago, I can't tell you.

Mr. Moreton. You, without an Almanack, have given a long and ſeeming fair Account of a long Journey, pray trace yourſelf down into Dorſetſhire; I don't aſk you the firſt Town from Lewes, but the firſt Town you do remember after you left Lewes. —— No Anſwer.

Mr. Moreton. It was not South-Parrot, was it?

G. Squires. No, it is not poſſible I can tell you; I went from thence into Hampſhire and Wiltſhire; I went through Saliſbury.

Mr. Moreton. Is that the firſt Town you can remember, after you left Lewes, you came at?

G. Squires. No, I went through ſeveral, but don't remember their Names; I muſt have went through ſome: I hope you will excuſe me, I hope you will not aſk me any more.

Mr. Moreton. Can you tell the Name of any Town you went through between Lewes and Saliſbury? —— G. Squires. No, I cannot.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you go when you went from Saliſbury?

G. Squires. I went to Hindon.

Mr. Moreton. What County is that in?

G. Squires. That is in Wiltſhire.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you go when you went from Hindon?

G. Squires. I went partly by Mear.

Mr. Moreton. What was the next Town when you left Mear?

G. Squires. Really, Sir, I hope you will excuſe me, be pleaſed to excuſe me; I cannot tell indeed; pleaſe to excuſe me.

Mr. Moreton. You gave ſo clear an Evidence on that Part of your Return, that if you do not go on, it muſt be left to my Lord who tries you: Tell me where you went when you left Mear?

G. Squires. From Mear we went towards Shaftſbury.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go to it? —— G. Squires. I went partly by it.

Mr. Moreton. Tell me ſome Town you lay at. —— No Anſwer.

Mr. Moreton. Did you lie at Lewes?

G. Squires. I did; I cannot tell the Houſe; it was an Ale-Houſe, but I don't know the Sign.

Mr. Moreton. Tell us another Town you lay at.

G. Squires. I know Mear very well; I lay there, but had never lain at that Houſe before.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you uſe to lie there? —— No Anſwer.

Mr. Moreton. Did you lie at Shaftſbury?

G. Squires. I cannot tell whether I did or not.

Mr. Moreton. Where was you going to in the Weſt?

G. Squires. I ſell Goods.

Mr. Moreton. What Goods?

G. Squires. I had white Waiſtcoats, and worked Gowns, and Hollands, and ſuch Things; and where my Buſineſs led me, there I went.

Mr. Moreton. What Quantity of Goods might you have when you went out of Kent? —— G. Squires. I had not dealt largely, I believe I had then about twenty Pounds Worth of Goods, conſiſting in Aprons, worked Gowns, Nankeens, and ſuch Things.

Mr. Moreton. How long was you before you came to South-Parrot?

G. Squires. I cannot tell; I never was at South-Parrot before the 29th of December; I went down with a Gentleman once ſince.

Mr. Moreton. Is Yeovil farther from London than South-Parrot?

G. Squires. No, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go through that?

G. Squires. No, I came partly by it; but they ſaid they had got the Small-Pox in the Town, and I had never had it, ſo I did not come through it.

Mr.

Squires, the laſt Day of the Seſſions, being aſked what ſhe had to ſay before ſhe received Sentence, anſwered, That on New-Year's Day I lay at Coombe at the Widow Greville's Houſe; the next Day I was at Stoptage; there were ſome People who were caſt away, and they came along with me to a little Houſe on the Top of the Moor, and drank there; there were my Son and Daughter with me. Coming along Popham Lane, there were ſome People raking up Dung. I drank at the ſecond Alehouſe in Baſingſtoke on the Thurſday in the New-Year Week. On the Friday I lay at Bagſhot-Heath, at a little tiney Houſe on the Heath. On the Saturday I lay at Old Brentford at Mrs. Edwards's, who ſells Greens and Small Beer. I could have told this before, but one pulled me, and another pulled me, and would not let me ſpeak. I lay at Mrs. Edwards's on the Sunday and Monday; and on the Tueſday or Wedneſday after, I came from thence to Mrs. Wells's Houſe at Enfield.

The Time drawing near for the Report of the Convicts, Sir Criſp Gaſcoyne laid before His Majeſty, not only the whole Evidence given at the Trial; but alſo the ſeveral Informations and Certificates he had received ſince her Conviction, accompanied by the following Memorial:

To the KING's Moſt Excellence MAJESTY.

" MAY it pleaſe your Majeſty to permit your dutiful Subject, the " Lord Mayor of your faithful City of London, with the moſt profound " Humility and Reſpect to repreſent to your Majeſty, that before the " Trial of Mary Squires, for the Robbery of Elizabeth Canning, and of " Suſannah Wells, as Acceſſary, many unfair Repreſentations were " printed and diſperſed, which could not fail to excite public Prejudice " againſt them.

" The fatal Conſequence whereof, in depriving thoſe unhappy Wretches " of a material Part of their Evidence, engaged me, from the high " Station I have the Honour to bear, to expreſs my Duty to your Ma- " jeſty, and the Public, by making this Inquiry.

" In which the utmoſt Caution has been obſerved.---All the Wit- " neſſes have been ſtrictly, ſeparately, and publicly examined, and their " Credit well certified.

" Many other Informations, to the ſame Effect, have been offered; " but I declined troubling your Majeſty with further Evidence, as " humbly apprehending it totally unneceſſary.

" In the Courſe of this Inquiry, Virtue Hall, a principal Witneſs, " voluntarily and publicly retracted the Whole of the Evidence ſhe gave " upon the Trial.

" To this I preſume, by your Majeſty's Leave, to add, that amidſt all " the Examinations I have taken, there has not appeared any Variation " or Inconſiſtency, or the leaſt Circumſtance or Suſpicion, that could " lead me to doubt the Innocence of thoſe unhappy Convicts.

" All which is humbly ſubmitted to your Majeſty's great Wiſdom and " Judgment, by

" Your Majeſty's faithful Subject,

" CRISP GASCOYNE, Mayor."

" On the 10th of April following, the Report was accordingly made " of the Convicts under Sentence of Death; when his Majeſty was " graciouſly pleaſed to reſpite the Execution of Mary Squires for ſix " Weeks; and to refer the Conſideration of the Evidence on both Sides " (for Evidence againſt her had been preſented) to his Attorney and Sol- " licitor-General.---Soon after the Attorney and Sollicitor-General made " their Report, with their Opinion, That the Weight of Evidence was in " the Convict's Favour: Whereupon his Majeſty was graciouſly pleaſed " to grant her a free Pardon." Thus far from Sir Criſp Gaſcoyne's Addreſs to the Livery, p. 26, 27.

The Friends of Canning, in their Refutation of Sir Criſp Gaſcoyne's Addreſs, ſay, " But of the Purport of this Memorial, and what in parti- " cular was annexed to it, the Friends of Canning were totally ignorant " till the Publication of The Addreſs; and therefore could not examine " any Witneſſes with a particular View to contradict it. They had in- " deed, upon the Recantation of Virtue Hall, taken ſome Affidavits to " prove, that the Gypſey was at Enfield when the Robbery was commit- " ted; and the Duke of Newcaſtle (on whom they waited) having ac- " quainted them, that his Majeſty had referred the Conſideration of " the Evidence on both Sides to his Attorney and Sollicitor-General, " they took many other Affidavits to prove the ſame Facts; but when " theſe Affidavits were preſented to the Attorney and Sollicitor-General, " they rejected them, becauſe they were not at Liberty to examine any " Evidence that was taken after the Day of Reference: It neceſſarily " followed therefore, that the Weight of Evidence was in the Convict's " Favour; and ſo it was reported, and ſhe pardoned. Upon this View " of the Caſe, however, it does not become in any Degree more pro- " bable, that ſhe was innocent." See the Refutation of Sir Criſp Gaſcoyne's Addreſs to the Livery, in Folio, p. 18.

Theſe Friends of Canning likewiſe gave an Anſwer to Sir Criſp's Memorial preſented to the King, &c. But Sir Criſp's Addreſs, and Canning's Friends Refutation of it, make two large Folio Pamphlets; and the many other Pamphlets publiſhed on both Sides at that Time, are too numerous to inſert here, or take any Notice of; and, as Canning's Friends thought, did not clear up that myſterious Affair; probably this Trial of Canning, for Perjury, may be ſaid to have done it.

Mr. Moreton. Was you at Crookhorne?

G. Squires. No, I was not there at all.

Mr. Moreton. Tell me a great Town after you left Shaftsbury?

G. Squires. I went away from Shaftsbury to Abbotsbury.

Mr. Moreton. Tell me the Name of one Town you lay at in Somersetshire?

G. Squires. I did not go very far in Somersetshire.

Mr. Moreton. Name one Town betwixt Yeovil and South-Parrot that you lay at.

G. Squires. I don't know a Town betwixt them; there are several Villages, but I can't tell the Name of one.

Mr. Moreton. Tell me the Sign of an Inn where you lay at beyond Shaftsbury, whether it was a Fox, a Goose, a Dog, or a Pair of Compasses.

G. Squires. I don't know the Sign of any Place where I lay at, because it is so long ago.

Mr. Moreton. You remember the other Places very well.

G. Squires. That is because I have been there since.

Mr. Moreton. Then you remember it by the last Journey you took.

G. Squires. Yes, Sir, and by the other too.

Mr. Moreton. Then you can't remember either a Town, an Alehouse, or a Sign where you lay at, after you left Shaftsbury?

G. Squires. No, I cannot.

Mr. Moreton. Now we shall be a little better acquainted: We bring you now to South-Parrot; you say you had travelled seven or eight Weeks before Michaelmas, till the 29th of December.

G. Squires. But I did not travel all that Time, I came home to my House at Newington before that.

Mr. Moreton. Did you return Home after you set out for Kent, and so into the West, before you got to South-Parrot?

G. Squires. Before the Time of my coming Home, I could not.

Mr. Moreton. Let me understand you: Did you return back to Newington before Christmas?——G. Squires. No, Sir, not till after Christmas.

Mr. Moreton. Then from the Time you set out, seven or eight Weeks before Michaelmas, you was travelling about the Country with your Goods?

G. Squires. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. Can you tell the exact Time you set out from Newington-Butts?

G. Squires. It was Harvest-time, or near it; I can't tell whether it was in July or August.

Mr. Moreton. Well, we are come to South-Parrot; you say you came there the 29th of December; you say you met with Mr. Clarke on a Sunday at Abbotsbury, and lay there that Night, and set out with him on the Monday, and went to Litton, and your Mother went after you to Abbotsbury: Now I'll ask you this Question, When your Mother went after you there, did you meet her on the Road?

G. Squires. No, I did not.

Mr. Moreton. Then did your Sister come with your Mother there on the Monday Morning?

G. Squires. No, she stayed in the House at Litton.

Mr. Moreton. Then your Mother walked on the Monday Morning, December the 31st, from Litton to Abbotsbury by herself, and back again, and dined on two Fowls, then went with you to Abbotsbury again?

G. Squires. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. What Time did she come back to Litton?

G. Squires. Betwixt Two and Three o'Clock, and dined with us, and walked with us to Abbotsbury that Night.

Mr. Moreton. What Time did you all set out from Litton to go to Abbotsbury?——G. Squires. We set out between Three and Four o'Clock in the Afternoon.

Mr. Moreton. Was it dark?——G. Squires. It was quite dark.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you buy the two Fowls?

G. Squires. I bought them of one Mrs. Turner; I made a Cludation for the Feathers, she said she would have the Feathers.

Mr. Moreton. You lived well; I should think two Fowls a very remarkable Dinner for three Gypsies.

G. Squires. Fowls are bought there for Six-pence a-piece, it is cheaper than Beef or Mutton; that I have very often.

Mr. Moreton. I hope you always buy them.

G. Squires I do.

Mr. Moreton. Were they boiled or roasted?

G. Squires. They were both boiled; I was not at Home to see them boiled, but I eat Part of them.

Mr. Moreton. What Day was it you lent the Exciseman your Coat?

G. Squires. I don't know the Day.

Mr. Moreton. How many of your Goods might you have disposed of at that Time?——G. Squires. I had disposed of them all, except a Piece of Check and two Waistcoats.

Mr. Moreton. Then you had taken a little Money?

G. Squires. I had, and owed some, and returned it to London.

Mr. Moreton. To whom?—G. Squires. To an Acquaintance of mine, Mr. Norman; he is since dead; he was a Tide-waiter.

Mr. Moreton, From what Place did you return the Money?

G. Squires. I cannot name the Place.

Mr. Davy. I beg Leave to ask one Question I forgot; What happened at Ridgway when you were there?

G. Squires. A young Man that lives at Abbotsbury, who sells Turnips, had two Horses, and Mr. Clarke, after he had dined with us, designed to return Home; he knowing the Man, desired him to come in; we had got some Beef-steaks; this Man dined with us, and Mr. Clarke rode on one of his Horses Home; he is here.

Mr. Moreton. Tell me his Name.

G. Squires. I don't know his Name.

Mr. Moreton. Is that the House you left a Piece of Nankeen at?

G. Squires. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. Do you call Nankeen Check?——G. Squires. No, Sir.

Mr. Moreton. When you left this Piece of Nankeen in Pawn, because you was afraid you should want Money, pray how much Money had you then?——G. Squires. I had borrowed some of Mr Clarke, and had some of my own.

Mr. Moreton. Tell us this one Thing, that as Mr. Clarke was so much your Friend, and your Sister's Friend, why did he not pay your Reckoning, and save your Nankeen; that you might make your Money of it?

G. Squires. He offered it, but I was so kind I would not let him.

Mr. Moreton. What Money did you borrow of Clarke?

G. Squires. I borrowed six Shillings of him.

Mr. Moreton. Have you had your Nankeen since?

G. Squires. No, he has got it in Custody since.

Mr. Moreton. What was your Reckoning?

G. Squires It was about three Shillings and Sixpence.

Mr. Moreton. What is Nankeen worth a Yard?

G. Squires. It is worth, or I generally sell it for, two Shillings a Yard.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you receive the News of your Sister Mary's Illness?

G. Squires. It was in the Country, I can't tell the Town where.

Mr. Moreton. How did you receive the Account of it?

G. Squires. It came by the Post; sure it must.

Mr. Moreton. Upon your Oath, did you leave any Directions with her to write to you in the Country?——G. Squires. Yes, and I had a Letter she was ill; I had it first by a Letter.

Mr. Moreton. Can your Sister Mary write?—G. Squires. No, she cannot.

Mr. Moreton. Was the Letter directed to you or your Mother? Was it after you left Abbotsbury you received the Letter?

G. Squires, I cannot say that.

Mr. Moreton. Then, if you received it before you came there, or at the Place, it is strange you should stay dancing there!

G. Squires. I will not swear I received it before we came there, or not.

Mr. Moreton. You say, at Dorchester the Miller carried your Sister over the Water on Horseback, how did you and your Mother get over?

G. Squires. I asked him to carry my Mother over; he said he could not stay.

Mr. Moreton. Did he come back again by you, or go on?

G. Squires. No, he went another Way.

Mr. Moreton. How far, after you set out from Ridgway, where the dead Horse was, might you walk with that old Woman, that Day and Night after you had received an Account of your Sister Mary's Illness?

G. Squires. She got no farther then Chettle.

Mr. Moreton. How far is Ridgway from Dorchester?

G. Squires. It is about three or four Miles.

Mr. Moreton. How far is it from Chettle to Blandford?

G. Squires. I can't tell how many Miles.

Mr. Moreton. What did you lie upon in that Barn you mentioned?

G. Squires. We all three lay upon Straw; we don't carry Sheets or Blankets with us; we all sat up in our Cloaths.

Mr. Moreton. Whereabouts does Chettle lie?

G. Squires. It is on the left Hand, and Martin on the right.

Mr. Moreton. Which was you at first?

G. Squires. At Chettle, and then to Martin, and from thence to Coombe.

Mr. Moreton. Is not Martin in the direct Road from Chettle to London?

G. Squires. No, it is not; it is the Bottom Way; we came there because it was Night.

Mr. Moreton. How long did you stay at that House where the Letter was wrote?——G. Squires. About an Hour and Half; we came there about Three o'Clock, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you go to find your Sister Mary?

G. Squires. To a Relation's of mine, who belongs to the Customs, named Samuel Squires; he lives down in White-Hart-Yard.

Mr. Moreton. Did she ask you whether you had received a Letter from her or not?——G. Squires. I told her I had.

Mr. Moreton. Did you tell her where you received it?—G. Squires. No.

Mr. Moreton. Which Way did you go from Brentford to Tottenham-High-Cross?

G. Squires. I went through the City, along by Covent-Garden.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go to your House at Newington?

G. Squires. No.

Mr. Moreton. Nor your Sister nor Mother?——G. Squires. No.

Mr. Moreton. On which Side the Park-Wall did you come from Kensington?

G. Squires. Through Knightsbridge, and all along the great Road.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know this Town of London?

G. Squires. I can find my Way in any Part of the City, but I am not acquainted with the Streets Names.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go through the City?

G. Squires. I went clear quite through the City.

Mr. Moreton. Which Way did you go out of Town to Tottenham?

G. Squires. By Shoreditch.

Mr. Moreton. Had you, or had you not, a Lodging at Newington at that Time?——G. Squires. Yes, I had; and my Houshold Goods were there at the Time.

Mr. Moreton. Then how came you to go through London, and not to your Lodgings?

G. Squires. Because I owed a Sum of Money, and was afraid of being arrested, and wanted to see Mr. Squires, who lived in the Neighbourhood, to make it up for me.

Mr. Moreton. What Day of the Week did you pass through London?

G. Squires. I left Mrs. Edwards's House of a Wednesday, and the same Day I came through London.

Mr. Moreton. Where did you meet the Person that recommended you to this House of Wells's?

G. Squires. Before I came to Enfield; the Woman's Name is Long.

Mr. Moreton. How many Beds are there in the Room at Wells's where your Mother lay?

G. Squires. There is but one Bed.

Mr. Moreton. If you ever did go this Journey, be positive with yourself, whether it was in the Year 52?

G. Squires. Yes, Sir; I am sure it was then, and not at any other Time.

Mr. Moreton. Did your Mother and Sister help you in your trading?

G. Squires. My Mother buys old Clothes and silver Lace.

Mr.

Mr. Moreton. Who bought these Goods of yours?

G. Squires. I did myself.

Mr. Moreton. Did your Mother and Sister know of your trading?

G. Squires. They did.

Mr. Moreton. Did they know what Quantity of Goods you had?

G. Squires. I don't know whether they did or not.

Mr. Davy. We will not call Lucy the Sister; she is rather more stupid than her Brother, and has not been on that Road since their coming to Enfield-Wash; and so can give but a very imperfect Account either of Times or Places. But we will call Mr. Willis, who went with George Squires about the Country since the Commencement of this Prosecution, in order to ascertain the particular Places where Mary Squires and her Family have travelled through: And Mr. Willis will assign the Reason of this Man's remembering the Times and Places of their Return from the West with such Exactness, when he can recollect so little of the Journey of going down.

Robert Willis sworn.

I set out some Time in last June from Dorchester.

Mr. Nares. Whether this Gentleman is called to prove any Thing else than what Squires has related to him, and what he has heard from others since the Fact, I object to his Evidence.

Mr. Gascoyne. Mr. Willis went into the Country with George Squires, in order to ascertain the Places, he being a Person of Reputation, at Houses where these three People lodged, and has found them to be Facts.

Mr. Moreton. You have shewn there was a Person with them in Court, (that is Lucy) and you refuse calling her, and now call this Man to give an Evidence of Hearsay only, after a Person has been examined an Hour and Half, and told you of a Person within your Lordship's Power to call, who he says has been with him all the Journey: Will your Lordship suffer a third Person, that can only tell what this or that Man told him upon his making Enquiry? We are willing to risque the Issue of this Trial singly upon the Evidence of George and Lucy, examined separately.

Mr. Baron Legge. If they don't call the Sister, you'll make what Observations you please upon it. That Evidence has said upon his Oath, that his Sister went this whole Journey with him; and in order to confirm that what he said was Truth, they will not call her, but this Attorney.

Mr. Just. Clive. This is but Hearsay Evidence, and that is not Evidence; but if you go to discredit this Man, surely they may produce Evidence to shew the Conformity of his Evidence, that he was always in one Story.

Mr. Nares. This must be proved by a Person that was present at the Fact; if the Case was otherwise, I could call a hundred Witnesses in order to confirm my own Evidence.

Mr. Baron Legge. The several People that lived at the Houses where he says he called, are the Evidences to call to prove that.

Mr. Moreton. Here is a Man goes and tells his Case to his Attorney, and he comes here as a Witness. (Refused.)

George and Lucy Squires were again placed by their Mother in the Court.

John Fry sworn.

I live at a Place called Litton, in Dorsetshire; I am a Tiler and Plaisterer; I came to Town on Wednesday last.

Mr. Willes. Do you know that old Woman that sits there? (meaning Mary Squires.)

J. Fry. I have seen the old Gypsey several Times; I remember seeing her on the 30th of December 52, at Litton; it was on a Saturday, at the House of James Hawkins; I was at Work there at the same Time.

Mr. Willes. Pray, how can you remember the particular Time?

J. Fry. Because it was in the New Christmas Time, and the Monday following was the New-Year's Day; this is the very old Woman.

Mr. Willes. Look at the Man and Woman with her.

J. Fry. They are the Two Persons that were with her on that Saturday Evening.

Mr. Willes. Was you in Company with them?

J. Fry. I was not at all, but I saw them by the Kitchen Fire.

Mr. Willes. How can you be certain these are the People?

J. Fry. I have known the old Woman thirty Years; she has been in that Part many Times; I have seen her Face often before.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. Is this Mr. Hawkins living?

J. Fry. He is, and is now here.

Francis Gladman sworn.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you know Mary Squires?

Fr. Gladman. Yes, Sir; that is the Woman. (Pointing to her.)

Mr. Gas. Do you know these two People that stand by her?

Fr. Glad. I do, they are her Son and Daughter; I keep a House at Litton, and am a Gardener; I remember seeing these People there on Monday the 1st of January 53, in the House of James Hawkins; there is no Sign, it used to be The Three Horse-shoes; I shaved George the Sunday, being the Day before, at my House.

Mr. Gascoyne. Had you ever seen the old Woman before?

Fr. Glad. To the best of my Knowledge, I never did; but I am positive sure to them.

Mr. Gas. What is the Reason you know it to be the 1st of January?

Fr. Glad. The Reason is, we generally ring-in the New Year; I went to ring a Peal, and the People of the Parish gave us some Liquor, that is, some Ale and some Cyder, to drink; we concluded to go to the Alehouse with our Jug of Cyder, that was given us, to have something put into it; we went to Hawkins's; the old Woman sat there; I sat down close by her, and asked her, if she could tell Fortunes? she said, No, she was no Fortune-teller: I asked her, if she could talk Spanish? and said, I thought I had seen her abroad somewhere or other; she said, she could not: I asked her, if she could talk Portuguese? she said, No: I said, Nor French? she said, No: Nor Dutch? No: She said she knew what I said, but could not answer me. Upon this an old Gentleman said, You must cant to her, talk Gypsey to her, and she'll answer you. Then I said, You are one of the Family of the Scamps; she said, No, I am no Scamp; and a young Man in the Room said her Name was Squires.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Williams. Did she sell any thing?

Fr. Gladman. She did not appear to me to sell any thing.

James Angel sworn.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see that old Woman before?

J. Angel. I have seen her a great many Times.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see her at Litton?

J. Angel. I saw her there on the last Day of the Year 52, at James Hawkins's Apartment, a Public House; and I believe there was Miss Lucy with her.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see the young Man?

J. Angel. No, I did not see him there.

Mr. Davy. By what Circumstance do you remember the particular Time?

J. Angel. Because it is a usual Thing for us to ring-in the New Year; we rang a Peal, and in the Morning concluded to go to a Public House to drink together; there we saw the old Woman sitting smoaking her Pipe; I was there two Hours, and then I was called away to go a Fox-hunting.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever see her before that Time?

J. Angel. No, but I have several Times since, and am well satisfied it is the same Woman.

Mr. Davy. What is your Business?

J. Angel. I am a Stay-maker.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Moreton. What Time of the last of December did you see her?

J. Angel. It was after the Evening Prayer on a Sunday; she was not in the Kitchen, but in a new Apartment, which was not made a Public House of then, but is now.

Mr. Moreton. What Time did you ring-in the Morning?

J. Angel. It was just about Day-break.

Mr. Moreton. How long might you stay at Hawkins's?

J. Angel. I believe near two Hours; she was there all the Time, and I left her there when I went away.

Mr. Moreton. What Time was it you went to go a-hunting?

J. Angel. I believe betwixt Nine and Ten o'Clock, I am not certain to the very Time.

Mr. Moreton. How long did you stay a Fox-hunting?

A. Angel. Till almost Night; I believe it might be Three o'Clock.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go to Hawkins's in the Evening?

J. Angel. I did, but then they were not there.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know Clarke? Did you see him there that Evening?

J. Angel. I know him, but I did not see him there.

Mr. Moreton. Do you imagine, that betwixt Ten and Two, or Half an Hour after, the old Woman could walk from Litton to Abbotsbury and back again, and after that walk again to Abbotsbury?

J. Angel. I think she might; she must make very good Speed.

Mr. Moreton. How many Miles are they from each other?

J. Angel. It is three little Miles we call it.

James Hawkins sworn.

I keep an Alehouse at Litton.

Mr. Willes. Do you know that old Woman there?

J. Hawkins. Yes, she passes by the Name of Mary Squires; I remember seeing her at our House on the 30th of December 52, being on a Saturday.

Mr. Willes. Do you know that young Man and Woman?

J. Hawk. Yes, they are George and Lucy, her Son and Daughter; they were all three of them at my House at that Time together; it was just at the turning of the Date; they lay there on the Saturday and Sunday Nights, and went away on the Monday about Two in the Afternoon.

Mr. Willes. What Time did they get to your House on the Saturday?

J. Hawk. About Two in the Afternoon; George went to Abbotsbury on the Monday the 1st of January, and one Clarke came with him.

Mr. Willes. Where was the old Woman that Monday Morning?

J. Hawk. She was at our House; she eat a Fowl in a little new Chamber.

Mr. Willes. Did she not leave your House before they all went away?

J. Hawk. I don't remember she did; they were by themselves; that Chamber is not in the House; they eat Fowls for their Dinner.

Mr. Willes. Who were the Fowls bought of?

J. Hawk. They were bought of one Dance Turner, in our Parish.

Mr. Willes. Were they boiled or roasted?

J. Hawkins. They were boiled, I believe; we don't eat roast Meat in the Country but very little.

Mr. Willes. What Time did they leave your House?

J. Hawk. They went away, I believe, about Two in the Afternoon.

Mr. Willes. Were George Squires and Clarke at Dinner with the others?

J. Hawk. I am certain they were; in my Opinion the old Woman went to look for George out into the Fields, somewhere or another; she did not tarry long.

Mr. Willes. How long?

J. Hawk. About an Hour; but I went but seldom into the Room where they were.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember Angel's being at your House at the Time?

J. Hawkins. I do; they had been a-ringing; and the Minister's Kinsman went a Fox-hunting that Day, and gave the People some Money.

Mr. Willes. How do you know it was the 31st of December?

J. Hawk. By reason I made a Fire in that little Chamber on the Monday Morning, when the People were ringing, where no Fire had been made before.

Cross-examined.

Mr. Nares. Was Angel in the new Room or the common Kitchen?

J. Hawk. In both of them.

Mr. Nares. Did Mary Squires smoak in the Kitchen or the other Room?

J. Hawk. I believe she might smoak in both Rooms.

Mr. Nares. Where did ſhe ſmoak on Monday Morning?

J. Hawkins. I believe it was in the old Houſe.

Mr. Davy. If you deſign to impeach theſe People's Characters, here is the Miniſter we can call to confirm them.

Mr. Moreton. We have nothing to ſay againſt their Characters.

William Clarke ſworn.

I live at Abbotſbury, and know the old Woman, Lucy and Polly; I remember George coming to my Houſe at Abbotſbury the Day before New-Year's Day, in the Forenoon, laſt December was twelve Months; he and I went to Litton together on the Monday Morning; I was a Sweetheart of Lucy's; we got there ſome time in the Afternoon, and met with Lucy about Three or Four o'Clock; I know it was ſome time before it was dark.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Was the old Woman there?

W. Clarke. She was not when we came there, for ſhe had come to make Inquiry where George was, becauſe he did not return on the Sunday Night; the old Woman came there about half an Hour after us, and George, ſhe, Lucy and I went to Abbotſbury that Night, and we danced at Gibbons's Houſe.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Do you remember any thing of a Couple of Fowls?

W. Clarke. We eat ſomething there; I took Part of a Fowl.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Was it roaſt or boiled?

W. Clarke. It was boiled Fowl, to the beſt of my Remembrance.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Then if you ſtayed to dine, what Time did you ſet out for Abbotſbury?---W. Clarke. We ſet out late, after dark.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Who was your Partner?

W. Clarke. Lucy was my Partner.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Can you tell who was George Squires's Partner?

W. Clarke. I cannot tell you indeed; Melchiſedech Arnold played on the Muſic, that I am ſure of.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. How many Days did they ſtay at Abbotſbury?

W. Clarke. They ſtopped there from the 1ſt to the 9th, all three of them.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Did you ſee them often in that Time?

W. Clarke. I was in their Company every Day the Time they were there, and ſaw Lucy ſome Part of her Journey; I went as far as Porterſham.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. At whoſe Houſe did you lodge at Porterſham?

W. Clarke. We lodged at Sias Frampton's Houſe, that is a Mile from Abbotſbury; I ſaw her three Miles farther, and parted with them at Ridgway-Foot; I ſupped with them there at Francis Bewley's, and then returned to my own Houſe.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Did any body borrow Money of you at Ridgway?

W. Clarke. Yes, George borrowed Six Shillings of me.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. What had you for Supper there?

W. Clarke. We had Beef-ſteaks.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Upon what Terms did Lucy and you part, upon good Terms?

W. Clarke. We were upon civil Terms; I never ſaw any thing by her but civil Terms; ſhe is as honeſt a Girl as any in the World, for what I know.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. When ſhe and you parted, did you give her Directions to write to you?—W. Clarke. I did.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Did ſhe give any Directions to you?---W. Clarke. She did.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Did you give Directions only, or deſire her to write to you?

W. Clarke. I deſired her to write to me as ſoon as poſſible; after that I received a Letter from Briſtol at Eſham in the Vale.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. How long after your parting with them was it you received this Letter from Briſtol?

W. Clarke. It was not half a Year after; I had it brought to Abbotſbury; it was directed to me, but who wrote it I cannot tell.

Croſs-examined.

Mr. Williams. What Countryman are you?

W. Clarke. I was bred and born at Abbotſbury.

Mr. Williams. How long have you been acquainted with theſe People?

W. Clarke. Four Years laſt March; the firſt Time that ever I ſaw them was at the Old Ship at Gibbons's; the ſecond Time I ſaw them was the laſt of December 52, when George came from Litton to me, and I went there back with him.

Mr. Williams. What Time of the Day was it when you came to Litton?

W. Clarke. Some Time in the Afternoon; I can't ſay to an Hour or two; it might be Three o'Clock.

Mr. Williams. How long were you walking from Litton to Abbotſbury?

W. Clarke. We were two Hours walking it; it is three Miles.

Mr. Williams. What Time did Mary Squires come in after you was at Litton?

W. Clarke. She might come in in half an Hour, and that might be between Three and Four o'Clock; we took Part of a Fowl there.

Mr. Williams. What, amongſt you all?

W. Clarke. Yes, amongſt us all.

Mr. Williams. Was it boiled or roaſted?

W. Clarke. To the beſt of my Remembrance, it was boiled.

Mr. Williams. Who paid the Reckoning?

W. Clarke. I don't know indeed, I did not pay a Farthing.

Mr. Williams. Is it but three Miles from Litton to Abbotſbury?

W. Clarke. It is three computed Miles, but it is four Poſt Miles.

Mr. Williams. Can you walk as faſt as Mary Squires?

W. Clarke. I can, and a great deal faſter.

Mr. Williams. Could ſhe do it in leſs than four Hours?

W. Clarke. No, I don't think ſhe could, becauſe ſhe is an elderly Woman; that is, walking thither and back again.

Mr. Williams. When you parted at Ridgway-Foot, did George Squires tell you whether he had Money, or no Money?

W. Clarke. He did not tell me whether he had or not.

Mr. Williams. Who paid all the Money from the 1ſt to the 9th, where you drank?

W. Clarke. George paid it, I believe; I don't know but he did; whether he paid it or not, he had Six Shillings of me.

Mr. Williams. Did he ſell any Goods, do you know, to any body?

W. Clarke. Yes, he ſold an Apron to the Landlady at the Old Ship, and another to the Servant.

Mr. Williams. Did he aſk you to lend him any thing?

W. Clarke. Yes, he did.

Mr. Williams. Did you know of his pledging that Piece of Goods at Ridgway for the Reckoning?—W. Clarke. I did not till afterwards.

Mr. Williams. Did you offer to pay half there?

W. Clarke. No, I did not; George would not let me.

Mr. Williams. Did you lend him this Money before or after he pawned the Nankeen?—W. Clarke. It was before.

Mr. Williams. How came he to pawn it?

W. Clarke. I cannot tell that.

Mr. Williams. How long was you at Ridgway?

W. Clarke. I might be there two Hours.

Mr. Williams. What Time did you ſet out for Abbotſbury?

W. Clarke. I ſet out about Four o'Clock in the Afternoon, and lodged at Porterſham going back.

Mr. Davy. When you came to Litton, had Lucy and Mary Squires ſat down to Dinner?—W. Clarke. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee the Diſh when firſt ſerved up?

W. Clarke. I eat Part of what was meddled with.

Mr. Davy. Had they been eating before you came there?

W. Clarke. I don't know whether they had eat any thing or not.

Mr. Davy. Did you lie with George Squires at Ridgway?

W. Clarke. No.

Mr. Davy. Do you know any thing of the Circumſtance of the Piece of Nankeen?—W. Clarke. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Do you know any thing about a dead Horſe?

W. Clarke. There was a dead Horſe lay in the Highway at Ridgway as I went by.

John Gibbons ſworn *.

I keep the Old Ship at Abbotſbury; I know Mary Squires, and the young Man and Woman; they are Son and Daughter to the good Woman.

Mr. Willes. When did you ſee them at your Houſe?

J. Gibbons. They were at my Houſe on Monday the 1ſt of January 53; they came there in the darkiſh of the Evening.

Mr. Willes. Had you any Merriment at your Houſe that Night?

J. Gibbons. Yes, Sir, Dancing; George danced with a Siſter of mine named Mary Gibbons, and Lucy danced with William Clarke; the old Woman was in the Houſe at the Time.

Mr. Willes. How long did they ſtay at your Houſe?

J. Gibbons. They ſtay'd from the 1ſt to the 9th, then they went away.

Mr. Willes. Did they ſtay in your Houſe all that Time?

J. Gibbons. The old Woman did, I ſaw her every Day there, and ſo I did George and Lucy; I am ſure of this, upon my Oath; I knew Mary Squires

* "Theſe Abbotſbury Witneſſes were indicted for Perjury, for the Evi- "dence they gave in the Trial of Squires and Wells. Canning's Friends "had moved the Court of King's Bench for a Certiorari to remove the In- "dictment, which had been refuſed: But the Attorney for her inſiſted, "that according to antient Practice, a Certiorari might be obtained by "Application to a Judge during a Vacation, at the Inſtance of a Proſecu- "tor in a Criminal Cauſe, as a Matter of Right; becauſe it is the King's "Privilege, who in Criminal Cauſes is the Plaintiff, to ſue in what Court "he will. Therefore the Attorney for Canning was unwilling to try "them at the Old-Bailey, where Sir Criſp Gaſcoyne had a Seat; and went "down to Totteridge, to Lord Chief Juſtice Lee's, and got his Hand to "the Fiats; upon which the Certiorari's were iſſued out to remove the In- "dictment into the Court of King's Bench; and next Term a Motion was "made to enforce a Return of them. Upon this Motion a Rule was "made, for the Court at the Old-Bailey to ſhew Cauſe, why a Return "ſhould not be enforced. The Attorney againſt her prayed a particular "Day, which was allowed; and he undertook to be ready on that Day. "He moved, that the Certiorari's might be ſuperſeded; alledging, that "the Lord Chief Juſtice had been impoſed upon in ſigning the Fiats: But "his Lordſhip not being preſent, a Rule was made for hearing the Me- "rits of that Suggeſtion at a future Day. On this future Day the Coun- "ſel for the Countrymen moved, that the Writs might be ſuperſeded, in "the Abſence of the Lord Chief Juſtice. But as the Motion to ſuper- "ſede theſe Writs was founded on a Suggeſtion, that the Lord Chief "Juſtice had been impoſed upon; and as none but his Lordſhip could "know, whether he was impoſed upon or no; both Motions were or- "dered to ſtand over, till his Lordſhip ſhould be preſent: But as he died "without ever coming into Court afterwards, the Writs are not ſuper- "ſeded to this Hour." Refutation of Sir Criſp Gaſcoyne's Addreſs to the Livery, p. 20, 21.

JURY.

Robert Groom,	John Allen,	Barnard Townſend,
John Trimmer,	Henry Bland,	Bartholomew Pain,
Joſeph Tenniſwood,	William Remnant,	John Merry,
Richard Graham,	William Champion,	Samuel Watlington.

ACCORDING to the Courſe of the Court, the Trials of Gibbons, Clarke, and Greville, the three Abbotſbury Witneſſes upon the Trial of Mary Squires, for the Robbery of Elizabeth Canning, being called on,

Squires almoſt three Years before, and knew her when ſhe came into my Houſe.

Mr. Willes. When they went away, where did they tell you they were going?

J. Gibbons. They told me they were going to Porterſham; Clarke went with them.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember an Exciſeman coming to your Houſe to officiate for another that was ſick?

J. Gibbons. I do, his Name is Andrew Wake; he lay in the ſame Room with George Squires, and they were very familiar together.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember the Exciſeman borrowing George's Great Coat?

J. Gibbons. I believe he did one Night, as he was walking his Rounds.

Mr. Willes. Was it as he was walking his Rounds, or to walk his Rounds?

J. Gibbons. It was to walk his Rounds.

Mr. Willes. How do you know that?

J. Gibbons. I heard him tell it.

Croſs-Examination.

Mr. Moreton. You was examined when Mary Squires was tried at this Bar?——J. Gibbons. I was.

Mr. Moreton. I will only aſk you, whether you gave an Account of ſeeing them dance, as you have now?

J. Gibbons. I don't know that it was aſked me.

Mr. Moreton. Was it not material to ſay, we had Muſic, and they danced at our Houſe at that Time? Did you ſwear that then?

J. Gibbons. I can't ſay whether I might or not.

Mr. Moreton. When did you firſt recollect it?

J. Gibbons. On the 1ſt of February.

Mr. Moreton. Then why did you not ſwear it then, and give my Lord and the Jury an Account of it?

J. Gibbons. I don't know, I was not aſked it then.

Mr. Moreton. Did you give an Account of the Exciſeman lying in the ſame Room with George?

J. Gibbons. No; but I then told the Court the Exciſeman was there at my Houſe.

Mr. Moreton. Was the Exciſeman here then?

John Gibbons. No.

Andrew Wake ſworn.

I was an Exciſeman about nine Months ago, and am now in the Foot-Guards; I was ordered to Abbotsbury to officiate for one Mr. Ward, who was ill, by Order of the Superviſor, from Dorcheſter; on the 31ſt of December 1752, I got there, I went to the Ship at Gibbons's; (he takes a Book in his Hand, and looks in it) this is my Writing, theſe are our Entries, it is the Journal.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Look at the old Woman ſitting there, do you know her?

A. Wake. I do, it is Mary Squires; I ſaw her at Abbotsbury, at Gibbons's Houſe, at that Time, the 31ſt of December 52.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Do you know that young Man?

A. Wake. I do; he paſſed for George Squires; he lay in the ſame Room with me.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Do you know that young Woman by him?

A. Wake. I do, it is Lucy; they both went for Son and Daughter of Mary Squires; I ſaw George firſt there; he was ſitting by the Kitchen Fire, and one Clarke, a Shoemaker of that Place, with him; this was on Sunday Night: I am not poſitive to the firſt Day I ſaw Mary Squires, becauſe I was obliged to be out early in the Mornings; but I think I firſt ſaw her on the Wedneſday, and Lucy with her, by the Kitchen Fire.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. How long did you remain in that Town?

A. Wake. From the 31ſt of December to the 14th of January; Gibbons's Houſe was my Houſe all that Time; I remember they went away two or three Days before I did.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. can you remember the Day they went away?

A. Wake. Upon my Word I do not.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Do you know this by your Memory, or by your Books?

A. Wake. By my Memory.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Did George Squires lie in the ſame Room you did every Night?

A. Wake. I don't remember but he did: the Mother and Lucy lay in a Room where there were two Beds, which we went through to go to Bed; it was up one Pair of Stairs; I ſaw them in Bed.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Do you remember any Dancing there?

A. Wake. I do; I was in the Room with them one Evening; George danced with a young Woman of Abbotsbury, Clarke danced there, and Lucy danced there.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. What Sort of Weather was it while you was there?

A. Wake. There was a good deal of Snow: I remember I borrowed a Great Coat of George Squires to go my Rounds in, becauſe I had been out in my own, and it was wet.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Who played the Muſic?

A. Wake. A Blackſmith, named Melchiſedech Arnold, played on a Fiddle; he ſold Cyder; I ſurveyed his Houſe; I remember I had been taken ill coming my Rounds, and was ſitting by the Fire-ſide, and the old Gentlewoman preſcribed ſomething to cure me, ſhe got me ſomething hot; the next Morning, or the Morning after, ſhe made me a buttered Toaſt before I went out.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. You had a Book in your Hand; is every Day's Gauge in that?

A. Wake. I believe they are; we return theſe Books to the Exciſe-Office; this Book was ſent for out of the Country on Purpoſe when I was examined; I had left them with John Ward at Abbotsbury, when I went from thence to Dorcheſter again.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. What Time was it you heard of this Affair about the Trial of the old Woman?

A. Wake. I ſaw it in a News-Paper, that one Mary Squires, a Gypſey-Woman, was taken up for a Robbery.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Did it mention the Time?

A. Wake. I cannot remember whether it did or not; but I believe I told my Mother, that that could not be the Woman, becauſe I ſaw her at Abbotsbury when I was officiating for Mr. Ward; I was ſent to Lewes in Suſſex, and had an Order by my Superviſor, from the Commiſſioners, to come up and attend my Lord Mayor; but I did not know the Right Honourable the Lord Mayor quitted the Chair, and retired but of Court.——But in order to remove the Indictments into the Court of King's-Bench, and to ſuperſede the Juriſdiction of this Court, three Parchment Writings, ſaid to be Writs of Certiorari, were preſented to the Court; Whereupon Mr. Davy, of Counſel for the Defendants, informed the Court, that he was greatly ſurprized at this Attempt, not only as the Court of King's-Bench had, on the laſt Day of laſt Term, abſolutely refuſed to grant theſe Writs, although applied for by the Proſecutors; but as the Defendants had acted ſo very fairly, as to have given them (what they were not obliged to give) eight Days Notice of Trial, and had now near an hundred Witneſſes attending, many of them brought from great Diſtances, at a vaſt Expence, to manifeſt the Innocence of the Defendants to the World.——Upon which the Perſon who attended with theſe Writs, being aſked by the Court, Who he was? How he came by them? And how thoſe Writs had been obtained? He informed the Court, that he was Clerk to Mr. Miles, (an Attorney) who was out of Town; that he had the Writs delivered to him by Mr. Miles's Brother, the Diſtiller; and that he himſelf knew nothing further of the Matter.——Which Anſwer not being ſatisfactory to the Court, the Court was pleaſed to order him to take the Writs back again, to recommend an Inquiry how theſe Writs had been obtained, and the Trials to be called on. Whereupon the Jury were charged with the following Indictment againſt John Gibbons:

Firſt Indictment.

LONDON. { THE Jurors for our Lord the King upon their Oath preſent, That at the Delivery of the King's Gaol of Newgate, holden for the County of Middleſex, at Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, in the Suburbs of the City of London, on Wedneſday the 21ſt Day of February, in the 26th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, King of Great Britain, &c. before Sir Criſp Gaſcoyne, Knt. Mayor of the City of London, Sir Martin Wright, Knt. one of the Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King, aſſigned to hold Pleas before the King himſelf, Nathaniel Gundry, Eſq. one of the Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King of the Court of Common Pleas, Sir Richard Adams, Knt. one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer of our ſaid Lord the King, and others their Fellows Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King, aſſigned to deliver the Gaol of our ſaid Lord the King of Newgate, of the Priſoners therein being, Mary Squires, late of the Pariſh of Enfield, in the County of Middleſex, Widow, was tried and convicted upon an Indictment againſt her, For that ſhe, on the 2d Day of January, in the 26th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, King of Great Britain, &c. with Force and Arms, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, in the Dwelling-houſe of one Suſannah Wells, Widow, there ſituate, upon one Elizabeth Canning, Spinſter, in the Peace of God, and our ſaid Lord the King then and there being, feloniouſly did make an Aſſault, and her the ſaid Elizabeth in bodily Fear and Danger of her Life then and there feloniouſly did put, and one Pair of Stays of the Value of Ten Shillings, of the Goods and Chattels of the ſaid Elizabeth, from the Perſon and againſt the Will of the ſaid Elizabeth, in the Dwelling-houſe aforeſaid, then and there violently and feloniouſly did ſteal, take, and carry away, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. Upon which ſame Trial, one John Gibbons, late of Abbotsbury, in the County of Dorſet, Victualler, on the 21ſt Day of February, in the Year aforeſaid, to wit, at Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, in the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre, in the Ward of Farringdon Without, in the City of London, came in his own proper Perſon as a Witneſs on the behalf of the ſaid Mary Squires, of and upon the Matters contained in the ſaid Indictment; and the ſaid John Gibbons, then and there in the Court aforeſaid, before the ſaid Juſtices laſt above-named, and others their Fellows aſſigned as aforeſaid, upon the Trial aforeſaid, was in due Manner and Form ſworn, and took his corporal Oath upon the Holy Goſpel of God, as ſuch Witneſs (the ſame Court then and there having a ſufficient Authority to adminiſter the ſame Oath to the ſaid John Gibbons in that behalf). And the ſaid John Gibbons, on the ſaid 21ſt Day of February, in the Year aforeſaid, not having God before his Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, and wickedly and unjuſtly deviſing and intending to pervert Juſtice, and to procure the ſaid Mary Squires unjuſtly to be acquitted of the ſaid Crime laid to her Charge in the ſaid Indictment, then and there upon the Trial aforeſaid, upon his Oath aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly, wilfully, wickedly, and corruptly, did ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence to the ſaid Court, and the Jurors of the ſaid Jury, upon the Trial aforeſaid, as follows, (that is to ſay) on the 1ſt Day of January, 1753, (meaning the Year of our Lord 1753) the Priſoner Squires (meaning the above-named Mary Squires) came into the Houſe (meaning the Houſe of the ſaid John Gibbons, at Abbotsbury aforeſaid, in the ſaid County of Dorſet). There was George her Son, (meaning George the Son of the ſaid Mary Squires) and Lucy her Daughter, (meaning Lucy the Daughter of the ſaid Mary Squires) with her (meaning the ſaid Mary Squires). And that the ſaid John Gibbons, upon the Trial aforeſaid, upon his Oath aforeſaid, on the ſaid 21ſt Day of February, in the Year aforeſaid, at Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, in the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre aforeſaid, in the Ward of Farringdon Without aforeſaid, did falſly, maliciouſly, wilfully, and corruptly, ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence as follows: She (meaning the ſaid Mary Squires) came with Handkerchiefs, Lawns, Muſlins, and Checks, to ſell about Town (meaning Abbotsbury, in the County of Dorſet); ſhe (meaning the ſaid Mary Squires) ſtayed there (meaning at Abbotsbury in the ſaid County of Dorſet) from the firſt know upon what Account; I came up, and gave the ſame Evidence before his Lordſhip, as I do now, after he had ſent me to Newgate to ſee Mary Squires, whom I knew very well by many Circumſtances, and ſhe knew me.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. How came you to be out of the Exciſe?

A. Wake. I was diſcharged, and ſo went into the Guards.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. For what was you diſcharged?

A. Wake. For Stamping.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. How could you ſee the People in Bed when you went through the Room?

A. Wake. Becauſe there were no Curtains to their Beds.

Croſs-examined.

Mr. Williams. Tell us what Year this was.

A. Wake. This is the Book we had from the Office at that Time; they are marked at the Exciſe-Office before they come.

Mr. Williams. Look in it, and ſhew me the firſt Entry you made there.

A. Wake. It was on the firſt of January; it is my Hand-writing from that to the 14th of January.

Mr. Williams. Was it in the Year 1752 or 1753?

A. Wake. There is no Year to it, only the Days of the Month.

Mr. Williams. What Year was this 1ſt of January in?

A. Wake. I believe it was the Year 53; the Mark 52 is done by the Superviſor on the 1ſt Page, before we have them.

Mr. Williams. Had you ever ſeen Mary Squires before that Time?

A. Wake. No, Sir, not ſince, till I ſaw her in Newgate.

Mr. Williams. Did you dance there?---A. Wake. No, I did not at all.

Mr. Williams. Can you tell who Clarke danced with?

A. Wake. Clarke danced with Lucy, to the beſt of my Knowledge.

Mr. Williams. Did Mary Squires recollect you, or you her firſt, before you told her upon what Account you came to ſee her?

A. Wake. I ſaid nothing at all to her, only aſked her if ſhe knew me; ſhe ſaid, Yes, that I was the young Man belonging to the Exciſe-Office; and ſaid ſhe remembered me very well, that I borrowed her Son's Great Coat.

Mr. Williams. Did ſhe ſeem to be under any Heſitation at that Time?

A. Wake. No, ſhe ſeemed rather over-joyed; ſhe knew me through the Grate as ſhe was in the Preſs-yard.

Mr. Williams. Had you the ſame Cloaths on then, as you wore in Dorſetſhire, when you ſaw her there?

A. Wake. Yes, I had the ſame Coat on, a ſort of a Pepper-and-Salt Coat; I went there before I went to my Lord-Mayor.

Mr. Williams. Had you ſent her any Notice you was coming there?

A. Wake. No, I had not.

Mr. Williams. Explain what you mean by Stamping.

A. Wake. That is Neglect of Duty, writing at home inſtead of going abroad.

Mr. Williams. Did not you ſay my Lord-Mayor ſent you to ſee her in Newgate?

A. Wake. My Lord aſked me, if I had ſeen her? I ſaid, I had: He aſked me, if I was poſitive to the Woman? I ſaid, I was: He ſaid, If you are not, go again; ſo I went and talked with her again.

Mr. Davy. Was you not poſitive, made you go again?

A. Wake. I was poſitive then.

Mr. Williams. Did my Lord-Mayor examine you before he had the Exciſe-Books?---A. Wake. I don't know that.

Francis Aldborough ſworn.

I am Aſſiſtant to the General Examiner at the Exciſe-Office; theſe Books are called the 5th and 6th Round for the Year 1752, ending at Midſummer 1753; they are ſent from the Office once in a Quarter of a Year, by Order of the Board; theſe are for Abbotſbury Diviſion: they are returned to the Office by the Superviſor; theſe contain an Account of what was done in Abbotſbury from the 21ſt of December 1752, to the 15th of March following, 1753; there is an Order of Board for every Officer that officiates in the Place of one that is ſick.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Look in the Book: Do you know whoſe Hand-writing it is?

F. Aldborough. I don't know Wake's Hand-writing; here is noted in this Book January 1 to 13; Andrew Wake officiated for the proper Officer, he being indiſpoſed; the Book ſays John Ward is the proper Officer.

Croſs-examined.

Mr. Moreton. At what Time are theſe Books returned to the Office?

F. Aldborough. There is no certain Time for that; there is an Order for them to be ſent in ſix Weeks after they are done with; ſome may be kept three Months, ſome more, ſome leſs; but we look upon him to be the more induſtrious Officer that ſends them up in proper Time: I was informed theſe came up according to Expreſs, and they were put in my Poſſeſſion.

George Clements ſworn.

I live at Abbotſbury.

Mr. Davy. Do you know that old Woman there? look at her Face.

G. Clements. I have looked at her Face many Years ago.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember her Daughter?

G. Clements. What, Lucy? Yes, Sir, and her Brother too; he is my Name-ſake.

Mr. Davy. When did you ſee them in your Country?

G. Clements. I ſaw them all three on the 1ſt of January; I went into the Public Houſe the Old Ship; there the old Woman's Son and Daughter danced with our Abbotſbury People; it was about Nine at Night.

Mr. Davy. Who was Lucy's Partner?

G. Clements. William Clarke.

Mr. Davy. Did they ſtay at Abbotsbury?

G. Clements.

firſt to the ninth Day of the Month (meaning from the firſt to the ninth Day of the Month of January, in the ſaid Year of our Lord 1753), and lay at my Houſe (meaning the Houſe of him the ſaid John Gibbons, at Abbotsbury aforeſaid, in the ſaid County of Dorſet). And the ſaid John Gibbons, then and there, upon the ſaid Trial being demanded to look at the ſaid Mary Squires, then a Priſoner at the Bar there, and being aſked whether or not he was ſure that ſhe was the ſame Mary Squires, whom he had ſo as aforeſaid depoſed and ſworn to have come to his ſaid Houſe at Abbotsbury aforeſaid, on the ſaid 1ſt Day of January, in the ſaid Year 1753, and to have ſtayed there from the ſaid 1ſt Day of January aforeſaid to the 9th Day of the ſaid Month; he the ſaid John Gibbons, upon the Trial aforeſaid, upon his Oath aforeſaid, in Anſwer to the ſaid Demand and Queſtion, did falſly, maliciouſly, wickedly, wilfully, and corruptly, further ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence as follows: I (meaning himſelf the ſaid John Gibbons) am ſure it is (meaning that he the ſaid John Gibbons was ſure that the ſaid Mary Squires, then a Priſoner at the Bar there upon the ſaid Trial, was the ſame Mary Squires, whom he the ſaid John Gibbons had as aforeſaid depoſed and ſworn to have come into his ſaid Houſe at Abbotsbury aforeſaid, on the ſaid 1ſt Day of January, in the Year of our Lord 1753, and to have ſtayed there from the ſaid 1ſt Day of January aforeſaid, to the 9th Day of the ſaid Month). Whereas, in Truth and in Fact, on the ſaid 1ſt Day of January, in the Year of our Lord 1753, the ſaid Mary Squires did not come into the Houſe of the ſaid John Gibbons, at Abbotſbury, in the ſaid County of Dorſet. And whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid George, the Son of the ſaid Mary Squires, and the ſaid Lucy, the Daughter of the ſaid Mary Squires, or either of them, were not in the Houſe of the ſaid John Gibbons, at Abbotſbury aforeſaid, in the ſaid County of Dorſet, on the ſaid 1ſt Day of January, in the Year of our Lord 1753, with the ſaid Mary Squires. And whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not ſtay at Abbotſbury, in the ſaid County of Dorſet, from the 1ſt to the 9th Day of the Month of January, in the ſaid Year of our Lord 1753. And whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not lie at the Houſe of the ſaid John Gibbons, at Abbotſbury aforeſaid, on the ſaid 1ſt Day of January, in the Year of our Lord 1753, until the 9th Day of the ſame Month. And whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires did not lie at the Houſe of the ſaid John Gibbons, at Abbotsbury aforeſaid, on the ſaid 1ſt Day of January, in the ſaid Year of our Lord 1753, nor on the ſaid 9th Day of the ſaid Month of January, in the Year laſt-mentioned, nor at any Time between the ſaid 1ſt Day of January, in the ſaid Year of our Lord 1753, and the ſaid 9th Day of the ſame Month of January. And whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the ſaid Mary Squires, on the ſaid 1ſt Day of January, in the Year laſt before-mentioned, was not at the Houſe of the ſaid John Gibbons, at Abbotsbury aforeſaid, nor at any other Houſe or Place at Abbotsbury aforeſaid. And ſo the Jurors aforeſaid, upon their Oath aforeſaid, do ſay, That the ſaid John Gibbons, on the ſaid 21ſt Day of February, in the 26th Year aforeſaid, at Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, upon the Trial aforeſaid, in the Court aforeſaid, (the ſame Court then and there having a competent Authority to adminiſter the ſaid Oath to the ſaid John Gibbons in that Behalf) falſly, maliciouſly, wilfully, wickedly, and corruptly, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, did commit wilful and corrupt Perjury, to the great Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, to the evil Example of all others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

All the Witneſſes, on the Back of the Bill, were called out to give Evidence; but no one appearing, except Mary Woodward, and ſhe declaring ſhe knew nothing of the Matter, an Officer was ſent to the Proſecutors to attend the Court; but none of them appearing, the Jury acquitted the Defendant.

A ſecond Indictment to the ſame Purpoſe was read againſt William Clarke; but he was acquitted for want of Evidence.

A third Indictment was preferred againſt Thomas Greville, for ſwearing he ſaw Mary Squires at Coombe on the 14th of January; and he was acquitted likewiſe for want of Evidence.

During the Time a Meſſenger was ſent to the Proſecutors to attend the Court, Mr. Davy, Counſel for the Defendants, took that Opportunity of addreſſing himſelf to the Court as follows:

My Lord,

I HAVE the Honour to appear before your Lordſhip in Behalf of the three Defendants; who ſtand indicted for Perjury, ſuppoſed to have been committed by them in this Place, upon the Trial of Mary Squires, for the Robbery of Elizabeth Canning, at Enfield-Waſh, in January laſt.

Gibbons and Clarke are charged with falſly ſwearing, that Mary Squires was at Abbotſbury from the 1ſt to the 9th of January; and Greville, that ſhe was at Coombe on the 14th.

If their Teſtimony was true, Mary Squires was unjuſtly accuſed; but it was hers, and their Misfortune, that it then obtained no Credit.

They were Strangers, unknown to every Body at the Trial.—Canning was poſitive, and being by unfair Means confirmed in her Evidence, Squires was convicted.

Upon this Charge of Perjury, great Care hath been taken, attended with great Expence, on either Side, to ſearch this Matter to the Bottom; every Circumſtance hath been ſcrutinized, and nothing omitted to inveſtigate the Queſtion thoroughly.

It hath a long while been the general Subject of Converſation, and hath engaged the Attention of the Public, more, perhaps, than any private Tranſaction ever did before.

Here are the Names of no leſs than fifty Witneſſes indorſed upon each of their Indictments; yet only one of them, a poor Woman, whoſe Evidence is immaterial, appears to proſecute!

This Deſertion may occaſion various Conjectures, and many falſe Reaſons will probably be ſuggeſted for not proſecuting theſe Indictments.

It may perhaps be attributed to a Compromiſe.—It may be ſaid, that theſe Defendants are to be acquitted by Conſent, and that the Indictment againſt

G. Clements. They did; they lodged at Gibbons's; I drank with them the firſt and ſecond Mornings, and dined with them the Sunday following; I ſaw them on the Monday, and on the Tueſday, the Day they ſet out from thence.

Mr. Davy. Who ſet out with them?

G. Clements. William Clarke; he and Lucy went together.

Mr. Davy. I hope they are married by this Time.

G. Clements. The Lord knows, I don't know that.

Croſs-examined.

Mr. Nares. How often have you ſeen this old Acquaintance of yours, Mary Squires?

G. Clements. About fifteen or ſixteen Times in that Place, but juſtly I cannot tell.

Mr. Nares. How often have you ſeen George?

G. Clements. I cannot tell; I have ſeen him more than once.

Mr. Nares. Twice?---G. Clements. More.

Mr. Nares. Three Times?—G. Clements. Three Times.

Mr. Nares. Four Times?—G. Clements. I cannot tell.

Mr. Nares. Then you will not ſay you have ſeen him more than three Times?

G. Clements. It may be more, I will not ſay.

Mr. Nares. When George was not with the old Woman, who came with her?

G. Clements. Her Daughters, Polly and Lucy.

Mr. Nares. How often have you ſeen Polly and Lucy?

G. Clements. I cannot tell.

Mr. Nares. Have you ſeen them oftener than you have George?

G. Clements. I cannot tell.

Mr. Nares. How long is it ſince you ſaw the old Woman at Abbotſbury, before this Time you are ſpeaking of?

G. Clements. I believe it is four Years ſince.

Mr. Nares. Was George with her that Time?

G. Clements. Yes, Sir.

Melchiſedech Arnold ſworn.

I am a Blackſmith, and live at Abbotſbury; I know the old Woman perfectly well, and the Girl on the left Hand, and the Man behind her; they are her Son and Daughter; the laſt Time I ſaw them all three, was in January laſt was Twelve-month; I ſaw them on an Evening at the Old Ship at Abbotſbury.

Mr. Willes. Do you mean Old Stile or New?

M. Arnold. I mean this preſent calculated Time; I remember it was on the 1ſt of January at Night; the young Man and young Woman danced, and I played on the Violin.

Mr. Willes. Do you know who was Lucy's Partner?

M. Arnold. Her Partner was William Clarke, and George Squires's Partner was Mary Gibbons; they might give over Dancing at Eleven or Twelve at Night.

Mr. Willes. Did you ſee them afterwards?

M. Arnold. I be not poſitive I ſaw them the next Day, but I ſaw them ſeveral Times that Week there; I ſaw them on the Saturday Night in particular, that Week, they were dancing again, and the old Woman ſat in the Dancing-Room; ſhe was in the Kitchen on the Monday Night, ſitting by the Fire-ſide; I alſo ſaw them the next Monday, being the 8th; they were then in Gibbons's Houſe; I heard they went away the Tueſday, being the next Day.

Croſs-examined.

Mr. Williams. Had you any Knowledge of them before this Time you talk of?

M. Arnold. I don't remember any perfect Knowledge I had of them; but I have heard ſay they were there three Years before, but I don't remember I ever ſaw them before.

Mr. Williams. What Buſineſs do they follow?

M. Arnold. I don't know that, for I never dealt with them.

Mr. Williams. Where did you ſee them theſe Times you mention?

M. Arnold. They were at the Ship, and I don't know that I ſaw them at any other Houſe.

John Ford ſworn.

I live at Abbotſbury, and am a Carpenter.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever ſee that old Woman before? (Pointing to Mary Squires.)

J. Ford. I have ſeen her many Times before at Abbotſbury; I ſaw her a matter of four Years ago, and I ſaw her on the 1ſt of January, a Twelve-month ago laſt January, being of a Monday; I ſhook Hands with her, drank with her Son, and kiſſed her Daughter; the Daughter, Son, and ſhe came all together to the Exciſe-Office in our Town (there they lodged); John Gibbons keeps the Houſe; he is a Nephew of mine; I drank with George, or elſe I am not here now.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee them often?

J. Ford. I ſaw them at Gibbons's Houſe from the 1ſt to the 9th every Day; they bought the Bread they eat of me; I am as ſure I ſaw them there, as I am that I am here this Minute.

Mr. Davy. Who bought the Bread?

J. Ford. Mary Squires did, or her Son, or Daughter.

Mr. Davy. How came you, that are a Carpenter, to ſell Bread?

J. Ford. I keep a Shop, and ſell Bread and ſeveral other Things.

Mr. Davy. Have you any particular Reaſon for remembering the Day?

J. Ford. I have, it being the 1ſt of January; and Mr. Bond, a School-maſter in our Town, gives his Scholars a Holiday at New-Year's Time; he was there on the Sunday Evening, and gave them Liberty; I was with him, and Mr Wallace, and George Squires.

Croſs-examination.

Mr. Moreton. Where did they come from then?

J. Ford. They came from a Place called Litton.

Mr. Moreton. How early on the Monday did you ſee them there?

J. Ford. It was ſome Time about One, Two, or Three o'Clock; I am ſure it was ſome Time in the Afternoon; I know it was not Night, becauſe I was looking over the Hatch, and ſaw George coming down the Street, and ſpoke to him.

Mr. Moreton. How far might you ſee George, before he came to ſpeak to you?

J. Ford. I ſaw him, perhaps, fifty Yards; I could ſee a hundred, and I believe I could ſee a thouſand Yards.

Mr. Moreton. What Hour do you take it to be?

J. Ford. I am ſure it was not come to three o'Clock; upon my Life I kiſſed Lucy before Three o'Clock.

Mr. Moreton. You have given a very particular Reaſon for knowing it to be the 1ſt of January, that is, that Mr. Bond had given his Scholars a Play-day; then does he only give them a Play-day on the 1ſt of January?

J. Ford. No, not in particular.

Mr. Moreton. Does not he let them break up at Chriſtmas?

J. Ford. No, he does not let them break up all the Chriſtmas; they had ſeveral Days at this Time, that is the Reaſon I know the Day.

Mr. Davy. You ſay the firſt Time you ſaw them was on Monday the 1ſt of January; pray what Time of the Day was it?

J. Ford. I went to the Ale-houſe between One and Two o'Clock for a Mug of Beer.

Mr. Davy. How many Pots of Beer have you drank To-day? Do you take upon you to ſay you ſaw them on the Monday about Two or Three in the Afternoon?

J. Ford.

againſt Canning is to be dropped. One cannot eaſily imagine what Rumours Malice may raiſe.

For this Reaſon, and to prevent any Imputation upon thoſe who are concerned for the Defendants, I beg Leave to aſſure your Lordſhip, and all who hear me, that the Defendants now come prepared for Trial; that their Witneſſes attend your Lordſhip, ready to give their Teſtimony with ſuch clear, ample, convincing Circumſtances, as would demand univerſal Aſſent; and fully prove the Innocence of the three Defendants, and the Falſity of Elizabeth Canning's Story in every Particular.

Here are Witneſſes, more in Number than perhaps ever appeared in any one Cauſe, collected together at a vaſt Expence, and from different remote Places.

Here is other Evidence alſo ready to be produced, ſuch as, in its Nature, cannot deceive.

The Proſecutors have been invited to meet them here before your Lordſhip and the Jury; and ſo deſirous were the Friends of the Defendants that this Matter ſhould be fairly tried, that they have offered to bear Part of the Charges of this Proſecution.

The Public hath been a long while amuſed with Promiſes, that, in the Trials of theſe Indictments, the Guilt of the preſent Defendants ſhould be clearly manifeſted, and the Whole of this myſterious Tranſaction unravelled.

The Time is come to perform theſe Promiſes, and Thouſands expect it.

Why do all theſe Boaſters now hide their Faces? becauſe they are covered with Confuſion.

They are aware how dangerous it is to purſue a Proſecution, founded in the foulеſt and moſt daring Perjury; and wiſely withdraw themſelves from a Trial which would involve them in Ruin.

Had I conſidered the Caſe of the Defendants alone, without regard to any other Perſon, I ſhould have thought it needleſs to give the Court any Trouble upon this Occaſion.

They are private Countrymen, without any Connections in this Part of the World, and totally unconcerned at any Reports which may prevail here:——Within the narrow Circle of their Acquaintance, their Characters will remain unblemiſhed, let Fame do its worſt; becauſe the Charge againſt them is the Atteſtation of a Fact, which all their Acquaintance, all their Pariſh, and their whole Country, know to be true.

But there is One, whoſe near Relation to this great City makes it neceſſary for me to ſay thus much.

It is impoſſible for Him to be unſollicitous for puplic Approbation, after having done ſo much to deſerve it.

Yet all the Reproaches which Malice could ſuggeſt to little, dark, deſigning Men, have been levelled at the Chief Magiſtrate of this City, only for doing what the Love of Juſtice and Humanity inſpired him to.

For His Sake, therefore, I have thus treſpaſſed upon your Lordſhip's Patience, and only beg Leave to add a few Words more, to ſhew how unmerited thoſe Reflections were.

As his Lordſhip was at the Head of the Commiſſion at the Trial of Mary Squires, and was totally uninfluenced by the infamous Endeavours which at that Time had been uſed to give Credit to a moſt improbable Narrative; he was directed, merely by a Regard for Truth, to make further Inquiry into a Story pregnant with Abſurdities, and unlike any Tranſaction that ever went before it.

And the Evidence of Elizabeth Canning depending entirely upon this Queſtion, Whether the Account which theſe three Men had given was true, where could his Lordſhip ſo properly direct his Inquiry, as to thoſe Places, where they ſwore they had ſeen her?

The Succeſs of that Inquiry anſwered the Wiſhes of his Humanity; and the moſt indubitable Proofs of the Convict's Innocence warmed the Royal Heart to Mercy.

One ſhould have thought, that this Conduct of a Magiſtrate, whoſe ſole Motive to it was a Deſire of reſcuing a wretched, friendleſs Convict, from the Miſeries into which Perjury and popular Prejudice had thrown her, ſhould at leaſt exempt him from Cenſure.

But his Enemies could never forgive him the Merit of this Action: As it raiſed him ſtill higher in the Eſteem of good Men, he became more the Object of Envy; and no Arts were uneſſayed to diminiſh the Reputation he had ſo juſtly acquired.

Had my Lord-Mayor been preſent, I ſhould not have ſaid ſo much; but I have been the more encouraged to it from obſerving, that His Lordſhip withdrew himſelf as ſoon as theſe Cauſes were called, becauſe he was pleaſed to think it improper for him to preſide, where any Thing that might be thought to concern Himſelf ſhould come before the Court.

I have an Apology to make for giving your Lordſhip any Trouble, where there is no Proſecution; but as the Court waits for the Return of a Meſſenger, and no Buſineſs is now proceeding upon, I hope I have given no Offence. Vide Seſſions-Paper in Gaſcoyne's Mayoralty, September 1753.

J. Ford. I did.

Mr. Davy. You are drunk now, and ought to be aſhamed of yourſelf.

Daniel Wallace ſworn.

I live at Abbotſbury, and am a Mercer: I have ſeen theſe three People before, and remember them all very well: I ſaw them there the 7th of January, which was on a Sunday.

Mr. Willes. Had you ſeen the Son and Daughter before?

D. Wallace. I had ſeveral Times before.

Mr. Willes. When did you ſee the Son and Daughter firſt?

D. Wal. It was three or four Years before; I ſaw them that Time almoſt every Day.

Mr. Willes. Had you ſeen either of them that Week, before Sunday the 7th, at Abbotſbury?

D. Wal. I ſaw George almoſt every Day; he bought Sugar of me; and I ſaw Lucy twice that Week, but did not ſee the Mother till the 7th, and did not ſee them after that Day.

Mr. Willes. Had you ever ſeen the Mother before, ſo as to be certain of knowing her?—D. Wal. I had, and that is the real Woman.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Williams. When did you firſt ſee them that Week?

D. Wal. I ſaw George the Day he came to Town; I believe he came into Town the Sunday before.

Mr. Wil. What Day of the Month was it when you firſt ſaw George?

D. Wal. I ſaw him on the firſt Day he came into Town, about Six in the Evening.

Mr. Wil. Did you ſee him on the Monday the 1ſt of January?

D. Wal. I ſaw none of them on the Monday; I believe I ſaw George on Tueſday, Wedneſday, Thurſday, and Friday; I have ſeen the old Woman ſeveral Years ago, and have converſed with her a great many Times.

Mr. Wil. What did they come there for?

D. Wal. That I don't know; they have at different Times ſold Things.

Mr. Recorder. What do you know the particular Day by, on which you ſaw the old Woman?

D. Wal. I had bought a new Jack, and had a Shoulder of Mutton roaſted for Dinner on the Sunday; and the old Woman was peeling Potatoes, and aſked me to dine with her; and I ſaid, I had ſomething particular to dine on.

Hugh Bond ſworn.

I am a School-Maſter at Abbotsbury; I ſaw this old Woman there on the 8th and 9th of January 1753, and George and Lucy along with her; this was on a Monday and Tueſday, at the Sign of the Old Ship: I had been down in Devonſhire, and came home about Six or Seven at Night: I lodged at the Old Ship, and had never ſeen the old Woman before; they went away on the Morning of the 9th about Nine o'Clock; this old Woman is the very ſame Perſon; whoever ſees her once, can never miſtake her again: I ſaw George again the ſame Night; then Clarke and he came back again from Porterſham.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Had you any Converſation with her?

H. Bond. No; but I had with George, and one Mr. Wake, an Exciſeman, that officiated in the room of Mr. Ward, who was then ſick; for when I came Home, my Landlady begged I would not be offended at her putting Somebody in my Bed; that was this Exciſeman; there are two Beds in the Room, and in the other George Squires lay.

Mr. Gaſ. When did you go down into Devonſhire?

H. Bond. I went on the 31ſt of December, and came back on Monday the 8th of January.

Mr. Gaſ. As you are a School-Maſter, you muſt know the Time of your going out.

H. Bond. My Wife was in Devonſhire; I went to ſee her; ſhe was ſick, and is ſince dead.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. What Time did you ſee this old Woman on the 8th?

H. Bond. It was after Candles were lighted; after I had ſhifted myſelf, I came and ſat down by the Fire, with George Squires and Mr. Wake; I had never ſeen George before; I aſked my Landlady, who he was? She ſaid, his Name was Squires, and that his Mother and Siſter were in another Room; after which the old Woman came out to call her Son to go to Bed.

Mr. Mor. What Time did they go away the next Day?

H. Bond. I don't know what Time; but when the Girl came to call me from the School to Breakfaſt, they were then in the Kitchen.

Mr. Mor. How far is Porterſham from Abbotsbury?

H. Bond. It is about a Mile Diſtance.

Mr. Mor. Are you ſure you ſaw George, after he came back again from Porterſham?

H. Bond. I am; he came back again in the Evening, and drank a Mug of Beer at my Door, after School-time, with William Clarke, in the Street.

Mr. Mor. What might it be o'Clock?

H. Bond. It might be Five o'Clock; I ſaw no more of him; George ſaid he would not ſtay any longer, for he muſt go to Porterſham; I did not go out, but went to Bed afterwards.

John Bailey ſworn.

I live at Abbotsbury, and am a Carpenter.

Mr. Davy. Look at that old Woman; do you know her?

Bailey. I do; the Man and Woman behind her are George and Lucy: I ſaw them at Abbotsbury on the 1ſt of January 1753, at the Old Ship, the Exciſe-Office; and I ſaw them all three there the Monday and Tueſday, which was a Week after. My Yard joins to the Old Ship; I ſaw them moſt Days of that Time; I ſhaved George twice, the Time he was there, on the Wedneſday and Monday after; I practiſe the Trade of a Barber as well as a Carpenter.

Mr. Davy. How long have you known the old Woman?

Bailey. I have known her ten or fifteen Years, and am ſure I am not miſtaken.

Mr. Davy. How long have you known the Son and Daughter?

Bailey. Not ſo long; I have known them above three Years; that is, from the laſt Time they came there before this 1ſt of January I mentioned.

Mr. Davy. By what Circumſtance do you recollect it to be the 1ſt of January?

Bailey. I had a Brother that uſed the Sea, and he went away that very Day for Briſtol; I am certain that was the very Day: He left ſomething of a Will for me to enjoy, if he died; and he has ſince returned, and taken the Paper from me.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. What Time did you ſee them at Abbotsbury on the 1ſt of January?

Bailey. It was in the Evening, betwixt Eight and Nine o'Clock, by the Kitchen Fire.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember the Dancing there?

Bailey. I cannot ſay I do, for I went Home to Bed.

Thomas Anſon ſworn.

I live at Abbotsbury, and am a labouring Man; I know that old Woman very well, and her Son and Daughter, as ſhe calls them.

Mr. Willes. Did you ever ſee them at Abbotsbury, and when?

Anſon. I ſaw them on Old Chriſtmas-Day there, being on a Friday, the 5th, at John Gibbons's Houſe; they were all three together; I had ſeen them a Day or two before that.

Mr. Willes. Had you ſeen them before this Time of coming there?

Anſon. I had ſeen her about four Years ago, and her Son and two Daughters with her.

Mr. Willes. Do you know one William Clarke?

Anſon. I do; he was with them at the ſame Time; they were intimate together; that is, Lucy and he, as Sweethearts; it was reported ſo then.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Nares. Do you know their Reaſons for coming there?

Anſon. No, I do not.

Mr. Nares. How long have you lived at Abbotsbury?

Anſon. About five Years.

Mr. Nares. How far is that from the Sea?

Anſon. It is about a Mile from it.

John Hawkins ſworn.

I live at Abbotſbury, and am a Weaver.

Mr. Gaſ. Look at that old Woman that ſits there, and her Son and Daughter.

Hawkins. I do; I know them: I ſaw them at Gibbons's at Abbotsbury, on the 1ſt of January, about Eight at Night.

Mr. Gaſ. What January?

Hawk. I am no Scholar; it was not laſt January, but January was Twelve-month; the Son and Daughter were dancing then.

Mr. Gaſ. Who played on the Violin that Time?

Hawk. Melchiſedech Arnold.

Mr. Gaſ. Where was the old Woman?

Hawk. She was ſitting in the other Houſe by the Fire-ſide in the Kitchen.

Mr. Gaſ. Why do you call it the Kitchen belonging to the other Houſe?

Hawk. That is the lower Houſe, joining to the ſame Houſe.

Mr. Gaſ. Did you ſee the old Woman more than once?

Hawk. I ſaw her every Day till the Day ſhe went away, which was on a Tueſday, being the 9th Day of the Month.

Mr. Gaſ. Had you ever ſeen the old Woman before that January?

Hawk. Yes, Sir, I had, it may be a Year, two, or three before, at George Clements's.

Mr. Gaſ. By what do you remember the particular Time of your ſeeing her?

Hawk. Becauſe it was on New-Year's Day, and being Holiday-Time we got to dancing.

Mr. Gaſ. Were you acquainted with them before this?

Hawk. No, I was not.

Mr. Gaſ. Did you dance with them?

Hawk. Yes, I did, on the Monday Night.

Mr. Gaſ. Can you tell how they were coupled?

Hawk. I cannot tell who my Neighbours danced with.

Mr. Gaſ. Who did Clarke dance with?—Hawk. I cannot tell.

Mr. Gaſ. Who did you dance with?—Hawk. I cannot tell now.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. This was a very merry Dance: What had you been at all Day? Had you kept Holiday the whole Day? Cannot you remember your Partner?

Hawk. I do not remember my Partner.

Mr. Mor. Nor who danced with Lucy?

Hawk. No, I cannot; there was a very great Company of us.

Mr. Mor. Who did George dance with?

Hawk. I do not know.

Mr. Mor. Do you remember the Place?

Hawk. Yes, I do; it was in Gibbons's Parlour; it was a common Dance, any body might come as would.

Mr. Mor. What was Clements's Houſe, where ſhe came before?

Hawk. A private Houſe; ſhe uſed to lie at that Houſe.

Mr. Mor. What is his Trade?

Hawk. He is no Trade, but a Fiſherman.

Mr. Mor. Does he never catch ſuch a Thing as a Handkerchief, ſuch as is round your Neck, at Sea?

Hawk. No, not as I know of.

Mr. Mor. What had the old Woman uſed to deal in?

Hawk. I never ſaw her deal in any Thing; I have heard People talk ſhe ſold Things.

Mr. Mor. Was it Hardware?

Hawk. I do not know what Ware it was.

Mr. Mor. Did you ever talk with her?

Hawk. Yes, once at Clements's.

Mr. Mor. What was your Converſation then?

Hawk. It was about telling of Fortunes; we aſked her Queſtions, and ſhe told us ſhe was no Fortune-teller.

Mr. Mor. Did ſhe tell you what her Trade was?

Hawk. No; we went about our Buſineſs; there were two young Men with me.

Mr. Davy. Now we leave Abbotsbury, and come to Porterſham.

William Haines ſworn.

I live at Porterſham.

Mr. Davy. Look at that old Woman; do you know her?

W. Haines. I know her very well, her Name is Mary Squires; I have known her thirty Years and upwards.

Mr. Davy. Where did you ſee her laſt?

W. Haines. I remember ſeeing her at Porterſham on the 9th of January 753.

Mr. Davy. Do you know that young Man and Woman that are by her?

W. Haines. I do; they are George and Lucy: They were all three of them at my Door with William Clarke from Abbotsbury; they were going to their Quarters, the Sign of the Chequer, Joſhua Frampton's Houſe; Clarke called at my Houſe, to know if I had done his Cloaths (I am a Taylor). I aſked the old Gentlewoman and the reſt to come into my Houſe, but they did not, and went on to the Chequer; after that I went down to the Chequer; there was one Richard Chipman; we drank a Pot of Beer: Mrs. Squires ſat in one Corner, and George in the other, and Lucy and Clarke before the Fire in the Kitchen.

Mr. Davy. What Sort of Weather was it that Night?

W. Haines. It was terrible bad Weather the next Day; I left them that Night there.

Mr. Davy. What makes you remember it to be the 9th of January?

W. Haines. I rent a Shop at Abbotsbury, and was going there on New-Year's Day; and becauſe of the Old Chriſtmas, I never went till Monday the 8th. Although I have known the old Woman ſo long, yet I never had any Knowledge of the young ones, till William Clarke courted Lucy: As for George, he might paſs by, but I never had any Knowledge of him till then. I lived two Years at Abbotsbury: I was once at Work at George Clements's, and the old Woman happened to be there all the Time I was there, which was ſeven or eight Days.

Croſs-Examination.

Mr. Nares. What Time in the Afternoon did you ſee them at your Door on the 9th of January?

W. Haines. It was about Ten or Eleven o'Clock in the fore Part of the Day.

Mr. Nares. Did you go after them to the Chequer?—W. Haines. I did.

Mr. Nares. In how long Time after?

W. Haines. About an Hour or two after them.

Mr. Nares. How long did you ſtay with them?

W. Haines. I only drank a Pot or two of Beer.

Mr. Nares. Did you ſee George Squires there?

W. Haines. No, I did not ſee him there any Time after that Afternoon; after I went away, I went to Abbotsbury, and I met him in the Fields that come from Abbotsbury.

John Haines ſworn.

I am Son to William Haines of Porterſham; I live there with my Father.

Mr. Willes. Look at that old Woman; do you know her?

J. Haines. I have ſeen her before at Porterſham on the 9th of January.

Mr. Willes. Do you know her Son and Daughter?

J. Haines. Yes, I ſaw them there the ſame time.

Mr. Willes. What Day of the Week was the 9th of January?

J. Haines. It was on a Tueſday; they lay at the Chequer; William Clarke came with them; they came there about Nine, Ten, or Eleven o'Clock; William Clarke lay there, ſo did they; they went away about Nine or Ten the next Day; it was a very bad, rainy Day.

Croſs-Examination.

Mr. Williams. Did you ever ſee this old Woman before that Time?

J. Haines. I ſaw her at Abbotsbury on the 6th of January, and never before.

Mr. Williams. Did you ſee them in the Evening?

J. Haines. I do not remember I ſaw them in the Evening; I ſaw them the next Morning.

Mr. Williams. Did you ſee an Exciſeman there?

J. Haines. No, I did not.

Mr. Williams. How came you to be ſo particular as to the Day?

J. Haines. The Reaſon is, becauſe I ſaw them at Abbotsbury the 6th of January, the Epiphany Day; I was at Abbotsbury then.

Mr. Williams. How long have you lived with your Father?

J. Haines. Ever ſince I was born.

Mr. Davy. Upon your Oath, is this the very Woman?

J. Haines. It is; I cannot be miſtaken

Francis Bewley ſworn.

F. Bewley. I live at Ridgway, and keep a ſmall Public Houſe, the Sign of the Sloop a-Ground.

Mr. Davy. How many Miles is that from Porterſham?

F. Bew. It is four or five.

Mr. Davy. Look upon that old Woman there, and tell us whether you have ſeen her before?

F. Bew. I have ſeveral Times at my Houſe.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee her at any Time about a Year ago at your Houſe?

F. Bew. I did on Wedneſday the 10th of January.

Mr. Davy. Were the Son and Daughter with her at that Time, and Clarke of Abbotsbury?—F. Bew. They were.

Mr. Davy. What Time might they come to you?

F. Bew. I believe, betwixt Nine and Eleven in the Morning.

Mr. Davy. Did they come in all together?

F. Bew. I don't know whether they came all together, but they were there all together in a ſhort time.

Mr. Davy. What had they to eat or drink?

F. Bew. At firſt they had ſome Roll and Cheeſe; I carried it myſelf; and they had ſome Beef-ſteaks for Dinner, at about One or Two o'Clock, or after; it was not much off of that.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember the Circumſtance of any body having a dead Horſe?

F. Bew. Yes, Sir; a Woman going from Siron Market to Weymouth Market, the Horſe was taken ſick upon the Road, and ſhe hired my Horſe to ride to Weymouth Market: She bid me take care of this Horſe, and get a Blackſmith to do ſomething to him, and the Horſe died on the Wedneſday Morning, at almoſt Day: I got a Man to lend me a Horſe to draw him out of my Stable to a Place behind my Houſe, under a Hedge: When the Woman came back, ſhe deſired me to give Somebody Six-pence to ſkin him, and the Horſe was a-ſkinning as they came along into the Yard.

Mr. Davy. Did Clarke ſtay at your Houſe that Night?

F. Bew. No, he did not: A Man was ſelling Turnips, with two Horſes, about the Pariſh; and Clarke had ſpoke to him, as far as I heard, to come to he to carry him Home on one of thoſe Horſes: It was a terrible wet Day as ever I know'd.

Mr. Davy. Where did the Gypſey-Woman, her Son and Daughter lie?

F. Bew. They lay at my Houſe that Night.

Mr. Davy. Before you was up in the Morning, did any body come to your Bed-ſide?

F. Bew. Yes, George Squires did, with his Mother: He told me he had a Pattern of a Waiſtcoat, (he produces a Remnant of Nankeen) this is the Stuff.

Mr. Davy. What did he ſay to you?

F. Bew. The firſt he ſaid was, he aſked me if I wanted a Waiſtcoat, and ſaid he had been to Abbotsbury, and Money was ſhort, and I ſhould have it cheap. I ſaid, I did not underſtand it, and I never had ſuch a Waiſtcoat in my Life, and I did not want it: With that his Mother came in, and ſaid, they were ſhort of Money, and deſired to leave it in my Hand, and deſired I'd take it for the Reckoning, which I did, and have had it ever ſince. They told me they would either ſend the Money, or bring it.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever, before this Time, ſeen the Gypſey-Woman and her Daughter?

F. Bew. I can't ſay juſtly to the old Woman; I once ſaw the Son and Daughter dancing at our Houſe, when they lodged at Broadway once.

Mr. Davy to George Squires. Look at this Piece (he takes the Nankeen in his Hand).

Squires. I can't ſwear this is the ſame that I left with him, but it is very much like it; it is the ſame Sort of Stuff.

F. Bew. I wrote my Name upon it, before I let it go out of my Cuſtody to any body; my Name is now on it (ſhewn to the Jury, and appeared with his Name on it).

Mr. Davy. How do you remember the Time particularly?

F. Bew. I am ſure it was that Time, by reaſon it was ſuch Weather, and the Blandford Seſſions were ſitting at Court; it was a Flood, and the dying of the Horſe, and ſeveral Circumſtances.

Mr. Davy. How far is Blandford from Ridgway?

F. Bew. It is fifteen computed Miles. We know that Seſſions is always kept the 8th or 10th of January; many of my Neighbours were at the Seſſions, and told me, when they came Home, what a Flood there was in going.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. Are you ſure this was January 53?

F. Bew. It was January was Twelve-month.

Mr. Moreton. Are you ſure you have ſeen George and his Siſter a-dancing before this?

F. Bew. Yes, Sir, I have, three or four Years back; but I can't ſay I had ſeen the old Woman; they lodged at Broadway then.

Mr. Moreton. What Trade did they carry on?

F. Bew. Upon my Word, I cannot tell.

Mr. Moreton. Did not you know of their dealing in Nankeens?

F. Bew. I never know'd they did; they brought this to me; I never ſaw them have a Bit in my Life before.

Mr. Moreton. How far is Ridgway from the Sea?

F. Bew. It is about two Miles.

Mr. Moreton. Was you up here when Mary Squires was tried?

F. Bew. No, I was not.

Mr. Moreton. Was you not apply'd to by George or Lucy to come up to that Trial?

F. Bew. No, I was not. I read in the News of a Mary Squires tried for a Robbery, but I did not know that it was this Mary Squires; I ſaid there were others of that Name.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever know a Mary Squires with ſuch a Face as this?—F. Bew. No, Sir.

Thomas Mockeridge ſworn.

Mr. Davy. Inform the Court who you are, and whether you have ever ſeen thoſe three Perſons, and when and where?

T. Mockeridge. I live at Abbotsbury now; I had been at Ridgway and Upway ſelling Turnips (it was very bad Weather) on the 10th of January, by the preſent Stile; it was the Wedneſday after Old Chriſtmas-Day. I found the old Woman, her Son George, and her Daughter Lucy, and William Clarke, at Mr. Bewley's Houſe, at the Sign of the Ship; I had made an End of ſelling my Turnips before I came there; I came in, I believe, between Twelve and One at Noon, and think I ſtopp'd there till between Two and Three.

Mr. Davy. Had you ſeen the old Woman Mary Squires before?

T. Mockeridge. I had ſeveral Times. I remember ſeeing her at George Clements's Houſe, going down towards the Sea, (we call it Gracechurch-Street) about three Years ago before that.

Mr. Davy. Are you ſure thoſe are the People you ſaw there that Day?

T. Mockeridge, I am upon my Oath, and will not come here to ſpeak a falſe Word for the World.

Mr. Davy. Do you know of any Accident that happened to a Horſe on this Day?—T. Mockeridge. No, I do not.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Nares. Where did you go back to afterwards?

T. Mockeridge. To Abbotsbury: I had two Horſes; I rode one, and William Clarke the other; he went to Porterſham, where he lodged, and I went Home with my Horſes; he took leave of thoſe People at Ridgway.

John Taylor ſworn.

J. Taylor. I live at Fordington, at the Sign of the Coach and Horſes.

Mr. Davy. Whereabouts is that?

J. Taylor. It is joining Dorcheſter; it is not a Stone's-caſt apart; many do miſtake it for Part of the Town.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember this unhappy old Woman?

J. Taylor. I know her perfectly well; I have ſeen her above once or twice.

Mr. Davy. Do you know that Girl and the young Man there?

J. Taylor.

J. Taylor. I do, and have known them ſome Years; they are her Son and Daughter; I ſaw them at Fordington on Thurſday the 11th of January; they were not in my Houſe, they were in my Stable on the 10th; there was ſuch a Rain, they could not paſs along the Road; the Waters were ſo high, they went through a Neighbour's Houſe and my Stable the back Way.

Mr. Davy. Are you a Miller?

J. Taylor. No, but there is a Mill lies cloſe by my Door.

Mr. Davy. How did they get through the Water?

J. Taylor. The old Woman took up her Coats and went along through it, and the young Woman was carried over by the Miller's Boy on Horſe-back.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee the old Woman croſs on Foot?

J. Taylor. Yes, Sir, to be ſure, I ſaw it as plain as I ſee you.

Mr. Davy. When was this?

J. Taylor. It was on Thurſday the 11th of January 53, in the Forenoon, betwixt the Hours of Eight and Eleven.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee her walk all the Way through the Water?

J. Taylor. I ſaw her go along Part of it, I did not ſee it all, becauſe it is two or three Rivers; I ſaw her go over two of the Rivers.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee any body carry her over?

J. Taylor. Nobody carried her, ſhe went on Foot.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee the old Woman croſs all the Rivers?

J. Taylor. She went over the Bridges, as far as I know of it; ſhe forded the Water at my Stable-door, or as near it as it is croſs the Court-yard; I did not ſee her walk through all the Water; I had no Buſineſs to watch her; George had told me they lodged at Mr. Bewley's, at Ridgway-Foot, the Night before.

Mr. Davy. Did they tell you whither they were going?

J. Taylor. I can't tell where they were going; they were in the Blandford Road.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Williams. You ſay you ſaw the Miller's Boy carry over the Daughter?

J. Taylor. He carried her over all of it: The Place where he took her up ſhe waded through, and after that there be Bridges; one is Stone, and the reſt are wooden ones.

Mr. Williams. How far is it from your Houſe to Chettle?

J. Taylor. I cannot tell; I believe it ſeventeen or eighteen Miles; but I don't know where it is.

Thomas Hunt ſworn.

T. Hunt. I live at Chettle, I am a Threſher.

Mr. Willes. Look at that old Woman, her Son and Daughter: Have you ſeen them before?

T. Hunt. I have at Chettle, on Friday the 12th of January 53, about Four in the Afternoon: The old Woman came into our Back-ſide, to the Barn-door to me, and begged Lodging of me; there was no Public-Houſe in the Place; I let her lie in an Out-houſe on ſome clean Oat-ſtraw; it belongs to Mr. Watts of Cranborne: I aſked her, if ſhe had any body belonged to her? ſhe told me ſhe had none but a Couple of Children, and immediately called, Why don't you come along? and immediately there came a Man and Woman.

Mr. Willes. Look at that Man and Woman near her; do you know them?

T. Hunt. The Man I can ſwear to ſafely; the Woman I do not ſo much, becauſe ſhe was covered over: I know the Man full well, as I know my right Hand from my left; I let them in at Night, and there I found them in the Morning; and the Morning being very wet, they remained there till Ten or Eleven o'Clock, or it may be ſomething more.

Mr. Willes. Had you ever ſeen the old Woman before?

T. Hunt. I had not; but I am very ſure it is the Woman, before God and the World.

Mr. Willes. How can you fix upon the Time?

T. Hunt. It was a very remarkable Day, the Old New Year's-day, which proved, by altering the Stile, to be the 12th of January.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. Did you ever ſee them before?

T. Hunt. No, never before that Friday.

Mr. Moreton. Have you ſeen them ſince?

T. Hunt. I have, in the City, about a Month before Michaelmas.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know where they came from, that Day you ſaw them at Chettle?——T. Hunt. No, Sir, I don't.

Mr. Moreton. How far is Ridgway-Foot from Chettle?

T. Hunt. I don't know.

Mr. Moreton. How far is Chettles from Dorcheſter?——T. Hunt. They count it twenty Miles; but I never was there in my Life.

John Elderton ſworn.

J. Elderton. I am a Servant-man; a Carter to one Farmer Thane, at Martin; I have ſeen that old Woman, and the young Woman, and the young Fellow.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Where?

J. Eld. At Martin, on Saturday Seven-night after Old Chriſtmas-day, in the Year 53, in the Afternoon, about Four o'Clock; they all three lay in an Out-houſe where I live; the old Woman came firſt, and aſked my Maſter leave to lie there.

Mr. Gaſcoyne Did you hear her?——J. Eld. I did.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Was there Straw or Hay?

J. Eld. Straw; I ſaw them all in the Out-houſe about Four in the Evening, and on the Morning before they went away.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. What Time did you ſee them in the Morning?

J. Eld. I ſaw them about Eight o'Clock; they were getting up; I am ſenſible they are the three People.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Had you ever ſeen the old Woman before?

J. Eld. No. I had not.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Is your Maſter Farmer Thane here?

J. Eld. No; he was coming up, but was taken ſick on the Road; he came to Saliſbury in Company with us, and there we left him; he came to give Evidence in this Trial.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Nares. What Time did they come to your Maſter's?

J. Eld. About Four o'Clock.

Mr. Nares. Did they all come together?

J. Eld. The old Woman came a little before the others: When Maſter had granted Lodging, ſhe went and called them; then they came.

Mr. Nares. What is getting up out of a Barn?

J. Eld. It is dreſſing themſelves; putting on their Cloaths, or tackling themſelves up.

Mr. Nares. Did you ſee any Sheets they had?

J. Eld. No, I did not ſee any.

Mr. Nares. Did you ſee any of their Cloaths off?

J. Eld. No, I did not; they were tying their Cloaths up.

Mr. Nares. Did you ſee their Gowns off, or Caps off, or Petticoats off?

J. Eld. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Did the Straw appear as if they had laid on it?

J. Eld. It did; there were Marks where they had laid.

William Hort ſworn.

W. Hort. I live at Martin.

Mr. Davy. Look at that old Woman; did you ever ſee that Face before?

W. Hort. Yes, Sir, I have, at Martin.

Mr. Davy. Do you know that Girl behind her, and that Man near her?

W. Hort. Yes, Sir, I do; they are the Woman's Daughter and Son, for what I know.

Mr. Davy. When did you ſee them before?

W. Hort. I ſaw them all three at Martin, on Saturday Seven-night after old Chriſtmas-day; they lay in an Out-houſe at Farmer Thane's.

Mr. Davy. What do you mean by an Out-houſe?

W. Hort. By that I mean a Barn, or Place where was Straw.

Mr. Davy. How did they lie?

W. Hort. I don't know; I did not ſee them lie in Bed: I am Farmer Thane's Servant; they aſked Leave of Maſter to lie there.

Mr. Davy. What did they lie upon?

W. Hort. I cannot ſay what they lay upon, there was Straw.

Mr. Davy. Do you take upon you to ſay theſe are the ſame three Perſons?

W. Hort. I do, by my Life; That I ſay in the Preſence of God.

Mr. Davy. Look upon them again.

W. Hort. I do, I am ſure they are the ſame.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Williams. How long did they ſtay?

W. Hort. They came in the Evening, and went away the next Morning.

Mr. Williams. Did you ſee them at any other Time?

W. Hort. I ſaw the old Woman in Maſter's Houſe by the Fire, and her Daughter was joining China for them.

John Blandford ſworn.

J. Blandford. I live with Farmer Thane, at Martin.

Mr. Willes. What are you?——J. Bland. I am a Blackſmith.

Mr. Willes. Look at that old Woman.

J. Bland. I ſaw her there on the Saturday Evening, ſeven Nights after Old Chriſtmas, about Four o'Clock, or ſomething after, which is the 13th of January.

Mr. Willes. Did you ſee only the old Woman?

J. Bland. No, I only ſaw her, becauſe ſhe came in before them.

Mr. Willes. Had you ever ſeen her before that Time?

J. Bland. No, I don't know that ever I did.

Mr. Willes. Did ſhe lie at Farmer Thane's?

J. Bland. She did ſomewhere, but I cannot tell where; I did not ſee her afterwards then.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. How long might you ſee her?

J. Bland. It might be Half a Quarter of an Hour, or ſomething leſs.

Mr. Moreton. Have you ſeen her ſince that Time?——J. Bland. I have.

Mr. Moreton. When?——J. Bland. Laſt Wedneſday.

Mr. Moreton. Yet you can ſwear to her after a Year and Half?

J. Bland. Yes, Sir, if it was twenty Years I could.

Joſeph Hayter ſworn.

J. Hayter. I live at Coombe, and am a Maltſter.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Do you know that old Woman, and young Man and Woman?

J. Hayter. I do all three: I ſaw them between Martin and Coombe the Sunday Seven-night after Old Chriſtmas: I met them on the Road as they were coming for Coombe, about Eleven in the Morning.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. What Year do you mean?

J. Hayter. I mean in the Year 53; the young Man was a little before them, and the old Woman had hold on the Daughter's Hand: The young Man aſked me, how far it was from Coombe? I ſaid, I thought he knew as well as I did (as I had ſeen him before); the old Gentlewoman was half a Dozen Luggs behind him; ſhe aſked me, and I told her, it was two Miles and a Half.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Had you ſeen them both before?

J. Hayter. I had, but I can't ſay I had ſeen the young Woman before.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. What is the Reaſon you know that particular Day?

J. Hayter. By reaſon my Wife was gone over to keep Chriſtmas, and I was going to fetch her home from Martin: And I ſaw them again the ſame Day at Coombe; I came back to Coombe again the ſame Night: I ſaw them on the Monday Morning at Seven o'Clock; I ſaw them at Mrs. Greville's, the Sign of the Lamb; Thomas Greville is dead; I went down to aſk him if he had a Load of Furz, I wanted a Load; there this old Gentlewoman ſat in the Corner, and George ſtood up in the Middle of the Houſe, and Lucy ſtood by him; I never ſpoke a Word to them then.

Croſs-Examination.

Mr. Nares. How long before this was it that you had ſeen this old Woman before?——J. Hayter. I cannot ſay, it may be two Years.

Mr. Nares. What did you take them to be?

J. Hayter. I took them to be what we call Gypſey People.

Mr. Nares. Where had you ſeen George before?

J. Hayter. I had ſeen him often at Coombe.

Mr. Nares. Without his Mother?

J. Hayter. Yes, and with his Mother some Years back; but she might be there at that Time, and I not see her.

Mr. Nares. Is Coombe a Market-Town?

J. Hayter. No, it is a Village; I heard of her being indicted for robbing a Girl, and I was applied-to to come up.

Mr. Nares. Was you here when Greville was indicted?

J. Hayter. No, I was not here Time enough.

Mr. Nares. Did you come up to the old Woman's Trial?

J. Hayter. I was not applied-to to come up; I told it, as soon as ever I heard Greville went, that I met her in such a Place.

Mr. Nares. Why did you not appear to give Evidence before?

J. Hayter. I was not subpœna'd, is the Cause I did not come.

Mary Greville sworn.

M. Greville. I live at Coombe.

Mr. Davy. What Relation are you to Thomas Greville, who was indicted for Perjury here?

M. Grev. I am Sister to him; he is dead.

Mr. Davy, Look at that old Woman, and the Girl in a Capuchin, and the Man behind her.---M. Grev. I know these three Persons.

Mr. Davy. Where did you see them?

M. Grev. I saw them on the 14th of January, on a Sunday, at my Mother's House, the Sign of the Lamb at Coombe; I live in the same House; they went away on the Monday Morning.

Mr. Davy. Do you speak with absolute Certainty that these are the very Persons you saw, and no other?

M. Grev. These be the very Persons indeed.

Mr. Davy. May you not be mistaken?---M. Grev. It is impossible I should; I am very well satisfied I am not mistaken in them.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever seen them before?

Mr. Grev. I don't remember I ever did.

Mr. Davy. Did you notice the old Woman?---M. Grev. Yes, I did.

Mr. Davy. I speak of her Features, not her Profession.

Mr. Grev. That is what I mean; and that is the very Son and Daughter indeed.

Cross-Examined.

Mr. Williams. Who waited upon them?

M. Grev. My Mother did; they were by the Kitchen Fire.

Mr. Williams. What Time did they come in?

M. Grev. They came in between Two and Three in the Afternoon.

Mr. Williams. When did they go away?

M. Grev. They went away between Seven and Eight in the Morning.

Mr. Williams. How far is Coombe from Martin?

M. Grev. It is four Miles.

George Towil sworn.

G. Towil I live at Coombe; I have seen that old Woman and her two Children before.

Mr. Willes. When did you see them before?

G. Towil. I saw them the Sunday was Seven-night after Old Christmas-Day, which was the 14th of January.

Mr. Willes. Are you certain of it?---G. Towil. I am very certain.

Mr. Willes. Where did you see them?

G. Towil. At Mary Greville's, at the Sign of the Lamb.

Mr. Willes. Were you in Company with them?

G. Towil. No, I was not; Nobody but the Landlady and I drank together; we were passing our Accounts.

Mr. Willes. How long was you there?

G. Towil. I believe I was there from Two o'Clock to Four.

Mr. Willes. Had you ever seen the Gypsey-Woman before?

G. Towil. I don't know that ever I did: There was another Man in Company with them; I believe he was a Carpenter; he had a leather Apron on: He ask'd me, if I was a Carpenter; I said, I was a Well-wisher to it.

Cross-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. When was you called?

G. Towil. The first Time I was subpœna'd was in May.

Mr. Moreton. Have you been to see the old Woman since?

G. Towil. I have, and am sure it is the same Woman.

Mr. Moreton. Are you sure to them all?

G. Towil. I am.

Richard Aimer sworn.

R. Aimer. I live at Coombe, and am Servant to Farmer John Harris.

Mr. Gascoyne. Look at that old Woman: Who is she?

R. Aimer. Mary Squires; and she in the Capuchin is her Daughter Lucy; and the other Person by her is her Son George.

Mr. Gas. Where have you seen them before?

R. Aimer. I saw them at Coombe on Sunday the 14th of January 1753, just after One o'Clock; they were travelling upon the Road.

Mr. Gas. Did you speak to them?---R. Aimer. Her Son ask'd me, how far it was to Sutton? I said, I could not tell, for I was never there.

Mr. Gas. What Conversation had you with the old Woman?

R. Aimer. It was in the Way of bantering and telling of Fortunes.

Mr. Gas. Did you speak to the young Woman?

R. Aimer. I never said a Word to her; I saw the old Woman afterwards; she came to our Master's Door.

Mr. Gas. Do you know what for?

R. Aimer. No, I don't; and I saw her Son on the Monday Morning at the Widow Greville's, at Coombe, but I never spoke a Word to him there, or he to me.

Mr. Gas. Did you see the old Woman or Daughter on the Monday?

R. Aimer. No, Sir, I did not.

Cross-Examined.

Mr. Nares. When they spoke to you between Sutton and Coombe, did you know them?---R. Aimer. No, Sir.

Mr. Nares. Then how do you know that this is George and Lucy?

R. Aimer. I know that only as they told me since, for I never saw them before in my Life.

Mr. Nares. Did the old Lady tell you your Fortune?

R. Aimer. Yes.

Mr. Nares. All is come true, I hope?

R. Aimer. I did not think any Thing was true when it was done.

Mr. Nares. What did you give her for telling you your Fortune?

R. Aimer. Two-pence.

Mr. Nares. Were her Daughter and Son by?

R. Aimer. They went on while we talked together.

Mr. Nares. What Time did you see her at Coombe?

R. Aimer. Upon my Return there in the Evening I saw her.

Mr. Nares. Have you seen her since?

R. Aimer. I never saw her since, till I saw her in Newgate.

Robert Merchant sworn.

R. Merchant. I live at Coombe, I am a Carter.

Mr. Davy. Do you know that old Woman?

R. Merch. I do, very well.

Mr. Davy. Do you know her Son and Daughter?

R. Merch. They were gone on, when I saw the old Woman.

Mr. Davy. Where did you see the old Woman?

R. Merch. At Coombe, the 14th of January.

Mr. Davy. Do you know the Day of the Week?

R. Merch. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. How do you know it to be the 14th of January?

R. Merch. By my Master's Account and the Farrier's; I ask'd Master that Day, what Day of the Month it was?

Cross-Examined.

Mr. Williams. When did your Master tell you it was the 14th of January?

R. Merch. We had a Horse bad that very Day the Woman was there; and Master and the Farrier disputed it to the best of their Knowledge, that that was the Day that I saw her.

Mr. Williams. What is your Master's Name?

R. Merch. My Master is Farmer John Harris.

Mr. Williams. When had you this Dispute?

R. Merch. We had no Dispute at all.

Mr. Williams. When did you hear your Master say it was the 14th of January?

R. Merch. The same Day the Woman was there.

Mr. Williams. How came you to be talking of the Day of the Month?

R. Merch. Being the Horse was bad, Sir; and because the Horse was bad, they set down the Day of the Month.

Mr. Williams. What, were they settling their Accounts?

R. Merch. They were, so far as I know: Master was to pay the Farrier Money for curing the Horse.

Mr. Williams. Was there any Talk then about the Gypsey?

R. Merch. No, Sir, I heard no Talk about the Gypsey.

Martha Waters sworn.

M. Waters. I live at Coombe.

Mr. Willes. Did you ever see that old Woman before?

M. Waters. Yes, I have at Coombe, on the 14th of January.

Mr. Willes. Were her Son and Daughter with her?

M. Waters. No, Sir; I saw her at a Farmer's House where I live.

Mr. Willes. How came she to come there?

M. Waters. She came and asked for some Small-Beer.

Mr. Willes. Had you ever seen her before?

M. Waters. No, I never did; but I am sure she is the Woman.

Cross-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. How long did she stay there?

M. Waters. She stayed there about the Value of a Quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Moreton. Did she tell thee thy Fortune?

M. Waters. No, she did not; I did not want it.

Mr. Davy. Your Lordship may remember, that George Squires could give no Account of Places between Coombe and Basingstoke, therefore we could not collect any Evidence between these Towns; so the next Witness comes from Basingstoke, which you will find to be forty Miles from Coombe, and that is four Days Journey, according to their Rate of Travelling: They were at Coombe on the 14th of January, and you will find them at Basingstoke on the 18th.

Mary Morris sworn.

M. Morris. I live at Basingstoke, at the Spread-Eagle.

Mr. Davy. Look at that old Woman.

M. Morris. That old Gentlewoman is Mary Squires, and the young Woman is Lucy Squires, and the young Man is George Squires. I wrote a Letter for the young Woman on the 18th of January.

Mr. Davy. What Day of the Week was it?

M. Morris. Really I will not be positive; it was on a Thursday or Friday; it was for one Clarke at Abbotsbury.

Mr. Davy. Look at this Letter; is this your Writing?

M. Morris. (She takes it in her Hand)—Sir, it is my Hand-writing, Directions and all; my little Boy carried it to the Post-Office, and Mr. Squires gave him a Half-penny because he did not stay.

(The Letter read, directed "To the Post-House in Dorchester, to be directed to Abbotsbury for Mr. William Clarke, Cordwainer. This with "Care."

"Basingstoke, Jan. 18, 175*.

"SIR.

"This, with my kind Love and Service to you, and all your Family, "hoping you are all in good Health, as I be at present. This is to acquaint you, that I am very uneasy for your troublesome Journey, hoping you received no Illness after your Journey; so no more at present "from "Your most obedient and humble Servant,

"LUCY SQUIRES.

"I desire to hear from you as soon as possible. Direct for Lucy Squires "at Brentford, near London. George and Mother give their Compliments "to you, and all your Family."

Mr. Davy. You are sure this is your Hand-writing?

M. Morris. This is my own Hand-writing, which I wrote at Basingstoke, at the Request of Lucy Squires.

* The other Figure being in the Corner was supposed to be torn off.

Mr. Davy. Were the old Woman and Son there then?

M. Morris. They were in the Houſe all the Time; they would have lodged at my Houſe, but I had not Lodgings; they had a Pint or two of Beer, and eat a Bit of Bread, and went on to Old Bayſing.

Mr. Davy. How far is Old Bayſing from Baſingſtoke?

M. Mor. It is about two Miles.

Mr. Davy. Is it not poſſible you may miſtake theſe People for any other Gypſies?

M. Mor. I am poſitive that theſe are the very People I ſaw at my Houſe.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Nares. Had the old Woman ever been at your Houſe before?

M. Mor. She had lain at my Houſe about a Year and three Quarters before.

Mr. Nares. None but the old Woman?

M. Mor. No; I never ſaw the Son and Daughter before.

Mr. Nares. Are you ſure this Letter was wrote the Day it bears Date?

M. Mor. I am poſitive ſure it was.

Mr. Willis ſworn.

Mr. Willes. How far is Coombe from Baſingſtoke?

Willis. It is about forty Miles.

Mr. Willes. Where had you this Letter?

Willis. When I came to the Poſt-office at Dorcheſter, which is the neareſt Poſt-office to Abbotsbury, the Directions being very blind, the Poſt-maſter had ſent it under Miſtake to one Clarke, as I underſtood, at Charlſter, who ſent his Wife with it immediately.

(The Court look upon the Back of the Letter, and diſcover two Poſt-marks upon it.)

Thomas Ravenhill ſworn.

T. Ravenhill. I belong to the Poſt-office; I am Aſſiſtant-Clerk to the Weſtern Road.

Mr. Davy. Look at the Poſt-mark upon that Letter, and tell us where the Letter was marked.

T. Raven. This is a Mark of the General Poſt-office in London.

Mr. Davy. What Day of the Month does it appear to be ſtamped?

T. Raven. The Stamp is very imperfect; I cannot take upon me to ſpeak with Certainty.

Mr. Davy. Of whoſe Hand-writing is the Poſt-charge?

T. Raven. This is mine, that is the Charge, which is Seven-Pence; the original Place where it came from to London is Three-Pence; that is Three-Pence up, and Four-Pence down: it is directed to be left at the Poſt-houſe in Dorcheſter, that is Four-Pence.

Mr. Davy. See what Part of the printed Mark do you find plain?

T. Raven. The Stamp is ſo very imperfect, that I cannot with any Degree of Certainty tell; the 9 is very plain; whether it is 19 or 29 I cannot ſay; it is not the 9th, for if it was, that Figure would have been in the Center.

Mr. Davy. Look at the Letters at the Bottom of the Circle.

T. Raven. The ſecond Letter ſeems to be an A.

Mr. Davy. I think your Stamps are marked MR for March?

T. Raven. They are.

Mr. Davy. Then there can be the Name of no Month, the ſecond Letter of which is A, but January and May.

T. Raven. I do not recollect that the ſecond Letter of any Stamp is A, but that of January and May.

Mr. Davy. Can you get the Stamps from the Poſt-office, that the Court may ſee them?

T. Raven. Yes. (He goes, and returns with ſeveral Impreſſions on Paper, as Jan. 9, Jan. 19, Jan. 29, and May 1, March 26.) Theſe are all the Stamps where A is the ſecond Letter; all the inland Stamps have the Figure on the Top of the Letter, and the foreign Stamps have it at the Bottom; the Figure 9 is placed not in the Center, but juſt over the ſecond Letter.

Mr. Davy. Look at this Letter; do you believe that Stamp to be January?

T. Raven. I cannot form an Opinion of it, more than any Stranger to it; I believe it to be the 19th or 29th, rather than the 9th.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. What are thoſe Stamps made of?

T. Raven. They are made of Box.

Mr. Moreton. Do you ſtamp a Letter for 52 with the ſame Stamp of 51?

T. Raven. No, we do not; we uſe every Day one, and they laſt no longer; ſometimes, at the latter End of the Day, it is ſo defaced and clogged, that it will hardly laſt a Day; and after they have been uſed, they are thrown into a Drawer, where they remain five or ſix Months, and then we burn them.

Mr. Moreton. Are you ſure this Mark of the Charge is your Mark?

T. Raven. I am very ſure it is.

Mr. Davy. Has Baſingſtoke a Stamp to it?

T. Raven. I can't ſay whether it has or no.

Mr. Davy. Is there a Poſt-Maſter there?

T. Raven. There is.

Mr. Davy. Have not all Poſt-Maſters Stamps?

T. Raven. I can't ſay whether they have or not.

Mr. Davy. Look at this, and ſee if there is a Poſt-mark upon it.

T. Raven. I ſee very plainly there is a Mark; but it is ſo blind, I can't diſtinguiſh what it is.

Mr. Davy. Is it a Mark of two Lines?

T. Raven. I believe it may be a Poſt-mark of two Lines.

Mr. Davy. Why have ſome two Lines, and ſome but one?

T. Raven. Thoſe of two Lines are generally where the Town's Name is a long one.

Elizabeth Edwards ſworn.

E. Edwards. I live at Brentford.

Mr. Willes. Look at that old Woman, and theſe two People with her.

E. Edwards. I ſee her, and her Daughter and Son; they came all three into my Houſe; I don't know the Day, but we had a Neighbour's Child chriſtened at the Time they were there; (ſhe produces the Copy of the Regiſter) this is a true Copy of the Regiſter of the Child when it was chriſtened; Mr. Gaſcoyne went himſelf and took it out of the Book.

Mr. Willes. Can you tell by any other Circumſtance?

E. Edwards. No, I cannot.

Mr. Willes. What Day was it the Child was chriſtened?

E. Edwards. By this it was the 22d Day of January, and the old Woman went away on the 23d, being on a Tueſday; but they came to my Houſe on the Saturday before.

Mr. Willes. Do you keep a Public-Houſe?

E. Edwards. No, I do not; I keep a Shop: they lodged at my Houſe: George went out on the Sunday, and brought his other Siſter to our Houſe on the Monday, and they went all away together on the Tueſday Morning betimes towards London.

Mr. Willes. What did they call the other Siſter's Name?

E. Edwards. I have forgot what he called her, but one of them he called Lucy.

Mr. Willes. Was that ſhe that he brought on the Monday?

E. Edwards. No, it was not.

Mr. Willes. Are you ſure they were at your Houſe at that Time?

E. Edwards. I am poſitive they were.

Suſannah Burwill ſworn.

S. Burwill. I live at Brentford; the laſt Witneſs is my Mother; ſhe has had two Huſbands, which is the Reaſon our Names differ.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Do you know that old Woman there?

S. Burwill. I do: I never ſaw her before ſhe came to my Mother's. I know them all three; they all came together on a Saturday Night, the 20th of January; they aſked for Lodgings, and ſaid they were recommended by a Friend of my Mother's, and my Mother let them lie there: On the Sunday the old Gentlewoman and her Daughter ſtayed there, and the Son went to London, and did not come home till the Monday, and then he brought a Siſter (as he called her) with him.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. What Time did he return?

S. Burwill. I can't tell the Time directly; it was ſome Time of the Day.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Did they lie there on Monday Night?

S. Burwill. They did, Sir, and went all four of them away on the Tueſday Morning.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Did they ſay where they were going?

S. Burwill. They ſaid they were going to Epping in Eſſex.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Can you tell what Time they went away?

S. Burwill. I really cannot; they went away ſome Time in the Morning.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Nares. Had you ever ſeen them before?

S. Burwill. No, I never had, to my Knowledge.

William Tredget ſworn.

W. Tredget. I live at Tottenham, at the Seven Siſters, the Sign of the Two Brewers.

Mr. Davy. How far is that from London?--W. Tredget. It is four Miles.

Mr. Davy. How many Miles is it from Enfield-Waſh?

W. Tredget. I cannot juſtly tell: I know the Place.

Mr. Davy. Look at thoſe three People,—that old Woman, and the Daughter and Son.

W. Tredget. I remember the old Woman very well, and the Daughter and Son too.

Mr. Davy. Where did you ſee them?

W. Tredget. I ſaw them at Tottenham on the 23d of January, which was on a Tueſday: I am ſure to the Day and the People.

Mr. Davy. Where did they ſay they came from?

W. Tredget. They ſaid they came from Brentford.

Mr. Davy. Did they lie at your Houſe?

W. Tredget. No, they did not; I told them I had no Lodging, and directed them over the Way to a Farm-houſe, one Mr. Philips's; but cannot ſay whether they lay there or not.

Mr. Davy. What Time of the Day did they call at your Houſe?

W. Tredget. It might be about Four; it was a little before Candle-lighting.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever ſeen them before?

W. Tredget. I cannot ſay I ever did, unleſs it was the old Gentlewoman; I believe I had ſeen her about three Years before; I had taken Notice of her Face, that ſhe was a Woman not common to be ſeen, the laſt Time.

Mr. Davy. Had you taken Notice of her Face before that Time?

W. Tredget. No.

Mr. Davy. When you ſaw her upon the 23d of January, did you recollect that you had ſeen her before?

W. Tredget. No; but when they came to aſk me to come and ſee her in Newgate, then I recollected that it was the Face I had ſeen three Years before.

Mr. Davy. Do you now ſay, upon your Oath, that theſe are the very People whom you ſaw upon the 23d of January?

W. Tredget. It is the very ſame Woman; I ſaw her then at Page-Green; then her Son and Daughter were with her, but not when I ſaw her before, as I know of.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Williams. How many People did you ſee at Page-Green, that aſked for Lodging on the 23d of January?

W. Tredget. I ſaw none but the old Woman, George and Lucy.

Mary Tredget ſworn.

M. Tredget. I am Wife to the laſt Witneſs; we live at Page-Green; I ſaw the old Gypſey at my Houſe on Tueſday the 23d of January; ſhe aſked us for Lodgings; I did not let them have any, but recommended them to a Farm-houſe over the Way.

Mr. Willes. What is the Farmer's Name?

M. Tredget. His Name is Philips.

Mr. Davy. My Lord, we have now gone through the Proof of the alibi of Mary Squires, and brought her to Page-Green, within two or three Miles of Enfield-Waſh: We will leave her there for the preſent, and proceed to another Part of our Caſe, which goes in Contradiction to the whole of the Defendant's Evidence: We ſhall therefore call Witneſſes to prove, that her Information before Mr. Alderman Chitty, on the 31ſt of January, differed in many Inſtances from what ſhe ſwore afterwards; and that ſhe at firſt gave a falſe Deſcription of the Place ſhe pretends to have been been confined in, and varied in her Story after she had been carried to Wells's House at Enfield-Wash, on the 1st of February: We will also give your Lordship and the Jury a true Description of this supposed Prison, and of what happened there on the 1st of February. We beg Leave first to examine Mr. Alderman Chitty; but I must let the Gentlemen concerned for the Defendant know the Names of the Witnesses we intend to call to this Part of our Case, that they may also be examined separately; Mr. Chitty, Mr. Nash, Mr. Hague, Mr. Aldridge, and William White.

WEDNESDAY the 1st of May.

Alderman Chitty sworn.

Mr. Gascoyne. Be pleased, Sir, to give an Account of what passed before you on the 31st of January 1753, relating to Elizabeth Canning.

Alderman Chitty. I was the Sitting Alderman at that Time; Elizabeth Canning was brought before me, but as it is about a Year and Half ago, I cannot give a distinct Account of it. I remember it was on the 31st of January, about Half an Hour after Twelve, or One o'Clock. Mr. Lyon and another Person (I believe it was Mr. Nash) came to me. There were a few Notes taken for my own Memorandum, which I believe are in Court, which are the Substance of what passed.

Mr. Gascoyne. Were they signed by her?

Alderman Chitty. No; I took it on Paper, as I generally do; but not thinking it would have been the Subject of so much Inquiry, I did not take it so distinct as I could wish. (He produces a Paper.)

Mr. Gascoyne. Is this your Hand-writing?

Alderman Chitty. It is; this is not what I had taken at that Time, but what I took since from that Paper I took then of her's, and other Persons that were brought before me.

Mr. Gascoyne. Then is this the Substance of that Account of her's you took?——Alderman Chitty. It is.

Mr. Gascoyne. You may refresh your Memory by looking on it, and give the Court an Account of it; you may read it.

He reads. "A Copy of the Minutes taken by Thomas Chitty, upon "the Examination of Elizabeth Canning, at Justice-Room, Guildhall, Jan. "31, 1753.

"Elizabeth Canning swore, that on last New-Year's Day, as she was "returning from her Uncle's, about Saltpetre Bank, as she came along "by the dead Wall against Bed'am, in Moorfields, about or near Ten "o'Clock at Night, she was met by two Men, who stripped her, and "robbed her of Half a Guinea, three Shillings, and a Halfpenny."

Mr. Davy. Are you sure she said a Halfpenny?

Alderman Chitty. I am sure she did; also her Gown from her Back. (Now I would observe, here I asked her, What else? she said, a Hat; she said it was a Straw or Chip Hat; I did not put that down, but I as well remember it as if it was but Yesterday.) She said, "A Hat from "her Head; she struggled and made a Noise; one stopped her Mouth "with something like a Handkerchief; and swore, if she made any Noise "or Resistance, they would kill her, and then hit her a Blow over the "Head, and stunned her, and forced her along Bishopsgate-Street, each "holding her up under her Arms; but did not remember any Thing "more that passed, and did not come to herself till about Half an Hour "before she came to Enfield-Wash, as she had learned since, to Wells's "House there, and there were several Persons in the Room; they said, "she must do as they did, and if so, she should have fine Cloaths, &c. "She said, she would not, but would go Home, and refused Compliance; "and then a Woman forced her up Stairs into a Room, and, with a Case-"knife she had in her Hand, cut the Lace of her Stays, and took her "Stays away, and told her there was Bread and Water in the said Room, "and if she made any Noise, she would come in immediately and cut her "Throat; then went out, and locked the Door; and never saw her nor "any one of them since, till after her Escape; which Bread was in Quan-"tity about a Quarter of a Peck Loaf in Pieces, and three Quarters of a "Gallon of Water, or a little more, in a Pitcher, as she supposed; on "which only she subsisted, and one Penny Mince-pye she had in her "Pocket, till she got away, which was on the 29th of January, about "Half an Hour after Three o'Clock or Four in the Afternoon, and then "made the best of her Way to Town to her Mother's, at the Bottom of "Aldermanbury. She farther said, on Inquiry, she had no Stool all that "Time, only made a little Water; and said, there was an old Stool or "two, an old Table, and an old Picture over the Chimney, two Win-"dows in the Room, one fastened up with Boards, the other, Part ditto "and Part Glass, in which latter she made a Hole by removing a Pane, "and forced Part open, and got out on a small Shed of Boards or Pent-"house, and so slid down and jumped on the Side of a Bank on the Back-"side of the House, and so got into the Road, and proceeded to her "Mother's that Night, which was about Ten o'Clock. Her Mother "said she was faint, so she got her some Wine and Water, but it would "not go down, the Passages being swelled, therefore sent to the Apothe-"cary for Advice. Mr. Lyon, her Master, gave her an exceeding good "Character, and so did her late Master, Mr. Wintlebury." There were a great many Questions asked her, which are not down here. There was an Examination for I believe near an Hour; and after I had examined her, I sent for Alderman Fludyer; but he did not chuse to examine her, and put her over to the Sitting Alderman, which happened to be my Turn.

Mr. Gascoyne. During the Time of this Examination, did she mention any Hay?

Alderman Chitty. She said, there was nothing in the Room but those Things she had mentioned; not one Tittle of Hay, neither do I remember what she said she lay upon.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she describe any Gypsey, or any remarkable Woman?

Alderman Chitty. I asked her, whether she should know the Woman again? she said, she believed she should; but she did not make mention of any extraordinary Woman doing this.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she say when she drank all her Water?

Alderman Chitty. She said, a little Water was left when she made her Escape. I asked her, whether she knew what the Quantity of a Quartern Loaf was? she said, she did, for her former Master kept a Public-House; I asked her, what Sort of Bread this was? she said, there were four or five Pieces, to the Quantity of a Quartern Loaf.

Mr. Gascoyne. Are you sure she said four or five Pieces?

Alderman Chitty. I am sure she said four or five, or five or six Pieces.

Mr. Davy. Did she mention any such Thing as a Tobacco-mould, a Bason, a Saddle, Hay, or a Barrel?

Alderman Chitty. I heard of no such Things; She said, there was nothing in the Room but what Things she had mentioned: She apprehended then, it might be the Woman of the House that had served her thus; but it appears, as it comes out, she had no Notion who that Woman was. I asked her, whether or no she had seen any body in all that Time? she said, she had not but once; she looked through the Key-hole, and saw some one Person pass below.

Mr. Gascoyne. Please to look at this Paper.

Alderman Chitty. This is my Hand-writing; it is my Warrant for the apprehending the People that she charged.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she mention the Name of Wells, or whose House she had been at?

Alderman Chitty. I was a little unwilling, at this extraordinary Account, to grant a Warrant: I said to her, Be sure what you say; say nothing but what you can swear to: And as she swore all to be true, upon this Information I granted her a Warrant, but told her I could not believe the Story she had told me.

Mr. Gascoyne. Do you recollect whether, in the Time she was in Confinement, she heard any Thing by which she could discover the Names of any of the People?

Alderman Chitty. The Name of Wells was not mentioned at all by her.

Mr. Gascoyne. How came you to grant a Warrant in particular against Wells?

Alderman Chitty. Because they had learned the Name since of the Keeper of the House, and That they supposed to be this Wells.

Mr. Gascoyne. Were there any particular Features described of the Person? — Alderman Chitty. No.

Mr. Gascoyne. Who mentioned the Name of Wells, as Canning never mentioned that Name?

Alderman Chitty. I cannot remember that: It was mentioned, Mother Wells was the Occupier of this House.

Mr. Gascoyne. Was one Scarrat there?

Alderman Chitty. There were above fifty People there; I did not know them.

Mr. Gascoyne. During this Examination, did she mention any Fit she had?

Alderman Chitty. I don't remember she did, but the Mother did; she said, she had been subject to Fits from her Infancy.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did she say she went down Bishopsgate-Street?

Alderman Chitty. She did, between two Men, one held under one Arm, and the other under the other; but said, how she came there, she could not tell; that she was not so far stunned, but that she knew a little, as she went along that Part; but how she went afterwards, she did not know: She said, she might have been put in some House, for what she knew, but she could not tell that.

Mr. Gascoyne. Previous to this Examination, had you seen any Advertisement in the Papers of the 6th of January, which gave an Account of a young Woman taken out of a Hackney Coach?

Mr. Moreton. That is not a proper Question.

The Warrant read.

"To all Constables and other Peace-officers.

"London, to wit. These are in his Majesty's Name to command you, "and every one of you, upon Sight hereof, to take and bring before me, "or some other of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, the Body of a Per-"son that goes by the Name of Mother Wells, at Enfield-Wash, in the "County of Middlesex,—

Q. from a Juryman. Who put that Name in the Warrant, or who gave the Name?

Alderman Chitty. I cannot recollect who mentioned the Name Wells: I apprehend they had got that Name before they came to the Justice-Room: I asked the Girl, whether that was the Mistress of the House or no? she said, she could tell nothing of the Woman's Name.

The Conclusion of the Warrant.

"of whom you shall have Notice, to answer to such Things that shall be "alledged against her by Elizabeth Canning, for violently assaulting her, "and robbing her of a Pair of Stays, and confining her in a Room in the "said House, and keeping her on Bread and Water for upwards of three "Weeks, as Oath has been made before me,

"Jan. 31, 1753. Thomas Chitty."

Gawen Nash.

G. Nash. I belong to Goldsmith's-Hall, and keep a Coffee-house in Gutter-Lane. On the 31st of January 53, I went to Mr. Lyon's House in Aldermanbury; he is a particular Acquaintance of mine, and has been some Years; there was he and his Wife. I asked them, whether that Paragraph in the Paper, about their Servant's coming Home in such a Condition, was true? he told me it was.

Mr. Davy. Was you present in the Justice-Room, when the Defendant was there before Mr. Alderman Chitty?

G. Nash. I was, as a Friend to this Girl; the City-Marshal's Man was there: I was there a little before the others; I asked leave to let the Room be cleared, there being many People in the Room: I had never seen the Girl till that Day; but had Compassion for her from the Account I had heard of her hard Usage.

Mr. Davy. Was Mr. Adamson there?——G. Nash. I think he was.

Mr. Davy. Was Mr. Scarrat there?

G. Nash. I do not know whether he was or not. The Girl gave an Account of the Place where she had been in: Mr. Alderman Chitty asked her, (how it might slip his Memory, I cannot tell) what Sort of a Room she had been confined in? her Answer was, that it was a little, square, darkish or dark Room, with Boards nailed up before the Windows.

Mr. Davy. Are you sure the Words little and square were mentioned?

G. Nash. I am sure of it, I remember it very well.

Mr.

Mr. Davy. Did she say Windows in the plural Number?

G. Nash. She did; she said, through the Cracks of the Boards she could see the Hertfordshire Coach pass by upon the Road, that had used to carry her Mistress. Upon being asked what was in the Room? she said, there was an old broken Stool or a Chair, and in the Chimney an old Iron Grate, and a few old Pictures hung over the Chimney.

Mr. Moreton. Did you take this in Writing?

G. Nash. No, I never did: Upon being asked what she lay upon, I remember very well she said, she lay on the Boards; which melted my Heart indeed: I felt an inward Affection for the Girl, upon recollecting it was cold Weather at that Time; for I think we had a good deal of Frost at that Time.

Mr. Davy. Have you heard what the Alderman said in his Evidence?

G. Nash. I have.

Mr. Davy. What did she say about Bread in the Room, and how many Pieces were there?

G. Nash. She said, there was about the Value of a Quartern Loaf thrown about the Room in Crusts, which were blue and mouldy; the Number of Pieces I do not remember she said.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember she said she slid down a Pent-House?

G. Nash. I do not; she said, she pulled down one of the Boards of the Window, after she had strove at it many Times; and in getting out at the Window, she tore her Ear by a Nail by the Side of the Window in turning herself about; and her Mother standing by, said, her Ear was then bloody; her Ear then seemed to be very sore. There was a Warrant granted upon this against one Wells. The Alderman does not remember what it was that induced him to grant it against her in particular: I recollect it, because it was in a Paragraph in the News-Paper, that she had been at the House of Mother Wells at Enfield-Wash.

Mr. Davy. What Charge was there before the Alderman against Mother Wells? for he could not grant a Warrant by Information from the News-Paper.——G. Nash. I recollect she was asked where she had been, and that she, or somebody else, said she had been at the House of Mother Wells, at Enfield-Wash.

Mr. Davy. Recollect, if you can, whether it was she, or another Person, who said so.

G. Nash. Upon my Word, I cannot positively tell which; but it was repeated aloud, that she had been at the House of Mother Wells (that is a notorious bad Woman); she being asked how she came to know she had been at Mother Wells's, she said, she had heard her called so while she was under Confinement in the Room.

Mr. Davy. Did she describe any Person she saw in the House?

G. Nash. There were no particular Descriptions given by her of any one Person in the House.

Mr. Davy. Was the Name of Virtue Hall mentioned then?

G. Nash. I never heard it indeed before the Alderman.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember any other Particulars of the Description of the Room, or any other Circumstances?

G. Nash. I do not recollect any other Description than I have hitherto told: Upon this a Warrant was granted.

Mr. Davy. Did you, upon that, go down with any Persons to Enfield-Wash, and when, in order to apprehend the People, or see the House?

G. Nash. I really can't recollect whether Mr. Lyon took the Warrant out of the Clerk's Hand or I, but we went on cheek-by-jowl to the Hall-Yard; I know Mr. Lyon paid the Shilling for the Warrant: When we were in the Yard, we were consulting what to do in this Affair; fearing it should gather Wind in the Country, and the People all get away before we got down there. Upon this, Mr. Lyon and I being very intimate, went Home to my House; my Wife was very unwilling I should lie out of Town that Night, otherwise we had gone down immediately, to have apprehended the People that Night. We agreed to go the next Morning in a Coach, and he asked me to take a Friend or two, which I did; they were Mr. Edward Aldridge and Mr. John Hague. We went (this was on the 1st of February) at our own Expence, and took Coach in Chiswell-Street, and desired the Coachman to proceed as fast as he could, fearing we should miss what we aimed at. When we came to about Hounds-Field, somewhere by Ponder's-End, we had several People met us, riding as hard as they could, to give us Intelligence that they had seized all the People in the House.

Mr. Davy. As you had heard the Defendant give a Description of the Room, did you mention that to Mr. Hague and Mr. Aldridge?

G. Nash. I told them what I had heard.

Mr. Davy. At the Time you were going down with them, did you declare any Intention you had to take a Survey of the Place, and see whether it answered her Description?

G. Nash. I can't tell whether I said so, but it was my Intention so to do, and to see the Warrant executed.

Mr. Davy. What Time did you arrive there?

G. Nash. I guess it was about Eleven o'Clock, which was about an Hour before Elizabeth Canning came there: The Coachman drove us up to the Sun and Punch-Bowl, almost opposite to Mother Wells's House; there were People, some on Horseback, and some on Foot, all in an Uproar. Mr. Hague, Mr. Lyon, and Mr. Aldridge went into the House. I pushed over to the House, in order to find if the Description of the Room answered: I saw some People in the Room on my left Hand, which they call the Parlour; then I went up the Stair-Case leading from the great Door that comes into the Street, and, to my great Surprize, I looked about the three Rooms, and found nothing there like it; there were Beds in them, which seemed to have been laid in that Night; then I came down again, and went into the Kitchen, and saw a Man with a Broom-stick in his Hand; I said to him, Friend, do you know any Thing of this House? he said, there is a Room here: He unbuttoned a Button, and opened the Door; I saw a Door on each Side, one opened to a Cellar full of Water, another opened to a Place like an Oven, and the other led me to a Place where were a few Steps or Stairs, which led up into this Hay-Loft, a nasty Room: I have since told the Steps; I think there were eight of them; I am sure there was nothing like her Description there at that Time. I cannot say I observed the Key-Hole, but I was thereabout afterwards, and believe there has not been a Lock upon that Door for many Years; there were no Signs where a Lock could have been placed; I saw no Marks of a Lock fastened thereon; I am sure there had been no Lock there; neither was there any Bolt; there was a large Bar that secured the three Doors.

Mr. Davy. Are the Steps without or within side the Door?

G. Nash. They are on the Inside the Door; the Stairs are Part of the Room.

Mr. Davy. Can you mention the exact Length and Breadth of the Room?

G. Nash. I never measured it; it is a very long Room; you may as well call this Table a Square (meaning a long Table in the Sessions-House); that Man and I went up into it by ourselves.

Mr. Davy. Did you take any particular Notice of what Things were in the Room?

G. Nash. At that Time I cannot say I did, because I had not found out the Room according to the Girl's Description. I came down, and saw Mr. White, one of my Lord-Mayor's Marshal-Men, who went down to execute the Warrant: I said to him, For God's sake, what do you think of this Affair? he said, he believed we were got into the wrong Box, and he believed the Girl had never been there: Then I went over to my Companions that came down along with me; this was before Canning came. We went over to the House again; we went up into this Room: Some Persons, I cannot tell who, said, This must be the Room; Mr. Lyon stood near me; said I, This cannot be the Room according to her Description, for she said it was an empty, dark Room; Mr. Lyon said, These Things may have been put here since: There were Numbers of Things then in it.

Mr. Davy. Mention the Things you saw there.

G. Nash. There was to the Quantity of Half a Load of Hay; an old Nest of Drawers, about four Feet long, and three high; there was a high Tub with Pollard in it; two Side-Saddles, and an old Man's Saddle: On my right Hand coming up Stairs, there seemed to be a Place as if some poor People had laid upon it; it was some Part Hay that was taken from the Heap, and some Wool put into a Sack for a Bolster, made up in the Form of a Bed: Over this nasty Bed (if I may so call it) were some Pullies and a Line belonging to a Jack; and at the Head of this Bed was a Hole, through which, it seems, formerly the Line did run, that had some Hay stuffed in it to keep out the Wind; I took it out; it was a long Square, about six by eight Inches; there is a Jack in the Kitchen, to which the Line had been fastened; the Hole looks directly into the Kitchen; it is a very thin Partition; it is Lath and Plaister: Through that Hole might be seen every Thing in the Kitchen, except just under it; and there was a Window in the Kitchen, which looks out into the Road, and from that Hay-Loft a Person might see through that Window cross the Road.

Mr. Davy. Could you, when standing in the Kitchen, see through into that Room?

G. Nash. You might see the Window that fronts the Kitchen, through the Hole.

Mr. Davy. How high is the Hole from the Floor of the Kitchen?

G. Nash. I believe it might be about seven or eight Feet, to look through from the Kitchen; a Person might elevate himself, or look upwards; and when in the Room, the Hole is about five or six Inches above the Pillow of this Hay-Bed, which was made on the Floor. In this Room was a Chimney, which I apprehended was for the warming a Glew-Pot; and over this Place was a little Ledge, upon which stood an old Iron Casement all dusty; the Chimney stands in the Corner of the Room; as near as I can think, it is to the South; there was Cobwebs and Nastiness upon the Things; it is impossible they should have been newly put there.

Mr. Davy. Were there any Cobwebs on the Casement?

G. Nash. There were; they seemed to fix the Casement to the Chimney-Ledge; it had such an Appearance to me, I did not move it; it was all over Cobwebs, and seemed to be soldered to the Wall with them; I did not move it.

Mr. Davy. Was there any Grate in the Chimney?

G. Nash. No, there was not; it appeared to me as if there never had been any.

Mr. Davy. Was there a Hearth to the Chimney?

G. Nash. I think there was not.

Mr. Davy. Was the Hearth-Place, I mean the Floor of the Chimney, covered with Dust?

G. Nash. At that Time I did not particularly observe whether it was or no.

Mr. Davy. Was there any Appearance to you of any Pictures having been over the Chimney?

G. Nash. I believe there never was a Picture hung up in that Room in this World.

Mr. Davy. Did you observe the Window at the North End of the Room?

G. Nash. I did; that Window was nailed up with Boards, and the Muntam was betwixt; there were two Windows in the Room, one at the End, and the other almost facing the Stairs, going up out of the Kitchen; the Window at the End seemed to have had a Light; the Casement was whole, with the Boards nailed up upon the Top, and Boards nailed to the Muntams, and the Glass Casement shut.

Mr. Davy. What do you mean by a Muntam?

G. Nash. It is the upright that divides the Window in Halves: The Western Side was boarded up, and the Eastern Side was Glass; the which Casement commanded the Hertford Road, with a Pond at the End of the House, that came within eight or ten Feet of it; a Person standing at that Window might see all the People that pass upon the Road. The other Window was not then boarded up, nor, I believe, ever had been; that was only a Casement. I made particular Observations on it, to see if there ever had been any Nails on either Side, and could see no Appearance of any; that is, large enough for me to get out at; I have since shook Hands with my Wife out at it, she standing on the Ground without, and I in the Room; it was easily opened, only by turning a long Hook; this looks out to a little narrow Lane or Ditch, and over the Hedge is a large Common Field.

Mr. Davy. Was the Room light or dark?

G. Nash. It is what you may call a light Room; rather than dark, by means of these two Windows, and the Tiles never were pointed; the Light came in from the Roof; it could never be a dark Room.

Mr. Davy. What Sort of Tiles were they?

G. Nash. They were Pan-Tiles.

Mr. Davy. How far was that Window from the Ground?

G. Nash. I believe, was I to hang out at the Window by my Hands, I should not be above three Feet from the Ground. The Ground is higher at that Window than it is at the North Window a good deal.

Mr. Davy. Did you obſerve an old Sign in the Room?

G. Naſh. I don't recollect there was.

Mr. Davy. Were there any Trees in that Hedge near the Eaſt Window?

G. Naſh. There were, ſo near the Window, that was I within-ſide with a hunting Whip, I could reach the Boughs.

Mr. Davy. Did you obſerve the Boughs, whether they had been lopped lately?——G. Naſh. I did not.

Mr. Davy. Were there any Cobwebs on the Drawers, ſo as to fix them, as it were, to the Wall?

G. Naſh. I did not obſerve that.

Mr. Davy. Was Canning come at this Time, while you was obſerving the Room?

G. Naſh. No, ſhe was not.

Mr. Davy. Was Adamſon there?

G. Naſh. He was in the Room long before ſhe came; there were a great Number of People there.

Mr. Davy. Whether any Thing remarkable happened from Adamſon's Conduct?

G. Naſh. Whether it was from his Zeal I know not, but he took hold on the Boards, and pulled them down from the North Window: I ſaid, Gentlemen, this cannot be the Room, for the Girl gave no Account of any Hay being in the Room.

Mr. Davy. What Part of the Room did the Hay lie in?

G. Naſh. It lay toward the Eaſt, on the ſame Side the Window was on, betwixt the North and Eaſt Window; and the Bed was on the right Side the Stairs, under the Jack-line Hole, in the South-weſt Part; we agreed by and bye to go over the Way again.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee the Pitcher while you was in the Houſe?

G. Naſh. I can't ſay I ſaw one, or look'd for one; it might be there, and I overlook it.

Mr. Davy. Where were the People of the Houſe then?

G. Naſh. We had left them in Cuſtody in the Parlour, which is the left-hand Room coming into the Houſe; when we were over the Way, I ſaw Mr. Adamſon, and another Man whom I did not know, toſs up to know who ſhould go to meet Canning; and Adamſon went to meet her, and came back before her.

Mr. Davy. For what Purpoſe did they want to go to meet her?

G. Naſh. I conjectured it was to ſee if they had not gone to a wrong Houſe: We were all impatient to ſee her; for if I had had a Horſe, I would have gone myſelf: When I and Abundance of other People were returned to Mother Wells's Houſe, Adamſon came riding up, ſeemingly with a good deal of Pleaſure, waving his Hat with his left Hand, and ſaid, We are all right yet, for ſhe ſays there is a little Hay in the Room. Preſently after the Chaiſe appeared, in which the Girl was: When ſhe came, ſome were for carrying her over to the Public-Houſe; others were for bringing her to the Houſe of Mother Wells, which they did; ſhe was brought, and ſet on a Dreſſer in the Kitchen, on the left Hand of the Door, fronting the Fire-place; and the Door where ſhe afterwards ſaid ſhe had been confined was on the left Hand, and the Door at that Time open; if ſhe had turned her Head that Way, ſhe might have ſeen the Stairs; but whether ſhe did turn her Head that Way, or whether ſhe might have ſeen up into the Room, I cannot ſay; I believe ſhe might have ſeen Part of it. Then there was a Propoſal to ſend for a Bottle of Wine to refreſh thoſe People that had been in the Landau with her in the Cold. She remained on the Dreſſer about four or five Minutes; then ſhe was removed to the Middle of the Kitchen, on a broken Stool, with her Back toward the Fire-place, with the Door of the Hay-loft on her right Hand, looking towards the Dreſſer; the Door of the Room was then remaining open, and ſhe might have ſeen that Part of it that the Stairs led up to: I believe ſhe might ſit thus, firſt and laſt, twenty Minutes: It was the Time they went and got a Pint of Wine, and mulled it.

Mr. Davy. When it came, did ſhe drink much?

G. Naſh. She drank but very little: Then Somebody put the Thing thus, Now let us call Mother Wells in: I ſaid, Hold, Gentlemen, this will be an Old-Bailey Story, and whoever is fixed upon for the committing the Fact, they'll certainly be hanged: Let the Room be filled full of People, and let her go and find out the People whom ſhe accuſes with robbing her; and propoſed to carry her into the Parlour, where were a great many People: She was carried in; and Mary Squires ſat on the right Hand of the Chimney, upon a low Chair, almoſt doubled together, with a black Bonnet on; I am ſure I could not ſee her Face.

Mr. Davy. To what Part of the Room did Mary Squires then direct her Looks?

G. Naſh. I believe her Face was pointing to the Window, ſtraight as ſhe ſat, and Mother Wells ſat on the left-hand Side of the Fire: I ſaid to Canning, Now look for the Woman that robbed you; ſhe immediately pointed to Mary Squires, and ſaid, That old Woman in the Corner was the Woman that robbed me.

Mr. Davy. Did ſhe ſee her Face at that Time?

G. Naſh. I could not, but I will not pretend to ſay what ſhe could ſee; I ſtood cloſe to her; Somebody ſaid, (I think it was Mary Squires's Daughter) Do you hear what the Gentlewoman ſays? ſhe ſays you robbed her. The old Woman got up from the Stool immediately, and ſaid——

Mr. Moreton. I object againſt that being mentioned; it is no Evidence.

Court. He may give an Account of what was ſaid in the Defendant's Hearing and Preſence.

G. Naſh. The old Woman came up to her, and ſaid, Madam, do you ſay I robbed you? (and put herſelf in a particular Poſture, and had a Sort of a Clout about her Face;) Pray, Madam, look at this Face; and ſure, if you have once ſeen it before, you muſt have remembered it, for God Almighty, I think, never made ſuch another; pray, Madam, when do you ſay I robbed you? She anſwered, It was on the firſt Day of this New Year—The firſt Day of this New Year, Madam, do you ſay? Lord bleſs me! I was an hundred and twenty Miles from this Place then. I with my Finger tapped her on the Shoulder, and ſaid, Dame, where was you? She replied, I was at Abbotſbury in Dorſetſhire, and there are a hundred People I can bring to prove it; and ſome of them have known me twenty, thirty, and forty Years. I think there were twenty People ſaying ſhe has been here but a very little Time. There was a poor Woman they called Natus, ſat there, who ſaid, ſhe herſelf had been there, I think, ten or eleven Weeks, and that ſhe had never ſeen Canning there before; and ſhe ſaid, Squires had been there but a very little Time. After this was done, Canning was carried out of the Room, and carried up the Stairs facing the Street-door into all the Rooms; I did not go up with her: After that ſhe was carried up into the Hay-loft; there ſhe ſaid, ſhe believed that was the Room.

Mr. Davy. Are theſe her Words, ſhe believed?

G. Naſh. I think I can take upon me to ſwear they were her Words. I aſked her, what ſhe knew in the Room? ſhe turned about on her left Hand, and ſaid, This is the Room, for here is the Hay I lay upon, but I think there is more of it than there was then, pointing to the looſe Hay on her left Hand. Upon that, ſhe was aſked by the People, that had her under the Arms, what could ſhe note more in the Room? They took up a Pitcher that ſtood upon the Ground, and held it up to her; ſhe ſaid, Yes, that is the Jug I had my Water in: Then a Gentleman that was there took hold of a Tobacco-mould, which was in a Corner, and aſked her, if he remembered that? ſhe ſaid, ſhe remembered that. He aſked her what elſe ſhe remembered, (I think that was Mr. Hague) and added, Do you remember theſe three Saddles? (that were in the Room) ſhe ſaid, I believe there might be one; the Saddles ſeemed to be all over Duſt, they ſeemed to have been laid up there out of the Way for a long Time: Then ſhe was aſked, if ſhe remembered the Neſt of Drawers? ſhe ſaid, ſhe did not remember them. A Gentleman made Anſwer, Have you been here twenty-eight Days, and never remember them Drawers? ſhe ſaid, ſhe did not remember them. Then Mr. Hague aſked, why ſhe did not ſtrive to get out at that Window? (that is the Eaſt Window fronting the Stairs) ſhe ſaid, ſhe thought it had been faſtened.

Mr. Davy. Did ſhe ſay ſhe had tried to ſee if it was faſt?

G. Naſh. I don't remember ſhe ſaid ſhe had.

Mr. Davy. Did Natus's Wife ſay any thing about her lying in the Room?

G. Naſh. Natus's Wife ſaid in the Parlour, that her Huſband and ſhe had laid there, in this Hay-loft, ten or eleven Weeks: Canning's Mother was in the Room, lamenting ſadly, that that was the Hay that her poor dear Girl had laid upon.

Mr. Davy. Was the Girl aſked whether ſhe remembered the Jack-line?

G. Naſh. She was; ſhe ſaid, ſhe did not remember ſeeing it.

Mr. Davy. Was the Tub of Pollard mentioned to her?

G. Naſh. I think it was not.

Mr. Davy. Did ſhe continue poſitive that Squires was the Woman who robbed her?

G. Naſh. I heard no Contradiction to that.

Mr. Davy. What has led you to recollect, at this Diſtance of Time, all theſe Particulars?

G. Naſh. It was ſo remarkable, it could not ſlip out of my Head; it was at that Time the Subject of Converſation: It is well known I told my Sentiments the ſame Night to Abundance of People that came to know about it.

Mr. Davy. Knowing all theſe Particulars, which would have been extremely neceſſary to have been proved in the Defence of Mary Squires and Mother Wells, how came you, when theſe People were to be tried, the one for a capital Felon, and the other as an Acceſſary, not to be an Evidence then?

G. Naſh. I was here ſome Part of the Time the Girl was giving her Evidence, and really was a little diſcontented in my Mind, about her giving her Evidence at that Time, and her varying from the Particulars ſhe firſt related before Mr. Alderman Chitty, and then to us: We had a very large Feaſt at Goldſmiths-Hall, and I was obliged to give my Attendance, becauſe I am Butler to the Company; I had the Care of, may-be, three or four thouſand Pounds Worth of Plate; ſo that I ſtayed in Court but till Eleven o'Clock, being obliged to be there, and I did not think there was any Danger of her being convicted upon ſuch an incredible Story.

Mr. Davy. Had you a Subpœna?——G. Naſh. No, I had not.

M. Davy. Did you then know that Mary Squires was upon Trial for her Life?

G. Naſh. I did, and I did not think ſhe would have been caſt, indeed.

Mr. Davy. Had you apprehended her in Danger of being convicted, ſhould you have thought yourſelf excuſable in not giving Evidence?

G. Naſh. If ſhe had died, and I not gave my Evidence, I ſhould not have forgiven myſelf; I ſhould have been very angry with myſelf; but in my own ſingle Opinion I did not think ſhe would have been convicted; I thought the whole Circumſtance of the Thing collected together could not amount to full Proof, and apprehended the Woman was in no Danger.

Mr. Davy. If you had apprehended it poſſible that the Woman ſhould have been convicted, would you not have ſtayed and given Evidence?

G. Naſh. I would have gone and made an Excuſe, and come again.

Mr. Davy. Have you been always of the Opinion you are now, that Canning's Evidence was untrue?

G. Naſh. I have always inſiſted upon the ſame I have now related. At the Trial of Mary Squires, I went Home and told Mr. Flower, the Aſſiſtant of the Goldſmiths Company, how far I had heard of the Trial, and ſaid, I think it is impoſſible, with all the Circumſtances, that ſhe can be convicted; and he ſaid, he thought ſo too.

Mr. Davy. How came you not to acquaint the Court, that you, of your own Knowledge, knew ſhe was guilty of Perjury?

G. Naſh. I can give no Reaſon for that.

Mr. Davy. What Conduct did you purſue after the Conviction of Squires, in order to atone for your not giving Evidence for her?

G. Naſh. Some Time after that, I heard the old Woman had a Reſpite; I immediately waited on my Lord-Mayor, and told him, I believed I could let him into the whole Affair, as well as any Man could.

Mr. Davy. Did you do this voluntarily?

G. Naſh. I did; I was very glad to hear there was ſome Deſign of ſaving the poor Woman; I did it not out of Spite to the Girl, but merely in Juſtice to the Gypſey.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. Did you hear the Girl poſitively charge Mary Squires with robbing her at Enfield-Waſh, on the Trial of Mary Squires?

G. Naſh. I did.

Mr. Moreton. Did you hear her finish her Evidence?

G. Nash. I cannot tell whether she had quite done or not, for I looked at my Watch, and found it was Time to go; so went away.

Mr. Moreton. What did Mr. Flower say?

G. Nash. He said, they never could convict her.

Mr. Moreton. Whether your Dissatisfaction that you have given an Account of, was not owing to the Observation you made at Mother Wells's, upon the Answers the Girl gave there on the 1st of February?

G. Nash. I did then think she was mistaken in the Woman.

Mr. Moreton. Whether you heard the Girl give any Account of this at her Mother's?---G. Nash. I never was at her Mother's.

Mr. Moreton. When the old Woman made her Face so odd, by putting herself in a particular Posture, as you described, did the Girl alter in her Opinion?---G. Nash. No, I did not hear she did.

Mr. Moreton. Was Canning in the Room, when Natus's Wife said she had laid in the Room ten or eleven Weeks?

G. Nash. She first said she had laid in the House; whether it was before we went up into the Room, I cannot say; but I am certain she said so in the Parlour, when Canning was by.

Mr. Moreton. Did you continue to have a good Opinion of Canning?

G. Nash. I dropped my Opinion quite about her being innocent.

Mr. Moreton. Look at this Letter, is it your Hand-writing? (He takes a Letter in his Hand.)---G. Nash. It is my Hand-writing.

Mr. Moreton. When was it wrote?---G. Nash. The Day it bears Date.

Mr. Moreton. Who is it wrote to?---G. Nash. To Mr. Lyon.

John Hague sworn.

J. Hague. I am a Goldsmith, and live in Noble-Street, and am acquainted with Mr. Nash: He came to me on the 31st of January 53, at Night, and told me of an extraordinary Affair; the Contents were what he had heard before Mr. Alderman Chitty from Elizabeth Canning; he desired me, and I agreed to go down to Enfield-Wash with him. Mr. Nash, Mr. Lyon, Mr. Aldridge, and myself, went together in a Coach on the next Morning. Before we got down, we met a Man on Horseback (who it was, I do not know); he came to the Coach-Side, and said, We have taken them all. When we came there, we went to Mrs. Wells's directly; we first went into the Parlour on the left Hand, there we saw the People that were taken; after we had talked with them, we went to take a View of the House; we went up the Stairs, and saw the Rooms; then we came down, and went up into the Hay-loft or Workshop, and finding nothing that answered the Description the Girl had given before Mr. Alderman Chitty, as Mr. Nash had said to us, he said, Here is no Room answers the Description she gave: We went over to Cantril's, and got a Glass of Wine to refresh ourselves.

Mr. Willes. Was Mr. Adamson in the Room called the Hay-loft, when you was?

J. Hague. He was; he and Scarrat were saying to one another, Do you go, and Do you go, and at last they tossed up a Halfpenny, and it fell to Adamson's Lot to go; he took his Horse and went, and came back with great Triumph, with a Whip lashing over his Head, saying, By G---d we are all right, she says there is a little Hay in the Room; and in about a Quarter of an Hour after this, Canning came; she was first brought to Mother Wells's Door, and was taken into the Kitchen on the right Hand; she was set upon the Dresser in the Kitchen on the left Hand, and the Door opening to the Hay-loft was then open, which she could not miss to see; but she did not mention a Word that that was the Place where she had been in; she sat there a few Minutes; then they took her off, and set her in a Chair; she never opened her Lips about her Stays being cut off there.

Mr. Willes. How long do you think she was in the Kitchen?

J. Hague. In sitting on the Dresser and in the Chair, I believe she had been there a little better than a Quarter of an Hour; then they carried her into the Parlour, and set her upon a Table; Mother Wells sat very close to her; as they were bringing her in, Mother Wells said, with a Sort of a Sneer, Why, the Girl is sick; there was no Answer made to that; as Canning was sitting, she pointed to the Gypsey-Woman, and said, That is the Woman that cut my Stays off.

Mr. Willes. Was the Gypsey in such a Situation, that she could then see her Face?

J. Hague. Upon my Word, I think she could not; I was close to her, she was smoaking a Pipe.

Mr. Willes. Upon that, what did the Gypsey say or do?

J. Hague. Lucy Squires went up to her Mother, and said, Mother, the Girl says that you have cut her Stays off: Then the old Woman got up, and, in a great Trembling, she took her Bonnet off, and stroked her Hair up, and said, Madam, consider what a remarkable Woman I am; would you go to take a Life away? I was at Abbotsbury at that Time.

Mr. Willes. Did she say how many Miles that was from Town?

J. Hague. I don't remember she did; but George Squires then said it was a hundred and twenty miles from London.

Mr. Willes. Have you heard Mr. Nash give Evidence a little Time ago?

J. Hague. I have not heard a Word of his Evidence.

Mr. Willes. Did any body else take Notice how long the Gypsey had been at Enfield?---J. Hague. No, I don't remember any body did.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember seeing Judith Natus?

J. Hague. I cannot say I heard her say any thing.

Mr. Willes. How long had Canning been in that Room, before you took her up into the Hay-loft?

J. Hague. I believe, about Half an Hour; I led her up Stairs myself; I had hold on one Arm, and another Person on the other, but I do not know who it was; he has not appeared since; but before we went there, we went into several other Rooms: she was very quick, and said, This is not it, and That is not it.

Mr. Willes. What did she say upon her first coming into the Hay-loft?

J. Hague. When we got to the Top of the Stairs, she turned upon her right Hand next to the Chimney, and took no manner of Notice of any thing: Then turning to the left, This is the Room, says she, that I was confined in: Then her Mother said, Ay, this is the Room where my poor Child was confined in. Said I, Good Woman, was you confined here with her? No, says she, but I believe every thing my Daughter says: Then I said, Pray hold your Tongue, and do not answer any Questions. There I saw a very large Hole on the right Hand coming up Stairs, large enough for a large Cat to go through; it was open.

Mr. Willes. How high is it from the Floor?

J. Hague. It is close to the Floor; the Jack-line run through it, and a Pully just over it; if there had been a Mouse in the Room, she might have seen it.

Mr. Willes. Was you in that Room as soon as Nash and Aldridge?

J. Hague. No, they had been there before me. There I saw also a dirty nasty Hay-bed on the Ground, nothing but Hay, which I suppose was taken from the other Hay, where we were told Fortune Natus and his Wife lay. I asked Canning whether she remembered the Pully? she said, No, she never saw it. There is a little narrow Chimney, about fifteen or sixteen Inches wide; there was no Grate, or Appearance that there ever had been one in the Chimney; it was full of hardly any thing else but Cobwebs, which seemed to have been there a considerable Time, they were so nasty and dirty.

Mr. Willes. Were the Cobwebs so spread about the Chimney, that it was impossible there should have been a Grate there two Days before?

J. Hague. Yes, Sir. There was an old Casement over the Chimney that was very dirty and dusty: I said to Canning, Child, did you take this for a Picture? she said, No. When I took it away, all the Cobwebs came with it from the Top to the Bottom; and on the Place from whence it was taken, there appeared a Print of it, that looked as if it had been there a Year or two.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Mark of any Place, as if the Picture had been there?---J. Hague. No, Sir.

Mr. Willes. Did you observe the Window that looks towards the East?

J. Hague. I did; it is a Casement large enough for me to get out at; that is it which fronts the Stairs: I asked her how she came not to get out there, and opened it when I had hold of her Arm; she said, Sir, I believe it was nailed; then I looked to see if there were any Appearance of Nails being there, and could see none at all.

Mr. Willes. How high is this Window from the Ground?

J. Hague. It might be about ten Feet; it went into a little narrow Kind of a Ditch, about half a Yard wide, where was a Bank up against it, and a Hedge and a Field behind it; in the Hedge were several Trees near the Window.

Mr. Willes. Did the Branches look as if they had been lopped lately?

J. Hague. Yes, they did.

Mr. Willes. How much Hay do you think there might be in the Room?

J. Hague. I believe about half a Load; it lay in the Room on the same Side the Window was on; it seemed to have laid there a long Time: There was another Window opened into the Road, boarded up on one Side, and a Casement on the other that opened, that is to the North, and there is a Lane at the Corner of it; I looked out at it; there was no Pent-house or Shed under it; it was perpendicular. Mr. Adamson turned some of the Hay over to look for the Stays. I saw also a Chest of Drawers, which, I dare venture to say, had been there more than a Year, if not two; they were so very dusty betwixt the Drawers and the Wall, that I did not care to meddle with them.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember a Barrel or Tub in the Room?

J. Hague. I cannot say I do; there was a Tobacco-mould over Fortune Natus's Bed; Somebody asked her, if she knew that? she said, she did. There were two Women's Saddles, and a Man's Saddle; I asked her, if she saw them? she said, she believed there was one; they all appeared to have been there a long while, they were very nasty and dusty.

Mr. Willes. Did you observe the Door that leads to this Room, how it fastened?

J. Hague. I did particularly; I could not perceive there ever was a Lock upon it; I believe there never was one; it fastened only by a Latch and a Button; I will not be positive there was a Latch; I said to the Girl, Zounds, Child, I cannot think you was ever here at all.

Mr. Willes. What Answer did she make to that?

J. Hague. She made me none at all.

Mr. Willes. Did you hear Judith Natus say any thing in Canning's Presence about the Room?

J. Hague. I cannot say whether I did or not.

Mr. Willes. Did you go away satisfied with what you had seen?

J. Hague. No, I went away very much dissatisfied. When we were in the Coach going Home, Mr. Nash, and Mr. Aldridge, and I gave our Opinions to Mr. Lyon, that we did not think she was there; we said, she must be mistaken: He was so angry at it, that he did not speak to us all the Way Home, and That, I suppose, is the Reason we were not subpœna'd or called.

Mr. Willes. How came you not to come and give your Opinion in Favour of Squires?

J. Hague. I was in Court all the while, and I'll give my Reasons why. When they were first taken up, Canning said, Virtue Hall was one of the Girls that stood by when her Stays were taken off; at the same Time Virtue Hall, with all the seeming Innocency, laughed in her Face, and said, God forgive you, Madam, I never saw you in this House in my Life. She had challenged her and Lucy Squires with being by: Lucy Squires said the very same as she did. Seeing such seeming Innocence in her there, and when in Court to hear her swearing such a Thing that I thought to be as false as the Gospel is true, I protest I had not Power to speak; I believed she was perjured in all she said; that is the whole Reason why I did not speak; but had I had Spirits, I would have spoke.

Mr. Willes. After Squires was convicted, did you approve of your own Conduct?

J. Hague. Upon my Word, Sir, I was not easy upon my being silent. I went of my own Free-Will before my Lord-Mayor, and gave an Account of what I knew, the same as now.

Mr. Willes. Had you any Acquaintance with Alderman Gascoyne then?

J. Hague. No, I do not know that ever I had seen him before.

M. Wilks. How long after the Trial was it, that you went to my Lord Mayor?

J. Hague. It was about a Fortnight or three Weeks after; it was long before Squires was respited.

Mr. Wilkes. Had you any Knowledge of Canning before you went down with her?——J. Hague. No, I never saw her before in my Life.

Mr. Wilkes. Did you go with her as her Friend?

J. Hague. I did, as much her Friend as any one that went along with her; and before she came down, did as much abuse old Mother Wells and George Squires, and the People in the House.

Cross-Examined.

Mr. Nares. Was you present at the whole Trial of Mary Squires?

J. Hague. I was.

Mr. Nares. How long was you in Court after Virtue Hall had been examined as a Witness?——J. Hague. She was the second Witness.

Mr. Nares. Was you so much alarmed, you could not recover yourself in the whole Trial?

J. Hague. Upon my Oath, I could not recover myself; I really was shocked at it.

Mr. Nares. Had you heard Canning give her Information of the Room?

J. Hague. No, I had not; I had it from Mr. Nash.

Mr. Nares. Did you see Canning's Mother in the Hay-loft?

J. Hague. I did; she followed us up there, and said them Words to her as I said before.

Mr. Nares. Are you sure you saw her in the Hay-loft?

J. Hague. Yes, I am.

Mr. Nares. Did she continue there the whole Time you was examining it?——J. Hague. I do not know that.

Mr. Nares. How near is the Dresser in the Kitchen to the Stairs?

J. Hague. It is very close to the Stairs.

Mr. Nares. Can you from that Dresser see up the Stairs, if the Door is open?

J. Hague. When the Door is open, you may sit on any Part of the Dresser, and see quite up into the Room; to be sure she could see quite up into the Room.

Mr. Nares. Was Mr. Adamson in the Hay-loft when the Girl was there?

J. Hague. I do not remember I saw him there then; I saw him there before the Girl came down to Enfield-Wash.

Mr. Nares. Was you in the Room all the Time the Girl was?

J. Hague. I was.

Mr. Nares. Did you hear any body ask her, what was to be seen out at the Window?

J. Hague. I did not hear that; I saw him and Bob Scarrat going to tear the Boards down before the Girl came there, and they were pulled down before she came.

Mr. Nares. What did they do that for?

J. Hague. I do not know; it may be through Prejudice; I do not know the Reason why.

Mr. Nares. Whether there was not an Observation of yours, or Somebody else, that those Boards had been but lately done up?

J. Hague. No, not by me, or any body else that I know of.

Edward Aldridge sworn.

E. Aldridge. I live in Foster-Lane, and am a Working Silversmith; I am acquainted with Mr. Nash, Mr. Hague, and Mr. Lyon. On the 1st of February 1753, I went down along with them to Enfield-Wash, having been told how sadly Mr. Lyon's Maid had been used. When we were on the Road, there was a Man came on Horseback, and told us they had taken up the People of the House.

Mr. Gascoyne. Have you heard any of the Evidence given by Mr. Nash and Mr. Hague?

E. Ald. No, I have not. When we got to Enfield-Wash, we went to Mrs. Wells's House; I went into the Parlour; there were all the People sitting all round the Fire; then I went into the Kitchen by myself, and so all over the House: I was in the Room where the Girl says she was confined; it is called by the Name of the Hay-loft. I believe I was there before Mr. Nash was; I was then alone.

Mr. Gas. In what Circumstance was this particular Window that looks towards the North?

E. Ald. It was Part of it Glass, and Part Wood.

Mr. Gas. Had the Casement Wood over it?

E. Ald. That I cannot tell; I am sure Part of it was boarded up.

Mr. Gas. That Part that was not boarded up, had that any Appearance of any thing nailed up?

E. Ald. I was not so curious while I was there to examine it: They had described the Room to me as being a square Room, and a Room with a Grate in it. After I had been there, Canning came down, and was carried into the Kitchen, and set on a Dresser.

Mr. Gas. Was the Door open that leads up into the Hay-loft?

E. Ald. I cannot be sure of that; I was not in the Kitchen all the Time she was there. She looked about as if she did not know where she was. I was with her when she was carried into the Parlour: As soon as we had taken her in there, Mother Wells came to her, and said, Madam, do you know me? No, said she, I do not know that ever I saw you in my Life before: Then George Squires came up and said, Madam, do you know me? She said, No, I don't know that ever I saw you in my Life; it was that old Woman in the Corner that cut my Stays off. I was close by Canning at the Time.

Mr. Gas. Did you see the Gypsey's Face at the Time?

E. Ald. No, I never saw her Face till she got up: Madam, said she, I cut your Stays off! (she throwed her Things open) I am very remarkable; if ever you see me before, you must know me. She mentioned Abbotsbury, and several other Places Names, which I have forgot, where she said she was.

Mr. Gas. Could Canning see the Gypsey's Face in that Position she was in at the Time she charged her?

E. Aldridge. That I cannot tell: When Canning went up into the Hay-loft, I followed just after her: I remember seeing the Hole in the Wall; when I went up before, there was a great Wisp of Hay in it, which I took out and put in again; when it was out, I could look all over the Kitchen; it was a Hole where the Jack-line was; it was pretty large, I could get my two Hands in it; there was a Pully hung over it, but it then had no Communication with the Jack.

Mr. Gas. Did you ask Canning any Question?

E. Ald. No; I heard Mr. Hague ask her, why she did not get out at that Window? she said, she believed it was fastened up.

Mr. Gas. Did you hear any body ask her, if she remembered that Hole?

E. Ald. No: There was Hay between the Stairs and the Jack-hole, and a little square Chimney just at the Corner.

Mr. Gas. Were there any Pictures over it?

E. Ald. There was a Casement over it, that seemed to have been there a great while, because it had Cobwebs over it, and was tied, as it were, to the Wall by them; and the Chimney was covered with Cobwebs from one Side to the other, and full of Dirt, and no Sign that there had been a Grate there at all.

Mr. Gas. Did you look at the Window towards the East?

E. Ald. No, I did not. I came down Stairs, and left them above.

Mr. Gas. Do you remember a Chest of Drawers being in the Room?

E. Ald. I do.

Mr. Gas. Did you hear her asked any Thing concerning them?

E. Ald. No, I did not.

Mr. Gas. Do you remember some Saddles, a Tobacco-mould, and about half a Load of Hay being there?

E. Ald. I do: There were three Saddles, and a large Quantity of Hay.

Mr. Gas. Did you see ever an old Stool, or Table?

E. Ald. I did not take Notice of any. I went up just after the Chest of Drawers were removed a little Way from the Wall; it seemed as if it had stood there twenty Years. I remember there was a Barrel with some Stuff in it, Bran or Flour, Pollard I believe.

Mr. Gas. Did the Hay seem as if it had been there pretty long?

E. Ald. It did, because it was pretty hard.

Mr. Gas. Was you satisfied with the Room upon seeing it?

E. Ald. I was satisfied it was not like a Place of Confinement; neither did I believe she was ever there.

Mr. Gas. Did you, upon your being in the Room two or three Times, observe the Window towards the Chimney?

E. Ald. Yes; it was a narrow Casement Window, big enough for a Man to get out at.

Mr. Gas. How far was it from the Ground?

E. Ald. Any body might drop out of it very easily, without hurting themselves.

Mr. Gas. Did you look to see if the Window had been fastened?

E. Ald. I looked, but could not find any Thing like Fastening to it.

Mr. Gas. Did you examine the Door, how that was fastened?

E. Ald. Yes; it was not fastened at all, only with a Button; there was no Lock to it; there were some Holes where Locks had been; they looked like Key-holes, pretty large Holes.

Mr. Gas. Was it probable to think there had not been a Lock upon the Door for a Month?——E. Ald. Yes, and longer than that.

Mr. Gas. Might you venture to swear, by the Appearance of the Door, there had been no Lock upon it for a Week before?

E. Ald. That I might, or for a Month before.

Mr. Gas. Or a Year?—E. Ald. Things alter very much in a Year.

Mr. Gas. Did you go down as a Friend of the Girl's?

E. Ald. I did, and at my own Expence.

Mr. Gas. After examining these Circumstances, did you return with the Belief of her Story, or not?

E. Ald. I went and stood at the Door, and there came one Hull, a School-master, who lives at Theobalds, and said to me, What do you think of it? I said, The Girl is mistaken; I believe she never was here.

Mr. Gas. Is there any Pent-house under the Window, where 'tis supposed she made her Escape?

E. Ald. No; there was a Cellar-door under it; no Boards, no Pent-house; it was perpendicular to the Ground.

Mr. Gas. Did you observe the Wall on the Out-side?

E. Ald. I did; I went out in particular to look at it; there was no Sign of clawing the Wall, or any Thing.

Mr. Gas. When you returned to Town, upon the whole, what did you think of it?——E. Ald. Upon the whole, I did not think she had been there.

Mr. Gas. How came you not to appear as a Witness for Squires upon her Trial?——E. Ald. I was never subpœna'd.

Mr. Gas. Was you in Court on that Trial?

E. Ald. I was at the Beginning of it.

Mr. Gas. Why did you not stay all the Time?——E. Ald. Because we had a Dinner at Goldsmiths-Hall, and I was going to it.

Mr. Gas. Was you not very much concerned at your Conduct, when you heard she was convicted?——E. Eld. I said to Mr. White the Officer, at going out, What do you think of it? he said, he thought she would be acquitted: I said, I thought so too.

Mr. Gas. How came you, after this, to go before my Lord Mayor?

E. Ald. My Lord Mayor had heard of me by Mr. Hague or Mr. Nash: They desired me to go with them.

Mr. Gas. Had you any Acquaintance with the Lord Mayor before that?

E. Ald. No, I had not.

Mr. Gas. How long after the Conviction of Mary Squires was it, that you went before my Lord Mayor?——E. Ald. I can't justly tell.

Mr. Gas. Was it a Week after?

E. Ald. It was a great deal longer than that.

Mr. Gas. Did you give the same Account there, as you have done now?

E. Ald. I believe I gave exactly the same.

Mr. Gas. Had you any Acquaintance with Canning before?

E. Ald. No, I had not. I went with Mr. Lyon, because I had heard heard a bad Character of Wells at Enfield-Wash, and was glad to hear she was taken, in order to be brought to Justice.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did Mr. Lyon and you all return very good Friends?

E. Aldridge. They went before Justice Tashmaker, and I was quite tired of the Thing. I went to an Alehouse, and got some Mutton Chops, and Half a Pint of Wine: I thought it was not worth hearing.

Cross-Examined.

Mr. Williams. Was you with Elizabeth Canning in the Kitchen?

E. Ald. I was: She seemed to stare about her, as though she did not know where she was.

Mr. Williams. Did any body ask her if she knew the Place?

E. Ald. No; Nobody did, as I know of.

Mr. Williams. How long might she be in the Kitchen?

E. Ald. Not a long Time; she had some Wine brought her there.

Mr. Williams. Did she seem to be ill?

E. Ald. She did, to be faint and ill then.

Mr. Williams. How long was she before she pointed to the old Woman, after George Squires asked her the Question whether she knew him?

E. Ald. It was immediately after.

Mr. Williams. Did she speak that of her own accord?

E. Ald. I believe she did; I don't think any body prompted her to it: I saw Nobody talk to her then.

Mr. Williams. When did you declare your Dissatisfaction first?

E. Ald. I declared it before I left the House.

Mr. Williams. When did you cease to be her Friend?

E. Ald. I soon ceased to be her Friend.

Mr. Williams. How long after this was it you had Conversation with Mr. and Mrs. Howard about this? and upon what account did you go down there to them?

E. Ald. I was going down to Enfield-Wash, I cannot tell how long after; I don't know whether it was not that Week. I hardly knew the Gentleman; I have heard say he is a Surveyor of the Window-lights: I remember I went down to Mr. Edward Aldridge's at Enfield-Wash; when I went out, I was desired to take some of the Papers (her printed Case in order for a Subscription) to Mr. Aldridge there.

Mr. Williams. Did you recommend it to them about subscribing for the Girl?---E. Ald. I did not deliver Papers: Mr. Aldridge took one in his Pocket with him, and I went with him to Mr. Howard's; we had some Discourse with him, but I can't say what it was justly.

Mr. Williams. I'll put you in Mind of one Thing: Did you, or did you not, say you were satisfied with the Girl's Description she gave of the House, either to Mr. or Mrs. Howard?

E. Ald. I denied it from the very first.

Mr. Williams. Did you say you thought she had been at the House, or did you declare you thought she had not?

E. Ald. If I declared any Thing about it, I declared she was not at the House; whether I did, or did not, I am sure, if I said any Thing, I said she was not confined there.

Mr. Williams. Did you any ways recommend this Paper to Mr. or Mrs. Howard, or endeavour, with Mr. Aldridge, to encourage the Case?

E. Ald. No; I only left the Paper with him; I did not encourage the Case either one Way or other; we did talk about the Gypsey, whether she was there; they could not tell what Time she had been there. I asked them, how long they thought she had been there? Mrs. Howard said, she could not call to mind how long she had been there, but said, she thought she had been there some Time, for she knew her very well.

Mr. Williams. How many Papers had you there?--E. Ald. I had but one.

Mr. Williams. How long after the Conviction of the old Woman was it, before you went before my Lord-Mayor?

E. Ald. Mr. Nash and Mr. Hague had been there two or three Times before I had been there, and they desired me to go with them.

Mr. Williams. Was it a Month after?---E. Ald. It was that, to be sure.

Mr. Williams. How came you, when you heard this poor Woman was reprieved, upon an Information made on her Behalf, when every body was then endeavouring to explain the Matter, not to go before the Magistrate in a Month's Time? Did not you think it a Matter of Justice to go?

E. Ald. When I was called for, I did: It was no Business of mine to trouble my Head about it to go.

William White sworn.

W. White. I am an Officer under my Lord Mayor. I remember going down to Enfield-Wash, on the 1st of February 1753, to apprehend Susannah Wells. There was a Warrant went down before me: I met three Gentlemen there with the Warrant: I apprehended it was to take up Mother Wells, for cutting off Elizabeth Canning's Stays: I went over the Way to a Public-House; then Somebody said they saw Mother Wells go by; then I said, Let us go over and secure every body in the House: There were four of us, Mr. Adamson, Mr. Wintlebury, I, and another Person whom I do not know: We went there: When we were in the Parlour, Mr. Adamson pointed to Mother Wells, and said, That is she; there were two or three other Women in the Room with her. I immediately drawed my Hanger, and said, they were all Prisoners. I put a Centry over them, and went to the other Parts of the House, and took all that were in the House, and put them into the Parlour: Mother Squires and her two Daughters were in a fore Room up one Pair of Stairs: George Squires was brought into the Room by some of the People: I told him he must be detained: Gentlemen, said he, look over every thing that I have here: I turned them all out, and the old and young Women's Things too, to look for the Stays, but no such Thing was found.

Mr. Willes. Did you tell them the Reason of your apprehending them?

W. White. I did not just then: I said, there was a Robbery committed, and they must not go away: I found one of Mother Wells's Daughters, and Virtue Hall next, and brought them to the rest: After this, I went into the Kitchen on the right Hand, and looked round: After that, I saw a Woman's Head, by looking over the Door through a Chasm, in a Place they call the Hay-loft. There was at the Bottom of it seven Steps to go up. I went and fetched her down, and put her amongst the rest; this was Judith Natus; she appeared to be just getting up.

Mr. Willes. What Time of the Day might this be?

W. White. I take it to be about Nine in the Morning. After I could find Nobody else, I went up into the Hay-loft to take a View of it; I just looked round, and saw the Hay, and two Windows, some Saddles, a Chest of Drawers, an old Barrel, a Musket, and a Tub, and a great deal of Lumber that I can't particularly describe.

Mr. Willes. How much Hay might there be?

W. White. If it had been bound up, I believe there were about the Value of twelve or fifteen Trusses; it seemed to have laid there a great while: I saw also a little Stove Chimney without a Grate in it. I did not stay to make particular Observation.

Mr. Willes. Were there any Pictures over the Chimney?

W. White. No, there were none: I saw the Bed Judith Natus had lain in, that was opposite the Fire-place. When I had looked round the Room, I was a little surprized, and thought the Girl was mistaken; so I went out on the Outside, and looked under the Window that fronts the Road, the North Window: I could not observe any Thing particular there, neither the Footsteps of any body dropping from the Window, or Print of their Cloaths by dropping down; it was clay Ground; it was so soft, that a Step of a Dog might make an Impression: There was a Heap of human Dung lay under it, about as high as the Body of a Quart Bottle; there was no Appearance of any body being there for some Time; neither did it appear to me as if any body had been out at that Window: I called Mr. Adamson to shew him; he would have persuaded me there were some Scratches on the Wall with her Foot, but I could not see any.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Pent-house or Shed between the Ground and the Window?

W. White. No, there was not; the Wall was perpendicular from the Ground. I was in the Parlour amongst them when Canning came down, which I believe was about Twelve or One o'Clock; she was carried into the Kitchen, and set upon the Dresser opposite the Parlour; she sat there about four or five Minutes.

Mr. Willes. Were the other Witnesses there at that Time?

W. White. There were so many People, I can't tell: After this, she was carried up Stairs to where I fetched the Gypsey from, but I did not go up Stairs with them; neither did I go up into the Hay-loft with her. The Prisoners being all in the Parlour, it was proposed to bring them one at a Time into the Kitchen; I objected against that, and desired they would all go back again into the Parlour, and let Canning go in and pick the Woman out from among them all, that had robbed her; I was afraid Somebody would go and give a Signal; then we went into the Parlour; they were all placed in a Circle round the Fire; I believe, before they were moved, Mary Squires was on the left-hand Side of the Fire; Wells sat with her Elbow against the Fire-place, on the right-hand Side; this was before they got up to come in one at a Time; after this, their Positions were most of them altered; and when Canning came in, which could not be above a Minute or two after, upon some Occasion, Wells was shifted, and got into Squires's Side, and Squires in her Place. Canning fixed upon the old Gypsey, as soon as she came into the Middle of them; the Gypsey was sitting in the Corner stooping, I think, with a black Bonnet on: Canning said, That is the Woman there, pointing to her: I saw her fix her Eye immediately on that Corner of the Room.

Mr. Willes. Was her Face fronting Canning?

W. White. No, it was cross the Fire-place, as I apprehend.

Mr. Willes. Do you think Canning could see her Face then?

W. White. I can't answer for what she could see: I begged of her, before she went in, for God's sake, to be sure before she fixed upon any body.

Mr. Willes. Who did you expect she would have fixed upon?

W. White. I expected she would have fixed upon Mother Wells, before she went into the Room. When she had fixed upon the Gypsey, one of her Daughters got up, and went to the old Woman, and said, This Gentlewoman says you have robbed her. Canning was then standing in the Middle of the Room amongst the People. The Gypsey Woman came up to her, and opened her Face, and said, Me rob you! I never saw you in my Life before; for God Almighty's sake, don't swear my Life away. When I said there was a Robbery committed, George Squires asked me, when the Robbery was committed? (his Mother and two Sisters were then with him) I said, it was on the 1st of January: He said, We were in Dorsetshire at that Time, at a Place called Abbotsbury; we went there to keep our Christmas: Then I took an Opportunity to find out Mother Wells's Daughter by herself.

Mr. Willes. Was Canning present?

W. White. No.

Mr. Moreton. Then what Wells's Daughter said, is not Evidence against the Defendant.

Mr. Willes. I meant what was said in Canning's Presence.

W. White. They all said they were at Abbotsbury, while Canning was in the Room; that is, the Son, two Daughters, and Mother.

Mr. Willes. Did they mention keeping their Christmas before Canning?

W. White. No, they did not mention that in the Parlour, but they did to me before Canning came; we stayed some Time; then we went before Justice Tashmaker at Edmonton with them all in a Cart.

Cross-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. I think you are an Officer in London?

W. White. I am, but I had a Constable there.

Mr. Moreton. Was one Long, a Son-in-law to Mother Wells, in the House?

W. White. I believe he was there with a Cart to carry them: There were a great many People; I did not know Long.

Mr. Moreton. After you had collected the People out of all the Rooms, you say you went up Stairs?

W. White. I did.

Mr. Moreton. Did you meet with any Obstruction?

W. White. There was a Man made some Obstruction, and said, he would first see the Warrant; upon which I went to the Constable and fetched it, and went up.

Mr. Moreton. In whoſe Cuſtody did you leave the Priſoners?

W. White. With the People that went down with me; the Officer that had the Warrant was in the Parlour.

Mr. Mor. When you went down, did you leave that Man alone?

W. White. I believe he ſtood upon the Stairs, till I fetched the Warrant; he was at the Door of the Room, but ſaid he would not open it till he had ſeen the Warrant.

Mr. Mor. Was that Man's Name Long?

W. White. There was one Long that carried them to Juſtice Taſhmaker's; but whether that was he, I cannot tell.

Mr. Mor. The Long I mean, is Son-in-Law to Mrs. Wells.

W. White. Then I don't know him.

Mr. Mor. Were they all uniform in giving the Account of being at Abbotsbury?——W. White. They were.

Mr. Mor. Mention what the old Woman ſaid.

W. White. She ſaid ſhe was at Abbotsbury on the 1ſt of January; and George and Lucy ſaid, they were there; and Mary ſaid, ſhe was at her Uncle's in the Borough; ſhe ſaid ſhe was there at Chriſtmas.

Mr. Mor. You ſay Adamſon and you had no other Conception but that Mother Wells was the Thief?

W. White. We did think ſo.

Mr. Mor. Were there any ſhewing any body to Canning, when ſhe came in?

W. White. No, Sir, not as I ſaw; ſhe, of her own Accord, voluntarily picked out Mrs. Squires as the Perſon that cut off her Stays.

Mr. Davy. We ſhall now produce ſeveral Witneſſes, who, at various Times, during the Month of January 53, were in the very Room in which the Defendant ſwore ſhe was confined.

Fortune Natus ſworn.

F. Natus. I live at Waltham-Croſs, when I am at Home; I have lived there almoſt two Years.

Mr. Davy. Was you there before the Year 52?

F. Natus. I was there a good while before that.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever live at Enfield-Waſh, and when did you come there?

F. Natus. On the Monday Fortnight after my Lord-Mayor's Day, of Sir Criſp Gaſcoyne's Mayoralty, I came from the Wheat-ſheaf at Waltham-Croſs, and went to lodge at Mrs. Wells's Houſe at Enfield-Waſh.

Mr. Davy. Are you a married Man?

F. Natus. I am, Sir; my Wife's Name is Judith; ſhe lived with me all the Time.

Mr. Davy. In what Room did you lodge at Mrs. Wells's?

F. Natus. In a Room properly called the Workſhop; that is, the Room that goes up out of the Kitchen, about ſeven or eight Steps to go up.

Mr. Davy. Is it a long or ſquare Room?

F. Natus. It is a long Room, no Squareneſs belongs to it, with a Pantile Roof.

Mr. Davy. How many Windows are there to it?

F. Natus. There are two; one facing the Feet of my Bed, it was a ſingle Caſement; and the other at the farther End of the Room, upon the left Hand as I lay, a larger than the other, one Half boarded, and the other Half Glaſs, looking into the great Road; and there was a Chimney facing the Foot of my Bed, on the Right-hand Side, in the Corner of the Room next the little Window.

Mr. Davy. What was your Bed?

F. Natus. It was made of Hay and Straw mixed together.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Pillow or Bolſter, and what was it made of?

F. Natus. I had a Sack of Wool for my Bolſter.

Mr. Davy. Did your Wife lie with you on this Bed?

F. Natus. She did, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Mention the Furniture of the Room.

F. Natus. When I came firſt into the Room, there was pretty nigh half a Load of Hay, as nigh as I can gueſs; a large Cheſt of Drawers on the Left-hand Side, about half Way in the Room; two or three Side-Saddles, one Man's Saddle; a large Box that had ſome Pollard in it, it was a deepiſh Drawer, and formerly did belong to the Cheſt of Drawers; a Tub to hold ſome Chaff for Mrs. Wells's Horſe, and a Tub with ſome Iron Hoops on it; an old Gun, and a Barrel of a Gun beſides; the Gun ſtood in the Corner upon ſome Pantiles; an old Lanthorn, an old Spit, and an old croſs-cut Saw, that ſtood upright in the Chimney; there was Pullies and a Line that belonged to a Jack, that came through the Hole at the right Hand of my Bed, over my Head; the Hole of the Line came through, was large enough to put three of my Fiſts in, and about a Foot in Length; I uſed to put a Wiſp of Hay in it to keep out the Cold; there was alſo the Sign of the Crown there, almoſt at the Feet of my Bed.

Mr. Davy. Was the Sign made of Wood or Copper?

F. Natus. It was made of Wood.

Mr. Davy. Was there any Grate in the Chimney?

F. Natus. No, there never was a Grate in the Room ſince I knew the Houſe.

Mr. Davy. Did you obſerve any Thing elſe in the Room?

F. Natus. I obſerved a Bar there, that belonged to the Bar in the Kitchen, where they uſed to keep all their Liquor; it was old, ſo they brought it up Stairs.

Mr. Davy. Were there any Pictures in the Room?

F. Natus. I never ſaw a Picture in the Room in my Life.

Mr. Davy. What was over the Chimney?

F. Natus. There was an old Iron Caſement on the Top of the Chimney; it was all Iron, no Glaſs at all, to the beſt of my Remembrance.

Mr. Davy. Was there any Lead in it?

F. Natus. There was no Lead in it, as I think, only the Frame of a Caſement.

Mr. Davy. How long did you lodge there?

F. Natus. I lodged there ten Weeks, all but three Days, and in no other Place but this Room. I lay out of it but one Night in all the Time, that was on a Wedneſday Night; my Wife never lay a Night out of it in that Time, except that Night I can't tell, I not being there.

Mr. Davy. Was the Quantity of Hay decreaſed, when you lodged there?

F. Natus. It was; they kept a Horſe, and had ſome for him out of it conſtantly, almoſt every Day.

Mr. Davy. How much Hay might there be left, when you laſt lay there?

F. Natus. It might be the Value of Ten or twelve Truſſes, if it had been tied up.

Mr. Davy. Was any of the Furniture of the Room taken out while you was there?---F. Natus. None at all, but the Sign of the Crown, that was bought by Ezra Whiffin.

Mr. Davy. When did he buy that?

F. Natus. I cannot juſtly ſay that; I did not ſee him take it away.

Mr. Davy. How do you know that he bought it?

F. Natus. Becauſe he has now got it hanging up at his Door. There was a large Piece of Wood under the Foot of my Bed, and ſome Irons in it that belonged to the Sign; he has had them ſince he bought the Sign, and the Piece of Wood is in the Chamber now. I was there New and Old Chriſtmas, and all the Month of January, till I was taken up on the 2d of February.

Mr. Davy. Look at that young Woman, (meaning Canning) did you ever ſee her there in January?

F. Natus. I don't know any thing of her; I never ſaw her in the Houſe, or at the Houſe; I only had a Glimpſe of her at Juſtice Taſhmaker's; when they were taken up, I was at Work, and was ſent for Home.

Mr. Davy. Did any body beſides your Wife and yourſelf go into that Room?

F. Natus. Yes, one John Howit, Mrs. Wells's Son; he came there for ſome Pollard to feed his Mother's Sow and Pigs with, and ſeveral Times for Hay, when I was there; and Sarah Howit, his Siſter, ſhe often came for Pollard to ſerve the Pigs; ſhe almoſt always lived at Home: I have ſeen the Widow Long there; her Maiden Name was Elizabeth Wells; I have ſeen her there ſeveral Times in the Month of January; there are two Longs; one of them is Mr. Long's own Daughter, ſhe never was there: I have ſeen Virtue Hall in that Room.

Mr. Davy. Did Virtue Hall lodge in the Houſe?---F. Natus. She was a Lodger there before I knew the Houſe, in one of the beſt Chambers.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember when the Gypſey firſt came there?

F. Natus. I cannot well remember the Day punctually that they came there; they came about a Week and a Day before they were taken up.

Mr. Davy. What Rooms did they lodge in?

F. Natus. They lodged up the main Stairs, in one of the beſt Rooms.

Mr. Davy. Mention, if you can, what Rooms the ſeveral People lay in.

F. Natus. I can deſcribe none of them, becauſe I never was much in them: Virtue Hall lay along with Mrs. Wells: I had been in the Rooms, but never to take much Notice of them.

Mr. Davy. Deſcribe the ſeveral Rooms to which the Stair-caſe leads.

F. Natus. There was one Room on the left-hand Side the Stair-caſe; there Mrs. Wells and Virtue Hall lay in one Bed, I believe; the old Gypſey lay in a Room oppoſite.

Mr. Davy. Where did George Squires lie?---F. Natus. I don't know.

Mr. Davy. Have you any particular Reaſon for remembering the Time of the Gypſey's coming to Wells's Houſe?

F. Natus. I am no ways exact to the Day, but by Reaſon ſhe looked ſo frightful, that I did not care to be at the Fire with her.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever ſeen Mary Squires, or her Son, or Daughters, before the Time you mention?

F. Natus. No, I never had, Sir, in all the Courſe of my Life.

Mr. Davy. Do you know who came to Enfield-Waſh with Mary Squires?

F. Natus. No, I don't, becauſe I was then at Work; her Son and two Daughters lodged there all the Time ſhe did.

Mr. Davy. Did they board in the Houſe?

F. Natus. No, they went to the Shops to buy their Victuals; they were acquainted with Mrs. Larney, who ſells Butter, Cheeſe, Bread, and Bacon; ſhe lives about two Stones-caſt from Mrs. Wells's Houſe.

Mr. Davy. Is ſhe a married Woman?

F. Natus. She is; her Huſband is a Bricklayer, I think, named John.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember any Pitcher in the Houſe?

F. Natus. I remember one very well; it was a largiſh black Pitcher, broken about the Mouth; my Wife made uſe of it over-Night, before we were taken up, to fetch Water from a Pump over the Way, at Mr. Howard's, for my Supper: Virtue Hall, and Mrs. Wells, and Sarah Howit, uſed to go there for Water.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember any Bed-gown Mrs. Wells had?

F. Natus. No, I don't remember ſhe ever had any at all.

Mr. Davy. Look at this Pitcher, Handkerchief, and Bed-gown; do you know either of them?

F. Natus. I'll ſwear to the Pitcher, that is Mrs. Wells's; I never ſaw the Handkerchief and Bed-gown in my Life.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember one Robert White coming to Wells's Houſe?

F. Natus. I do; he uſed to come there, as far as I know, under Pretence of courting Sal Howit, almoſt every Night; I have known him five or ſix Years; he has ſeen me go to Bed in that Room ſeveral Nights.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Nares. What is your Buſineſs?

F. Natus. I am a poor labouring Man.

Mr. Nares. Where have you been ſince you was taken up?

F. Natus. I have been at Work at Mr. Bell's, at the Four-Swans, at Waltham-Croſs.

Mr. Nares. Did you work for him before?

F. Natus. No, I did not, Sir.

Mr. Nares. Are you ſure this is the Pitcher that uſed to go ſo often to the Pump?

F. Natus. This is it.

Mr. Nares. How came you to go to live at Enfield-Waſh?

F. Natus. I went there from London, being hired by a Farmer at Waltham-Croſs, and I could not have conſtant Lodging there.

Mr. Nares. Who directed you to Mother Wells's Houſe?

F. Natus. A Man, whoſe Name is Payne, and my Wife, went and aſked for Lodging; I was to pay Nine-Pence per Week.

Mr. Nares. Why did not you lodge in the other Part of the Houſe?

F. Natus. There were no Rooms empty there.

Mr. Nares. Was not there a Garret empty?

F. Natus. I don't know, I never was up them.

Mr. Nares. Was not you ſometimes diſturbed of your Reſt by People making a Noiſe in the Kitchen?

F. Natus. They could not come into the Kitchen but I could hear them; I very ſeldom heard much Noiſe; ſometimes I ſlept almoſt all Night.

Mr. Nares. What Time do the Family uſe to go to Bed?

F. Natus. The Family generally go to Bed betwixt Nine and Ten o'Clock; I never knew any Harm by the Houſe; the People that belong to the Houſe have got a very bad Character; but from what I know of it, I never ſaw any Harm in it, and it is a very ſober, honeſt Houſe; I never ſaw any ill Tricks, or Irregularity, all the Time I was there.

Mr. Nares. What Time of the Day did Robert White uſe to come?

F. Natus. He uſed to come when he left off his Day's Work, may-be about Six or Seven o'Clock.

Mr. Nares. How long did he uſe to ſtay?

F. Natus. May-be two Hours, ſeldom longer.

Mr. Nares. Was there any other Lodger there beſides you?

F. Natus. Virtue Hall was another.

Mr. Nares. What did ſhe uſe to do for a Living?

F. Natus. She uſed to ſpin.

Mr. Nares. She was a very induſtrious Girl; was ſhe not?

F. Natus. I cannot ſay for that, ſhe uſed to work but a little.

Mr. Nares. Can you remember when the Sign was carried out?

F. Natus. I cannot ſay when it was really: I do not ſay what Time I miſſed it, but only I remember its being there.

Mr. Nares. What Time were the Sign-Irons carried out?

F. Natus. They were not carried out till ſome time in January, before I was taken up.

Mr. Nares. How long before you was taken up?

F. Natus. It may be more than a Week or ten Days before.

Mr. Nares. Now I would aſk you whether you was in Company with Arthur Newit?

F. Natus. I have ſeveral Times; I have work'd for him.

Mr. Nares. Do you know one John Jackſon?

F. Natus. I do; he is a Farmer, and lives about a Mile out of Ware Town.

Mr. Nares. Do you know William Hubbard?

F. Natus. I cannot ſay I do.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever take an Oath upon this Affair?

F. Natus. The firſt I ever took was before Sir Criſp Gaſcoyne, at the Manſion-Houſe.

Mr. Nares. How long is that ago?---F. Natus. I cannot recollect that.

Mr. Nares. Do you think it is more than ſix Months ago?

F. Natus. It muſt be more than that.

Mr. Nares. Are you ſure the Girl never was in that Room?

F. Natus. Yes, Sir, I am, the Time I lodged there, which was ten Weeks all but three Days.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever fall in Company with Mr. Newit after this?

F. Natus. Yes, ſeveral Times.

Mr. Nares. Do you remember what Converſation paſſed?

F. Natus. He has taxed me ſeveral Times with ſwearing falſe, and offered to lay a Wager that I lodged in another Houſe at Enfield-Waſh, beſides Mother Wells's.

Mr. Nares. Was ever ſuch a Wager laid?

F. Natus. I believe there was; but what I ſaid was Truth.

Mr. Nares. What was the Wager?

F. Natus. I believe it was a Shilling a-piece, I think ſo; but it was drawn, becauſe he found he was wrong.

Mr. Nares. We have thoſe preſent that can give an Account of it, ſo be careful: Say whether or not, upon that Concluſion, you did admit you had lodged at another Houſe?

F. Natus. No, Gentlemen, I am come here to ſpeak the Truth; I never did admit, in their Preſence, that I lodged in another Room, or in another Houſe.

Mr. Nares. Did you never admit you had loſt your Wager, and that you had laid in another Room?

F. Natus. I never did admit it; I did not loſe the Wager at all, becauſe it was drawn.

Mr. Davy. When was you applied to, to lay this Wager?

F. Natus. It is about a Quarter of a Year ago.

Mr. Davy. Where was this?

F. Natus. It was at Mr. Bell's Houſe at the Four Swans at Waltham-Croſs.

Mr. Davy. What was the Wager?

F. Natus. I cannot ſay what Money was laid, I down'd with my Money myſelf.

Mr. Davy. Who was in the Room at that Time?

F. Natus. There were ſeveral People there drinking; I cannot ſay whether they were common Men or Gentlemen.

Mr. Davy. Was the Money ſtaked?

F. Natus. I cannot ſay whether it was a Shilling; the Money was ſtaked down.

Mr. Davy. Who held the Stakes?—F. Natus. I don't know.

Mr. Davy. Did Mrs. Bell hold it?

F. Natus. I don't know that ſhe did; I will not be ſure of that; I had ſome of mine again.

Mr. Davy. Why had you it not all again?

F. Natus. I paid for a Decanter of Beer out of it.

Mr. Davy. Did Mr. Newit pay for any out of it?

F. Natus. He paid for none.

Mr Davy. Did you drink Part of the Beer?—F. Natus. I did, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Was you here upon the Trial of Mary Squires?

F. Natus. I had a Subpœna, and did come, and was in the Old-Bailey Yard, and up near the Door.

Mr. Davy. What prevented your coming into Court to give Evidence?

F. Natus. Becauſe I was not called; none of the Witneſſes were called, never a one.

Mr. Davy. Was there any other Reaſon?

F. Natus. No other Reaſon, but they were not called.

Mr. Davy. Was you not aſſaulted?

F. Natus. I was, at the Place that turns out of the Old-Bailey Yard, three or four Times, and I ſhewed my Subpœna.

Mr. Davy. Who aſſaulted you?

F. Natus. There was a talliſh Man that kept the Gate, pitted very much with the Small-Pox, he was the only Perſon that turned me out of the Yard.

Mr. Davy. Did any other Perſon uſe you ill?

F. Natus. There were ſeveral other People, but none touched me to turn me out.

Mr. Davy. Was you alone?

F. Natus. I was with the other Witneſſes; they ſtood upon the Steps; two or three of them were turned out of the Yard.

Mr. Davy. What were the other Witneſſes attending for?

F. Natus. For the ſame as I did.

Mr. Davy. What are their Names?

F. Natus. I cannot ſay half their Names.

Mr. Davy. Name ſome of them.

F. Natus. There was the Widow Long was one; they wanted to mob her.

Mr. Nares. I muſt obſtruct this; this does no ways affect Canning, if it was the Neglect of the Officers; it cannot be proved that ſhe was privy to it.

Judith Natus ſworn.

J. Natus. The laſt Witneſs is my Huſband; he does Huſbandry-Work; he did work for Mr. Payne at Waltham-Croſs; and we then lodged at Mrs. Arnold's, a Fortnight; ſhe bid us provide ourſelves, becauſe we were very poor; and at the Fortnight's End we came to Mrs. Wells's Houſe at Enfield-Waſh, where we lodged ten Weeks all but three Days, before we were taken up; I cannot tell the Day of the Month when we came there.

Mr. Willes. What Month was it in?—J. Natus. I cannot tell.

Mr. Willes. Was it in September, October, November, or December?

J. Natus. I cannot tell.

Mr. Willes. Was it before New Chriſtmas-Day?—J. Natus. It was.

Mr. Willes. How long is it ago?

J. Natus. Upon my Word I cannot tell, becauſe I am no Scholar.

Mr. Willes. During the ten Weeks all but three Days, how many Nights did you lie out of that Houſe?

J. Natus. I never lay out of it one Night during the whole Time; my Huſband lay out of it one Night, and but one.

Mr. Willes. What Room did you lie in?

J. Natus. We lay in a Room they call the Workſhop.

Mr. Willes. In what Part of the Houſe is it?

J. Natus. They go through the Kitchen, and up eight Stairs, as near as I can gueſs; our Bed was of Hay and Straw, on the right Hand going up; we had a Sack of Wool for our Bolſter.

Mr. Willes. On which Side was the Head of your Bed?

J. Natus. It looked into the Kitchen.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Hole near your Bed?

J. Natus. Yes, there was one at the Head of the Bed; we uſed to ſtuff it with Hay to keep the Cold out; it was there before we came there.

Mr. Willes. Where did that Hole look into, when it was not ſtopped up?—J. Natus. It looked into the Kitchen.

Mr. Willes. Deſcribe the Room; is there any Chimney in it?

J. Natus. There is, and a Caſement over it.

Mr. Willes. What do you mean by a Caſement over it?

J. Natus. There was an old Caſement, all to Pieces almoſt, over the Chimney, when we came into the Room.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Glaſs in it?

J. Natus. There might be about half a Caſement, not much Glaſs to ſignify.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Grate in the Chimney?

J. Natus. No, there never was for the Time I was there.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Cheſt of Drawers?

J. Natus. There was a Neſt of Drawers, which I uſed to put my Bread and Cheeſe in, becauſe the Mice ſhould not run away with the Cheeſe.

Mr. Willes. Was this Cheſt of Drawers on the right or left-hand Side of your Bed?—J. Natus. They were on the left-hand Side.

Mr. Willes. Was the Hole you uſed to ſtop with Hay of any Uſe?

J. Natus. No, none at all.

Mr. Willes. How big was it?

J. Natus. It was about as big as my two double Fiſts.

Mr. Willes. What was hung over this Hole?

J. Natus. The Jack-line that was at the Head of my Bed.

Mr. Willes. Then cannot you tell the Uſe of the Hole?

J. Natus. I believe it was for the Jack-line to go through.

Mr. Willes. Pray, what other Furniture was there in the Room?

J. Natus. I believe, as nigh as I can gueſs, there was about half a Load of Hay, that was there before we came.

Mr. Willes. What was there in the Room beſides?

J. Natus. There were Pan-tiles at the farther End of the Room, which had laid there before we came; an old Spit, and an old Lanthorn, juſt by the Chimney; one Man's Saddle, and two Women's Saddles; there was a Saw, and a Tub which Mrs. Wells uſed to put Chaff in for the Horſe, and a Box that ſhe uſed to put Pollard in for the Pigs, that ſtood on the left-hand Side.

Mr. Willes. Did ſhe uſe to keep Pigs?

J. Natus. Yes, Sir, ſhe did, in a little Sort of a Waſh-houſe. She uſed to go into the Room for Pollard every Day, and feed them with it. There was a Sign of a Fountain there; it ſtood in the Room before we came, behind a Tub where the Chaff was.

Mr. Willes. Was there ever a Gun there?

J. Natus. Yes, there was a Gun.

Mr. Nares. Don't put Words into her Mouth.

Mr. Willes. Was there one Sign or two?

J. Natus. There were two, the Fountain and the Crown.

Mr. Willes. Where was the Sign of the Crown?

J. Natus. They ſtood together, fronting you as you go up. Mr. Whiffin bought the Sign of the Crown before Old Chriſtmas; the Irons that belonged to the Sign-poſt were at the Feet of my Bed, and he bought them: He took them away about a Week or a Fortnight before we were taken up, as nigh as I can gueſs.

Mr. Willes. How long had Mrs. Squires lodged there, before ſhe was taken up?—J. Natus. She had lodged there a Week and one Day.

Mr. Willes. Do you know George Squires?

J. Natus. I do; I never ſaw him in my Life before he came to lodge there: There were two Daughters, one is named Lucy.

Mr. Willes. Where did they uſe to lie?

J. Natus. They uſed to lie up Stairs in the other Part of the Houſe; ſhe and her two Daughters lay in a Chamber over the Parlour.

Mr. Willes. Were there any other young People in the Houſe?

J. Natus. There were Nobody at all in the Houſe but them and ourſelves.

Mr. Willes. In what Room of the Houſe did Virtue Hall lodge?

J. Natus. In the Room fronting the Stairs, near where the Gypſies lodged.

Mr. Willes. Had there been any Uſe made of this Hay?

J. Natus. They uſed to fetch it for the Horſe.

Mr. Willes. Who uſed to fetch it?

J. Natus. Sal Howit; ſhe is Mrs. Wells's Daughter; and Mrs. Wells herſelf, and Virtue Hall uſed to fetch ſome, and ſometimes Pollard for the Pigs.

Mr. Willes. How came Sal Howit to be Mrs. Wells's Daughter?

J. Natus. Mrs. Wells had two Huſbands.

Mr. Willes. How was this Houſe ſupplied with Water?

J. Natus. Sometimes we fetched it from a Gentleman's Pump from over the Way.

Mr. Willes. Look at this Pitcher.

J. Natus. I cannot ſwear to the Pitcher; but I have fetched Water myſelf many a Time in ſuch a black Pitcher; I think it was not broke ſo much at the Mouth as it is now: One may be like another: I cannot ſay it is the ſame; I think it was not quite ſo big as this.

Mr. Willes. Look upon this Bed-gown, examine it well.

J. Natus. I do; I never ſaw this in my Life, before they came and took us up: Mrs. Wells had no Bed-gown.

Mr. Willes. Look at that young Woman, (meaning Elizabeth Canning) did you ever ſee her at Mrs. Wells's?

J. Natus. I never did, before ſhe came with them to take us up, if that was the laſt Word I was to ſpeak.

Mr. Willes. Look at this Handkerchief; do you know it?

J. Natus. I never ſaw it in my Life before.

Mr. Willes. Was you ſubpœna'd at Squires's Trial, in order to give Evidence?—J. Natus. I was; but they would not let me come in.

Mr. Willes. You was taken up with the reſt, was you?

J. Natus. I was, and carried before Juſtice Taſhmaker, and from thence to Juſtice Fielding. Canning cleared me; ſhe ſaid ſhe never ſaw me before.

Mr. Willes. Did you give the ſame Account as you do now?

J. Natus. I did.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Williams. Did ſhe charge you with any thing when you was taken up?

J. Natus. No, ſhe did not.

Mr. Williams. Did ſhe charge Mrs. Wells at all?

J. Natus. No, ſhe did not.

Mr. Williams. Did you hear her ſay Virtue Hall was by, when Mrs. Squires cut the Lacing of her Stays?

J. Natus. I cannot ſay I heard her ſay it.

Mr. Williams. What Countryman is your Huſband?

J. Natus. He comes from Glouceſterſhire.

Mr. Williams. From whence are you?

J. Natus. I was bred and born at Ware in Hertfordſhire.

FRIDAY the 3d of May.

Mary Larney ſworn.

M. Larney. I live at Enfield-Waſh, and keep a Chandler's Shop. I have known Fortune Natus and his Wife ſome conſiderable Time; they have bought Goods of me, that is, Bread, Butter, Cheeſe and Beer.

Mr. Davy. When was the firſt Time you ever ſaw them?

M. Lar. It was ſome Time after Michaelmas was Twelve-month, between that and Chriſtmas they lodged at Mrs. Wells's Houſe.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever hear them ſay in what Part of the Houſe they lodged?—M. Lar. No, I never did, indeed.

Mr. Davy. How long did they remain there?

M. Lar. They remained there after the Time they were taken up, for they came back after that.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember any other Lodgers Mrs. Wells had in her Houſe?

M. Lar. Virtue Hall uſed to come ſometimes for Things, and I remember the Gypſies coming.

Mr. Davy. When was the firſt Time of your ſeeing them?

M. Lar. It was on a Wedneſday; and the Thurſday was Se'nnight after, in the Morning, they were taken up.

Mr. Davy. When you ſaw the Gypſies, how many of them were there?

M. Lar. Lucy was the firſt I ſaw of them; ſhe knocked at my Door, and aſked me if I ſold ſmall Bread, on the Wedneſday; I ſaid, Yes; I ſold her a Loaf and ſome Cheeſe and Small-Beer, and lent her a Pitcher to carry it Home; (I live oppoſite Mrs. Wells's Houſe) in the Evening of the ſame Day old Mrs. Squires came. George brought the Pitcher Home the next Morning. He or the Siſter came every Day till they were taken up, and had Things of me, and ſometimes the old Gentlewoman for Tobacco; I ſaw them commonly two or three Times a-Day; that very Morning they were taken up, they had Tea.

Mr. Davy. What is your Huſband's Name?

M. Lar. His Name is John Larney; he is a Bricklayer.

Mr. Davy. Do you know whether Mrs. Wells keeps any Cattle?

M. Lar. She keeps a Horſe and a Hog.

Mr. Davy. How long have you known her?

M. Lar. I have known her almoſt forty Years; ever ſince I can remember.

Mr. Davy. With what did ſhe uſe to feed her Horſe?

M. Lar. I have ſeen them fetch Grains; and I know ſhe bought Hay, for I ſaw it brought in, and by the Badneſs of the Weather it was ſpoiled.

Mr. Davy. When was it brought in?

M. Lar. In the ſeaſonable Time of Hay-making, before laſt Chriſtmas was Twelve-month.

Mr. Davy. Where did ſhe put it?

M. Lar. As ſhe ſaid then, ſhe put it into the Room called the Shop.

Mr. Nares. I object againſt that, as legal Evidence.

Mr. Davy. I am not aſking any thing Mrs. Wells ſaid ſince 1752, but what ſhe ſaid before, when it was impoſſible for her to know of this Affair, when it could ſerve no Purpoſe to ſpeak falſely; that is Evidence.

Mr. Nares. There is one plain Rule as to the Evidence of Hearſay; that is, that when you can have that very Perſon that proves this very Fact, ſhe is the Perſon to be called; this is not Evidence at all.

Court. The Court are of Opinion that it will be proper for Wells to give her own Evidence.

Mr. Davy. Was you ever in this Workſhop at Mrs. Wells's?

M. Lar. No, not till after the People were taken up.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember ſeeing any Hay carried to the Houſe after that Time you have mentioned?

M. Lar. No, I do not.

Mr. Davy. How much was brought there in the Year 1752?

M. Lar. It was looſe upon the Cart; I don't know how much there was of it; I ſaw it carried to the Door, but did not ſee it put into the Workſhop.

Mr. Davy. What Door did you ſee it carried to?

M. Lar. Towards the Stable-door, as they call it.

Mr. Davy. Near what Part of the Houſe is the Stable?

M. Lar. The lower Part towards London; it lies in a Line with the Houſe.

Mr. Davy. Is there any Loft over the Stable?

M. Lar. Not as I know of.

Mr. Davy. To what Part of the Houſe was this Hay carried?

M. Lar. I ſaw it ſtanding againſt the Stable.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee it unloaded?---M. Lar. No, I did not.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. How was this Hay brought?

M. Lar. It was brought in a Cart, and drawed up to the Stable, which ranges along with the Houſe; I ſaw no more of it.

Mr. Moreton. What Countrywoman are you?

M. Lar. I was born and bred at Enfield-Waſh.

Mr. Moreton. How long has Mrs. Wells lived in that Houſe?

M. Lar. She lived there before I can remember.

Mr. Moreton. A good Sort of a Houſe, was it not?

M. Lar. I did not frequent the Houſe.

Mr. Moreton What is the general Reputation of the Houſe?

M. Lar. I ſuppoſe, by the Report, you know what a Houſe it was.

Mr. Davy. We will ſuppoſe it to be a moſt infamous Houſe.

Mr. Moreton. Did you ever ſee any Gypſies there before?

M. Lar. No, never before that Time, to my Knowledge; I never ſaw any at Mrs. Wells's before. I was very much ſurprized, and put the Money I took of her into a Pail of Water, becauſe I had heard they can get the Money again.

Mr. Moreton. Whoſe Money was you afraid would be ſo nimble, Lucy's or the old Woman's?

M. Lar. I had put Lucy's in my Pocket amongſt other Money; it was the old Woman's Money I put in the Water.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know William Smith?

M. Lar. He lives two or three Miles from me, upon the Chace; he is a Farmer.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know Samuel Arnot?

M. Lar. I know no ſuch Name, unleſs it be he that lives up in the Town.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know Mr. Howard and his Wife?

M. Lar. They are People of very good Character, to be ſure.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know Humphry Holding?

M. Lar. I do; he lives in Turkey-Street, about half a Mile from me.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know Mr. Story?

M. Lar. I have no Acquaintance with him, or Knowledge of him.

Sarah Howit ſworn.

S. Howit. I am Daughter to Suſannah Wells, and lived at Enfield-Waſh with her at the Time Mrs. Canning ſaid ſhe was confined there.

Mr. Willes. Do you know Mary Squires?

S. Howit. I do, upon the Account of her being at our Houſe a Week and one Day, and George and Lucy; they were all three together; they came on the Wedneſday, and were taken up the Thurſday Se'nnight after.

Mr. Willes. Look at that Pitcher; do you know it?

S. Howit. There was a Pitcher that uſed to go frequently to Mr. Howard's Pump.

Mr. Willes. Is this the Pitcher?

S. Howit. I cannot tell; it was a black Pitcher.

Mr. Willes. Did you live there the Time Fortune Natus and his Wife were there?---S. Howit. I did.

Mr. Willes. What Time did they come?

S. Howit. I cannot ſay at what Time they came.

Mr. Willes. How long were they there before Mary Squires came?

S. Howit. O! a great while; they were there the Time Squires was there, and the Time that Canning ſaid ſhe was confined there; and they lay in the Room ſhe ſays ſhe was confined in, which was the Workſhop.

Mr. Willes. What do you mean by Workſhop?

S. Howit. I mean the long Room that you go through the Kitchen to go up to it.

Mr. Willes. What did Natus and his Wife lie upon there?

S. Howit. They lay on Hay and Straw.

Mr.

Mr. Willes. Can you ſpeak particularly, how long they were there?
S. Howit. They were there two Months.
Mr. Willes. What Uſe was made of this Room?
S. Howit. There was a great deal of looſe Hay in it, and Lumber; the Hay was for an old Horſe my Mother had. There was Pollard in a great Drawer, to feed a Sow and Pigs.
Mr. Willes. Do you remember about Chriſtmas-Time, before Squires came there, whether the Room was locked up?
S. Howit. No, there never was a Lock upon the Door in my Memory; I remember it ever ſince I was born almoſt; I was born in the Houſe.
Mr. Willes. Was you ever in that Room in that Month of January?
S. Howit. I was almoſt every Day.
Mr. Willes. Are you ſure of that?—S. Howit. I am ſure of it.
Mr. Willes. Can you take upon you to ſwear you was at your Mother's all the Month of December?—S. Howit. Yes, I can.
Mr. Willes. Can you, that you was all the Month of January?
S. Howit. I lay in that Houſe every Night in the Month of January?
Mr. Willes. Do you remember, about a Fortnight or three Weeks before Squires came to your Houſe, that any body was in that Workſhop with you?
S. Howit. Virtue Hall went into it frequently, as much as I: We were there both together at the Time the Trees (againſt the little Window, a Caſement that faces the Stairs) were lopped.
Mr. Williams. At what Time was it that the Trees were lopped?
S. Howit. I believe it was on the 8th of January; there were Edward Allen, Giles Knight, and John Larney, that lopped them.
Mr. Willes. Was the Caſement open or ſhut?
S. Howit. I opened it myſelf at that Time.
Mr. Willes. Did any Thing paſs between you and them?
S. Howit. There were Words paſſed, but I cannot tell what the Converſation was.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Nares. Have you lived at this Houſe of your Mother's all your Life-time?
S. Howit. I was bred up there, and lived there ſome Time, not the greateſt Part of my Life.
Mr. Nares. How long have you been abſent from thence?
S. Howit. I have been five or ſix Years from it, and never ſaw my Mother's Houſe in the Time.
Mr. Nares. How came you to be at Home at this Time?
S. Howit. I was out of Place, and ſo came Home.
Mr. Nares. How long had you been at Home before the Gypſies came there?
S. Howit. I believe about a Year and a Half, or two Years.
Mr. Nares. How do you get your Living?
S. Howit. I go out to get my Bread, to work in the Country, ſometimes Harveſt-Work; I have no Family Affair with my Mother; I uſed to be in the Family, when I was not engaged another Way.
Mr. Nares. Do you remember what Quantity of Hay your Mother had at this Time?
S. Howit. There was a great deal of it; I believe, not a Load.
Mr. Nares. Had ſhe any other Hay for her Horſe?
S. Howit. No, ſhe had not; it was carried to the Horſe from Time to Time.
Mr. Nares. How much Hay might there be when Natus lay there?
S. Howit. There was a great deal.
Mr. Nares. Can't you tell any thing of this Converſation between theſe Men and you?----S. Howit. I cannot.
Mr. Nares. Did you begin, or they?
S. Howit. I don't know whether Virtue Hall began, or who.
Mr. Nares. Who converſed with them moſt?
S. Howit. I ſaid ſome Things, but can't tell what; I don't pretend to ſay one Word that paſſed.
Mr. Nares. Did they begin with you, or you with them?
S. Howit. I can't tell who begun.
Mr. Nares. Were they Acquaintance of yours?
S. Howit. Edward Allen went to School with me.
Mr. Nares. What Sort of Trees were they?
S. Howit. They are great high Trees.
Mr. Nares. Which lopped the Tree?
S. Howit. Giles Knight; they were not all at Work at the ſame Time; my Mother gave them a full Pot to lop the Tree; I ſaw them drink it.
Mr. Nares. Who had the Lop?
Mr. Howit. Larney had the Lop?
Mr. Nares. Whoſe Trees were they?
S. Howit. They are Richard Allen's Trees; they only cut off ſome Part that hung over the Place.
Mr. Nares. How much in Quantity was cut off?
S. Howit. I can't tell; I thought there was a Faggot, but I did not ſee Larney make it up; I ſaw him go by with ſome of it.
Mr. Nares. Were theſe People ſent there on purpoſe?
S. Howit. No; two were hedging round the Fields.
Mr. Nares. What did the others do, while Knight lopped the Tree?
S. Howit. They ſtood on the Ground, and looked on.
Mr. Nares. How did Virtue Hall and you ſtand, by the Side of each other at the Window?
S. Howit. Virtue Hall looked over my Shoulder.
Mr. Nares. Could the Men ſee you both?
S. Howit. Yes, Sir; but I was the principal Perſon that was looking out at the Window.
Mr. Nares. Was there any other Window in the Houſe that looked towards that Part?
S. Howit. No, not directly; there is one, but it ſtands ſlanting.
Recorder. Was you preſent when the Gypſey, her Son and Daughter, and your Mother, were taken up?----S. Howit. Yes, I was.
Recorder. Was you preſent when Elizabeth Canning was brought there?
S. Howit. I was then ſhut up in the Parlour with the others.
Recorder. Do you remember Elizabeth Canning being brought into the Parlour?----S. Howit. I do.
Recorder. Recollect what paſſed there.
S. Howit. She ſwore to the Gypſey-Woman, and did not ſee her Face.
Recorder. Are you ſure of that?
S. Howit. She had never ſeen her Face; ſhe ſwore to her before ſhe ſaw her Face; I am ſure of it.
Recorder. What did the Gypſey-Woman ſay upon that?
S. Howit. The poor Woman did not know it was ſhe that ſhe ſwore to, till her Daughter Lucy ſaid, Mother, ſhe ſwears you cut off her Stays: then the Gypſey got up and ſaid, Look, Madam, don't ſay it is me that cut off your Stays; and puſhed up her Hat; look, for God's Sake, and don't ſwear to me; don't ſay it is me, for I am innocent; or to that Purpoſe; I may not repeat directly the Words in particular.
Recorder. Did ſhe ſay where ſhe was at the Time?
S. Howit. No, ſhe did not, but George did; but what he ſaid, I can't tell.
Recorder. Can you deſcribe in what Sort of a Poſture the Gypſey ſat, when Canning came into the Parlour?
S. Howit. She was ſat with her Pipe in her Mouth, by the Fire-ſide, with a Hat and Cloak on, with her Hand upon her Knee.
Recorder. Upon your Oath, whether Elizabeth Canning could ſee her Face at that Time?----S. Howit. She could not.
Recorder. Did ſhe give any Reaſon, why ſhe deſired her not to ſwear againſt her?
S. Howit. I did not hear any Reaſon; after ſhe ſwore to her, then ſhe ſhewed herſelf, and puſhed her Hat up.
Mr. Nares. Had Elizabeth Canning ſeen your Mother's Face before the Time ſhe ſpoke to the Gypſey?
S. Howit. Yes, Sir; yes, in the Room.
Mr. Nares. Did ſhe charge your Mother?----S. Howit. No, ſhe did not.
Mr. Nares. Did ſhe pitch upon the Gypſey of her own accord?
S. Howit. I don't know whether ſhe did or no.
Mr. Nares. Did you hear any body tell her to pitch upon her?
S. Howit. No, I did not.
Mr. Nares. How came you not to be examined upon the Trial of your Mother?
S. Howit. I was not ſubpœna'd up; I have but two Subpœna's, one before the Grand Jury, and the other here.
Recorder. What was the Reaſon you was not ſubpœna'd upon your Mother's Trial?
S. Howit. I was not; I know not the Reaſon.

John Larney ſworn.

J. Larney. I am Huſband to Mary Larney; I live at Enfield at the Two Bridges; I am a Bricklayer. I was along with Edward Allen and Giles Knight, near the Houſe of Suſannah Wells, January 8, 1753. Giles Knight lopped a Tree; he told me, if I would come over, I ſhould have the Lops: When we were there, Edward Allen flung ſome Duſt into the Window of the Workſhop near the Trees, to Sal Howit and Virtue Hall, who were within-ſide.
Mr. Gaſcoyne. In what Poſition did they ſtand?
J. Larney. Sal Howit looked over Virtue Hall's Head.
Mr. Gaſ. What Converſation paſſed upon this?
J. Larney. Upon my Word, I can't tell; there were Words paſſed, but I don't believe there were many; when he bulled the Duſt in, they bid him be eaſy.
Mr. Gaſ. Where was Knight at the Time?
J. Larney. He was then in the Tree, and I ſtood upon the Ground by the Tree.
Mr. Gaſ. How long did you talk to them through the Window?
J. Larney. It might be the Value of ten Minutes.
Mr. Gaſ. Did they both look out at the Window at the ſame Time?
J. Larney. They did, and kept talking to us.
Mr. Gaſ. Who had the Boughs of this Tree?---J. Larney. Mrs. Wells.
Mr. Gaſ. Who carried them to her?
J. Larney. I don't know; I believe they were flung over the Hedge to her; I had the Arms, and ſhe the ſmall Lop.
Mr. Gaſ. What did you do with them?
J. Larney. I carried them Home, and we burnt them: We had half a Dozen or a full Pot of Beer for lopping the Tree; I don't know which.
Mr. Gaſ. Who do theſe Trees belong to?
J. Larney. They belong to Richard Allen. This Window looks into the Room properly called the Workſhop.
Mr. Gaſ. Is there ever another Window that looks the ſame Way as this does?
J. Larney. There is one above upon the Stairs going into the Garret, that belongs to the Houſe.
Mr. Gaſ. Are you ſure it was not that Window at the Garret Stairs, that theſe two Women were looking out at?
J. Larney. I am very ſure it was not.
Mr. Gaſ. Nor a Cellar Window?
J. Larney. No, it was not. There were three other Windows in the Workſhop, and I plaiſtered them up, and left two, one at the North-End, and the other at the Eaſt, that they looked out at.
Mr. Gaſ. What was this Room built for?
J. Larney. It was built for a Carpenter's Shop. Mrs. Wells's firſt Huſband was a Carpenter.
Mr. Gaſ. How far was this Eaſt Window from the Ground, that they were looking out at?
J. Larney. I believe it may be about ſeven or eight Foot.
Mr. Gaſ. In what Condition is the Wall?
J. Larney. It is Lath and Plaiſter, very ſlight; there are a great many Holes in it; that Part towards the South you might ſhake down with your Hand.
Mr. Gaſ. Was it in that Condition at the Time you were lopping the Tree?
J. Larney. I can't ſay that, becauſe People have been up in it, and beating it about.
Mr. Gaſ. Were there ſo many Holes in it, when you were lopping the Tree, as there are now?
J. Larney. There were not; but I did not much mind it.
Mr. Gaſ. Which is the talleſt of the two, Virtue Hall, or Sarah Howit?
J. Larney. Sarah Howit, it may be, by two Inches.
Mr. Gaſ. Recollect, as well as you can, whether you can poſitively ſay, who was the undermoſt, and who the uppermoſt?
J. Larney. To the beſt of my Knowledge, Virtue Hall ſtood neareſt.

Croſs-

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Williams. Whereabouts do you live?

Larney. I live oppoſite Wells's Houſe.

Mr. Williams. Have you been much at her Houſe?

J. Larn. I have often, and all over her Houſe.

Mr. Williams. When was it you were lopping the Trees?

J. Larn. On the 8th of January; I believe on a Monday.

Mr. Williams. Pray, how came you to be ſo particular as to the Time?

J. Larn. Becauſe the Arms of the Trees that I carried Home ſet my Chimney on Fire on the 10th, and I chriſtened my Child on the 12th, and Mrs. Wells was at my Houſe at the Chriſtening.

Mr. Williams. What Quantity of this Lop might you have?

J. Larn. About half a Dozen pretty large Sticks, about as big as my Wriſt. Knight was buſy there, and came and begged a little Small-Beer, and ſaid, if I would come, he'd give me the Lop.

Mr. Williams. Had you ſeen Virtue Hall or Howit that Day before?

J. Larn. I can't ſay; I may forget, if I had.

Mr. Williams. Was you at the Tree before they were at the Window?

J. Larn. They came there partly as ſoon as we.

Mr. Williams. Did they continue there till you had done?

J. Larn. They did partly.

Mr. Williams. How long might you be there in all?

J. Larney. It might be about ten Minutes.

Mr. Williams. Can you recollect what was ſaid at flinging the Dirt up?

J. Larn. I believe ſhe ſaid, Don't, you'll break the Windows.

Mr. Williams. Who ſtood foremoſt?

J. Larn. They ſtood both together.

Williams. Did they ſtand a-breaſt of each other?

J. Larn. No, the Window is not big enough. Virtue Hall looked under Sal's Breaſt, and Sal ſtood over the Shoulder of Virtue Hall.

Williams. Does that Window upon the Stair-caſe look upon the Trees?---J. Larn. It does.

Mr. Williams. Is it directly over the other Window?

J. Larn. No, it is partly over it.

Mr. Williams. Are you ſure they looked out at the lower Window?

J. Larn. I am poſitive of that.

Mr. Williams. When was the firſt Time you gave this Account you have given here, about your having ſpoke to theſe Women on the 8th of January?---J. Larn. I never was ſworn before.

Mr. Williams. Do you remember the Trial of the Gypſey?

J. Larn. I do.

Mr. Williams. When you heard of that, what did you ſay about Canning's being confined in that Room? Did you ever ſay it was true or falſe?

J. Larn. I mentioned ſeveral Times the Circumſtances of the Women looking out at the Window.

Mr. Williams. To whom?---J. Larn. To different People.

Mr. Williams. Did you then mention the Day?

J. Larn. Yes, the 8th of January.

Mr. Williams. Did you ever mention it before Mary Squires was tried?

J. Larn. Yes.

Mr. Williams. To many Perſons?---J. Larn. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Why was you not ſubpœna'd up?

J. Larn. My Wife was. I did not know it was very material to give an Account of it; and did not think proper to put myſelf forward, and I was obliged to get my Bread another Way.

Mr. Williams. Who was in the Tree?---J. Larn. Giles Knight. I was right againſt the Tree on the Ground.

Mr. Williams. What Year were theſe other Windows plaiſtered up in?

J. Larn. In the Year 1750; the Date of the Year is there; I put the Stones up myſelf.

Mr. Williams. You ſay the South Side is very rotten; how was it when you were lopping the Trees?

J. Larn. I did not ſee it then, the Hedge parted us.

Mr. Williams. When was the firſt Time you ſaw Mary Squires?

J. Larn. The Saturday before ſhe was fetched away, and never before, to my Knowledge.

Giles Knight ſworn.

G. Knight. I live at Enfield, and have theſe forty-two Years. I am a Gardener by Trade.

Mr. Davy. How far do you live from Mrs. Wells's Houſe?

G. Knight. About a Mile and a half; I was hedging near her Houſe; I lopped ſome Boughs off a Tree, within about a couple of Yards from her Houſe, at the North Corner, near a Window.

Mr. Davy. Is there a Window in the Garret of that Houſe?

G. Knight. Yes, there is.

Mr. Davy. Was you ever in the Garret?---G. Knight. No.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee any body looking out at that Window, when you was lopping the Tree?

G. Knight. No, but I did out of a Window below that; they were Virtue Hall and Sarah Howit.

Mr. Davy. What Room do they call that, at the Window of which you ſaw theſe Women?

G. Knight. I do not know; the Window is about ten Feet high.

Mr. Davy. Who were with you?

G. Knight. John Larney and Edward Allen were.

Mr. Davy. Did Virtue Hall and Sarah Howit both look out together?

G. Knight. Yes; Sarah Howit was looking over Virtue Hall.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Converſation with them?

G. Knight. I had not: I believe Edward Allen ſpoke to them.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear the Women ſpeak?

G. Knight. I did; but don't know what they ſaid; I think Allen throwed a Couple of Clods of Dirt in to them.

Mr. Davy. Where did he ſtand?

G. Knight. Juſt againſt the Window.

Mr. Davy. Who had the Lops of the Tree?

G. Knight. I gave it to John Larney; he had the biggeſt, I don't know who had the reſt. Allen was at Work with me that Day hedging in the Field for one Mr. Allen.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee Mrs. Wells at that Time?

G. Knight. Yes; we had ſome Beer from Cantril's; Mother Wells paid for it.

Mr. Davy. When was this?

G. Knight. This was on the 8th of January.

Mr. Davy. How do you know it to be preciſely on the 8thof January?

G. Knight. Becauſe it was on the Monday after Old Chriſtmas-Day.

Mr. Davy. What led you to take particular Notice of the Time?

G. Knight. Mrs. Picket had a Cart, loaded with Chalk, broke down on Old Chriſtmas-Day, but it came Home that Day.

Mr. Davy. Have you ſeen any of the other Witneſſes ſince they have been examined?

G. Knight. No, I have ſeen none of them.

Mr. Davy. What Time of the Day was it, when the two Women were looking out at the Window?

G. Knight. It was in the Morning, I believe, or ſome Time in the Forenoon.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember the Trial of the old Gypſey here?

G. Knight. Yes, I was here; I was ſubpœna'd on Mother Wells's Side.

Mr. Davy. What prevented your appearing in Court as a Witneſs?

G. Knight. Becauſe I was not called; I was in the Yard.

Mr. Davy. Was it in your Power to have come in if you had a Mind?

G. Knight. I did not know for that: I did not know the way of it.

Mr. Davy. Was you ever a Witneſs in any Cauſe before now?

G. Knight. No, I never was, till I went before the Grand Jury upon this.

Mr. Davy. How large was that Window, at which the Women were looking out?

G. Knight. I believe big enough for me to get out at.

Mr. Davy. How big is the Garret Window?

G. Knight. That is bigger than this below.

Mr. Davy. Is the Garret Window in a direct Line over the other?

G. Knight. I don't know that.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. Was that directly over the other Window?

G. Knight. No; that above was directly over-againſt the Tree I lopped.

Mr. Moreton. How many Boughs did you lop off?

G. Knight. Six or ſeven.

Mr. Moreton. Who had it?---G. Knight. John Larney.

Mr. Moreton. What Wood was it?---G. Knight. It was Elm.

Mr. Moreton. Should you have been afraid of ſetting your Chimney on Fire with it?

Mr. Davy. What Weather was it?

G. Knight. It was froſty Weather.

Edward Allen ſworn.

E. Allen. I live at Enfield High-way.

Mr. Willes. What Buſineſs do you follow?

E. Allen. I am a Coſtermonger; I go a-hedging and ditching: Richard Allen is my Brother: He has a Field near Mother Wells's Houſe: Giles Knight and I were ſtopping the Gaps round it on the 8th of January: There is a Tree that hangs over a Lane by her Houſe; we cut ſome Boughs off it; John Larney was there; he came to have the biggeſt of the Wood, which he had, and the reſt was thrown over to Mother Wells's. She gave us a full Pot of Beer for doing it. The Beer was fetched from Mr. Cantril's. At the Time Giles Knight lopped the Tree, I ſaw Virtue Hall and Sarah Howit looking out at a little Window; I toſſed up ſeveral Chumps of Dirt to them; the Place they were in was a Sort of a Leantoo, on the back Part of the Houſe.

Mr. Willes. How high is that Window from the Ground?

E. Allen. It may be about ten Feet to the Bottom of the Window.

Mr Willes. Do you remember what Words paſſed between you?

E. Allen. No, I do not.

Mr. Willes. Is there ever another Window belonging to that Houſe, which looks out as that does?

E. Allen. There is one at the Top of the Houſe partly, that may be twenty Foot above the other, where they were.

Mr. Willes. Was you ever in this Room in the Leantoo?

E. Allen. Yes, I have twice ſince this Talk of the Girl's being confined there.

Mr. Willes. What Sort of a Room is it?

E. Allen. It is a long Room, with ſome Hay and Stuff in it.

Mr. Willes. Do you remember the Trial of Squires and Mother Wells?

E. Allen. I do.

Mr. Willes. How came you not to come up then, and give Evidence?

E. Allen. I was not ordered to come; I had no Subpœna.

Mr. Willes. When did you firſt tell this Circumſtance of lopping the Tree?

E. Allen. I told it, when I was aſked the Queſtion.

Mr. Willes. Have you mentioned theſe Circumſtances before Squires's Trial?

E. Allen. I have ſeveral Times.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Nares. Were they both at the Window?---E. Allen. They were.

Mr. Nares. Can't you remember what paſſed between you?

E. Allen. Upon my Word, I do not know.

Mr. Nares. Had ſhe ſaid any Thing to you to provoke you to throw Dirt?

E. Allen. No; we did not throw it in Malice.

Mr. Nares. Was you acquainted with them before?---E. Allen. I was.

Mr. Nares. How did they ſtand at the Window?

E. Allen. They ſtood one by the Side of the other.

Mr. Nares. Did you ſee Squires and Wells taken away?

E. Allen. I did; I ſaw them get into the Cart.

Mr. Nares. Did you mention this of ſeeing them at the Window then?

E. Allen. I did.

Mr. Nares. To whom?

E. Allen. I cannot tell to what Perſon particularly; it was to ſeveral that were in the Room.

Mr. Nares. Did you go before Juſtice Taſhmaker?

E. Allen. No, I did not.

Recorder. Did you hear at that Time, that Elizabeth Canning was ſo long in that Room?——E. Allen. I did.

Recorder. Was you not ſurprized, when you heard ſhe was confined there?

E. Allen. I was ſurprized; and ſaid, if ſhe was there, I thought we ſhould have heard ſomething of her; and if I had, I ſhould preſently have fetched her out.

Mr. Nares. Whether, at the Time you heard Canning had ſaid ſhe was confined in that Room, from the 1ſt of January to the Time of her making her Eſcape, did you tell this Story, that you had been at the Window lopping a Tree?——E. Allen. Yes, I did.

John Cantril ſworn.

J. Cantril. I live not above a hundred Yards from Wells's Houſe; I keep a Public-Houſe: Giles Knight and Edward Allen came to my Houſe on Monday the 8th of January; they ſaid they had done but an indifferent Day's Work, for they had been at Play with Mother Wells's Daughter, out at the back Window, throwing Clods of Dirt in at the Caſement, and they had been lopping of Trees, and a-hedging.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. What is your Reaſon for being particular to the Day?

J. Cantril. They came to Breakfaſt; they wanted to know if I had got any ſmall Meat; I ſaid, I ſhould roaſt a large Piece on the Morrow, which I did, it being the 9th; I ſeldom roaſt leſs than five Stone, to give to my Cuſtomers for Chriſtmas Beef: I have done it for Years: Mother Wells uſed to buy her Liquor of me ſometimes.

Mr. Gaſ. When did you firſt ſee the old Gypſey?

J. Cantril. I never ſaw her till that Morning ſhe was taken up; then ſhe came into my Houſe to light her Pipe: I think I ſaw her Son the Wedneſday before that; he came into my Houſe very ſharply, and ſaid, Let's have a Halfpennyworth of Gin.

Mr. Gaſ. Had you ever ſeen him before?

J. Cantril. No, nor but once ſince.

Mr. Gaſ. Do you know any Thing about any Hay of Mrs. Wells's?

J. Cantril. I ſaw the Hay loaded in the Field where it growed, by the New-River Side; I was then a-fiſhing, and I ſaw it unloaded at this very Window, that this young Woman ſays ſhe got out at. [He looks at the Model.] That is the Window at the End of it.

Mr. Gaſ. What Hay-harveſt was this Hay brought in?

J. Cantril. It was the Hay-harveſt before the laſt.

Mr. Gaſ. Do you know the Stable?——J. Cantril. I do very well.

Mr. Gaſ. Is there a Loft over that?—J. Cantril. Yes, there is.

Mr. Gaſ. Can you aſſign any Reaſon, why the Hay was not put up there?

J. Cantril. There uſed to come Bargemen and others, that would rob her when ſhe put the Hay there, therefore ſhe put it in this Place to prevent that.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Williams. How many Loads did you ſee loaded?

J. Cantril. I ſaw but one Load; it was a little Cart, and one Horſe to draw it.

Mr. Williams. Had ſhe a Horſe?

J. Cantril. She had; but it was the Man's Horſe that drawed his Cart, to the beſt of my Memory.

Mr. Williams. How much Hay might there be of it?

J. Cantril. It is poſſible there might be half a Score Truſſes.

Mr. Williams. What Sort of a Window is it, that they put the Hay in at?---J. Cantril. One Part of it was Glaſs, and the other boarded over.

Mr. Williams. Was it ſo when they were pitching the Hay in?

J. Cantril. I can't ſay how it was then.

Mr. Williams. Was the Board on the Side of the Glaſs, or over it, or under it?

J. Cantril. One Half to the Upright in the Middle was boarded, the other Side Glaſs, to the beſt of my Memory.

Mr. Davy. Did you know Natus and his Wife?

J. Cantril. I did; they uſed to lodge at Mrs. Wells's; but I can't ſay how long; but I think they had been there backwards and forwards, about three Months; the Woman uſed to come to our Houſe for Gin.

Mr. Davy. Do you know in which Room they lay?

J. Cantril. No, I do not.

Ezra Whiffin ſworn.

E. Whiffin. I live at the White-Hart and Crown at Enfield-Waſh, a Public-Houſe: I was told by a Glazier, he knowing I wanted ſome Irons to a Sign, that Suſannah Wells had a Sign ſawed down in the Rebellion Time, and ſhe had the Irons to diſpoſe of; I went to her Houſe on the 18th of January 1753, and aſked her; ſhe ſaid, ſhe could find them; ſhe and I went together through the Kitchen into a Room called the Lumber-room; it had formerly been a Workſhop, or a Shuffle-board Room; it is a long Room; it is about ſeven or eight Steps up out of the Kitchen.

Mr. Davy. Did you take any Notice what was in the Room?

E. Whiffin. I can't ſay I did; but Judith Natus was in Bed in that Room upon ſome Hay, with a Sheet over it. The Bed was on the right Hand going in. As we were looking about for the Irons, Mrs. Wells ſaid, Now I recollect myſelf, it lies under the Feet of this poor Creature's Bed: We looked and found them in a Piece of Wood there. Then Fortune Natus's Wife raiſed herſelf up upon her Elbow, and ſaid, What are you going to do, or, What are you about? Mrs. Wells ſaid, We are only looking for a Piece of Wood. I took it, and ſet it upon an End, and ſaid, Well, Girl, what muſt you have? She ſaid, I will not ſell the Wood, it is of Uſe to this poor Creature's Bed; the Irons I'll have a Shilling for: I gave it her directly, and ſaid, I have a Son below Stairs, if you'll let him take it Home, and take the Irons out, he ſhall bring the Wood again; he took it, and carried it Home, and took the Hooks out and carried the Wood back again, and there it is now.

Mr. Davy. What are the Circumſtances by which you recollect the Time?

E. Whiffin. I owed Mr. Proſſer, a Brewer, at the White Lion, Ratcliff-Highway, 11 l. 7 s. and on the 8th of January, Alexander Livingſtone joined in a Note with me; it was upon Demand; but he gave me ſome Time to pay it, and I was going to borrow five Guineas, to enable me to pay it, of Robert Mitcham, at the Globe at Wormleigh; ſo I went directly there, as ſoon as I had ſent my Son Home with the Wood to take the Irons out; but he was gone to Cambridge; ſo I came back and went to London that ſame Day, and carried what Money I had; and that ſatisfied the Perſon, and in about three Weeks Time I paid the Remainder.

Mr. Davy. To whom was the Note made payable?

E. Whiffin. To Bomar Lovit, at the Iron-Gate, Tower-Hill; he is an Officer, he arreſted me on the 8th of January, on Mr. Proſſer's Suit.

Mr. Davy. Are you ſure this was on the 8th of January?

E. Whiffin. As I hope to be ſaved, that was the Day; I have the Note here.

Mr. Davy. Produce it (which he did, and the Note was read); Alexander Livingſtone and I ſigned this the Day it bears Date.

Mr. Davy. Who was in the Room at that Time beſides Mrs. Wells, Judith Natus, and you?

E. Whiffin. Nobody elſe as I know of.

Mr. Davy. Did you look about the Room?

E. Whiffin. I did, and ſaw Nobody elſe; I removed ſome of the Hay, and ſhould have removed a great deal more, had ſhe not found it.

Mr. Davy. A great deal of Hay! How much was there?

E. Whiffin. I believe there might be five hundred Weight, that is, ten Truſſes; the Top of it lay as high as I could reach.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. What is the Glazier's Name?

E. Whiffin. William Metcalf; he painted my Sign, that is, only the Crown.

Mr. Moreton. Was it put up in January?

E. Whiffin. No, it was not until February.

Mr. Moreton. When did he mention theſe Sign-Irons to you?

E. Whiffin. I don't remember that; but it was before the 18th of January.

Mr. Moreton. When was your Sign brought Home?

E. Whiffin. I don't know whether it was in January or February.

Mr. Moreton. Did he mention theſe Irons before the Sign was brought Home?

E. Whiffin. My Sign ſtood in my Houſe a Month, I believe, before it was put up; ſo I cannot tell whether it was before or after.

Mr. Moreton. What Time did you keep Chriſtmas?

E. Whiffin. I went by the New Stile, for I dropped the Old Stile, and hope all other People did.

Mr. Moreton. What Day of the Week was the 18th of January?

E. Whiffin. It was on a Thurſday.

Court. Conſider that.——E. Whiffin. My Lord, it is true.

Mr. Moreton. Do you know Mr. Harrington?—E. Whiffin. I do.

Mr. Moreton. Had you ever any Talk with him about this Matter?

E. Whiffin. I talked with him about the Time I was in this Room.

Mr. Moreton. When did you talk with him?

E. Whiffin. I don't know the Time; but it was not my Buſineſs to tell every body what I knew, but I anſwered him as I thought proper.

Mr. Moreton. Don't you know what Week it was when you talked with him?

E. Whiffin. No, I do not; I don't know within a Week or a Fortnight of the Time; he aſked me Abundance of Queſtions, and I was not in a Mind to reſolve him; I thought he was not a proper Man to aſk me Queſtions, and I anſwered him juſt as I pleaſed.

Mr. Moreton. What Month was it in?—E. Whiffin. I do not know.

Mr. Moreton. What Year was it in?

E. Whiffin. It was ſome Time in the Year 1753.

Mr. Moreton. How long is it ago?

E. Whiffin. It is above a Year ago.

Mr. Moreton. Was you aſked by any body, whether you could fix the Time you went into the Room?

E. Whiffin. I don't remember any body aſked me that; but if they did, it was a ſilly Queſtion.

Mr. Moreton. What was you aſked by Mr. Harrington?

E. Whiffin. He talked a great deal more than what became him: He aſked me, what Day of the Year? I told him it was the 18th of January, and I never told any body any Time elſe.

Mr. Moreton. Are you ſure of that?

E. Whiffin. I am.

Mr. Moreton. Did you ſay any thing of ſeeing any body elſe in the Room at that Time?

E. Whiffin. I don't know whether I did or not.

Mr. Moreton. Or that Judith Natus was in the Room?

E. Whiffin. I might.

Mr. Moreton. Did he aſk you, if you ſaw the Woman's Face?

E. Whiffin. I told him, I did not force my Diſcourſe to him; I told him, I ſaw Judith Natus in Bed; he aſked ſeveral Queſtions, but I reſolved him no farther; I ſaid, I ſaw her Face, and that I knew her plainly.

Mr. Moreton. Was you aſked whether ſhe ſpoke to you?

E. Whiffin. No, I don't remember that.

Mr. Moreton. Do you remember you ſaid you did not hear her ſpeak?

E. Whiffin. No, I don't remember that.

Mr. Moreton. Was you at the Trial of Mary Squires?

E. Whiffin. I was ſubpœna'd up, but was not admitted in.

Mr. Moreton. Did you try to come in?

E. Whiffin. There was a Conſtable in the Yard that denied my coming into the Yard for a good while, and ſo he did Fortune Natus's Wife a good while.

Mr. Moreton. Was you preſent when they were denied?

E. Whiffin. I was not.

Mr. Moreton. Have you been examined before?

E. Whiffin. I have been examined by my Lord-Mayor, and gave the ſame Account as now.

Mr. Davy. Look at the Priſoner; did you ever ſee her before?

E. Whiffin. No, I never ſaw her Face before in my Life, as I know of.

Mr. Davy. Upon your Oath, do you believe ſhe was in that Room?

E. Whiffin. Upon my Oath, I did not ſee her in the Room.

Mr. Davy. Upon your Oath, is ſhe the Woman that lay in that Bed?

E. Whiffin. Upon my Oath, ſhe is not; I have made Oath of that before.

Q. from a Juryman. Where did you buy the Sign?

E. Whiffin. I bought it of Mrs. Wells, but it was a good while before; it was about three Weeks before Chriſtmas was Twelve-months.

Alexander Livingſtone ſworn.

Mr. Willes. Look at this Note; is this your Hand-writing?

A. Liv. My Name at the Bottom is.

Mr. Willes. When did you ſign it?

A. Liv. I think I ſigned it the Day it bears Date: Ezra Whiffin ſigned the ſame Day; he was then arreſted by Bomar Lovit.

Mr. Willes. Was there any Mention made of dating it before or after?

A. Liv. No, none.

Mr. Willes. Who wrote the Body of the Note?

A. Liv. Bomar Lovit did.

Mr. Willes. Did you ſign it the ſame Day it was drawn?

A. Liv. I did, at the Houſe of Whiffin at Enfield-Waſh; I was a Boarder with him then.

Mr. Willes. How long after Chriſtmas was it that you ſigned it?

A. Liv. It was ſigned directly after it was wrote, the Day it bears Date; I have no Reaſon to believe to the contrary. (The Note is ſhewn to the Jury.)

John Whiffin ſworn.

J. Whiffin. Ezra Whiffin is my Father. I have been Coachman to a Gentleman at Hertford ever ſince February 14, 1753; before that I was at my Father's from Old Chriſtmas-Day; I went with my Father to Mrs. Wells's Houſe on the 18th of January, New-Stile; he was going to the Globe at Wormleigh, to Mr. Mitcham. When we went into Mrs. Wells's, ſhe was gone over the Way; we ſtayed there till ſhe came in; then my Father and ſhe went and fetched that Piece of Wood, and I carried it Home, and took the Hooks out, and brought the Wood back to her Houſe again.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. In which Room did you ſtay while they went for the Wood?

J. Whiffin. I ſtayed in the firſt Room on the left-hand Side.

Mr. Gaſ. Did you ſee your Father and Mrs. Wells go into that Room where that Wood was?

J. Whiffin. No; I did not go out of the Room where I was, till they came to me again.

Mr. Gaſ. When did you return the Piece of Wood again?

J. Whiffin. I did in three or four Days.

Mr. Gaſ. Did you know of the Debt your Father owed Mr. Proſſer?

J. Whiffin. I did; and Mr. Livingſtone entered his Hand to the Note to pay it to Mr. Lovit.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Nares. Was you at Home with your Father from the Old Chriſtmas-Day, to the 14th of February, 1753?---J. Whiffin. I was.

Mr. Nares. Did you ſee Mr. Metcalf at your Father's in that Time?

J. Whiffin. I did.

Mr. Nares. Did he paint a Sign for your Father?---J. Whiffin. He did.

Mr. Nares. When was that brought Home?

J. Whiffin. It was brought Home before I was at my Father's; I went there on Old Chriſtmas-Day; it ſtood then in the Parlour.

Elizabeth Long ſworn.

E. Long. I am Daughter to Mrs. Wells; I have been a married Woman; my Huſband is dead; my maiden Name was Wells; I uſed very frequently, every Day in the Year 1753, to go to my Mother's; I lived but three Houſes from her.

Mr. Davy. Was you at her Houſe in the Month of January in that Year?

E. Long. I believe I was there every Day in that Month, and all over the Houſe, excepting the Garrets.

Mr. Davy. Who lived in the Houſe the firſt and ſecond Weeks of January?---E. Long. My Mother, and my Siſter, and Virtue Hall, and Fortune Natus and his Wife.

Mr. Davy. When did you ſee Fortune Natus and his Wife there?

E. Long. I had ſeen them there from before January; they were there, from firſt to laſt, about ten Weeks.

Mr. Davy. Did you uſe to go up into this Hay-loft?

E. Long. I have for Judith Natus, for her to come to my Houſe to help me to do what I wanted to be done: I have frequently gone into that Room to her; ſhe uſed to lie there; I have ſeen her and her Huſband in Bed in the Month of January there.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever ſee any body elſe in that Room, in the Month of January?---E. Long. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Look at that young Woman there (meaning Elizabeth Canning).

E. Long. I never ſaw her there; ſhe never was at my Mother's Houſe, till ſhe came down, and they were taken up.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember the Furniture of that Room?

E. Long. Yes, I do; the Chimney is on the right Hand going up Stairs, at the Foot of Fortune Natus's Bed.

Mr. Davy. Was there a Grate in it?

E. Long. No, there never was in this World; I have remembered it twenty-two Years; there was a great Neſt of Drawers, three Women's Saddles, and a Man's Saddle, a Tub that my Mother kept her Chaff in for the Horſe, and a great deal of Hay, and a Drawer of Pollard for the Sow and Pigs.

Mr. Davy. Who fed the Horſe, Sow and Pigs, during that Time?

E. Long. I know I went in, in January, to fetch ſome Pollard out of the Drawer to feed the Pigs; but I went in ſo frequently, I can't tell the particular Days.

Mr. Davy. Are you ſure there were three Women's Saddles and a Man's Saddle in the Room?---E. Long. Indeed, there were.

Mr. Davy. Look at this Pitcher.

E. Long. It looks like my Mother's Pitcher, but I will not be poſitive; ſhe had ſuch a one with a broken Mouth, which ſhe uſed every Day.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee it in the Month of January?

E. Long. Yes, I have ſeen our People fetch Water with it in January.

Mr. Davy. Look at that Bed-gown.

E. Long. I never ſaw this in my Life, till I was at my Lord-Mayor's; my Mother, my Siſter, nor I, never wore it; it is none belonging to our Family; my Mother has never a Bed-gown as I know of; there was Nobody at my Mother's Houſe had a Bed-gown, that I am ſure of.

Mr. Davy. Look at this Handkerchief; do you know it?

E. Long. No, I do not; I never ſaw that till at my Lord-Mayor's.

Mr. Davy. When did Mary Squires come to your Mother's Houſe?

E. Long. She came on a Wedneſday, and was there, from firſt to laſt, a Week and a Day, before ſhe was taken up, which was on a Thurſday.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever ſeen her before?

E. Long. No, never in my Life; if I had, I muſt have known it; her Face is a very remarkable one.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember her Family that came with her?

E. Long. There were two Daughters and a Son; the old Woman called one Lucy, the other Polly, and the Son George.

Mr. Davy. Was you in the Houſe when Elizabeth Canning came down there to take your Mother up?

E. Long. I was coming out of the Parlour, when ſhe was carried into the Kitchen; I had heard a great Diſturbance, and I went to my Mother's Houſe, after the Gentlemen were got there.

Mr. Davy. Was the Door going up into the Workſhop open, when ſhe ſat upon the Dreſſer?---E. Long. I think it was.

Mr. Davy. Was ſhe removed to any other Part of the Kitchen?

E. Long. Never, as I know of.

Mr. Davy. Did any body aſk her, if ſhe knew that Room?

E. Long. Not as I heard; when ſhe was brought into the Parlour, my Mother, Mrs. Squires, her two Daughters and Son, and Virtue Hall, and my Siſter, were ſitting round the Fire; ſhe pointed to Mary Squires, and ſaid, That is the Woman that cut my Stays off; ſhe was ſitting on the right Hand of the Chimney-place.

Mr. Davy. Could you ſee Squires's Face then?

E. Long. The Gentlemen were all before me; I could not ſee her Face, and ſhe did not turn her Face, as I ſaw; ſhe had a Hat and Cloak on, and a Clout on her Head, inſtead of a Cap, and ſat holding her Head down.

Mr. Davy. Was ſhe ſmoaking a Pipe?

E. Long. I can't tell whether ſhe was or not.

Mr. Davy. Did ſhe ſit upright?

E. Long. I think ſhe did not; ſhe is not an upright Woman. Canning ſpoke twice before Mary Squires heard her. One of her Daughters got up, (I don't know which it was) and ſaid, Mother, the young Woman ſays you cut her Stays off. Then ſhe got up, and ſaid to the young Woman, Young Woman, you are miſtaken; I am a very remarkable Woman, and have got the Evil in my Face, and you may know me by Night or by Day. She ſhewed her Face by putting her Hand up to her Clout on each Side to make her Face bare.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear the young Woman mention the Time of the Robbery?---E. Long. I can't ſay I did, or any body elſe.

Mr. Davy. Did George or Lucy then ſay where they were on the 1ſt of January?---E. Long. Not then, as I remember.

Mr. Davy. Did you come as a Witneſs, when your Mother was tried with Mrs. Squires?

E. Long. I came into the Old-Bailey Yard, and the People would not let me come in; there were other Witneſſes; I ſubpœna'd them myſelf.

Mr. Davy. How many Witneſſes did you ſerve with Subpœna's to attend at that Trial?

E. Long. Eight: I had the Subpœna's of a Lawyer, Mr. Talmaſh; he lives in Red-Lion-Street: I delivered one to Fortune Natus, and another to his Wife, one to Mary Larney, one to Giles Knight; I can't recollect them all: Somebody knowed me to be Mother Wells's Daughter, and they puſhed me out, and would not let me come in; they frightened me very much, and I went back again, and up two or three Pair of Stairs in a Houſe in the Old-Bailey, and heard the Mob cry out, Mother Wells's Daughter!

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Williams. Who was with you at that Time?

E. Long. Mary Larney and Giles Knight were with me; I ſaw them go into the Yard with me; I cannot ſay whereabouts they were.

Mr. Wil. Did John Larney go into the Yard?

E. Long. I did not ſubpœna him.

Mr. Wil. Are you ſure Giles Knight was refuſed being in the Yard?

E. Long. I am not.

Mr. Wil. How long had you been parted from your Mother?

E. Long. Not long; I had not been married quite a Year, and I lived at Home a Quarter of a Year after I was married.

Mr. Wil. Was you away a Month?

E. Long. I am ſure I was not; I lived in that Houſe three Quarters of a Year, and don't know I miſſed a Day in all that Time going to my Mother's Houſe, and uſed to go into the Workſhop ſometimes for Aſhes to carry Home for my own Uſe.

Mr. Wil. What January do you ſpeak of?

E. Long. I mean that January the young Woman ſays; I think it is above a Year ago.

Mr. Wil. What Month is this?

E. Long. I can't juſtly tell of a ſudden.

Mr. Wil. Is it May, or November, or December?

E. Long. May, I think.

Mr. Wil. Was you before Juſtice Taſhmaker, when they were carried there?---E. Long. They did not take me away, and I did not go there at all.

Mr. Davy. Was you often at this Workſhop, within a Week, or Fortnight, or three Weeks before your Mother was taken up?

E. Long. I was there every Day; I uſed to go frequently to Breakfaſt there.

John Howit ſworn.

J. Howit. I am a Carpenter; Mrs. Wells is my Mother; I have lived at Enfield-Waſh about ſeven Years; I uſed to go to her Houſe now and then; I was at Work at Broman-Green, about ſeven Miles from thence; having done Work, I was diſcharged from that Place on the 19th of January; about Six o'Clock at Night I came to my Mother's Houſe.

Mr. Willes. Do you know the Hay-loft?---J. Howit. I know the Workſhop, and was in it on the 19th, 20th, and 21ſt of January.

Mr. Willes. What led you to go there?

J. Howit. My Mother ſent me up to ſerve the Sow; and I had brought my Tools, and lodged them in that very Room; and on Sunday the 20th I went to fetch my Axe and Saw, to cut ſome Wood for my Wife.

Mr. Willes. Was any body in the Room then?

J. Howit. Yes, Fortune Natus and his Wife were.

Mr. Willes. What Buſineſs had they there?

J. Howit. They lay in that Room.

Mr. Willes. How do you know they lay in the Room?

J. Howit. Becauſe I ſaw them in Bed, or what they call a Bed; it was on the right-hand Side going up; they had Sacks to lay their Heads on, and what they thought fit to cover them.

Mr. Willes. Had they a Pillow, or Bolſter?

J. Howit. I can't ſay they had.

Mr. Willes. Look at Elizabeth Canning; did you ever ſee her there in that Room?—J. Howit. No, I never did.

Canning. I never ſaw him before, as I know of.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. You ſay you wanted your Axe and Saw to cut Wood for your Wife: Where does ſhe live?

J. Howit. We live juſt by the Ten-mile Stone, about a Quarter of a Mile from my Mother's.

Mr. Moreton. Did you go Home firſt to your Houſe, or to your Mother's on the Saturday?

J. Howit. I went to my Mother's firſt, and there I left my Tools.

Mr. Moreton. Which is neareſt your Maſter's, where you came from?

J. Howit. My Mother's is.

Mr. Moreton. How came you to leave your Tools at your Mother's?

J. Howit. By reaſon that was neareſt, and I was tired of them.

Mr. Moreton. What Time of the Morning of the Sunday was it you went for them?—J. Howit. About Nine o'Clock.

Mr. Moreton. Are you ſure you ſpoke to Fortune Natus and his Wife, as they were in Bed in that Room?—J. Howit. I am poſitive of it.

Mr. Moreton. How came you not to be here, when your Mother was tried?

J. Howit. Becauſe I was never aſked any Queſtions before, nor had I a Subpœna at all.

Mr. Moreton. Had you heard that this Girl ſaid ſhe was confined in this Room?—J. Howit. Yes, but I can't ſay how long.

Mr. Moreton. Then how came it, you did not come and give Teſtimony againſt it?--J. Howit. I was aſked no Queſtions, and I was not to come without; I was up here, but the Mob would not let us come in.

Mr. Moreton. Did you deſign to come in as a Witneſs?

J. Howit. Yes, I did; we went to Mr. Legg's in Green-Arbour-Court, and had like to have been knocked on the Head, them that had got Subpœna's, and them that had not.

Mr. Moreton. Who was your Mother's Attorney at that Time?

J. Howit. Mr. Talmaſh.

Mr. Moreton. Did you ever go to him, and tell him about your coming Home, and going into that Room three Days together in January?

J. Howit. No, I never did.

Q. from a Juryman. We ſhould be glad to know, whether that Drawer was in the Cheſt of Drawers, or a ſingle Drawer of itſelf?

J. Howit. It is one of them Drawers, but it was not in it; it was ſwelled, and would not go in.

Robert White ſworn.

R. White. I live at Enfield, and am a Day-labourer; I have been at Mother Wells's Houſe a great many Times.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Was you there in the Year 1753?

R. White. I was, in Old Chriſtmas, and New Chriſtmas too; I was there commonly four or five Times a Week.

Mr. Gaſ. What Day in January was you there?—R. White. I am not ſo well learned to give an Account of the Day of the Month.

Mr. Gaſ. What Chriſtmas do you mean?

R. White. I mean laſt Chriſtmas was Twelvemonth: Natus had quartered at my Brother's, and I knowing him, uſed to go and keep him Company, and uſed to ſtay there ſometimes till Eight or Nine o'Clock, and uſed to come as ſoon as I had done my Labour, at about Seven.

Mr. Gaſ. Which Room had you uſed to be together in?—R. White. I uſed to be in the Kitchen, at the right Hand going into the Houſe.

Mr. Gaſ. Do you know the Door that goes into the Hay-loft?

R. White. Yes, I do; it is the Room that Natus and his Wife lay in, but I was not in it the Time they lay there.

Mr. Gaſ. Did you ever ſee that Door open that goes up into the Hay-loft?

R. White. Yes, I have, and have ſeen Fortune Natus and his Wife both go in, and come out again; I remember they did on a Sunday Morning in particular.

Mr. Gaſ. Have you ever ſeen any body elſe go into that Room?

R. White. No, Sir.

Mr. Gaſ. How long might you keep going to this Houſe?

R. White. I believe it might be almoſt two Months, or nine Weeks.

Mr. Gaſ. Was you ever in the Kitchen any Time when Mary Squires was there?---R. White. No, I never was.

Mr. Gaſ. Do you know the Day of the Month ſhe came there?

R. White. No, I do not.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever ſee Mary Squires?

R. White. I ſaw her go by the Barn where I labour, about four or five Days before ſhe was taken up; but I did not ſee her Face then.

Mr. Nares. Did you ever ſee any of the young ones?

R. White. I ſaw one of the Daughters once go into the Parlour one Sunday.

John Donoval ſworn.

J. Donoval. I ſurveyed the Room (Elizabeth Canning ſaid ſhe was confined in) on Eaſter-Eve, the 13th of April laſt.

Mr. Davy. Give the Court the Dimenſions of it.

J. Donoval. It is thirty-five Foot, three Inches and a Half, from Quarter to Quarter in the Inſide of the Room upon the Floor, by nine Foot eight Inches.

Mr. Davy. Is this, that is produced here, a true Model of it, according to its Proportion?

J. Donoval. This Model is exactly in Proportion with it, and there is the Scale upon the Roof. (There was the Hole for the Jack-line, a Window on the oppoſite Side to the Stairs, another at the End, and a Chimney at one Corner, a Cheſt of Drawers, and Saddles, and Jack-pullies, drawn on the Wall, &c.)

George Talmaſh ſworn.

G. Talmaſh. I having ſome Knowledge of Mrs. Wells, and hearing of this extraordinary Story, I went out of Curioſity to Bridewell to ſee her: When I came there, ſhe addreſſed herſelf to me, and deſired I would be concerned for her, as her Attorney; I did not care to be concerned in it: After that, her Daughter came to my Houſe, with a Liſt of Witneſſes to the Number of Eight, and deſired me to take out Subpœna's for them. I ſued them out; I remember one was for Fortune Natus, another for Judith Natus, and another for Ezra Whiffin; I can't pretend to tell all the reſt of their Names now. I delivered them to the Woman, and gave her Directions to ſerve them.

Mr. Willes. When that Trial came on, can you tell why thoſe People did not appear?

G. Talmaſh. No, no more than what they told me: I was concerned no more in it.

Elizabeth Mayle ſworn.

E. Mayle. I am a Midwife; I brought this Girl, Elizabeth Canning, into the World, and laid her Mother of more Children; I am intimately acquainted in the Family.

Mr. Davy. Was you at Mrs. Canning's Houſe in February laſt was Twelve-month?—E. Mayle. I was in the Beginning of February; I ſaw the Mother, and the Daughter alſo.

Mr. Davy. Can you mention the Day?

E. Mayle. It was the 2d or 3d; it was the firſt Week, I am ſure.

Mr. Davy. Where does ſhe live?—E. Mayle. She lives in Aldermanbury Poſtern; the Daughter was then lying on a Bed in her Mother's Houſe.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Converſation with the Mother, in the Daughter's Preſence, about the Daughter's Misfortunes?—E. Mayle. I had.

Mr. Davy. Was the Daughter awake?

E. Mayle. She was; I had Buſineſs by the Houſe, and I went in, in order to inquire if ſhe had heard of her Daughter Elizabeth. As ſoon as I came in, Mrs. Canning ſaid, Madam! O Lord, Madam! have you heard of my Misfortune? I ſaid, I had read it in the News-papers in the Month of January, and aſked her if ſhe had heard of her Daughter; ſhe ſaid, Yes, ſhe is come Home as naked as ſhe was born.

Mr. Davy. Are you ſure ſhe mentioned theſe Words, Naked as ſhe was born?

E. Mayle. I am poſitive of it: I immediately ſaid, O Lord! what, without a Shift on? She ſaid, No, ſhe had a Shift on. Then I aſked her, where her Daughter was? She ſaid, behind me. I turned about to the Girl, and ſaid, Lord bleſs me! Bet, how came this about? She ſaid, I was coming over Moorfields one Night, and two Men came up to me, one took hold of my two Hands and pulled me along, and the other robbed me: I ſaid, Of what, Child? She ſaid, Of half a Guinea and three Shillings and ſome Half-pence, my Gown and my Cloak. I ſaid, My Dear, don't trouble yourſelf about theſe Things, for God Almighty will raiſe you Friends to get you more; I hope the Men did not uſe you ill, ſo as to debauch you: She ſaid, ſhe could not tell, for ſhe had her Fits. Said I, What did they do with you after they had robbed you? She ſaid, They carried me to Enfield-Waſh. I aſked her where Enfield-Waſh was? She ſaid, Out of Town. I aſked, what they did with her there? She ſaid, they carried her into a Houſe, and as ſoon as ſhe came in, there was an old Gypſey took a Knife and cut her Stays off, and put her Hand into her Pocket and pulled a Farthing out, and put it in again, and hit her a Slap on the Face, and called her Bitch, and bid her go up Stairs. I ſaid to her Mother, Mrs. Canning, have you got this Shift your Child went abroad in? Sure never was ſuch a Caſe before. I ſaid, I'll tell you if any body has debauched your Child, if you'll let me ſee it. She immediately reached it, and I looked at it, and ſaid, Mrs. Canning, is this the Shift your Daughter went away in? She ſaid, Yes: Then I ſaid, I ſuppoſed it was waſhed ſince ſhe had been gone: She ſaid, No, how could that be? for ſhe was in a Room where Nobody came to her,

Mr. Moreton. Was the Priſoner preſent, and heard all this?

E. Mayle. She was. We ſtood by her Bed-ſide. She ſaid, ſhe had been confined in a Room, where ſhe lived upon nothing but Bread and Water. I ſaid, I think the Shift is too clean, except you have had it waſhed ſince ſhe came Home. She ſaid, No, it had not been waſhed. I ſaid, Then, my Dear, you may make yourſelf eaſy, for I can ſee by it, that no Man has debauched your Child; but it is uncommonly clean to be wore ſo long. Then the Mother ſaid, ſhe never had a Stool all the Time ſhe was gone: Then, I ſaid, ſhe muſt have a Glyſter given her; but I can aſſure you no Man has debauched your Child in this Shift, unleſs it has been waſhed ſince. She again ſaid, No, it had not.

Mr. Davy. Did the Shift appear to be dirty enough to have been wore three Weeks and ſome Days?

E. Mayle.

E. Mayle. No, it did not; there were three little Spots of Excrement, about the Bigneſs of the upper Part of my Thumb: I don't think it was dirty enough to have been wore three Weeks by any clean Woman that ever ſat ſtill in a Room, becauſe every Woman muſt go to Bed and get up; and by ſitting by the Fire the Duſt will ariſe.

Mr. Davy. Do you think it had been wore three Weeks?

E. Mayle. I don't think it had.

Mr. Davy. Did you take Notice of the Bottom of it, whether it was draggled?

E. Mayle. I did; I took particular Notice of that; I ſaw no Dirt there; there was a Hole on the right Side of the Shift down one of the Guſſets, but there was no draggled Tail, not at all.

Mr. Davy. How long did it appear to have been wore?

E. Mayle. It ſeemed as if it had been wore a Week, or ſuch a Matter; I can't tell how long it had been wore.

Mr. Davy. Had you been acquainted much with her?

E. Mayle. I had been acquainted with the Girl from her Birth.

Mr. Davy. How long do you think ſhe might have been in making that Shift ſo dirty as it was?

E. Mayle. About a Week.

Mr. Davy. Did the Girl herſelf ſay any thing to you on this Occaſion?

E. Mayle. Yes; ſhe told me how ſhe had been uſed, and the Gypſey had cut off her Stays, as I ſaid before. I left her Mother an Order to give her a Glyſter: She ſaid, will you examine her Body, to ſee if ſhe has been hurted? I ſaid, No; I never was before the Face of a Judge in the Old-Bailey in my Life, and I did not care to be in dirty Work: Going away, ſhe ſaid to her little Girl, Go and call Mrs. Woodward over the Way to me: When ſhe came in, Mrs. Canning ſaid to me, Will you ſay what you ſaid before? I ſaid, Yes, Mrs. Canning, with all the Pleaſure in Life; if this Shift has not been waſhed, I'll make an Oath before a Judge no Man had Copulation with her. I went away; I had propoſed to bring a Doctor. I returned in about half an Hour; I went to the Bed-ſide to the Girl, and ſaid, Bet, I was very ſorry I did not aſk you whether your Feet were not very ſore in walking barefoot: She ſaid, No, they are not; I had my Shoes and Stockings on, they did not take them from me. This I look upon to be from the Mother's Agony of Mind, that made her ſay ſhe was come home naked. I ſaid, What more had you on? She ſaid, My Under-petticoat, and an old Bed-gown, which I found in a Corner of the Room: Then I ſaid, Good-b'ye, Child; and went away.

Mr. Davy. Did the Mother ſeem to be pleaſed or diſpleaſed at what you ſaid?

E. Mayle. She fell down on her Knees, and held up her Hands, and ſaid, Thank God, my Daughter is not a Whore!

Mr. Davy. Was her Mother angry with you for any Thing you ſaid or did, then or afterwards?

E. Mayle. She was not then; but ſhe was two Days after, when I came there, as I did not go the next Day before the Doctor, as I propoſed. Then there were with her two young Women and an elderly Woman: I ſaid, Mrs. Canning, I am come to aſk if Bet has had a Stool? She ſaid, No. I ſaid, Then ſhe muſt die, without you have given her Glyſters, and ſhe has Relief that Way; and aſked her, why ſhe did not give it her? She ſaid, ſhe had. I aſked her, if any Thing came off with it? She ſaid, Yes, a little: I ſaid, If nothing more came off, ſhe is a dead Girl, and all the World can't ſave her Life: I went and took hold on the Girl's right Hand with my left, and ſaid, Now ſhe ſeems as cold as Death, and if ſhe has no Paſſage, ſhe muſt die, and all the World can't ſave her.

Mr. Moreton. Was the Daughter there when the Mother was angry?

E. Mayle. Yes, Sir. A young Woman in the Room ſaid, How can you frighten the Girl out of her Life, to tell her ſhe muſt die, when ſhe has no Fever? Then I turned to another Woman, and ſaid, Did you ever hear there was ſuch a Thing before? I ſaid, there was one Thing in her Favour, ſhe has not been debauched: I ſaid, Reach the Shift to this Gentlewoman (ſhe was a grave Woman): I ſaid, Let her judge the Caſe, and ſee that your Child has not been debauched: When that was reached out, the old Gentlewoman ſaid, I don't ſee any Thing like it: I ſaid, Look over it well; do you think this has been worn three Weeks and three Days? No, ſays ſhe, I don't think it has, I don't think that is likely. Mrs. Canning ſaid, ſhe had no Stool all the while: I ſaid, Here is three Spots upon it; I ſaid, Behold it. Then Mrs. Canning ſaid, Do you come here to ſet my other Friends againſt me?

Mr. Davy. Who was that other Woman?

E. Mayle. I don't know her Name.

Mr. Davy. Was it Mrs. Woodward?

E. Mayle. No, it was not.

Mr. Davy. Was it obſerved that there were no Marks of her being according to the Courſe of other Women?

E. Mayle. That old Gentlewoman mentioned it, and Mrs. Canning ſaid, her Daughter had got Cold, and had been out of Order for three or four Months.

Mr. Davy. What is the Mother?

E. Mayle. She is a fine likely Woman as any, and a Woman that I reſpect as much as any Woman, and the Girl too.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Williams. What Sort of a Character has ſhe had?

E. Mayle. I never know'd any Ill of the Girl, or heard any in my Life.

Mr. Wil. Have you been intimately acquainted with her?

E. Mayle. I have, and never heard any Reflection upon her Character; and I don't queſtion but the Mother was very anxious about her Daughter not being debauched.

Mr. Wil. Might not that Matter of Excrement have been from the Day before ſhe was carried there?

E. Mayle. It might, and the Mother told me ſo then.

Mr. Wil. What was your Reaſon of being ſo inquiſitive in this?

E. Mayle. I was ſo, as a Lover of Truth, and a Friend, fearing the Girl had been debauched.

Mr. Davy. Now we ſhall prove the Defendant's Information before Juſtice Fielding, in order to ſhew a material Variance, both in that and her Evidence on the Trial, particularly in reſpect to the Time of expending the Water.

Mr. Brogden ſworn.

Mr. Brogden. I am Clerk to Juſtice Fielding.

Mr. Davy. Look on this Paper.

Mr. Brogden. This is the Information of Elizabeth Canning, taken before Juſtice Fielding, the 7th of February, 1753. (It is read.)

The Information of Elizabeth Canning, of Aldermanbury Poſtern, London, Spinſter, taken upon Oath this ſeventh Day of February, in the Year of our Lord 1753.

" THIS Informant, upon her Oath, ſaith, That on Monday the firſt " Day of January laſt paſt, ſhe this Informant went to ſee her Uncle " and Aunt, who live at Saltpetre-Bank, near Roſemary-Lane, in the " County of Middleſex, and continued with them until the Evening; and " ſaith, that upon her Return Home, about half an Hour after Nine, be- " ing oppoſite to Bethlem Gate, in Moorfields, ſhe this Informant was ſeized " by two Men, (whoſe Names are unknown to this Informant) who both " had brown Bob Wigs on, and drab-coloured Great Coats, one of whom " held her this Informant, whilſt the other feloniouſly and violently took " from her one Shaving Hat, one Stuff Gown, and one Linen Apron, " which ſhe had on, and alſo half a Guinea in Gold, and three Shillings " in Silver; and then he that held her, threatened to do for her this In- " formant: And this Informant ſaith, That immediately after, they the " ſaid two Men violently took hold of her, and dragged her up into the " Gravel Walk that leads down to the ſaid Gate, and about the Middle " thereof, he the ſaid Man that firſt held her, gave her with his Fiſt a " very violent Blow upon the right Temple, which threw her into a Fit, " and deprived her of her Senſes (which Fits ſhe this Informant ſaith ſhe " is accuſtomed and ſubject to upon being frightened, and that they often " continue for ſix or ſeven Hours). And this Informant ſaith, That " when ſhe came to herſelf, ſhe perceived that ſhe was carrying along by " the ſame two Men, in a large Road-way; and ſaith, that in a little " Time after ſhe was ſo recovered, ſhe was able to walk alone; however, " they continued to pull her along, which ſtill ſo intimidated and affrighted " her, that ſhe durſt not call out for Aſſiſtance, or ſpeak to them. And this " Informant ſaith, That in about half an Hour after ſhe had ſo recovered " herſelf, they the ſaid two Men carried her this Informant into a Houſe " (which, as ſhe this Informant heard from ſome of them, was about Four " o'Clock in the Morning, and which Houſe, as ſhe this Informant hath " ſince heard and believes, is ſituate at Enfield-Waſh, in the County of " Middleſex, and is reputed to be a very bad and diſorderly Bawdy-houſe, " and occupied by one Wells, Widow), and there this In- " formant ſaw in the Kitchen an old Gypſey Woman, and two young " Women, whoſe Names were unknown to this Informant, but the " Name of one of them this Informant hath ſince heard and believes is " Virtue Hall: And ſaith, That the ſaid old Gypſey Woman took hold of " this Informant's Hand, and promiſed to give her fine Cloaths, if ſhe " would go their Way, (meaning, as this Informant underſtood, to be- " come a Proſtitute) which this Informant refuſing to do, ſhe the ſaid old " Gypſey Woman took a Knife out of a Drawer, and cut the Lace of " the Stays of her this Informant, and took the ſaid Stays away from her, " and one of the ſaid Men took off her Cap, and then the ſaid two Men " went away with it, and ſhe this Informant hath never ſince ſeen any of " her Things. And this Informant ſaith, That ſoon after they were gone " (which ſhe this Informant believes was about Five in the Morning), ſhe " the ſaid old Gypſey Woman forced her this Informant up an old Pair of " Stairs, and puſhed her into a back Room, like an Hay-loft, without any " Furniture whatſoever in the ſame, and there locked her this Informant " up, threatening her this Informant, that if ſhe made the leaſt Noiſe or Diſ- " turbance, ſhe the ſaid old Gypſey Woman would cut her Throat; and " then ſhe went away. And this Informant ſaith, That when it grew light, " upon her looking round to ſee in what a diſmal Place ſhe was, ſhe this " Informant diſcovered a large black Jug, with the Neck much broken, " wherein was ſome Water, and upon the Floor ſeveral Pieces of Bread, " near in Quantity to a Quartern Loaf, and a ſmall Parcel of Hay. And " ſaith, That ſhe continued in this Room, or Place, from the ſaid Tueſday " Morning the ſecond Day of January, until about half an Hour after " Four of the Clock in the Afternoon of Monday the twenty-ninth Day " the ſame Month of January, without having or receiving any other " Suſtenance or Proviſion, than the ſaid Bread and Water, (except a ſmall " Mince-pye, which ſhe this Informant had in her Pocket) or any Thing " to lie on, other than the ſaid Hay, and without any Perſon or Perſons " coming to her, although ſhe often heard the Name of Mrs. and Mother " Wells called upon, whom ſhe underſtood was the Miſtreſs of the Houſe. " And this Informant ſaith, That on Friday the twenty-ſixth Day of Janu- " ary laſt paſt, ſhe this Informant had conſumed all the aforeſaid Bread " and Water, and continued without having any Thing to eat or drink, " until the Monday following, when ſhe this Informant being almoſt ſa- " miſhed with Hunger, and ſtarved with Cold, and almoſt naked dur- " ing the whole Time of her Confinement, about half an Hour after " Four in the Afternoon of the ſaid twenty-ninth Day of January, broke " out at a Window of the ſaid Room, or Place, and got to her Friends " in London, about a Quarter after Ten the ſame Night, in a moſt weak, " miſerable Condition, being very near ſtarved to Death. And this In- " formant ſaith, that ſhe ever ſince hath been, and now is, in a very weak " and declining State and Condition of Health; and although all poſſible " Care and Aſſiſtance is given to her, yet whatever ſmall Nutriment ſhe " this Informant is able to take, the ſame receives no Paſſage through her, " but what is forced by the Apothecary's Aſſiſtance and Medicines.

The Mark of
E C
Elizabeth Canning."

Sworn before me, this 7th Day of February, 1753.

H. Fielding.

Mr. Deputy Molineux ſworn.

Mr. Deputy Molineux. I was at Sir Criſp Gaſcoyne's when Canning came there, at the Time that Virtue Hall was there; Sir Criſp was then Lord-Mayor; I and others were deſired to go and hear her Examination; after my Lord had concluded his examining of Virtue Hall, he turned to Betty Canning, and aſked her, If ſhe had any thing to ſay? ſhe ſaid, No, ſhe had nothing at all more than ſhe had ſaid upon the Trial; my Lord ſaid nothing further to her; the Bed-gown and Pitcher were on the Table; Betty Canning was rolling up the Bed-gown, in order to take it away, as I apprehended; my Lord ſaid, Child, you muſt not take that away; you muſt leave that with me; upon which ſhe replied, and ſaid, It is my Mother's; it ſhocked me a good deal, becauſe I had heard it ſaid, that ſhe came Home in a Bed-gown, and that ſhe found it in the Room where ſhe was confined; I mentioned this to ſeveral People that very Afternoon, that were very ſtrong Advocates in the Affair.

Mr. Willes. Did ſhe demand the Pitcher at that Time?

Mr. Deputy Molineux. I don't remember ſhe did.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Moreton. I had not aſked you a Queſtion, if I had not found you was at the Examination of Virtue Hall: Was you there upon the firſt of her being brought in to be examined?

Mr. Deputy Molineux. I was, the firſt of that Day.

Mr. Moreton. Had ſhe recanted that Day?

Mr. Deputy Molineux. I had heard that ſhe had; I heard my Lord-Mayor ſay he had gone through the Examination.

Mr. Moreton. Was you there the Day before ſhe was examined publickly, the Day when ſhe recanted?

Mr. Deputy Molineux. No, I was not.

Samuel Reed ſworn.

S. Reed. I was preſent the Time Mr. Molineux ſpeaks of. I very particularly remember ſhe was going to fold up this Bed-gown; my Lord-Mayor ſaid, Child, you muſt not have that; ſhe ſaid, It is my Mother's; which ſtruck me very much.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Nares. Did any body aſk her to explain what ſhe meant by it?

S. Reed. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. We have ſeveral Witneſſes to call to the Characters of thoſe who have been examined; and deſire to know the Pleaſure of the Court, whether we ſhall call them now, or ſtay till they are attached.

Court. Stay till they are attached.

Mr. Davy. Then we have done for the preſent.

Mr. MORETON (now Chief Juſtice of Cheſter).

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

I am Counſel in this Cauſe for the unfortunate Priſoner Elizabeth Canning; and unfortunate ſhe certainly is, whether, upon the whole, you ſhall think her guilty, or acquit her of the heinous Crime of which ſhe now ſtands indicted. For guilty of ſuch an Offence, at her Years, ſhe cannot have been, without having been very unfortunate in a moſt profligate and abandoned Education; and ſhould you think her innocent, moſt unfortunate muſt ſhe ſurely be thought by all, becauſe ſhe is now brought to anſwer for a moſt foul Offence in herſelf, merely for having done her Duty in proſecuting others for the moſt unheard-of Violation of her own Perſon and Property, and the Laws of her Country.---But the more unfortunate ſuch an Accuſation, under ſuch Circumſtances, renders the Defendant, the more, I am ſenſible, ſhe will be entitled to that Patience, which you have already ſhewn in the Progreſs of this Trial. And, Gentlemen, when I conſider how long that Patience and Attention has been already exerciſed, when I ſee before me that even ſhort Minutes have ſwelled to no leſs than ſix or ſeven Sheets, I am too ſenſible that I have neither Ability nor Experience to do my Client that Juſtice, which the extraordinary Nature of her Caſe requires. But, as I have been unfortunately fixed upon for my preſent Station, I hope, the great Length of the Trial, the great Pains taken by the Gentlemen on Behalf of the Proſecution, the numerous Facts and minute Circumſtances that have been laid before you, will be ſome Excuſe, at leaſt, for the many Defects and Omiſſions that will appear in my Opening for the Defendant. And, before I go into the Particulars of the Caſe, I ſhall premiſe and agree with Mr. Davy in his Opening, that if the Perjury was corrupt and wilfully falſe, it is one of the moſt abominable and horrid Pieces of Corruption ever brought into a Court of Juſtice: A Falſehood the moſt cruel and impious! So much ſo, that I will alſo agree with him, that if it ſhould appear by the Courſe of the whole Evidence, that the Defendant was never in the Houſe of Suſannah Wells, and that Mary Squires was not the Actor of the Miſchief there ſuppoſed to be done, Canning's Magnitude of Offence deſerves even a particular Law, which this Country has not yet thought proper to enact in Caſes of Perjury.

But, Gentlemen, you, as a Jury, will guard your Judgments againſt all Impulſes, which muſt neceſſarily ariſe from Conſiderations of this Nature, from Reflections on the Conſequences of the Crime, into the Truth of which alone you are now to inquire. Facts alone are the proper Objects of your Attention: And glad I am, for the ſake of Juſtice and Truth, that a Fact of this Importance, I ſay, of this Importance (for, in a free Country, the Nature and Circumſtances of the Crime, not the Condition of the Criminal, makes every Inquiry more or leſs important) is to be inveſtigated and determined by a Jury of diſtinguiſhed Property and Integrity--by a Jury ſelected by the Proſecutor, in a Manner, I believe, unparalleled in any Proſecution, when the Crown is not directly concerned:---For, I believe, Gentlemen, that you are the ſelected Choice of the Proſecutor, after no leſs than ſeventeen Challenges:---And therefore, ſurely, the Proſecutor can now have none: The Defendant, I believe, never had any Diffidence of the Impartiality and Ability of any Jury, legally returned from the Citizens of London.

And, Gentlemen, in making ſuch Obſervations as may occur to me to be material for the Defence of my Client, I ſhall, in the Outſet, beg leave to remind you, what the Accuſation is againſt this Girl now at the Bar: It is for wilful, malicious, and corrupt Perjury, committed in this Court, and, that with the aggravated Circumſtances of being deſigned to deſtroy the Life of an innocent Fellow-Creature. Let me add, that this Crime, Gentlemen, is ſuppoſed to be committed, when the Defendant was under the Age of Nineteen Years.

This Charge has been fully opened by Mr. Davy, and endeavoured to be ſupported three Manner of Ways: The firſt (which has been moſt relied upon, and, I think, with the Proſecutor's Counſel, is the moſt material Part of the Caſe) is the alibi Defence of Mary Squires, and the poſitive Proof they have brought of ſeveral Perſons being in the Place of Canning's Confinement, during the Time ſhe ſays ſhe was there. If both theſe are proved, beyond all Poſſibility of Doubt in your Minds, then you muſt conclude Canning could not ſwear true in the Manner ſhe has.

The ſecond Method of proving this heavy Charge, is endeavoured to be made out from the Improbability of the Defendant's own Story; and the third, by her own Conduct, in the Delays and Precautions taken in not appearing to make an earlier Defence. Mr. Willes makes uſe of a very remarkable Expreſſion, well known in the Law-Books, fugam fecit, ſhe has flown from Juſtice; and from thence would infer, (I mean legally) it is confeſſing her own Guilt: I am very ſorry this Fact was at all obſerved upon; becauſe, if it had not, I might have been at Liberty to have paſſed over Circumſtances of Perſons and Things, which I muſt now take Notice of, in order to ſhew, that the Delay of this Day's Trial can, in no humane and impartial Breaſt, be any Evidence of Canning's Guilt;—was a Step that every Perſon, in her unhappy Situation, would have taken; was a Conduct that thoſe, who had then the Care of her Defence, would have been void of common Senſe, had they not adviſed it.—For, Gentlemen, in theſe Days, who would truſt the Trial and Teſt of their Character, and their Liberty depending thereon, to the ſame Perſon, both ſupreme Judge and Proſecutor?

However Popiſh Legends may have attempted to perſuade us, that ſuch Impartiality has exiſted,--That a Judge has even condemned, and paſſed Sentence on himſelf;--Yet, in theſe happier Times, when Men are at Liberty to ſee and judge for themſelves, ſuch Traditions will never influence any Man, endued with the leaſt reaſoning Faculties, not to wiſh the Provinces of Judge and Proſecutor, at leaſt, may ever be diſtinct and independent in this Country. I ſpeak this without even the remoteſt Thought of caſting any Reflection on the Integrity and Juſtice of any of thoſe, who preſide in our Courts in theſe Times.--There never was a Time, when the Subject was equally ſecure in this Reſpect: But it does by no means follow from thence, that Failings, inſeparable from human Nature, are not to be guarded againſt by thoſe, who may ſuffer from them. And that a Prejudice to our own Cauſe, is ſuch a Failing, is ſo obvious to every candid Man's own Breaſt,--that no Man, with any Pretence to an upright Heart, would truſt himſelf in ſuch a Situation, as the preſent Proſecutor muſt have been in, had the preſent Examination come on, when he ſo properly preſided in the Magiſtracy of this City

But what was another known Reaſon of this Delay?

It is notorious, the Girl was (and from Motives not to be diſavowed here, or in any other Court) adviſed to remove her Cauſe from this Place, to the ſupreme Court of all criminal Proceedings in Weſtminſter-Hall.

Was this a Step that looks like an Evaſion of Juſtice? Do thoſe, who hope to elude the Force of Juſtice, voluntarily approach the moſt awful Tribunal? Happy might it have been for her, and for the Courſe of Juſtice, had her Deſign and Attempt, in this Particular, been agreeable to the Rules of that Court: For, however ſatisfied I am, that all here wiſh, and mean, to do complete Juſtice; yet the Obſtructions, which we have here met with from a licentious Rabble (the Effect of which on ſome Men's Minds no one knows) would probably have been avoided, could the Defendant's Choice of a more ſolemn Trial have been complied with.---But no ſooner was one juſt Cauſe of Delay removed;--no ſooner was the other, as juſt Reaſon, not to be complied with, by the Courſe of legal Proceedings;--than Canning immediately ſubmitted to her Defence in the Place ſhe now ſtands.

If therefore I have wiped off all Aſperſions of her Guilt, from a ſuppoſed Intent to avoid her Trial,--What Arguments may I not juſtly raiſe in Favour of her Innocence, from her Appearance here at all?

If ſhe was conſcious of the leaſt Fear of Conviction,--(and what Perſon, really guilty, is free from theſe Fears?)--Why did not ſhe make her Flight from Juſtice? She had not even Gratitude to detain her. No Friends were to ſuffer, either in Perſon or Fortune, by her Flight. She was under no Recognizance, either by Self or Friends.

In Oppoſition to even the remoteſt Apprehenſion of the Puniſhment of the Crime of Perjury (and eſpecially ſuch a Perjury), could the Place of Canning's Abode be the Object of a Moment's Doubt? Whether a Servant in London, or elſewhere, muſt be ſurely very indifferent to one in her Station.

It may poſſibly be ſome Comfort, even to be a Servant in England, preferably to other Countries. But ſuppoſe her only apprized of the Nature of her Crime, and ſhe muſt know her Reſidence here of a very ſhort Duration. Under ſuch Circumſtances, therefore, can any one doubt, that ſuch a Delinquent would not have made her own Choice of her Place of Exile, eſpecially, when by ſuch Choice ſhe ſhould have avoided the moſt ſevere Part of her Puniſhment, if guilty,---That of Slavery?

I hope therefore the Imputation of her Guilt, at leaſt from this Circumſtance mentioned by Mr. Willes, is entirely wiped off.

I muſt now, Gentlemen, beg leave to make two or three Obſervations, in offering to you my Thoughts on the Proſecutor's own Caſe, as it ſtands unanſwered by any Facts on our Side. And in this Part, I ſhall invert the Order laid down by my two learned Friends, Mr. Davy and Mr. Willes; and begin firſt with the Improbability objected to Canning's own Tale, becauſe (I think), even allowing the Improbability of her Story to be a ſufficient Proof to ground a Conviction of Perjury on, I can by no means think there is a greater Share of Improbability in the Defendant's Relation, than there is in many Parts of the Account given to contradict the Truth of it.

It would be endleſs, in this Place, to follow the learned Gentlemen's Example, and to obſerve, as minutely as they have done, on the ſeveral Facts related by Canning, and their Evidence to diſprove them.

I ſhall therefore confine myſelf, on this Head of Improbability, to the general Facts related by Canning in her own Story, and to ſome general Objections, which that Relation has furniſhed the Proſecutor's learned Counſel with.

And what are their Objections to the Improbability of her Story? They conſiſt in the Circumſtances of the Time of her Abſence, the Nature of the Place of her Confinement, the particular Manner in which ſhe led her Life there, the ſeemingly ſurpriſing Account of the firſt Robbery.—I cannot forbear obſerving in this Place, to what forced and ſtrange Obſervations on Facts one of the Gentlemen was driven, in order to keep alive his own Cry of Improbability.

Mr. Davy, I think, endeavours to raiſe five different Objections of Improbability from his Obſervations.----The firſt is, It is very ſtrange, ſays he, that there ſhould appear no Premeditation previous to the Robbery in Moorfields.---Mr. Davy has had much more Experience, particularly in this Court, than I have had.---I was therefore the more ſurprized to hear ſuch an Obſervation come from a Gentleman, who muſt have heard ſo many unhappy Wretches tried in this Place, for Crimes that would be doubly ſhocking, did all the Circumſtances appear the Effect of Deſign and Premeditation in the Authors: And ſhall it then be urged as an Argument of every Felon's Innocence, that we are not able to ſhew that his guilty Act was deliberately premeditated? Such Reaſoning would, I apprehend, be as effectually ſerviceable to Villainy as a general Pardon.

The next Improbability is made to ariſe from the very great Danger which theſe Robbers (whom Mr. Davy muſt ſtill ſuppoſe to be all Coolneſs and Deliberation) naturally foreſaw in carrying Canning ſo far from the Place of her Robbery to her Priſon.

But, for my own Part, only ſuppoſe any Robbers, for once, raſh enough to commit any Robbery at all, between Nine and Ten o'Clock at Night in the Middle of Winter, in ſuch a Place as Moorfields, (and I would to God every Day did not afford Inſtances of ſuch unpremeditated Raſhneſs) and where is then the Improbability of the ſubſequent Attempts?

Is it improbable that ſuch Villains ſhould not at once be ſatisfied with the trifling Sum of Money, and the Gown and Apron?---Is it in the leaſt incredible, that thoſe, who were either of Mrs. Wells's or Mrs. Squires's Gang, ſhould be deſirous of adding one more Proſtitute to the Retinue of this notorious Bawd, or ſmuggling Gypſey?

Mr. Davy was ſo drove to ſupport the Improbability of Canning's Relation in this Part of his Obſervation, that we are now told, Robbers themſelves muſt be thought ſo wary and circumſpect, that they muſt even have apprehended immediate Diſcovery from the Reſort of thoſe, who go to ſee the unhappy Inhabitants of one Side of this Square. What! between Nine and Ten at Night!

If the learned Gentleman has not already gratified this Curioſity, I hope he will, at leaſt, chuſe a more ſeaſonable Hour, leſt the Keepers there may be led to miſtake the Motive of ſo unexpected and unſeaſonable a Viſit.

We are then to ſee this Improbability from the known Humanity of Street-Robbers.---Theſe, he thinks, were never cruel on Purpoſe.---This is, I own, an Obſervation of great Good-nature. I wiſh there was the leaſt Foundation in Fact for the Support of it.---But becauſe we cannot aſſign a Motive or Reaſon for every Inſtance of Cruelty and Barbarity theſe Ruffians commit, are we to ſhut out all Belief that ſuch Acts of Violence are committed?

Becauſe, therefore, there is no Deſign of Murder proved, we muſt not believe that theſe humane, theſe deliberate, theſe wary Robbers could be tempted to offer any Violence to Canning, that was not abſolutely neceſſary to a ſuppoſed premeditated Deſign of Robbery.

There is one more Obſervation, and that, perhaps, might afford an Argument of Improbability, and that is the Priſoner's great Caution in huſbanding her Water; for now I am accompanying Mr. Davy in his Obſervations at Enfield-Waſh. But how does this appear, that ſhe did huſband her Water at all, in the Manner Mr. Davy ſuppoſes?

Canning's Evidence, or Relation, at no one Time, or Place, juſtifies this Obſervation: All ſhe tells, or ſwears, is, that the Bread and Water laſted to ſuch a Time; but no where does ſhe relate, how regular ſhe made her Meals. If there is a Poſſibility, that this Bread and Water was ſufficient to ſuſtain human Nature twenty-eight Days, all that Part of the Caſe, of Mr. Davy's eking it out Ounce by Ounce, falls to the Ground.

Another Obſervation was made, which would appear of ſome Weight, if founded on Facts, either admitted or proved.

Says Mr. Davy, If ſhe had a Mind to eſcape, ſhe might, every Hour of the Day, have puſhed out the Plaiſter-Wall. She did attempt, ſhe ſays, to open the Window, and could not. But where is there any Proof, or Admiſſion, that ſhe might have eſcaped every Hour of the Day, if ſhe would? Another Improbability is to ariſe, that the People never came to ſee whether Canning was there or not.---But this, once more, reſting ſolely on Mr. Davy's Imagination, wants a Support of Proof. Canning herſelf ſays, ſhe once ſaw a Perſon look through the Crack of the Door, to ſee if ſhe was gone.---From whence, therefore, are we to collect, that this Improbability ever did happen?---For might not this Obſervation through the Crack be repeated a hundred Times, and Canning not obſerve it?

We are now come to the laſt and great Objection, which is for ever to overturn this Story, on the Foot of Improbability: That is, that Canning ſhould return from the Waſh, without attempting to take any Shelter till ſhe reached her own Houſe. This, I admit, is a Fact related by herſelf, and ſhe is conſiſtent, in this Part of her Story, on every Relation of it; but I leave you, Gentlemen, to judge, what Inference of Improbability ariſes from hence.---Is it poſſible for you to determine, in your own Minds, what would be the Conduct of any one, or more People, in ſuch a Situation? Different Judgments, and different Reſolutions, would be acted upon by very different Ideas, under ſuch Circumſtances.---And therefore I ſubmit, that no Argument of Improbability can be drawn from this Conduct in Canning, that would not equally have furniſhed Mr. Davy's Speech, had ſhe acted a quite different Part, and made her Story known at the firſt Houſe ſhe came by.

Mr. Davy having now finiſhed his Chain of Obſervation, and, as he ſuppoſes, entirely deſtroyed all Pretence to Truth in Canning's Narration; yet thinks it neceſſary to aſk one Queſtion,---Was ever a Story attended with ſuch improbable and incoherent Circumſtances? Many very improbable Things, many very incoherent ones, have happened; and therefore I might ſafely anſwer to this doughty Queſtion, Yes; I think as improbable, as incoherent Circumſtances have been true. But the Guilt or Innocence of the Defendant will not receive the leaſt Light or Aſſiſtance from either Queſtion or Anſwer.

And, therefore, allow ſuch refined Obſervations their utmoſt Latitude, (and as they have been thus relied on by the Proſecutor's Counſel, I have been obliged to take ſome Notice of them) and let us then ſee, where juſt Obſervations on Facts will turn the Weight of Improbability.

This is a Fact not diſputed, Canning was certainly miſſing.---That ſhe gave a particular Account of her Abſence on her Return home, January 29, 1753, is not diſputed.---She was particular in Circumſtances of Place, Perſons, and Things: The remarkable Pitcher now before you in particular.

Now on this State of Facts all uncontradicted,---permit me only to aſk a few Queſtions, as the propereſt Anſwer that can be given to the Obſervations on the Head of Improbability.

If Canning was abſolutely ignorant of the Place ſhe was reſolved to charge as her Priſon, could ſhe have ventured to mention any one Circumſtance ſhe did?

In ſuch a Sort of Room, as the Gentlemen themſelves allow ſhe did deſcribe,---even a Chimney would have been a hazardous Particular.---But, that ſhe ſhould deſcend to ſuch a Pitcher, as now produced, was riſquing the Whole on a Circumſtance, that would fail her a Million to one.

The very Perſon of Squires, ſtamped, as Mr. Davy ſays, by God, with a Particularity never to be forgotten---Would Canning have ventured to fix on ſuch a Perſon? Though Canning was not equal in her Deſcription of Squires's Deformity with Mr. Davy, the Account of the Perſon who robbed her is too remarkable to proceed from mere Invention.

Now it is certainly moſt probable, that if any Perſon at all had been deſcribed to Canning,---it muſt have been Wells:---For, according to the Proſecutor's Account, Squires had come there but a few Days before Canning's Return Home; and yet Canning's Deſcription neither did fit, nor would ſhe charge Wells on Sight. The Perſon of Wells, even by the Proſecutor, was ſuppoſed as unknown by Canning, as that of Squires. The Name, indeed, of Wells or Wills, (now too ſuppoſed by the Proſecutor to have been named by Scarrat to Canning) was mentioned by her at her firſt Return,---and from this Circumſtance every Body had predetermined Mother Wells for the Robber.---Mr. Wilies aſſures you, Nobody dreamed of a Gypſey.---Every Body had fixed on Wells, as ſhe was known to be the Miſtreſs of the Houſe, and as the Houſe was infamouſly known to be capable of harbouring thoſe that were capable of any Villainy.---Every Body therefore fixed their Attention on Wells.---And yet, Gentlemen, the Proſecutor's own Witneſs, Mr. Aldridge, tells you, that Squires was directly pitched on by Canning.---She could not have been more ready, if ſhe had received her Deſcription from Mr. Davy.

But, Gentlemen, Arguments and Inferences on Evidence of this Kind would be endleſs.---No Deduction from them can, or ought to conclude your Judgment on a Charge of this Kind: Yet the Gentlemen for the Proſecution have throughout grounded all their Arguments on this Head, that ſome Story was neceſſary to be forged.---Suppoſe this granted, in order to argue with them in their own Way, let me aſk them,---Could a weak, illiterate Woman (however ſupported) have either invented, or, when invented, be uniform in the Proof of it? Would any one, endued with the moſt common Share of Underſtanding herſelf, or aſſiſted by thoſe who were, have taken a Tale ſo very difficult to have gained Belief?

Surely, a Deſcription of Perſons, Places, and Things, really not exiſting, would as probably have gained Belief, and yet have been much more eaſily managed, in caſe of more particular Inquiries.

But, however ſtrange many of the Circumſtances of this Tale may ſeem, I apprehend it is not ſo deſtitute of all preſumptive Proofs, as has been contended.

I have before ſaid, no one doubts that Canning was miſſing. That the Condition of her Body, on her Return, was moſt miſerable, has been proved by ſome of the Proſecutor's Witneſſes;---will be confirmed by ſuch of ours, whoſe Characters and Stations place them above all Suſpicion of being privy to, or capable of ſupporting a Fraud of any Kind.

The ſame will prove, that ſeveral Symptoms attending this unhappy Girl's Illneſs, were unerring Tokens of ſome moſt extraordinary Treatment ſhe had received.

The Anſwer attempted to theſe uncontradicted Facts, is, All this was practiſed for the ſake of Gain---To become a falſe Object of Charity, or, more probably, ſays Mr. Davy, to cover the Reproach of Whoredom. To this Anſwer I will make no other Reply, than aſk this one Queſtion,---What Fact of Diſtreſs, however uncontroverted, may not be ſuppoſed to have proceeded from a Deſign to deceive and impoſe?---And, in this Inſtance, we have had nothing but mere Suppoſitions to induce your Belief, that all Canning's Sufferings were fraudulent.

I will treſpaſs with only one Queſtion more, on the Head of Improbability. Canning was miſſing---Where was ſhe? After more than a Twelve-month's Inquiry---That Inquiry backed with as active a Proſecution as ever was carried on in this Kingdom---That Proſecution made the univerſal Object of Argument and Curioſity---And yet not the leaſt Surmiſe of any other Place of Confinement than that alledged by Canning herſelf. To this we have had no other Account than Mr. Davy's bare Opinion---She was ſecreted ſomewhere---to conceal a Pregnancy---or to get free of Diſorders incident to the Gay and Young.

If this was the Fact, I ſhall venture to pronounce ſhe might have made more of her Means of Secrecy, than by any Diſtreſs ſhe could counterfeit, terfeit, even in theſe charitable Days.—But to give ſuch a Suppoſition, as Mr. Davy's, the leaſt Colour of Truth, we muſt ſuppoſe that Canning, poor, illiterate, and friendleſs, has ſucceeded in an Attempt, that Money, Art, and Friends have ſcarce ever effected.

I will, therefore, leave this Part of the Proſecutor's Caſe, upon which, I am ſenſible, I have taken up more of your Time, and the Court's, than may have been neceſſary; not only as I think the ſuppoſed Motives of all Canning's Story, at leaſt, as improbable as the Facts related by her; but alſo, as I hope this will be the laſt Proſecution, where I ſhall hear a Conviction of wilful and corrupt Perjury contended for on the mere Improbability of any Facts, which have been credited by Twelve Men on their Oaths, and that too in a Caſe where the merciful Ear is ever moſt open. Since, Gentlemen, it is not to be denied, here at leaſt, where I can vouch the Annals of this Place for my Aſſertion,—That Things, ſeemingly impoſſible for human Power to have performed, have been proved true——Things, the moſt unlikely to be atteſted as true, if falſe, have been credited, and yet have been utterly falſe.

There are two known Inſtances of this Kind: The one, that moſt improbable Ride from a Place near this City to York in one Day, on the ſame Horſe: I had almoſt ſaid, as improbable a Performance as Mr. Davy's Flight round the Atmoſphere! Yet this was a certain Fact done, was atteſted and believed in this Court, and by that Proof the Priſoner was acquitted of a Robbery, which he confeſſed himſelf actually guilty of, as ſoon as acquitted.——Under the other Head, is the well-known Story of a Steward's Son belonging to a Noble Family—If I remember, it was the Gainſborough Family; but that is not material. There the Steward was miſſing, and a large Sum of Money ſuppoſed to have been taken from him; his own Son accuſed himſelf, his Mother, and his Siſter, of the Murder and Robbery, and that they had thrown the Body into ſuch a Pit.—The Pit was ſearched, and no Body found; and yet, as the Son perſiſted in his own Accuſation, they were indicted, tried, and hanged.——Yet, ſome Time after, the Father returned, gave a particular Account of his Abſence, and the Cauſe of it.--Now, in both theſe Inſtances, who, on the firſt Relation, could either aſſent to the Truth of the one, or would doubt the Truth of the other?---And yet the one was uncontrovertibly proved to be true, and the other demonſtrably falſe. I mention theſe Facts, to ſhew the great Danger of acquitting or condemning againſt poſitive Proof on Oath, on refined Arguments of Improbability, which we ſee are thus capable of deceiving.

And, indeed, I cannot but expreſs ſome Degree of Wonder in this Place, that a Point of this Nature ſhould have been thus laboured by the Proſecutor,---as he has contended for, and has endeavoured to produce Proof of Facts, which, if credited, would make all Reſort to Suppoſition uſeleſs.---I infer, therefore, that even touching on Suppoſitions and Arguments of Improbability implies a Diffidence in their Proof of Facts.

But having done with this Part of the Caſe, which reſts on the Head of Improbability, it now remains to examine how the Charge is otherwiſe ſupported; and how it is to be anſwered on our Part. And, after the great Attention you have given, I need not remind you, that the Streſs of the Proof has been levelled to ſhew Mary Squires was elſewhere; on which Mr. Davy has logically concluded, (ergo) Canning has wilfully ſworn falſe. But this is not a neceſſary Conſequence. How does it neceſſarily follow, that though Squires was elſewhere, Canning has maliciouſly perjured herſelf? May there not be a Similitude in Deformity, that may deceive, as well as there may be in the more admired Part of the Sex?

But having, in general, denied the Truth of Mr. Davy's Inference, I ſhall wave this Part of my Defence ſo far as to agree with Mr. Davy, that Squires is ſo ſtampt, that it is ſcarce poſſible to miſtake her. Canning has ſworn ſhe is not miſtaken; Twelve Men upon their Oaths have believed her; and her Defence now is, that ſhe is not miſtaken. It will be as needleſs as prolix, to go minutely through every Branch of the Proſecutor's Evidence, that is meant to prove the contrary. The Witneſſes are many: However, all their Force is direct and obvious to a ſingle Point, viz. to prove Squires at Abbotſbury and other Places, from the 29th of December 1752, to the 1ſt of February 1753: When we ſhall endeavour to prove ſhe was at Enfield.

It is not quite immaterial to remark, that Eſther Hopkins and Alice Farnham, the two firſt Witneſſes, are not quite poſitive, but believe only they are the Perſons.

You will obſerve from hence, that Abbotſbury is to be the grand Scene of Contradiction: There all the Witneſſes, whether united by a long Courſe of Smuggling, or only occaſionally there, are expreſs and poſitive: Other Circumſtances, ſurely not altogether common in the Courſe of a Gypſey's Life, are reſerved only for their Reſidence at Abbotſbury. In all other Places Squires is attempted to be ſhewn properly as a Vagrant,---Fortune-telling,---ſtaying a Night only in a Place, and lodged in Barns.

But when once brought to Abbotſbury, without any Cauſe opened or proved, they are at once to halt, not as Gypſies, but become, in an inſtant, remarkable Gueſts; live in the new Part of the Houſe, inſtead of lying in a Barn; inſtead of being Gypſies, that every one avoids, except ſuch as want to deal in Fortune-telling and ſmuggled Goods, they are now Companions of thoſe of the beſt Rank in the Place, and at two Balls in one Week. This ſo ugly and deformed Woman, whom they have brought a Man that ſubſiſted on Charity at Enfield, to ſwear that he choſe rather to ſit in the Cold, than by the Fire where ſhe was in Company; I ſay, this extraordinary Piece of Deformity you are to believe at Abbotſbury preſent at all Meetings uſual at this Seaſon, and careſſed as a principal Gueſt.

One Remark will ſuffice for all this Particularity of Deſcription at Abbotſbury. This Time was neceſſary to be conſumed ſomewhere, or the alibi Evidence, prior in Point of Time, would not defeat the Gypſey's Arrival at Enfield, in Contradiction to Evidence, which they are aware we have to produce. You will now obſerve, that it has been thought neceſſary to have ſome Standard to reſort to, as a Reaſon for all this particular Series of Evidence and Recollection, relative to all theſe three Gypſies. ---It happens, that moſt of the Evidence have choſen the late Change of Stile as their common Object of Memory.---Scarce one, who did not remember this or that particular Fact, by the Æra of Old or New Chriſtmas.---I wiſh this may be the only Scene of Falſhood and Confuſion flowing from this Law. I was myſelf againſt it, as I thought it likely to be productive of Miſtakes in Evidence, and don't yet ſee any Uſe it ever can be of to the Public.

It is, however, I confeſs, natural to confirm our Remembrance of particular Perſons or Things by remarkable Æras in point of Time. But I much doubt, whether this is not the Occaſion of the whole Miſtake in this Caſe; not, perhaps, deſigned by all, though by others calculated merely to add a Credit to Facts, that a mere poſitive Averment would fall to eſtabliſh.

And in the Evidence of the ſecond Witneſs, Alice Farnham, at Winyard's Gap, (which was given with great Modeſty, and an Air of Truth) there is a Particular, which induces me to believe, that the Year muſt be miſtaken by this Witneſs. In order to convince you that ſhe was not miſtaken in the Perſons of the Gypſies,---ſhe recollects they told her they would come and ſee her again at Old Chriſtmas.

It was then the 31ſt of December---Theſe Gypſies, as you have heard from all their own Accounts, on their Return hither to Winter-Quarters; Abbotſbury, a remarkable Point in View; and yet all this muſt be defeated, if they had then the leaſt Intent of being at Winyard's Gap again at Old Chriſtmas; but this is very reconcileable, ſuppoſing it the Year before, that theſe Wanderers were in thoſe Parts.---And this is no unnatural Suppoſition; for the Change of Stile was then enacted into a Law, though it had not taken place; and therefore the firſt Old Chriſtmas was no uncommon Day of Return for theſe Gypſies, as Diſſenters from the New Stile, to fix on. But ſurely, Gentlemen, if this extenſive Scene of alibi Proof ought to find Credit with you, it is evident George and Lucy Squires were the moſt proper Evidence to ſupport the Truth of it.

To this I deſired to appeal, as being the beſt Evidence, when I obſerved thoſe two in Court, after all other Witneſſes were, by Order, obliged to withdraw.---The Proſecutor's Counſel ſaw the Force of this Appeal, and agreed to call theſe two Witneſſes in Succeſſion.---George was called.---If Lucy had been ventured, and they two had agreed in Points of Facts, of Perſons, and Times, as they muſt have done, if true in the Accounts they gave---I ſay, if this had been done, I then agreed, and I ſtill ſay, that I muſt have ſubmitted, that the Defendant was at leaſt miſtaken in her Evidence againſt Mary Squires.

But, Gentlemen, you have heard George alone. From his Croſs-Examination, the Danger of a manifeſt Contradiction became too apparent. George hardly ſupported himſelf.---If Lucy was called, and faultered, the whole alibi was gone.---Such a Trial was therefore not to be ventured. I re-demanded this Teſt of the Truth of the alibi; but the Proſecutor abſolutely refuſed it.----A Reaſon indeed was aſſigned; but, like many others, the Effect of a quick Invention, unſupported by Proof. Both theſe Witneſſes were, at once, made almoſt Ideots. Nothing of this was mentioned in the Opening, or as an Excuſe for not calling them, when at firſt demanded.

But as Lucy was not called, (which I really think would have determined this whole Affair) let me remark a little on the Conduct of George. And, Gentlemen, where did there appear any Defect of Underſtanding, during his Examination on behalf of the Proſecution? He was clear, quick, and minute, both as to Times, Names, and Places, that were within the Route to be proved. Of other Places, certainly as remarkable, certainly as natural Objects of Memory, not a Tittle was to be remembered; for to have remembered any Thing, would have given a Clue.

And, therefore, not a Town out of the alibi, except Shafiſbury, through a Tour from Auguſt to December, from Surry quite along the Coaſt of Suſſex and Dorſet, is to be mentioned. Not a Tranſaction of buying or ſelling a ſingle Scrap of his Goods, in any one Place out of the alibi; and yet it is impoſſible but their Trade muſt have been their View and Support, in one Part of their Journey as well as another. But I ſubmit, that ſome Parts of the Story, in which the Proſecutor has allowed this Witneſs to be capable of giving his Teſtimony, afford ſtrong Suſpicions of Falſehood. I will enumerate ſome of them, that ſtrike me in this Light: Firſt, that decrepid old Woman's Walk from Litton to Abbotſbury, and back again to Dinner, and then to Abbotſbury the ſame Evening, ſeems highly improbable. You are told by other Witneſſes, that ſuch a Walk would neceſſarily take up more Time, than other Circumſtances of George's Story can poſſibly allow for it.---Add to this, the Improbability of her being at Abbotsbury, and that too at Clarke's Houſe, and yet not ſeen there by one of all her numerous Acquaintance. You obſerve ſcarce a Perſon there, but has known her intimately for many Years. Here, you have heard from many of the Witneſſes, there was an Halt of eight or nine Days.---George then tells you, that the firſt Day they went only to Porterſham, a very ſmall Diſtance; and from this Place ſuch forced Marches, as amount to the higheſt Degree of Improbability. I aſked him a Reaſon for this immediate and unuſual Expedition.---This was one of the Queſtions, which you find he did not expect to be aſked. At laſt, it was a Siſter's Illneſs occaſioned this Hurry---We received a Letter from her by the Poſt on that Account. He could not, however, tell where this Letter was received, and, perhaps, that might be forgot: But, Gentlemen, he could ſcarce receive this Letter at Porterſham, becauſe that was a mere occaſional Reſting-place; and if a Letter, that really required and occaſioned ſuch Expedition, was received at Abbotsbury, I deſire to have it accounted for, how they came to attempt no further than Porterſham the firſt Day. It is obvious therefore to me, that the particular Stages this Witneſs gives an Account of, were not in purſuance of this Letter; but in order to be at Baſingſtoke on the 18th of January, for a Purpoſe that is very material for the Truth of their whole Story, and which I ſhall take particular Notice of, when I attend them at that Place.

But firſt let me aſk, If ſuch a Letter ever ſent,---if a Siſter ever ſick;---Why not that Siſter here, to confirm the Truth of this plain and ſimple Fact? Is ſhe too of ſo weak an Underſtanding, as not to be truſted with this Queſtion? Did you write a Letter to your Brother George in January 1753, and to what Place? Was you then ill, and did you inform him ſo by ſuch Letter? An Anſwer in the Affirmative to either of theſe Queſtions, from a Witneſs whoſe Character ſtands, and muſt ſtand, unimpeached by

by any Thing which now appears, would have had great Weight, with me at leaſt, in confirming this Part of George's Evidence.

There is another moſt remarkable Defect in George's Account of this Journey.--From Coombe to Baſing ſtoke is forty Miles:--He wanted, at firſt, to make this March in two Days; but he was put right in his Road here by the learned Gentleman's Rota on his Brief, or elſe they would have been too early at Baſing ſtoke for this material Letter:---But, in this three Days March of forty Miles,---not a ſingle Place known;---no Witneſs called that ever ſaw them;---and yet they eat, drank, and lodged, as in other Parts of their Journey.---And yet, to put the Truth of this Narration beyond the Reach of a Doubt, this Witneſs has repeated his whole Journey, accompanied by an Attorney, not only to refreſh his own Memory, but to give his Teſtimony a Prop and Support, which he was no doubt prudently adviſed it might ſtand in need of.

It is, ſurely, ſomewhat ſtrange, that the nearer he arrived to his own Home, the leſs he ſhould be capable of remembering Things and Places himſelf,---the leſs he ſhould be able to produce Perſons to remember him, his Mother, or his Siſter. But, Gentlemen, this is a glaring Objection to his Teſtimony, both between Coombe and Baſing ſtoke, and from Baſing ſtoke to Brentford. But at Baſing ſtoke a Circumſtance is pretended to have happened, and which, if it really did happen, makes it beyond a Doubt, that they were really at Baſing ſtoke on the 18th of January.

This is the Letter, ſuppoſed to be wrote, by the Direction of Lucy, by the Landlady at Baſing ſtoke, to her Lover Mr. Clarke, whom, you have been told, ſhe danced with at Abbotſbury. You have alſo been told, that this Pledge of Lucy's Love was unfortunately delivered to a wrong Mr. Clarke, by ſome Miſtake of the Dorcheſter Poſt-Houſe.--Now, Gentlemen, you will obſerve, all that makes this Letter, in any Degree, a material Piece of Evidence for the Proſecutor, is the Time it was wrote: For that theſe Vagabonds may have been in all the Places through which the Evidence has traced them,---that they might dance at Abbotſbury,---and that Lucy, whoſe Beauty Mr. Davy himſelf ſeems to have been ſo enamoured with, might there alſo captivate the Heart of Mr. Clarke,---is very probable, but intirely immaterial. It was therefore incumbent on the Gentlemen for the Proſecution to have fixed the Time at which this Letter was wrote, without the leaſt Blot of any Suſpicion; and not only the Time, but that the Gypſies actually came on this ſuppoſed 18th of January to Baſingſtoke, directly from Abbotsbury; for, otherwiſe, their being at Enfield-Waſh on the 1ſt, 2d, or 3d of January, and at Baſing ſtoke on the 18th, are not in the leaſt inconſiſtent: And therefore, Gentlemen, I before took Notice, that a moſt material Part of this Journey was very imperfectly accounted for by George Squires, and not any Witneſs to aſſiſt him quite from Coombe to Baſing ſticke. How material therefore would it have been, in this Part of their Caſe, to have had this wrong Mr. Clarke, to whom this Love-Epiſtle was ſent by Miſtake?---We ſhould then, at leaſt, have been ſure, that it was not of an earlier Date than 1753: And, when I come to obſerve on the Letter itſelf, as produced to the Court, I think ſome Suſpicions, on this Head, will not appear to be groundleſs. Mr. Davy with great Confidence aſſerted, that this Piece of Evidence alone was ſufficient to detect the whole Impoſture. I have allowed how ſtrong it would be, accompanied with ſome Requiſites, that, I ſubmit, do not now accompany it.--An eſſential one is, that the Letter ſhould, beyond a Doubt, appear to you to be wrote on the 18th of January 1753.---Mr. Davy and Mr. Willes have therefore, on all Occaſions, mentioned this Date of the Letter, as a Fact not diſputable, or, indeed, to be diſputed.---But, Gentlemen, you, on Oath, muſt, from the Appearance of the Letter itſelf, at leaſt think this uncertain; for, however often the Date has been repeated 1753, it, in fact, has no other Figures than 175; the Corner, where the fourth Figure ſhould ſtand, is torn or rubbed off.---That Corner alone, Gentlemen, out of four, though all equally ſecured by the Fold and Make of the Letter, has ſuffered by Time. When an Obliteration, or other Accident, happens in ſo material a Part of ſo very material a Piece of Evidence, it naturally excites ſome Suſpicion. And here again, how material would it have been to have had the wrong Mr. Clarke, who could not, I am ſure, have peruſed ſo unexpected a Letter without ſome Degree of Attention? And from him we might poſſibly have known how the Date appeared, when delivered to him.

'Tis alſo unlucky for this material Point of Evidence, that the Poſt-Mark is by no means plain enough to give any ſatisfactory Account of the Time, when this Letter actually paſſed through the Poſt. This, I own, is a Defect not in the Proſecutor's Power to have cured; but therefore it was the more incumbent on him to have authenticated the Time and Date of the Letter, by ſuch Means as were in his Power; and therefore, I think, the Abſence of Mr. Clarke greatly diſcredits the Authority of this Piece of Evidence; for, as I have before ſaid, on the Truth and Exactneſs of Time depends the whole Force of this alibi Evidence.---I doubt I have appeared very prolix on this Part of the Caſe: But as the Conduct of the Proſecution ſeemed to make this ſo very material, I hope I have not ſeemed to treſpaſs too much on that Indulgence, which has been ſo remarkable through this whole Cauſe.---I ſhall therefore cloſe my Obſervations on the other numerous Witneſſes to this alibi Part of the Caſe, that however they may agree in general Facts, that Squires was at this and that Place, as ſworn, ſuch Account may either be falſe or immaterial in this Proſecution; may be, as other alibi Defences too often are, abſolutely falſe, or falſe in Point of Time; and the one, as well as the other, equally invalidates the whole of this, as relative to, or material in, a Proof of Canning's Guilt.

It is therefore one of the Corner-Stones to the Credit of this Sort of Proofs, that the ſeveral Witneſſes ſhould be uniform in all their Circumſtances, and particularly in ſuch, which they themſelves might not think a neceſſary or eſſential Part of the Caſe which they are brought to prove. But, Gentlemen, you may remember, that in ſuch Circumſtances there were many contradictory Accounts: One in particular was moſt material, either in eſtabliſhing or overthrowing George Squires's Account of his Mother's famous Walk to Abbotsbury and back again. To give this a ſeeming Probability, all the ſubſequent Witneſſes were to bring them into Abbotsbury very late in the Evening; and yet John Ford, one of the Gang's moſt intimate and old Acquaintance, ſwore poſitively, that he kiſſed Lucy before Three o'Clock in the Afternoon at Abbotsbury. Mr. Davy was aware, that ſo ſignal a Token of Remembrance would weigh ſtrongly againſt ſome of the former Evidence; and therefore this Witneſs is directly called drunk. There is another of this Sort very material: Hawkins at Litton, though in and about his Houſe the whole Morning, remembers not a Tittle of this Morning's Walk by the old Woman to Abbotsbury.

Having gone through this Range of the Proſecutor's Evidence, and troubled you with ſuch Obſervations as occurred to me on thoſe Parts which they ſeemed to lay their greateſt Streſs on; I am now in Courſe brought nearer Home, and am to ſee how far another Claſs of Witneſſes have produced any ſubſtantial Charge againſt the Defendant. And I hope, Gentlemen, I ſhall have Occaſion to be much leſs prolix on this Part; becauſe the Evidence, in its own Nature, is much weaker; and whatever Weight it may carry, allowing every Tittle of it to be true, there are ſcarce any three Perſons to be found, who will agree in drawing the ſame Inferences from the Facts related by the Sett of Witneſſes I am now come to; that is, Gentlemen, thoſe Witneſſes, who have given you an Account of the ſeveral Occurrences before Alderman Chitty, and at the Time Canning was down at Enfield, and at other Times, when ſhe has, either in ordinary Diſcourſe, or in Obedience to the Civil Magiſtrate, made her Confinement and Delivery the Subject of any Deſcription. I will not go through the ſeveral Parts of theſe Tranſactions, which the Gentlemen for the Proſecution have endeavoured to paint ſo contradictory to each other, as muſt neceſſarily ſtamp the Whole for a Fiction and Forgery. You, Gentlemen, have had theſe different Accounts, both the written and related, laid before you. Your Underſtanding and Judgment is too ſound for me to imagine myſelf capable of reconciling you to the Truth of any Contradictions by any Obſervations. It therefore becomes me only to ſtate this Branch of the Evidence. If it contains any Contradictions in Facts material, I cannot leſſen the Force of them: But if you ſee what is artfully termed by the Proſecutor contradictory Accounts, in the Light I do in this Branch of the Evidence, I really and ſeriouſly imagine, that we have been waſting your Time, both on the one Side and the other. For what does it all amount to more than this, that a general Fact, compounded of a Variety of Things done and ſaid, when related on particular Occaſions, and at different Times, has not always been minutely and exactly related the ſame Way? And therefore, from this Sort of Defect alone, which I believe no various Relations of a long Story were ever free from, can any Weight ſeem proper to be laid on this Part of the Proſecutor's Caſe? And yet, ſo far has this been puſhed, that you have had a Contradiction endeavoured to be made appear to you, even from the figurative Expreſſion of the unhappy Mother, in deſcribing her Daughter's Wretchedneſs on her Return. The Midwife telling you, Mrs. Canning ſaid to her, Here is my poor Daughter returned as naked as ſhe was born---What! ſays Mr. Davy, did ſhe ſay, as naked as ſhe was born? The Energy, Gentlemen, of the Queſtion, was to remind you that all Canning's Accounts mentioned a Handkerchief on her Head, and a Bed-Gown on her Shoulders. One can really be ſcarce ſerious in obſerving on Attempts of this Kind; and yet, Gentlemen, much of your Time has been taken up with Arguments on ſuch ſeeming Contradictions. Pardon me in digreſſing in this Place to one more Remark, that Arguments drawn from ſuch ſeeming Contradictions have been the only Materials which the printed Traſh of Quacks, Inſpectors, and Juſtices, have ſupplied on either Side of this Queſtion; and yet, Gentlemen, from this modern Practice of acquitting or condemning in Pamphlets, without Judge or Jury, it is eaſily foreſeen, that not a Trial of any Importance will ſoon be laid before a Jury in that unprejudiced Manner, which the cautious Jealouſy of the excellent Laws of this Country requires.

But to return, and to give one Proof, how far theſe Contradictions really did carry along with them any Conviction of Canning's Impoſture; let us ſee whether thoſe, who now make Inferences of Canning's Guilt from ſuch Circumſtances, have acted the Part, that Men, ſuppoſed thus convinced, would or could have done.

For, Gentlemen, you will obſerve, that Mr. Naſh, Hague, and Aldridge, would now have you believe, that from the 1ſt of February, the Time they attended Canning at Enfield, they were all ſatisfied that Canning was at leaſt miſtaken. I will not aſk, whether the Contradictions before Alderman Chitty, or elſewhere, were the Ground of their Conviction in this Particular. Satisfied they were, that Canning was miſtaken; and yet, Gentlemen, they were all at the Trial of Squires. Theſe Men, hitherto of unimpeached Characters, ſaw one Life in great Jeopardy for Felony; another Perſon trying as Acceſſary to that Felony; and yet offered no Evidence in Contradiction to that Proof, which they then believed to be falſe, and ſaw was likely to be ſo fatal.

The Reaſons for not doing this Act of neceſſary Juſtice you have heard. One of theſe convinced Gentlemen was, if I remember, to attend a City Feaſt. The other was ſo terrified with the Perjury, that he could make no Attempts to prevent the fatal Effects of it. But there is ſomething ſtill more particular in the Conduct of Mr. Naſh: I produced a Letter to him, dated the 10th of February, which he acknowledged to be his; and you will obſerve, this is almoſt a Fortnight after he tells you, that he was convinced that Squires and Wells were not juſtly accuſed.

And yet, Gentlemen, what is the Purport of this Letter? It is wrote to one Mr. Lyon, a known and zealous Friend of the Defendant, and it is to inform Mr. Lyon, that conſiderable Contributions might be raiſed about Enfield-Waſh for the poor unhappy Girl, and that he wiſhes them good Luck. Good Luck! Gentlemen, In what? Will you believe Mr. Naſh wiſhed them good Luck in a Contribution, by the Means of which he muſt know that Innocence was deſigned to be arraigned? that an Accuſation, he then believed falſe, would be ſupported by Perjury? Or, are we now to believe, that Mr. Naſh, thus convinced, was weak enough to think Canning that poor unhappy Girl, as to be a worthy Object of his Recommendation to Charity? Let the former Conduct of theſe three Gentlemen explain and account for themſelves, if it can: But yet ſee how far they have been poſitive in Facts, where we have nothing to do either with their Obſervations or Opinions, and which, from henceforth, I think no Man can place any Reliance on. They have all poſitively ſwore, That Canning continued fixed to her firſt Charge on Squires; though the Warrant was taken out againſt Mother Wells; though all her Friends, and the City Officer, expected, nay, pointed out Wells as the Criminal; though Wells was continually running her Face cloſe up to Canning's, and interrogating her, Is it me? Is it me, Madam? though the more artful Gypſey, who is neither deaf nor blind as yet, during this Tranſaction kept her Face much concealed, till poſitively charged by Canning. Then, indeed, directly the Maſk of her Deformity is produced, and made a Defence, which, to a Perſon conſcious of no Guilt, would have appeared a much more natural Protection, by being never concealed at all.

While we are ſtill on this Scene at Enfield-Waſh, if you are to ſuppoſe Canning's Story all a Fiction, nothing but a Deſign to carry on a Cheat; why ſhould Canning determine on the Gypſey? The Name of the Gypſey had been echoed through all Parts of the Houſe. You cannot ſuppoſe Canning ignorant of the Life theſe People lead; never fixed long in a Place.—Mother Wells then at her uſual Place of Abode,—of an infamous Character,—Facts both agreed to be known to Canning: And yet Canning, as the Foundation of her Cheat, determines on a Fact, which, if ſhe knew to be falſe, ſhe muſt be morally ſure would depend on her Evidence alone, and that too (from her own Account) liable to be contradicted by the Teſtimony of Virtue Hall; for, in all her Accounts, ſhe is uniform, that Virtue Hall was there when ſhe was brought in: And if all this was a known Forgery to Canning, could ſhe have left ſuch a Witneſs's Character unimpeached by her Accuſation? For could ſhe then imagine, that inſtead of Hall's appearing to confute her, ſhe would appear to confirm the Truth of her whole Teſtimony?

If Inferences drawn from Facts are in this Inquiry to have their Weight in Oppoſition to Facts themſelves, I only deſire this Part of the Tranſaction may be remembered, when you take the Conſideration of this Caſe, under the Head of probable or improbable.

Gentlemen, I have hitherto confined myſelf to Obſervations and Anſwers to ſuch Facts as the Proſecutor himſelf has made a Part of his Caſe. And as the Facts we have to lay before you will not require the Illuſtration of refined Arguments and Obſervations, I hope not to treſpaſs much more on your Patience. I am ſorry my Duty has obliged me to have done it ſo long already. But before I give you the general State of our own Evidence, which is all I ſhall attempt to do in this Part of our Defence for the Priſoner, let me only remark to you the Omiſſion of a Piece of Evidence, ſo material in the Confirmation of Canning's Guilt, that I am ſure the Proſecutor's Counſel could not have omitted it, had they really thought the Story as falſe, as they have, by other Sort of Evidence, endeavoured to make it; that is, Gentlemen, their not having called Virtue Hall here to ſupport the Truth of her Recantation. That they could have had her is certain; that ſhe might give Teſtimony, extremely material, on one Side or the other, cannot be denied; that her Word, or her Oath (I know not which has been relied on) has been deemed void of all Credit, cannot, I am ſure, be aſſerted; becauſe I am confident, that it muſt have been uſed as one Argument, at leaſt, for the Application for that Mercy which has been ſhewn to Mary Squires. I ſay, Gentlemen, theſe are ſome of my Reaſons, why I think Virtue Hall has gained Credit, ſince the Time ſhe was ſworn here in Confirmation of Canning's Story; and therefore, Gentlemen, why is ſhe not now brought here by the Proſecutor to give a Sanction to the Truth of that Recantation on Oath? What, Gentlemen, can the Abſence of this Witneſs be imputed to, but that they were afraid (I do not mean the Counſel were afraid, but the prudent Management of their Cauſe was juſtly afraid) of another ſolemn and public Examination of this Witneſs. I think this Obſervation a juſt one, or I would not have made it. The Gentlemen have rather choſe that I ſhould make it, than riſk another Relapſe from Virtue Hall. But, perhaps, whatever may be your Verdict, her Recantation will ſtill ſerve for Caſes and News-Papers.

Mr. Recorder. If ſhe had been here, ſhe has already diſcredited herſelf, and cannot be a Witneſs.

Mr. Moreton continues. With Submiſſion, Sir, I muſt inſiſt on the Propriety of my former Obſervation. Virtue Hall, by the known Practice and Rules of Evidence, is a legal and competent Witneſs. Courts of Juſtice can take no Notice of private Recantations, or of Diſcoveries ſuppoſed to be made to Magiſtrates in private, ſo far as to repel the Teſtimony of a Witneſs: I therefore rely on the Propriety of my Obſervation.

And now, Gentlemen, I have gone through the Caſe, the Evidence, and the Conduct of the Proſecutor. I ſhall have Occaſion to be but very ſhort in ſtating our Anſwer to each of them; becauſe, as I before ſaid, I ſhall truſt the Merits of the Defence to abſolute Facts, not to refined Obſervations on them. Many of the Facts, proper on our Part, have been proved by the Proſecutor's own Evidence; ſuch as the Abſence of Canning, her Return, her Account of herſelf, her real Condition, her Charge of Squires at Enfield-Waſh, and many more Circumſtances which I have already obſerved on to you. I wiſh a Repetition of the ſame Facts could be wholly excluded from our Evidence, merely for the ſake of Time; but I foreſee that is impracticable. But, Gentlemen, theſe Facts being already proved, the Remainder of our Proof is pointed to the abſolute Overthrow of the Truth of the Proſecutor's alibi of Mary Squires, at the Time of Canning's Robbery and Confinement. In order to do this, we ſhall call you many Witneſſes, who have lived in and about Enfield-Waſh, from fifteen to thirty Years, People of known and eſtabliſhed Credit.

The Proſecutor has had a Liſt of theſe Witneſſes now many Days, and in that Reſpect the neceſſary Adjournments of this Trial have given him an Advantage and Opportunity of impeaching the Credit of all our Witneſſes, if their Characters cannot ſtand the Teſt of Inquiry: I ſay, by a Number of Witneſſes, unconnected in any Reſpect with the Party, in whoſe Behalf they now appear, we ſhall ſhew you, that this never-to-be forgotten Image of Mary Squires was ſeen at Enfield on ſeveral of the Days, which the Witneſſes for the Proſecutor fix her to be in the different Parts of her Journey in the Weſt. We ſhall not, indeed, have ſo exact a Diary of the various Motions of theſe Vagrants, (I might ſay Felons, for ſo they are by Law) or of their various Entertainments, their Companions and Amuſements. Whether the Want of ſuch particular Exactneſs in the Relation of Facts in themſelves, at the Time performed, entirely indifferent, will diminiſh the Credit of our Account or not, I ſhall leave to your own Obſervation. They all, as I have before ſaid, ſtand free and clear of all Imputation as to Credit; and they have, almoſt all of them, ſome natural as well as particular Account to aſſign for their Remembrance of the Time of the Abode of theſe remarkable Strollers at the Waſh.

Some will tell you of their dealing with them in one Way, ſome in another. It would be inexcuſable to be particular on this Head. There are thoſe who took Money of them; and from a vulgar Belief of ſome ſuperior Power in theſe People called Gypſies, thought it neceſſary to purify the Money ſo taken, leſt it might be conjured from them by this left-handed Kind of Divinity. There are others who will tell you, that they have parted with their Money to this very Woman in her Trade of Fortune-telling,—have been Face to Face with this remarkable Impreſſion of Deformity. And therefore ſo far the alibi proved by the Proſecutors has an expreſs Contradiction in Proof. There are other Ingredients in our Evidence, which afford a Light to thoſe Parts of Canning's own Narration, which gives you both her Journey to, and Return from the Waſh. I only mention all theſe, in general, becauſe I ſhall rely on them, when we go into our Proof. Whatever other Obſervations either the Proſecutor's Caſe and Proof, or our own affords, (and many they muſt be which I have omitted) I am ſatisfied the Care and Diligence of the Gentlemen, who are on the ſame Side with me, will amply ſupply.—Tired therefore, as I am, in having attempted to go through ſo very long a Caſe,---tired, as I am ſure you, Gentlemen, muſt be, by that moſt laudable and impartial Attention, which you have ſhewn through this whole Inquiry,---I ſhall only beg that Attention to a very few general Obſervations. The Weight and Credit of Evidence is your Province. The Weight and Credit of Arguments and Obſervations, in Oppoſition to Facts expreſly ſworn, you will know how to eſtimate.———If, on the Whole, only a juſt and rational Doubt ſhould remain on your Judgments, the Policy, the Lenity, the Juſtice of our Laws, incline to Mercy. In Circumſtances which muſt have been, nay, yet are doubtful, Squires has found Mercy.

And though I am ſatisfied there never was a Time, when the moſt rigid Hand of Juſtice was more properly required to the Suppreſſion of Perjury; I am as fully convinced there never was a Time, when active and reſolute Proſecutions for other reproachful Villainies ſhould be more cautiouſly deterred by ſuch Proceedings as the preſent againſt the now Defendant.

Mr. NARES.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury;

Notwithſtanding this Cauſe has taken ſo long Time already, and no Man upon Earth is more ſenſible of the great Care that ſhould be taken not to miſpend the Time of the Court unneceſſarily than myſelf; yet, as it is now become my Duty to make ſome few Obſervations, I ſhall make no Apology for intruding on your Patience ſomewhat longer, though, perhaps, in the Conſequence, it may be to little Purpoſe.

I am not only of Counſel, but, I will ſay, greatly concerned for the Priſoner at the Bar; who, to uſe the Epithet of my learned Leader, may be truly called extremely unfortunate, and that in many Inſtances; unfortunate in being accuſed of any Crime, if ever ſo innocent; unfortunate in having once appeared in this Court as a Witneſs, and being ſo unhappy as to be believed; and unfortunate likewiſe in this Reſpect, as ſhe is now brought to her Trial for a Perjury in ſuch a Cauſe, and under ſuch Circumſtances, as I will venture to ſay, the Annals of Time cannot produce a ſimilar Inſtance. It is not my Inclination or my Meaning to reflect upon any Man: I mean not to reflect upon the Worſhipful Magiſtrate, through whoſe Lenity, though, perhaps, a miſtaken or injudicious one, ſhe now ſtands accuſed; though I cannot help obſerving, that this Proſecution hath been carried on and ſupported with more Warmth and Spirit than any I ever had the Honour to attend; and if this Warmth and Spirit ſpring merely from a Zeal of bringing a ſuppoſed Criminal to exemplary Puniſhment, far be it from me to blame or condemn it. God forbid ſuch a Warmth ſhould ever cool, or ſuch a Spirit grow degenerate.

Thus much I think it material to ſay for the Priſoner at the Bar, on the Nature and Manner of her Proſecution; that it is totally unprecedented, that, as a Proſecutor who had convicted a Criminal, ſhe ſhould now come to be tried to overturn that Conviction. You know, as well as I, the unfortunate Priſoner was a Witneſs againſt Mary Squires and Suſannah Wells; and you know that they were both convicted; and you will recollect one Circumſtance well worth your Conſideration, and which I ſhall endeavour to inforce more ſtrongly hereafter, that it was not on her Teſtimony only that theſe Perſons were convicted, but her Evidence was ſupported by the Teſtimony of another Perſon; which Perſon's Teſtimony you are now totally deprived of, becauſe it hath been artfully inſinuated to the World, as many other Circumſtances have been, that ſhe hath now recanted all ſhe ſwore at the Trial, and therefore the poor Priſoner at the Bar dare not venture to call her, for fear ſhe ſhould by any Means be induced to contradict her former Evidence; which if ſhe did, the Priſoner might be condemned, inſtead of acquitted, by the Mouths of her own Witneſſes. How that Recantation was brought about, I ſhall hereafter tell you from the Inſtructions of my Brief: But I cannot help making this Obſervation at preſent, that the Gentlemen on Behalf of the Proſecution have not ventured to inſinuate, nor attempted to prove, what Means were or could be uſed by, or what Influence that Woman was or could be under to the poor Priſoner and her poor Relations, to induce her to ſwear as ſhe did, if all ſhe ſwore was ſo groſs a Falſity.

And, Gentlemen, however, thro' Tenderneſs or Lenity, a Magiſtrate may think, (for the ſake of any particular Perſons being convinced in their own private Judgments that ſuch Perſons have been wrongfully convicted) that ſuch a Proſecution is laudable; yet give me leave to ſay, becauſe I can ſpeak it from great Authority, that ſuch Inquiries into the Guilt or Innocence of a Priſoner, after they have been legally convicted, are vaſtly inconvenient and improper; and although Proſecutions of this Nature may ſhew Kindneſs to Particulars, yet they may be attended with Cruelty to Mankind in general, as they tend to interrupt, at leaſt, if not overturn that common Courſe of Juſtice, that the Wiſdom of this Kingdom, in all Ages, has eſtabliſhed; and may, and muſt ſerve to intimidate and prevent Numbers of People from commencing Proſecutions to endeavour to bring the Guilty to Puniſhment, leſt, by ſome ſtrange Alteration of Affairs, they themſelves may, in their Turn, be proſecuted.

And, Gentlemen, when I ſay Proſecutions and Inquiries of this Nature muſt be attended with great Inconveniency to the Community in general, I ſpeak it from Authority, in a Caſe in which I was Counſel for the Priſoner.

There was a Man, whoſe Name was Williams, that was indicted at Staffford, for a Robbery committed at Wolverhampton Town's End the 24th of December. It appeared in Evidence, the Moment the Priſoner was charged with the Robbery, he told the Proſecutor he was that very Day at Iſlington: The Proſecutor, however, ſwore to the Man, though it was by Moon-light: After which I called for the Priſoner five Witneſſes, four of them from Iſlington, and another from Redbourn, near St Alban's. In my Life I never heard ſo circumſtantial an Account, and ſuch a vaſt Multitude of concurring Circumſtances, in point of Time, and Knowledge of the Man, to prove him at Iſlington at the Time the Fact was committed; inſomuch that the learned Judge, who tried the Priſoner, aſked Mr. Serjeant Haywood, who was of Counſel with the Proſecutor, What he could ſay to it? for that he never heard ſo ſtrong a Defence in his Life. In Reply, they called two poor Perſons, who ſwore they ſaw the Priſoner at Wolverhampton the Day the Robbery was committed. The Priſoner was convicted. Soon after, as ſoon as the Priſoner returned to Gaol, he declared his Brother committed the Robbery; and there being a great Diſpoſition in the Country in general to ſave the Priſoner, ſuppoſing him to be innocent, they directed the Brother to be taken up, and, on being charged with this Robbery, he immediately confeſſed it, and ſeveral other Robberies, for which he was immediately committed to Warwick Gaol, and for one of which he was afterwards hanged. This Account was brought to the Judge at Shrewſbury, and he was ſo far prevailed on as to order the Under-Sheriff of Staffordſhire to write to his Agent to enquire into the Characters of the Iſlington Witneſſes.——The Agent accordingly inquired of the Clergyman of the Pariſh, and received for an Anſwer, that they were all Perſons of good Character.——This Account was ſent directly to me at Glouceſter, with a Requeſt from many Gentlemen to wait on the Judge with it. This Requeſt I complied with, and the Judge read the Account, but told me he had, notwithſtanding, ſome Reaſons to apprehend him guilty; and however he might be inclined to extend his Mercy to this Priſoner in particular, yet he ſhould not do it, as he thought it of the moſt dangerous Conſequence to the Juſtice of the Nation in general, to try the Guilt or Innocence of a Priſoner, after his Country, on a fair and impartial Trial, had found him guilty. After this the Man was hanged; and after he was executed, twenty Witneſſes might have been produced to have proved him at Wolverhampton, when he was ſworn to be at Iſlington, and no Perſon in the Country doubted of his Guilt. This I mention to ſhew how dangerous theſe ſubſequent Trials muſt neceſſarily be. Why are they dangerous? Becauſe, ſuppoſing People wicked enough, either out of Love to the Party accuſed, or Malice to the Proſecutor, to meditate Revenge on him two or three Years after, (for there is no Time limited to call his Proſecutor to an Account, and to indict him for Perjury) he may be brought to a Trial, when, perhaps, all his Witneſſes are dead, and it will be totally impoſſible for him to ſupport his Teſtimony. When I have ſaid this, I am ſure theſe Obſervations will and ought, at leaſt, to weigh with you thus far, that if any Doubt ſhould ariſe of the Guilt of the Priſoner, you will not give the leaſt Encouragement to this Sort of Proſecution; for, ſuppoſing People wicked enough either to be tempted by Rewards, or Promiſes of Rewards, there is not a Man living ſafe or ſecure from ſome Proſecutions of this Nature.

I cannot help once more mentioning the great Difficulties the Priſoner lies under, in being deprived of the Teſtimony of the only Perſon, who could ſpeak to the ſame Facts the Priſoner did, which would prove her innocent. Every body knows that Virtue Hall gave the ſame Account that the Priſoner did of the Robbery; and what convinces me, beyond all Poſſibility of Doubt, that what Virtue Hall ſaid could not be dictated or taught her, is, ſhe did not only go Step by Step with the Priſoner's Relation, as far as that went,----but after ſhe had left the Story, Virtue Hall took it up again, and told you what became of the Stays, and the Converſation that paſſed after ſhe was put into the Room, and what ſhe feared from too nice an Enquiry into it afterwards. This Witneſs has not been called.

In order to obviate any Objections or Obſervations that were expected to be made from not producing her, it hath been thrown out, that if ſhe was produced, ſhe could not be a Witneſs, at leaſt, on Behalf of the Proſecution, becauſe the Moment ſhe came to charge the Priſoner, ſhe muſt confeſs herſelf perjured: But I beg leave to inſiſt, that ſuch an Objection would only go to the Credit, not to her Competency; and it was ſo determined in this Court, in an Indictment againſt one Murphy for a Forgery of a Seaman's Will (Vide P. 183 of this Volume). There was a pretended Will ſet up and proved in the Commons; the very Man who forged the Will, and had ſwore in the Commons, to obtain the Probate, and to authenticate the Will, was called on Behalf of the Proſecutor, to prove that he forged it by the Directions of the Priſoner. I made the ſame Objection to his Teſtimony, as is now hinted at with reſpect to Virtue Hall's; but the Court over-ruled it, and the Man was admitted an Evidence. He came and told the Court, all he had ſaid upon Oath in the Commons was a Contrivance between Murphy and himſelf, and that every Word of it was falſe; and on his Evidence, ſupported by ſome corroborating Circumſtances, the Priſoner was convicted. If there wanted other Arguments or Caſes to prove this Sort of Evidence admiſſible in this Court, I need only mention the common Caſe of Subornation of Perjury; there the Perſon who hath been ſuborned, and hath ſworn falſe, is generally, if not always, called to convict the Suborner, and to ſhew and prove by what Means he was prevailed on.

Virtue Hall then certainly would have been a proper Witneſs, if they would have called her. I have already mentioned ſome great Difficulties the Priſoner is put under from her not being produced: I ſhall mention only one more; the Priſoner may, by this Means, be deprived of an Opportunity of ſhewing the Court the Methods that were uſed to bring about this Recantation; and, as ſhe may yet be called, which will make this Account Evidence, and as I apprehend it will be for the Benefit of my Client, I cannot conceal it. And, Gentlemen, I am inſtructed to ſay, and have many Witneſſes in my Brief to prove thoſe Inſtructions, that Virtue Hall's Recantation was brought about in a very extraordinary Manner: She was called upon in publick to declare, whether what ſhe had ſworn on the Trial was true or falſe: And tho' I doubt not but the Magiſtrate meant well by it, yet, when called upon thus publickly to make Recantation, what did ſhe ſay? She declared openly, all ſhe had ſworn was Truth. She was aſked the ſame Queſtion again, and ſhe made the ſame Anſwer; upon which Somebody or other ſuggeſted, it would be proper to take her in private. For God's ſake! why in private? I am ſure, by the Knowledge I have of the Worſhipful Magiſtrate, he could never intend to ſeduce her by Rewards or Promiſes: But this may be the Caſe; the poor Girl might weakly imagine, that, if ſhe altered her Evidence, ſhe might have ſome Rewards, though the ſtrict Juſtice of the Magiſtrate never could or would have given her the leaſt Foundation for ſuch a Belief. But, as the Poor and the Ignorant are more liable to be led away with falſe Fears or Hopes, built on the weak Baſis of their own Imaginations, the taking her into a private Room was by no means proper. After ſhe had been examined in private, ſhe did return and made the Recantation. But, if ſhe did make that Recantation, why does ſhe not come here, and ſwear and avow it? I dreaded ſeeing her appear; becauſe, if all ſhe ſaid was falſe, it muſt have been owing to ſome undue Influence, and in conſequence of ſome deep-laid Plan, Scheme, or Contrivance of the Priſoner at the Bar, or ſome other Perſon. Nothing of this Nature hath even been ſuggeſted; then what Room can there be for any Preſumption of that Nature? What could induce Virtue Hall, who had no Friendſhip, nor even Acquaintance with the Priſoner, to turn Evidence on her Behalf, againſt her greateſt Friend in the World, in whoſe Houſe ſhe had lived, and, perhaps, been ſupported? Reward ſhe could not have from the poor indigent Priſoner, or any of her Relations; and therefore the Behaviour of Virtue Hall, if ſhe did ſwear falſe, is totally unaccountable.

But now, Gentlemen, having ſaid this, in order to take off or counteract the Prejudices that have artfully been raiſed againſt the Priſoner; here ſhe now ſtands at the Bar, and ſhe muſt be tried, however improperly ſhe may have been brought upon her Trial. I cannot help mentioning, happy ſhe is, that ſhe has got ſuch a Jury to try her; for, according to the beſt Obſervations I can make, I never ſaw a Jury attend with greater Impartiality.

I ſhould now conſider what are the Principles the Counſel for the Proſecutor have laid down, as the Foundation for proving the Priſoner guilty. They ſay the Story is extremely improbable,---full of Abſurdities, ſo ridiculous, that no Perſon in his Senſes could contrive or believe it: But, Gentlemen, let me tell you, under the Direction of the Court, Trials for Perjury are not to be determined by Matters of Improbability. If a Perſon is indicted for Perjury, and one Witneſs is only produced to ſwear directly the contrary, the Perſon cannot be convicted; becauſe there is Oath againſt Oath, and the Juſtice of this Country is never weighing the Credit of Witneſſes in Golden Scales; but, if there is Oath againſt Oath, the preſumptive Innocence of each is equal. Then conſider, the Priſoner hath ſworn the Fact; this is to be conſidered an Oath by one Witneſs of a Fact, which is only attempted to be contradicted by Circumſtances, or by Matter of Improbability.

Mr. Davy has ſaid, that no Perſon living, nay, Human Nature itſelf is not capable of ſuch Cruelty, as that of putting another Perſon to Pain, merely through Wantonneſs. And I have ſeen an Expreſſion of a very great Writer to that Purpoſe, tho' in other Terms, "There is no Man "upon Earth ſo wicked, as to play the Platonic with Damnation." Let us conſider how far that Principle is applicable to the Priſoner at the Bar. There is a Maxim never controverted, Nemo repente fuit turpiſſimus. I may ſafely ſay, no Perſon leaped from exceeding good to exceeding bad in a Moment; it takes up a great deal of Time to get rid of that natural Modeſty, which every Perſon is endued with; a Man muſt go by Steps to the Pitch of Wickedneſs. In what State was this poor Girl before this Tranſaction? How do the Witneſſes on Behalf of the Proſecutor deſcribe her? "A Girl of as good a Character as any in the World; I "have known her from her Birth; and I have never heard any Ill of "her," was the Language of Mrs. Mayle. How could this Girl from this very Inſtant, a Girl of a good Character, turn that wicked and abandoned Wretch, that ſhe muſt be, to give all this falſe Evidence againſt a Perſon ſhe had never ſeen in her Life? Is it conceivable ſhe could have had any Scheme to injure Squires, who was an utter Stranger? It certainly is not. Indeed, could that be conceived, ſhe muſt be as wicked as Mr. Davy's Rhetoric can paint her; but whilſt ſhe ſtands thus accuſed of Wickedneſs, ſhe muſt be acquitted of one dangerous Part of her Character which hath been laid to her Charge, which is Art or Contrivance; for no one can think her capable of either, who can ſuppoſe this a formed Scheme; becauſe, ſuppoſing it to be ſo, it is the only one that could not fail of being detected.

But the Gentlemen have ſaid, and would have you believe, the Priſoner's Friends have taken great Care and Pains, as far as poſſibly they could, to fix this to be the Place, and to aſcertain the Deſcriptions of it. 'Tis inſinuated, a Man went, came back again from meeting her on the Road, ſaying, It is all right; There is Hay. But when that comes to be obſerved upon, you will find no more Foundation for that Relation, than for ſome other Evidence that has been given of the Contrivance in aſcertaining the Place. But could there be any Contrivance in aſcertaining the Perſon? It would be a Reflection on your Underſtandings to intimate that you could think ſo. Wells was the Perſon pointed out, and the Perſon all the World thought it muſt be; her own Character muſt have convicted her; ſhe could never have ſet up a Defence like this; the Priſoner muſt have been ſure to have fixed her at that Place, at leaſt during the Time of her Confinement. No Perſon would have interpoſed to have ſaved her from the Gallows. But how did the Priſoner act when ſhe came there? That very Perſon, who had been thus pointed out to her, and whom ſhe with Safety and Impunity might have accuſed, if ſhe had had any Scheme or Deſign of injuring any one, ſhe totally acquits of the Fact of robbing her. It was aſked, Did ſhe rob you? Her Anſwer was, No. In an Inſtant ſhe ſaid ſo. One of the Company went ſo far as to ſay, There was Mother Wells. What could be expected from that, but that ſhe would have inſtantly ſaid, That is the Woman? But what does ſhe ſay? That is not the Woman that robbed me; there is the Woman that robbed me (pointing to Squires). A Perſon, that no one there did, or could direct her to; becauſe it was contrary to every body's Expectation. Then Mr. Davy would have you imagine this was a concerted Scheme between her and her Mother to raiſe Contributions. Let us try this Suggeſtion upon any one Principle of Nature or Reaſon. Upon my Word, I can ſcarce think of ſuch a Notion, and keep my Countenance. I remember the Saying of a very great Man, which is the beſt Anſwer that can be made to it:

"The Man that hangs, or beats out's Brains,
"The Devil's in him if he feigns."

Would ſhe go within a Hair's-Breadth, nay to the very Brink of Death, to raiſe Friends by way of Contribution? Can you a Moment doubt, upon hearing even Mrs. Mayle's Account of her, that her Life was in the utmoſt Danger? Indeed there were no Hopes of her Recovery. If you have any Doubt of that Fact, the Priſoner hath other Witneſſes, who could prove it to a Demonſtration. What! is this Girl to kill herſelf, to have a Subſcription after her Death for the Benefit of her Family? It is inconceivable to the laſt Degree. Then conſider how conſiſtently the Mother acted with any Scheme or Deſign of that Nature. If ſhe intended her Daughter ſhould be almoſt ſtarved, and ſhould be concealed till this was brought about, why did ſhe adverti ſe her Daughter? which was the only Means to diſcover her immediately, and marr the Plot, if ſhe knew when ſhe was to return. How could ſhe be (as it was beyond what could be feigned) ſo particularly affected at the Sight of her, on her Return? Theſe Circumſtances muſt be totally laid out of the Queſtion, before you can believe it a Scheme; or, if ſhe did it deſignedly, it muſt be done without any View, either to benefit herſelf, or any of her Family. But then the Gentlemen have recourſe again to Improbabilities: They aſk, How could ſhe poſſibly go from Mother Wells's to London, without telling her Complaint? Mr. Moreton has mentioned many Reaſons, why ſhe did ſo. Mr. Davy would have you believe, the only one that could be ſuggeſted, was for fear of meeting any of the People belonging to the Houſe; and to anſwer this, he hath ſaid, why did not ſhe call at Gentlemen's Houſes, as ſhe could never conceive ſhe ſhould meet with Mother Wells and her Conſpirators there? Think of this Objection one Minute, and you will not want an Anſwer to it. How was this poor Wretch, in that Condition,---wretched and almoſt frightful in Appearance;—without Strength (almoſt) to tell her Story,—to gain Credit, if ſhe had complained? She might as well have attempted to have told her Story to the Winds. She muſt neceſſarily argue thus with herſelf, if ſhe had her Senſes: Weak as I am, I muſt endeavour to get Home before I tell my Complaints; becauſe I muſt go to the Perſons that know me, before I can be credited.

The Moment ſhe came Home, ſhe made known her Story; and that was the proper Time to make it known. But the Manner, in which ſhe related it, I ſhall obſerve on hereafter, as it very well deſerves your Attention.

Having endeavoured to anſwer ſome of the Objections made to the Girl's Story, let us now attend a little to the Witneſſes on Behalf of the Proſecution, and conſider how far theſe have been conſiſtent with themſelves, and how far they are the beſt Witneſſes that could have been produced, in order to clear up this intricate Affair; becauſe, if it ſhould be obvious (as I dare ſay it is to every body) that the Proſecutor has it in his Power to clear up this Matter, and yet hath left Witneſſes unexamined, who were the only ones capable of doing it in point of Law as well as Reaſon, every Thing muſt be preſumed, that can be preſumed againſt the Proſecution.

It will take up too much of your Time to go into critical Obſervations on every Witneſs; therefore I ſhall only here and there point out ſome particular Circumſtances, which, perhaps, may have eſcaped Mr. Moreton's Notice, with reſpect to ſuch Inconſiſtencies. The Gentlemen of the other Side, conſcious to themſelves that there have been ſome groſs Contradictions, have endeavoured to perſuade you, that ſuppoſing ſome Circumſtances in the Account their Witneſſes have given are inconſiſtent, and others entirely falſe; yet you are not to regard any Thing that does not go to the very ſubſtantial Point, which is, whether Squires was then at Enfield-Waſh? and that little Circumſtances are always to be overlooked: But give me leave to tell you, that is not the Way of trying the Weight of Evidence. And I am ſure, when you come to conſider what the Nature of the Evidence is, you will perceive it abſolutely neceſſary to go out of the common Road in the Examination of the Witneſſes, in order to detect the Villainy: You will eaſily think it is abſolutely impoſſible a Sett of Witneſſes can contradict one another in the very Point they are called for, when they have been Half a Year conferring together on that Point only; they know how to ſwear as to that Particular; they are upon their Guard, as to that; they know how to anſwer you. Then how are theſe Witneſſes to be treated? They are to be taken, as far as poſſible, off their Guard, and to be aſked thoſe Things they thought never would be inquired into. It is by this Means that you are to find out the Inconſiſtency; becauſe Truth is always the ſame, and always conſiſtent; it will be equally ſo with reſpect to the Circumſtances attending a Fact, as the very Fact itſelf.

Gentlemen, I ſhall begin with George Squires, the Son:—What did that Man ſay? You obſerve, Mr. Davy repreſented him as a weak, ignorant Man, and almoſt ſtigmatized him for a Fool, the Moment he appeared; and for what Reaſon? 'Tis not difficult to aſſign the Reaſon;—Becauſe he was apprehenſive that he would make ſome Blunder: But was there the leaſt Sign of either a weak, an ignorant, or a fooliſh Man, during the whole Courſe of his Examination from Abbotſbury to London? There certainly was not. This Examination he expected, he was apprized of it, and prepared.—Then conſider how he appeared, when taken out of the Road from Abbotſbury to London: Mr. Moreton aſked him, Where did he ſet out from? He ſtaggered a good deal, and deſired to be aſked no more Queſtions; at laſt, he went from Kent, from his Siſter Mary.---Pray, what Houſe was ſhe at?—I cannot tell.— Where did you lie? Where did you trade? or, Where did you buy your Goods, or where did you diſpoſe of them? In above an hundred and fifty Miles travelling, he ſcarce tells you he went into or by any one Town, or notorious Place: What is the Reaſon he can give no better Account? Why, becauſe he never expected to have been aſked about it. In ſhort, ſuch a ſtrange and improbable Account I never heard in all my Life.—Then conſider the other Evidence that has been given. Far be it from me to pretend to ſay they have not given you an exceeding ſtrong Account of this Woman's being at South-Parrot, and coming from thence up to London: But there is this Obſervation to be made, even with reſpect to theſe Witneſſes; ſeveral of them have ſaid, before the Time of Squires's Trial, they expected to be called upon as Witneſſes, and declared what they could prove; yet not one in twenty either did appear on the former Trial, or were ever aſked to appear. But this Obſervation may be made as to the Number of Witneſſes that have been examined, that, wherever a Story is talked of by one or two People, and they have declared that they had ſeen Mary Squires the Gypſey, and that they were acquainted with her, another Perſon, to whom it is related, recollects he hath ſeen a Gypſey; and being told that muſt be the ſame, would not any body be almoſt perſuaded, in Half a Year's Time, that they muſt mean the ſame Perſon? When the Centre is moved, there is a Circle ſucceeds, and ſpreads from Man to Man; but ſuppoſing the firſt to be deceived, all the reſt might depend upon his Credit; whereas, had they been aſked, upon recent Reflection, abſtracted from other People's Repreſentations, they never would have ſpoke with that Degree of Certainty.

But, ſuppoſing theſe Obſervations to be juſtly made, Mr. Davy ſays, there is one Sett of Witneſſes that muſt prove the Priſoner guilty, beyond all Degree of Doubt. We have, ſays he, ſome Witneſſes, which were the Girl's Friends; they went down to aſſiſt her as far as poſſible, not imagining ſhe would tell a falſe Story; but when her own Friends turn againſt her, it is the ſtrongeſt Evidence in the World, to think ſhe was deceived. The principal Witneſs called for this Purpoſe was Mr. Naſh; and he tells you, the very Inſtant he came down to Enfield, he found the Girl was in the wrong: He ſaid to her, Child, you are miſtaken, you can never have been there. After what he hath here ſworn, could you conceive that Mr. Naſh, a Man of Senſe, a Man of Prudence, a Man of Juſtice, could ever, after he was convinced the Priſoner was in the wrong, continue to give any Aſſiſtance to the Girl in the Proſecution? I am ſure it is caſting a greater Reflection upon Mr. Naſh, than I would chuſe to do on any one, to ſuppoſe he could act ſuch a Part: But how do we find him acting? Doth he behave conſiſtently with ſuch Conviction of her being deceived? Ten Days after, he writes to a Perſon of Fortune and Conſequence, (who will be produced) to encourage a Subſcription in Favour of the Girl. This Objection, I think, is not to be anſwered. Then another Friend of the Priſoner's, Mr. Aldridge, is called, and he ſaid exactly the ſame Thing: He was every bit as much convinced; he deteſted every Thing the Girl had told him; and, in ſhort, he was the greateſt Convert that ever could poſſibly be imagined. I aſked him, Have you had any Converſation with Mr. and Mrs. Howard ſince that Time? What does he ſay? I own I have, and I diſtributed a Paper in Favour of the Priſoner. And, unleſs my Inſtructions are falſe, he then declared he believed the Story, and earneſtly deſired they would encourage the Subſcription.

I ſhould almoſt have ſuſpected my Brief, which gives me an Account of the Behaviour of theſe three Gentlemen, who have now been called againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, had not they themſelves given ſuch an Inſtance of their own Behaviour in this very Court, as is not to be accounted for. They were all convinced of the Miſtake of Elizabeth Canning; they have now on their Oaths ſworn it; they were all convinced that her Story was a Falſhood, from the Beginning to the End; and that the poor Woman, the Gypſey, who then ſtood in Danger of her Life, was as innocent of what ſhe then ſtood accuſed of, as the Child unborn; they were preſent in Court when this innocent Woman was ſo unjuſtly accuſed: What would you have expected they would have done? What common Humanity and common Honeſty would immediately have ſuggeſted,—would have interpoſed, and prevented the Blow which was juſt then falling upon the Head of the Innocent. Did they act in ſuch a Manner? No; they acted in a Manner which common Humanity would make every one preſume they were incapable of acting in, had not they themſelves ſworn it. In ſhort, one was engaged to Dinner, another was Butler to ſome great Perſon, and every one had ſome trifling Excuſe to deſert and forſake the poor Wretch, when falling into that Deſtruction which ſhe did not deſerve, and which they only were capable of preventing. What Concluſion can be drawn from ſuch a Behaviour? I will not ſay, it neceſſarily follows, that they are in this particular Inſtance prevailed on to ſay, what they otherwiſe would not; but thus far I will ſay, that they have been, according to their own Account, influenced by trifling and inconſiderable Motives to deſert thoſe firſt Principles of Honeſty and Juſtice, which, notwithſtanding all the Temptations on Earth, they ought obſtinately to have adhered to.

Let us now conſider the other Head of Evidence I propoſed to obſerve on. Has here been any Evidence omitted, that might ſerve to clear up the Story? Indiſputably there has. Why was not Mary Squires, the Daughter, called? Why was not Mrs. Wells called, in order to ſhew you that all this was a Falſity? With reſpect to Mary Squires, have you heard a Hint againſt her Character? She could have ſpoke materially to the Fact of her Mother's being at another Place. She was at Brentford; ſhe wrote to her Brother, giving an Account of her Illneſs; ſhe would have told you the Time when ſhe wrote this Letter, and in what Manner they went from Brentford to Enfield; but ſhe has not been called. Why was not Lucy Squires

Squires called? She was more concerned in it; ſhe, in ſhort, was the very Perſon that could have made this appear either a Falſhood to a Demonſtration, or thrown ſuch a Damp upon the whole Proſecution, that they could never have gone on with it. She attended her Mother thro' the whole Route, and could have confirmed every ſingle Circumſtance her Brother had related, ſuppoſing all true. Why was ſhe not called? I need not mention the Reaſon, it is ſo extremely obvious: The Gentlemen on the other Side have Art and Judgment enough not to call a Perſon to do Miſchief; they ſaw how George Squires was baffled and confounded; in ſhort, gave no Sort of Account whatſoever, when taken the leaſt out of the ſettled Route. What are they afraid of, but that ſhe might contradict her Brother? which there ſeems great Reaſon to imagine muſt have been the Conſequence of producing her. Then why was not Wells produced? There may be one good Reaſon aſſigned for that; but the ſame Reaſon they aſſign for not producing of her, muſt weigh greatly with every body as a Corroboration of the Innocence of the Priſoner, and the Truth of her Account.

It may be ſaid, that ſhe was a Woman convicted: But ſhe is now pardoned, and ſhe is a Witneſs in Point of Law. But then they will ſay, ſhe is a Woman of bad Character, and no Credit can be given to her Evidence: When they ſay that, they admit her a Woman capable of doing the Act complained of, or receiving Perſons who could do it. They were apprehenſive this would cut both Ways: For had ſhe been called, and the Priſoner could have contradicted her in any Circumſtance of the Story, I am ſure you would not only have been induced to have diſbelieved what ſhe had ſaid, but to have believed her guilty; and if you did believe that, it would be very hard to direct the Line between the Innocence or Guilt of her and the Gypſey; and you would have been able to have diſtinguiſhed why one attempts a Defence, the other not; becauſe one is always fixed to a Spot, and could never have ſet up this Defence; the other is a Vagabond, and it ever will be difficult to fix her Habitation or Reſidence for one Day together.

Gentlemen, theſe are all the Obſervations that occur to me on the Proſecutor's own Evidence, except one particular Circumſtance with reſpect to the Hay ſaid to be in the Chamber. You have heard it ſaid, there was a great Quantity of Hay; and they would have you believe this Hay was all a feigned Story, founded on the Repreſentation of thoſe who went down before, in order to prevent the Priſoner's giving a falſe Account. But what does Adamſon ſay when he came back? Says he, ſhe ſays there is Hay in the Room, and the Deſcription is right. Will you, upon your Oaths, ſay, Adamſon had told her there was Hay in the Room, and that ſhe had never mentioned Hay to any one before? No. The Meaning of that Part of the Evidence is plain; the Girl had told other People there was Hay in the Room, tho' ſhe had not told it to Adamſon before; and we ſhall prove ſhe declared ſo, in the very firſt Deſcription ſhe gave of the Room. But Mr. Adamſon himſelf will be called in Behalf of the Priſoner, and he will ſwear he never dictated to her, or gave her the leaſt Intimation to ſay there was, or was not, Hay in the Room. And as there was Hay in the Room, beyond all Doubt, I ſhall only aſk this Queſtion, How came this Deſcription of the Room (which is a very extraordinary one) to anſwer, if the Priſoner never had been there, and all her Story was an utter Falſity? But, Gentlemen, there is one Argument ariſing from the Priſoner's Evidence, that, to me, ſeems totally unanſwerable: I myſelf have heard it mentioned; and it hath been artfully, though now it appears falſely, inſinuated to thouſands, in order to prejudice them againſt the Priſoner, and to leave no Doubt but ſhe muſt be convicted, that the Proſecutor would actually ſhew where ſhe was at that Time. I know the Gentleman who related it. And I call on the Proſecutor now to account but for any four Hours out of the twenty-eight Days, and I ſhall be convinced all is a Falſity; and that ſhe is not only greatly deceived, but wilfully perjured. Has it been attempted to be proved? I beg leave to ſay it has not. What Weight then ought this Circumſtance to have with you? It ought to have more or leſs, according to the Time or Opportunity that there hath been to prove where ſhe was. Had the Fact happened but a Week ago, I muſt confeſs, it might with Truth be ſaid, there was neither Time nor Opportunity to make the Inquiry. But let us conſider the Circumſtances of this Caſe; the Fact committed a Year and an Half ago,—talked of before it came to Trial,—from the Time of Trial to this Time; I will venture to ſay there never was a Fact that hath undergone greater or more particular Inquiry. There have been Accounts publiſhed, which have gone all over the Kingdom; and, I believe, I may with Truth ſay, all over Europe. I do not believe there is an Individual in this great City that has not heard of this Affair, nor hath a Company met for one ſingle Evening, where this was not a Subject-matter of Converſation. Then was there not Time or Opportunity to inquire into it? There certainly was; and unleſs they can ſhew what has been ſuggeſted, I mean where ſhe was, it is one of the ſtrongeſt Arguments in the World in Favour of the Priſoner. Thus then it ſtands on the Evidence on Behalf of the Proſecution.

With reſpect to our Evidence, I ſhall again take Notice, that, as to the Facts themſelves, one Witneſs hath poſitively ſworn to them; I mean, the Priſoner. You cannot now expect other Witneſſes to ſwear to confirm her's, as to them; there never was but one, and that the Priſoner is now deprived of; therefore all we can do, will be to ſupport her by Circumſtances and Probability. And, in the firſt Place, we ſhall ſhew you the utmoſt Probability for her going there, for two Reaſons: Becauſe ſhe is traced in the Road from thence (and not a Tittle of Evidence to ſay ſhe was further) towards London, and not by one Perſon only, or by Perſons who ſeemed to take no Notice of her; but we have in our Briefs no leſs than three, who ſaw her go by dreſſed in that very particular Manner in which ſhe came Home, tracing her from that very Place towards London. One of the Men, at one of the Turnpikes, where ſhe inquired her Way, went farther than merely deſcribing her Dreſs; he had an Opportunity, by aſking her Queſtions, of ſeeing her Face; and he will tell you, by the Obſervations he made then, and by ſeeing her ſoon after, he verily believes her to be the ſame Perſon.

When ſhe came Home, ſhe gave the Account you have heard: But the Manner in which ſhe gave it, is very well worth your Conſideration; it was not given in a wanton Manner, not with that Eagerneſs, or in that Hurry an Impoſtor would have told it, in order to run through the Chain of her Story, and tell it as ſoon as ſhe could, fearing ſhe ſhould forget it. How does ſhe tell it? More as if ſhe was deſirous of concealing, than of artfully publiſhing it. You find her at her firſt Arrival ſo weak, that ſhe could not run into a long Detail; and when ſhe grew more able to relate it, it came out only by Anſwers to Queſtions aſked from Time to Time; in which ſhe anſwered no farther than the Queſtion abſolutely required, or obliged her. Is that like a formed Scheme or Story? It ſeems to me totally otherwiſe. But what will you ſay, when this ſame Mary Squires, who, as Mr. Davy hath urged, cannot be miſtaken for another, who has that remarkable Stamp upon her Countenance, as he hath expreſſed it, is proved by twenty-five or thirty Witneſſes (many of whom are Perſons of Figure and Fortune) to be at Enfield-Waſh on the 16th or 17th of December? Was ſhe only ſeen to go by as a Traveller? No, that is not the Caſe; many converſed with her; ſhe talked of loſing a little Horſe, and was lamenting her Loſs; ſhe enquired after this Horſe of ſeveral; of ſome who were Strangers to her, and of others that had known her for a long Time. With reſpect to the firſt, they aſked her, how they ſhould know her Horſe? ſhe not only deſcribed him, but told them that he had a Lock on with her Name: They then aſked, what her Name was? ſhe told them, Mary Squires. We ſhall produce ſome Farmers, in whoſe Barns ſhe hath lain for three or four Days together, to identify her Perſon; and no one can ſuppoſe but that theſe Witneſſes are as little liable to Miſtakes, as any produced on Behalf of the Proſecution. And this Obſervation you will carry with you during the whole Courſe of our Examination, that we ſhall not produce one Witneſs, who doth not live within ten Miles of London, nor one that the Proſecutor hath not long known of; they will be regarded or not, in Proportion as their Characters do, or do not, ſtand impeached; and when I have ſaid this, I defy the Proſecutor to impeach the Character of any one Witneſs. With reſpect to the Witneſſes on Behalf of the Proſecution, it is abſolutely impoſſible to know their Characters, or, at leaſt, to prove them; becauſe one is picked up at one Place, and another at another; and the Priſoner could never know, before ſhe heard their Teſtimony, who was to be examined againſt her. Suppoſing you believe, from the Girl's Account, from the Witneſſes we ſhall produce, that Mary Squires was at Enfield, there is an End of all Attempts of the Defence that was ſet up; and I dare ſay you will believe it, when we prove to you (which we ſhall certainly do) from Gentlemen that went down with the Priſoner to Enfield-Waſh, who had no Reaſon to think Mother Wells's was the Place, any otherwiſe than they were led to imagine it the Place, from the Account ſhe had given of it; and, however Mr. Lyon and Mr. Adamſon may differ in point of Opinion, yet they muſt and will tell you, that the Place anſwered, as far as it could be expected, to the Deſcription that was given by the Priſoner. We are not to catch at nice and minute Circumſtances, with reſpect to the Deſcription of the Room: If you were to make that a Rule of judging of the Truth of the Story, conſider how the People that were in the Houſe vary in their Deſcriptions: There were alſo ſome Pan-tiles, Judith Natus ſays, in the Room: Did any body elſe mention them but herſelf? One Man ſays, there was a Tub in the Room: Did any body elſe mention it but him? You obſerve, it is impoſſible to be conceived, that this poor Girl, who perhaps might be, and indeed there is the greateſt Reaſon in the World to be certain, was in a Fright, ſhould be ſo very minute and exact with reſpect to every Particular in the Room. But then it is ſaid, ſuppoſing the Priſoner not contradicted in her Account in this Reſpect; yet it is plain her Mother and ſhe contradict each other; for the Mother was obſerved to cry out, when her Daughter returned, that ſhe was naked. Mrs. Mayle has given you an Account of it, and great Streſs hath been laid on this Obſervation: But if we conſider this Expreſſion coolly, is there any Weight in the World to be laid upon the Words of a Parent, who at that Time was inflamed with Indignation that her Child had been uſed ill? Is it ſtrange or remarkable, that this Mother ſhould aggravate Things? Beſides, the Word naked was in this Particular a comparative, not a poſitive Term; and ſhe might certainly be called naked, according to the Priſoner's own Account, comparatively ſpeaking, to what ſhe was when her Mother ſaw her laſt.

But ſuppoſing this a feigned Story, how happened it, that any one Deſcription or Circumſtance, mentioned by the Priſoner, ſhould coincide? And there are ſome Circumſtances, all muſt agree, which amazingly correſpond. How came the Chimney in the Corner of the Room? How came this Pitcher to be in the Houſe? It makes no Difference, whether it was in the Room or not. How came it to be there at all, and ſo exactly to anſwer what ſhe deſcribed the firſt Moment ſhe came Home? We ſhall ſhew you, by Perſons that went down, other Circumſtances, altogether as ſurpriſing, that confirmed her Account. The Gentlemen, as if aware of one, aſked, Could any Perſon get out of the Window? You obſerve, White told you, becauſe he was forced ſo to do, well knowing that Adamſon would ſay ſo, that he perceived ſome Lime, or Lath and Plaiſter, broke from the Wall, as if Somebody had got out; ſhould that be the Caſe, it is the ſtrongeſt Circumſtance in the World. One more I muſt mention; an Account was given from the firſt Inſtant, that her Ear was bloody. A Man, who lived over the Way, came and found either a Piece of Iron, or a Bit of Lead, under that Window, all bloody, and the Handkerchief produced here is ſtained with Blood; and, if that Circumſtance ſhould be proved, it is a very ſtrong one, and ſuch as requires the utmoſt Conſideration. There is but one Obſervation or two I ſhall mention, and that is with reſpect to what has been called the Hinge, or Sort of Criterion, or Touch-ſtone, upon which you are to try this Narration; and that is the Letter. Mr. Moreton has made ſome ſtrong Obſervations on it; and extremely ſtrange it is, that this Letter ſhould not appear dated in ſuch a Manner, as to determine the Truth when it was wrote, or ſent by the Poſt. Was this Date (for you will ſee the Letter) put in any Place where, either by the opening the Letter, or by the Wax coming near it, it might be poſſibly injured, there would be an End of any Obſervations that could be made on the Occaſion; becauſe you muſt know, who receive Letters upon Buſineſs, that it is impoſſible poſſible to unfold a Letter ſometimes without tearing a very material Part of it. But how is this? The Date is in the very Corner of the Letter, that Corner which was ſheltered by the Folding of it, and muſt have been the laſt that could have received any Injury; it was not near the Wax or Seal, or liable to any Injury on that Account; and although the Outſide was all duſty, this Part being folded in was as clean as poſſible; how, therefore, this Part of the Letter in particular came to be torn off, is a Matter beyond my Comprehenſion, and, I am certain, you will give this Obſervation the Weight it deſerves.

Then thus it ſtands upon the Evidence on both Sides: And, Gentlemen, I ſhall now only mention to you again, That upon Trials for Perjury, we are not to convict a Perſon merely upon Conjecture, Improbability, or Argument. I told you before, and under the Direction of the Court I ſhall repeat, that every Perſon's Oath, though Perjury is aſſigned in it, is to be conſidered as one Witneſs: If a Man forſwears himſelf in an Anſwer in Chancery, one Witneſs only contradicting it is of no Signification, as both are to have equal Credit: She then is the only Perſon that ſpeaks to the Fact of this Tranſaction, and that is not controverted but by Circumſtances and Arguments: And if any Witneſs could have been produced, or any Evidence given, that could have cleared up, and explained this intricate Affair (for ſo I will call it, even upon their Evidence given), and the Proſecutor hath omitted ſo to do, which to me ſeems plain to a Demonſtration, you will then preſume in Favour of Innocence, as far as it is poſſible, and eſpecially againſt thoſe Perſons by whom the Whole might have been explained; and if you have the leaſt Doubt remaining, whether the Perſon is innocent or not, Charity and Chriſtianity will induce you to take the favourable Side; the Conſequence of which will be, that the Defendant will be acquitted.

Mr. WILLIAMS.

We ſhall lay our Evidence before you, and begin firſt with Mr. Lyon, the Maſter of this Girl.

Edward Lyon ſworn.

E. Lyon. Elizabeth Canning had been my Servant about ten Weeks: On the 1ſt of January 1753, my Wife gave her Liberty to go to ſee her Uncle, who lived at Saltpetre-Bank.

Mr. Williams. Had you known her any Time before?

E. Lyon. I have known her ſixteen Years before ſhe was my Servant.

Mr. Wil. Pray, how has ſhe behaved herſelf?

E. Lyon. Very well: I believe her to be a very honeſt Perſon. She not coming Home that Night, we enquired about, and ſent to her Mother ſeveral Times, but heard nothing of her.

Mr. Wil. Whom did you ſend?

E. Lyon. I do not recollect any particular Perſon.

Mr. Wil. Had ſhe ever been guilty of ſuch Neglect before in not coming Home?

E. Lyon. No, not at all. The firſt Time I ſaw her afterwards was on the 31ſt Day of the ſaid Month before Mr. Alderman Chitty; ſhe was there, in order to take up a Perſon that ſhe ſaid had uſed her ill at Enfield-Waſh. I being a little thick of Hearing, cannot give much Account of what paſſed before the Alderman; but there was a Warrant granted, and ſeveral of our Neighbours went down to Enfield-Waſh the next Morning on Horſeback; I went in a Coach with Mr. Naſh, Mr. Hague, and Mr. Aldridge; the Priſoner and her Mother went in a Chaiſe.

Mr. Wil. Did ſhe give you any Deſcription of the Room ſhe had been confined in?—E. Lyon. Not to me, for I was not with her.

Mr. Wil. Give an Account of what paſſed between you and a Perſon that met you on the Road.

E. Lyon. Mr. Wintlebury came riding on Horſeback, and ſaid, they had taken a Number of People in Mrs. Wells's Houſe. When we came there, I ſaw about ten Perſons, one Man, and the reſt Women, ſitting round the Fire, in what they call the Parlour. After I had been there ſome Time, Elizabeth Canning came, and was brought in and ſet upon the Dreſſer: I went to her, and ſaid, Bet, will you take any Thing to refreſh you? She ſaid, No. I ſaid, Do not be daunted, for you have Friends about you, and, on the other Hand, be careful, and challenge Nobody in this Houſe without you are poſitive of them. Sir, ſaid ſhe, I will not. Then, ſaid I, you ſhall ſee them. Accordingly ſhe was taken from the Dreſſer, and led by two into the Room. She ſaw Mrs. Wells firſt, and ſaid, ſhe had nothing to ſay to her; and upon ſeeing Mrs. Squires, ſhe ſaid, That is the Woman that cut my Stays off.

Mr. Wil. Did you ſee Squires then?——E. Lyon. I did, very plain.

Mr. Wil. Was ſhe ſitting or ſtanding?

E. Lyon. She was ſitting firſt, but ſhe got up out of her Chair.

Mr. Wil. When Elizabeth Canning fixed upon her, was ſhe ſitting or ſtanding?——E. Lyon. Squires was juſt got out as ſhe charged her, and came towards her.

Mr. Wil. Attend to the Queſtion: Was ſhe ſitting or ſtanding up?

E. Lyon. The Room was full of People: I cannot juſtly ſay, whether it was the Time ſhe was getting out, or got out: Several People got nearer than I did.

Mr. Wil. Have you any Reaſon to think Elizabeth Canning ſaw her Face, before ſhe fixed upon her Perſon?

E. Lyon. I believe ſhe ſaw her Face.

Mr. Wil. Why do you think ſo?---E. Lyon. I think ſhe would hardly charge her without the Sight of her Face; I have no other Reaſon.

Mr. Wil. When Mary Squires was charged with being the Perſon, what was done?

E. Lyon. She came up to her, and ſaid, I hope you will not ſwear my Life away, for I never ſaw you. Then Betty Canning was carried into the Kitchen.

Mr. Wil. Did you hear Mary Squires ſay where ſhe was at the Time?

E. Lyon. I did not hear any Thing of that.

Mr. Wil. Did you hear Elizabeth Canning, or any body elſe, ſay what Day the Robbery was committed?

E. Lyon. No, I did not hear any body ſay any Thing of it.

Mr. Wil. Did you ſee George Squires there?

E. Lyon. Yes, I did; he was in the Room before Canning came in; he pulled off his Hat to me, as ſoon as I came into the Room: I ſaid to him, How came you in this Houſe? He ſaid, I am a Traveller, and came here to lodge. I ſaid, Could you not find a Houſe of better Character? That, however, you muſt give a farther Account of yourſelf. Then he ſat down.

Mr. Wil. When Canning came in, was ſhe aſked, whether ſhe had any Thing to accuſe George with?

E. Lyon. She ſaw Lucy before ſhe did him: She ſaid, That young Woman was in the Room when my Stays were cut off: Then ſhe ſaw Virtue Hall, and ſaid the ſame of her; but they did nothing to her. After that George Squires was brought forward to her: Said ſhe, that Man looks very much like the Man that robbed me in Moorfields, but I will not ſwear to him. He had pulled his Great-Coat off in the Houſe, I think, before ſhe came: He had it on before Juſtice Taſhmaker; then ſhe ſaid, ſhe verily believed he was the Man, and that was the Coat he had on, which he put her Gown under, when ſhe was robbed in Moorfields; but ſhe would not ſwear to him.

Mr. Wil. Did you at any Time receive a Letter from Gawen Naſh?

E. Lyon. I did.

Mr. Wil. Did he at coming Home expreſs any Kind of Doubt about this Affair?

E. Lyon. No: We all came Home together in the Coach; he ſeemed very well ſatisfied; I could ſee but very little otherwiſe.

Mr. Wil. Did he ſay any Thing at all, whether he was ſatisfied or not?

E. Lyon. I cannot ſay but he did ſay ſomething, but I cannot recollect what: I can recollect Mr. Hague ſaid, he did not ſee any Grate in the Chimney, nor Pictures in the Front of it. I ſaid, I never heard that mentioned, but theſe Things are Moveables, and may be moved: We had a little Talk; after that we had a Beef-ſteak at the Three Crowns at Newington, and were good Friends.

Mr. Wil. Did Mr. Hague ſay any Thing elſe?

E. Lyon. No, he ſaid nothing elſe; there was no Matter of Doubt between that Time and the Trial of Mary Squires. Mr. Naſh was once at my Houſe afterwards, and as he was going out of the Door, he made Uſe of a very odd Expreſſion; he ſaid, Mr. Lyon, I hope God Almighty will deſtroy that Model that he made that Face by, and never make another by it; a very odd Expreſſion, I remember it very well, meaning the Gypſey.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Davy. Was you at the Four-Kings laſt Wedneſday?

E. Lyon. No, Sir.

M. Davy. I would be glad to know where you live.

E. Lyon. I live at Aldermanbury.

Mr. Davy. What is your Buſineſs?—E. Lyon. I am a Carpenter.

Mr. Davy. How long had Elizabeth Canning lived with you?

E. Lyon. She had lived with me about ten Weeks.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Knowledge of her before?

E. Lyon. I knew her in Mr. Wintlebury's Service, I believe, near upon two Years. I had before that employed her Father.

Mr. Davy. When was the laſt Time you ſaw her before the 29th of January?---E. Lyon. I ſaw her in the Morning before ſhe went out, on the 1ſt of January.

Mr. Davy. Can you tell, whether the Door from the Kitchen to the Hay-loft was open or ſhut, when Elizabeth Canning ſat upon the Dreſſer?

E. Lyon. I cannot ſay that, for the Room was full of People.

Mr. Davy. Was the Motive of your going down (beſides the taking the People up) to make as many Obſervations as you could?

E. Lyon. No Doubt of that, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Then why did you not obſerve towards what Part of the Kitchen her Face was directed, when ſhe ſat upon the Dreſſer?

E. Lyon. I muſt have ſhoved People down if I had, for the Room was full of People.

Mr. Davy. Was you with her in the Parlour?

E. Lyon. I was juſt at, or hardly in the Parlour-Door.

Mr. Davy. How many People were there between you and Mary Squires?

E. Lyon. It is impoſſible I ſhould tell; there might be five or ſix between me and the People in a Circle round the Fire; the Parlour was almoſt full of People.

Mr. Davy. When they were all in the Room, and Canning alſo there, and you at a Diſtance, whether you could ſee Mary Squires ſitting by the Fire?—E. Lyon. No otherwiſe than this, in a Clift between the People's Shoulders.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee her ſitting?—E. Lyon. I did; this was all in a very little Time before Canning charged her with robbing her.

Mr. Davy. How far is the Chimney from the Door?

E. Lyon. It may be ten or eleven Feet.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee her after Canning was in the Room?

E. Lyon. I did.

Mr. Davy. Had you ſeen her before?---E. Lyon. I had; ſhe was ſitting ſmoaking a ſhort Pipe by the Fire, before Canning came down.

Mr. Davy. Was her Face or Back towards you?

E. Lyon. She was Side-ways, partly to me.

Mr. Davy. Did you ſee her ſitting on a Chair, after Canning was in the Room?

E. Lyon. No, I did not, till after ſhe got up; but ſaw her ſitting by the Fire, between the People, juſt at Canning's coming into the Room.

Mr. Davy. How long was Canning in the Room before ſhe charged her?

E. Lyon. She charged her in a very little Time.

Mr. Davy. What did the Gypſey do upon that?

E. Lyon. She took her Hat off, and opened the Clout which was upon her Head; her Face was almoſt hid with them before.

Mr. Davy. Could you ſee the Side of her Head when you was at the Door?

E. Lyon. Not then, but before and after I did.

Mr. Davy. How far was Elizabeth Canning from you?

E. Lyon. She was within about three or four Feet of me.

Mr. Davy. Was ſhe in a direct Line between you and Squires?

E. Lyon. No; she was partly in the Centre in the Half-moon, and Squires was upon an Angle.

Mr. Davy. Was Canning at your right or left Hand?

E. Lyon. She was more to my left Hand.

Mr. Davy. Have you any other Reason for believing Canning saw the Face of Mary Squires, than from your good Opinion of her?

E. Lyon. No otherwise.

Mr. Davy. What was the first Thing Squires did or said, after she rose from her Seat, to convince Canning that she was not the Person who robbed her?

E. Lyon. No otherwise than by telling her, as I have told you.

Mr. Davy. Did she desire Canning to take Notice of her Face?

E. Lyon. I did not hear; I am thick of Hearing at some Times, and I was then; I am more in Winter than at other Times.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear Canning say at what Time she had been robbed?——E. Lyon. No, I did not.

Mr. Davy. Did Mary Squires continue speaking after the Words you before mentioned?

E. Lyon. Very little; the Girl was moved away presently afterwards, so that they were in that Position but a very little Time.

Mr. Davy. Did Mr. Hague, Mr. Nash, and Mr. Aldridge, and you, return Home together after this?——Lyon. We did.

Mr. Davy. What was your Discourse coming Home?

E. Lyon. We had very little Talk in the Coach about it.

Mr. Davy. Did you return good Friends?

E. Lyon. We did, and were very jocular, as we were when we went down.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear or understand any Doubt they had touching this Affair?——E. Lyon. No, I did not.

Mr. Davy. Was either of them dissatisfied at the Account she had given, and at her Behaviour when in the House?

E. Lyon. No, none at all; we were as agreeable as we were when we went down.

Mr. Davy. Recollect yourself, and seriously answer, whether you had any Conversation with these Gentlemen about Canning's Mother dreaming a Dream?---E. Lyon. I never did, nor never mentioned any such Thing.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever say any thing about her Mother's going to the Conjurer?

E. Lyon. Going to a Conjurer has been mentioned, but not by me.

Mr. Davy. Did the Mother tell you, five Days before her Daughter's coming Home, that a Conjurer had told her she was in the Hands of an old Woman, and would come Home the next Week?

E. Lyon. She had told other People, as I heard, but not me; I never heard it from her Mouth; I never conversed with her about it.

Mr. Davy. When did you hear it?——E. Lyon. I don't know.

Mr. Davy. When did she return?—E. Lyon. On the 29th of January.

Mr. Davy. Have you ever talked with her, since her Return Home, of any thing that passed during the Time of her Absence?

E. Lyon. I can say nothing in particular.

Mr. Davy. If you have had any Conversation with her about it, it must be particular.

E. Lyon. I know nothing but---How do you do, Betty? But as to relating how she was used, or any thing like it, I cannot tell any thing in particular.

Mr. Davy. Then what do you remember upon the whole?

E. Lyon. I have often seen her and talked with her since, but cannot remember any particular Part, or Words, that have been related.

Mr. Davy. Whether you expressed to her any Surprize concerning the Account she gave to you of her ill Usage?

E. Lyon. She has never given me an Account in a particular Manner; it was always to other Persons.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Talk with her, since her Return, relating to a Cunning Man?

E. Lyon, No, none at all, nor don't know she has heard it; one Thing, I think, I recollect; at Mr. Marshall's House I was with her, and asked her thus: Bet, if you know any thing of this Affair, that you believe you are mistaken in, or such like, I desire you will let me know it; don't deceive us upon any Account. Sir, said she, I have said nothing but what is really true.

Mr. Davy. Have you had any Dispute or Falling-out with Mr. Hague, Mr. Aldridge, or Mr. Nash, on Account of this Affair?

E. Lyon. No, not on any Account. Some few Words, that I related, were concerning the Grate and Pictures over the Chimney: Mr. Hague was saying there would be some Marks left where they had hung.

Mr. Davy. Were you formerly very intimate with them?

E. Lyon. I was with Mr. Nash and Mr. Aldridge, but not with Mr. Hague. I have done Business as a Carpenter for about sixteen Years for the Goldsmiths Company.

Mr. Davy. Are you acquainted with them now?

Mr. Lyon. We have no Conversation now.

Mr. Davy. What is the Reason of the Discontinuance of your Acquaintance with Mr. Nash?

E. Lyon. My Reason is this, that he did not appear: That he should seem to have something to say, and not say it. I thought it was an odd Thing not to appear, and then to appear afterwards.

Mr. Davy. Did that break your Acquaintance?—E. Lyon. It has so.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever hear him say, before the Trial of Squires and Wells, that he did not believe a Word of the Defendant's Story?

E. Lyon. No; not at all, upon no Account.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever hear Mr. Aldridge say so?

E. Lyon. No: Mr. Aldridge I have seen casually pass and repass---Your humble Servant, and so on; but I was not in his Company. When I saw Mr. Nash on the Morning of the Trial of the Gypsey, it was, Your Servant, and so on; but no Conversation. I never was with Mr. Aldridge since the Time of coming from Enfield-Wash.

Mr. Davy. Had you used to be frequently with him before?

E. Lyon. No, but casually.

Mr. Davy. Have you been as intimately acquainted with Mr. Nash since, as before?

E. Lyon. I have been at his House. I did not keep from his House on that Account. There was no Difference, as I know of. I never shunned his House on that Account.

Mr. Davy. Did you belong to a Club at his House?

E. Lyon. We had a Club of all the Workmen belonging to the Goldsmiths Company at his House; that is Plumbers, Bricklayers, and others.

Mr. Davy. How often did you usually meet?

E. Lyon. Sometimes once a Fortnight, sometimes three Weeks.

Mr. Davy. Did you go pretty constantly?——E. Lyon. I did.

Mr. Davy. Have you frequented that Club, and drank there, as you used to do before?

E. Lyon. I declared off upon that very Account, because he did not appear on Squires's Trial; and after that, Mr. Nash making use of my Name in sundry Places, I resented it.

Mr. Davy. Then I desire to know of you, whether from the Time of your Return from Enfield-Wash with Mr. Nash and Mr. Aldridge, to the Trial of the Gypsey, your Intimacy was the same with them as it had been before?

E. Lyon. I had not seen Mr. Aldridge. I had no Dislike against him till afterwards, that Things went in such a Line that were disagreeable. Mr. Nash had been at my House, as I observed before. I did not keep from Mr. Nash on that Account, till after the Trial of the Gypsey.

Mr. Davy. Are you sure of that?

E. Lyon. I aver it. I know nothing to the contrary. I had no Dislike to him, till after that Trial.

Mr. Davy. During that Period of Time between your Return from Enfield-Wash, and the Trial of Mary Squires, did you ever hear Nash say any thing of his Disbelief of Canning's Story, or that he thought it improbable?——E. Lyon. Indeed, I did not.

Mr. Davy. Whether Mr. Nash, Mr. Aldridge, and Mr. Hague, when they went with you to Enfield, had not the same Evidence of the Truth of the Story, and all its Circumstances, as you had?

E. Lyon. I know the Coach stopped two or three Times; as for Mr. Aldridge, he was very little there; Mr. Nash was in the House, and saw as much as I did.

Mr. Davy. Why did not you subpœna those three Persons to give Evidence on the Trial of Squires?

E. Lyon. I was not concerned in the Thing, there were other Persons concerned.

Mr. Davy. Who were fixed upon as Prosecutors?

E. Lyon. I don't know.

Mr. Davy. Was you examined before the Grand Jury?

E. Lyon. No, I was not.

Mr. Davy. Did not you, on the 15th of February, set your Name to a Paper to encourage Contributions to carry on the Prosecution?

E. Lyon. There was my Name in Print to an Advertisement, when there were several Gentlemen together.

Mr. Davy. Did they make use of your Name without your Consent?

E. Lyon. No, they did not: They mentioned this; they thought, as I was the Master, it would be more agreeable to put it in; I said, Gentlemen, if that is the Case, put it in.

Mr. Davy. Did not that contain a Reward for the apprehending two Men concerned in carrying her down to Enfield-Wash? and did you advance any Money towards paying that?

E. Lyon. I was Half a Guinea; the rest were the same. As to paying in particular, that was not mentioned.

Mr. Davy. The Advertisement concludes with these Words: Whoever will take or apprehend one, or either of them, &c.

Francis Roberts, Aldermanbury.
Edward Lyon, Aldermanbury, the Girl's Master.

Mr. Davy. Did you consent to the Publication of this Paper?

E. Lyon. I did.

Mr. Davy. Whether there was not a Subscription going on, in order to encourage her for her Virtue? Was you one of those?

E. Lyon. I did not go about to get her any Money; there were Persons that did.

Mr. Davy. Did you contribute to the Expence of the Prosecution of the Gypsey and Wells at the Old-Bailey?

E. Lyon. I did not act; I had no Concern in the Delivery of the Money; the Subscription was not made then; I subscribed nothing to that; what I did was since that.

Mr. Davy. How much did you contribute towards the carrying on the Prosecution of Squires?

E. Lyon. No more than that Half Guinea then.

Mr. Davy. Did you give Evidence on that Trial of what passed at Wells's House?---E. Lyon. I did.

Mr. Davy. Do you think Mr. Nash, Mr. Aldridge, and Mr. Hague, could hear what passed as well as you?

E. Lyon. They could hear better than I.

Mr. Davy. Did you see them in the Room where she says she was confined?

E. Lyon. I cannot tell whether they were in the Room; I saw them in the House.

Mr. Davy. Why were the Three not called to give Evidence against Squires and Wells, as well as yourself?

E. Lyon. I as much believed that Mr. Nash, when I saw him in Court, came upon that Affair, as ever I believed any thing in my Life.

Mr. Davy. Did you at that Time believe he would give Evidence for or against the Gypsey?

E. Lyon. I believed he would against the Gypsey, as I did.

Mr. Davy. Was there no Club-day betwixt your going down to Enfield-Wash and the Trial?

E. Lyon. I cannot tell whether there was or not; if there was, I might not be at it. I remember going Home after the Trial was over: Mr. Aldridge sent his Servant after me, who said, his Master gave his Service to me, and desired to know how the Affair went: I said, They are both cast. I went directly to Mr. Nash's, and drank a Glass of Cyder, but do not know that I saw him.

Mr. Davy. Was you then angry with Mr. Nash?——E. Lyon. No.

Mr. Davy. When you was at Juſtice Taſſomaker's, was George Squires there and how was he dreſſed?

E. Lyon. He was; he then had his Great-Coat on.

Mr. Davy. Was it put on in order for the Defendant to ſee whether that was the Man or not?—E. Lyon. I don't know that.

Mr. Davy. Did not you ſay, upon the Trial of Squires and Wells, that ſhe ſaid he looked more like the Man after he had that Coat on?

E. Lyon. She did ſay to that Purpoſe.

Mr. Davy. How came the Juſtice not to commit him?

E. Lyon. Why, we mentioned that it was a Pity they were not all committed.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear George deſire he might be committed?

E. Lyon. No, I never did: So different from that, that when the Mittimus was writing, he looked over a Woman (and ſeemed to quiver a little) to ſee whether there was a Mittimus making for him, as I took it; but I did not hear him expreſs a Word about it.

Mr. Davy. It ſeems, you believed the Girl's Story from the firſt Hearing?——E. Lyon. I did.

Mr. Davy. Did you take any Method, from that Time to this, to ſatisfy yourſelf about it?

E. Lyon. I got farther Evidence of the Story as far as I could, in queſtioning the Girl at Mr. Marſhall's, as I mentioned before; I had no Doubt at all.

Mr. Davy. You bid her be careful; do you believe ſhe was careful?

E. Lyon. I believe ſhe was.

Mr. Davy. Then why did you deſire her to recollect herſelf, to ſee if ſhe was miſtaken?—E. Lyon. Becauſe there was ſuch a great Clamour about it, and I was willing to aſk her again.

Mr. Williams. Whether you did not give the Gentleman a true Anſwer before, when you told him you had been inſtrumental in bringing them to be diſcovered in the Advertiſement of Twenty Pounds?

E. Lyon. Yes, I had been, and would have turned out ſomething.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we are now to read the Letter that Mr. Naſh owns to be his Hand-writing.—(To E. Lyon.) Is this the Letter that you received?

E. Lyon. This is it. (He takes it in his Hand.) It appears to have been wrote on the 10th of February.

Mr. Williams. Did not you think he was a well-wiſher to the Diſcovery of this Affair?—E. Lyon. Indeed I did, and all the Time afterwards, to the Time of the Trial.

Mr. Williams. How old is the Girl now?

E. Lyon. I believe about nineteen Years of Age.

(The Letter read.)

Mr. Lyon, Feb. 10, 53.

I am informed by Mr. Aldridge, who has been at Enfield, that if a Perſon be appointed there to receive Contribution, ſome Money would be raiſed in that Place for the unhappy poor Girl. I wiſh you Succeſs, and am your's,

Gawen Naſh.

Directed on the Back, To Mr. Lyon, Aldermanbury.

Thomas Colley ſworn.

T. Col. I am Uncle to the Priſoner, and live at Saltpetre-Bank; I am a Glaſs-blower; on the 1ſt of January was Twelve-month, ſhe came to my Houſe, and ſtayed from Twelve o'Clock to about Nine in the Evening. She lived Servant then with Mr. Lyon. After we had ſupped, I and my Wife went along with her homewards, to the End of Houndſditch; we parted with her there.

Mr. Moreton. How was ſhe dreſſed?

T. Col. She had a Sort of a ſtrip'd Gown on, I cannot tell the Name of it.

Mr. Moreton. Was ſhe well and hearty at that Time?

T. Col. She was.

Mr. Moreton. Where did ſhe ſay ſhe was going?

T. Col. She told me ſhe was going to her Maſter's, and was in her way there when we left her.

Mr. Moreton. Had you any Reaſon in the World to doubt but ſhe was going there?—T. Col. No, I had not.

Mr. Moreton. How near, and what a-kin is ſhe to you?

T. Col. My Wife is her Father's Siſter.

Mr. Moreton. Had you, upon your Oath, any Reaſon to believe that ſhe was a-breeding?—T. Col. No, I had not.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Willes. What Time did ſhe come?

T. Col. About Twelve o'Clock at Noon.

Mr. Willes. Did any body come with her that Day?

T. Col. No, Nobody.

Mr. Willes. Was ſhe in perfect Health?

T. Col. I never ſaw her better, as I know of.

Mr. Willes. What had you to Dinner?

T. Col. Some of a cold Shoulder of Mutton and Potatoes, which was dreſſed the Sunday before.

Mr. Willes. Did ſhe eat a hearty Dinner?

T. Col. She eat as hearty as ſhe could; ſhe ſeemed to eat as hearty as I did.

Mr. Willes. This being New-year's Day, what did you give her to drink?

T. Col. She drank ſome Ten-ſhilling Beer, which I had in the Houſe. I was at Work in the Afternoon.

Mr. Willes. Does your Wife drink Tea in the Afternoon?

T. Col. She generally does, whether ſhe has Company or not.

Mr. Willes. Have you ſeen your Niece drink Tea?—T. Col. I have.

Mr. Willes. Do you think your Wife and ſhe had Tea that Afternoon?

T. Col. I do really believe they had.

Mr. Willes. Does your Wife generally have Bread and Butter, or Toaſt with her Tea, or not?

T. Col. She generally chuſes Toaſt and Butter.

Mr. Willes. What Time did you return Home from Work?

T. Col. At about Seven in the Evening.

Mr. Willes. What had you for Supper?

T. Col. We had ſome of a Sirloin of Beef roaſted.

Mr. Willes. Did your Niece eat of that?

T. Col. She eat a ſmall Quantity of that, but could not eat much.

Mr. Willes. What did ſhe drink after that?

T. Col. She drank a ſmall Quantity of Ten-ſhilling Beer.

Mr. Willes. How far did you go with her?

T. Col. I went with her to the End of Houndſditch, almoſt to the Blue Ball.

Mr. Willes. Who went with you?

T. Col. None but my Spouſe and her.

Mr. Willes. Did you ſtop at all by the Way?—T. Col. We did not.

Mr. Willes. What Sort of a Hat had your Couſin on at this Time?

T. Col. She had a Sort of a Chip, a white Hat.

Mr. Willes. Had you any other Entertainment, than what you have mentioned, either at Noon or Night?——T. Col. No, we had no other.

Mr. Willes. Had you any Mince-pyes in your Houſe?

T. Col. No, I had not.

Mr. Willes. Do you know of her buying a Penny Pye?

T. Col. I cannot tell where ſhe came by that.

Mr. Willes. You are ſure you gave her none at your Houſe?

T. Col. I had none, and gave her none.

Mr. Willes. You don't know what Money ſhe had about her?

T. Col. My Wife told me, ſhe aſked her to go with her into Roſemary-Lane to buy a Cloak, when I was at Work; but I cannot tell how much Money ſhe had in her Pocket at that Time.

Mr. Moreton. Was the Toaſt buttered on both Sides, do you think? Here have been a great many Queſtions aſked in order to force a Stool.

T. Col. I cannot tell.

Mr. Moreton. When did you hear ſhe was miſſing?

T. Col. I heard that the ſame Evening; her Mother's Apprentice came to my Houſe that ſame Night, and called and awaked me and my Wife out of our Sleep, as nigh as I can gueſs, between Eleven and Twelve o'Clock.

Mr. Moreton. How far is Houndſditch from Aldgate?

T. Col. It may be about ten Yards; I told the Apprentice I parted with her at the End of Houndſditch.

Mr. Moreton. What did the Apprentice ſay?

T. Col. He ſaid, the Girl's Maſter had been at his Miſtreſs's Houſe, and wanted to know where ſhe was, and upon that Account he came to know,

Alice Colley ſworn.

A. Col. I am Wife to the laſt Evidence, and Aunt to Elizabeth Canning; ſhe came on New-year's Day was Twelve-month, about Twelve o'Clock, to our Houſe, having a Holiday, and ſtayed till about Nine at Night; then my Huſband and I went along with her as far as the Corner of Houndſditch towards her Maſter's Houſe; there we parted with her.

Mr. Nares. Was ſhe in good Health?

A. Col. She was, in all Appearance, as well as I am now, to outward Appearance. I ſtood and leaned acroſs a Poſt, and ſaw her go directly on her Way down Houndſditch; then we went Home to Bed, and about Twelve at Night the Apprentice came, and aſked, if Betty was here? My Huſband ſaid, No, I and my Wife went with her as far as Houndſditch, and there parted with her. Then the Apprentice went away, and came about Six in the Morning, and my Siſter along with him; ſhe knocked at the Door, and cry'd, Let me in, which I did; and the Apprentice went to the Glaſs-houſe to my Huſband; ſhe told me, Betty's Maſter had been with her once or twice, and they did not know where ſhe was; we were all much ſurpriſed.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. Did ſhe look to be very hearty?—A. Col. She did.

Mr. Gaſ. What had you for Dinner that Day?

A. Col. We had the Remains of a cold Shoulder of Mutton and Potatoes.

Mr. Gaſ. Did ſhe drink Tea?—A. Col. Yes, ſhe did.

Mr. Gaſ. What had you with your Tea?

A. Col. We had Toaſt and Butter; ſhe eat but a very little, not very heartily; but I cannot ſay I minded her much.

Mr. Gaſ. Did you go to an Ale-houſe?

A. Col. No, we did not. I took her once or twice to the Glaſs-houſe to ſee my Huſband work ſome Time in the Afternoon.

Mr. Gaſ. Was that before Tea, or after?—A. Col. I cannot tell.

Mr. Gaſ. Was any body elſe with you that Afternoon?

A. Col. No, Nobody but ſhe and I.

Mr. Gaſ. Did you go with her to Roſemary-Lane?

A. Col. No, I did not.

Mr. Gaſ. Did you ever ſeparate?

A. Col. No; only when Supper was ready, I deſired her to go and aſk her Uncle to come to Supper. She went, and they came together.

Mr. Gaſ. Did you ſend her any where elſe after that?

A. Col. No, I did not, only to him to an Ale-houſe, the Black Boy, not above ſeven or eight Doors from me; and he came with her directly in a few Minutes.

Mr. Gaſ. Did ſhe tell you what Money ſhe had to buy her a Cloak?

A. Col. No, nor did I ſee what Money ſhe had.

Mr. Gaſ. Did you hear your Huſband examined?

A. Col. No, I did not.

Mr. Gaſ. What Time did you part from her?

A. Col. We parted with her at Houndſditch about Half an Hour after Nine.

Mr. Gaſ. Did you paſs by a Paſtry-cook's in going?

A. Col. We did.

Mr. Caſ. Did you buy a Pye to treat your Niece?

A. Col. No, I did not.

Mr. Gaſ. Is the Blue Ball in Houndſditch in the Way to her Maſter's Houſe?

A. Col. It is.

Recorder. When did you ſee her firſt again?

A. Col. On King Charles's Martyrdom, and never till then.

Recorder. Did ſhe complain ſhe had been confined?

A. Colley,

A. Colley. She did; and was in Bed, and very ill; and there was a Gentlewoman talking to her, named Polly Lyon; we did not care to ask her many Questions, she being very ill and in a low Condition; she could hardly speak, she was so very faint.

Recorder. Can you tell what it was occasioned by?

A. Col. By being used very ill, and half-starved.

Elizabeth Canning sworn.

E. Canning. I am Mother to the Girl; she was nineteen the 17th of last September: In December 1752 she lived with Mr Lyon in Aldermanbury.

Mr. Williams. Did you know of her going to her Uncle's, Mr. Colley's?

E. Can. I did; she called at my House, (it was on a Monday, New-Year's-Day) and told me, she was going to her Uncle.

Mr. Wil. Was there, or was there not, any Account brought to your House that Night, that she was not come back?

E. Can. Mr. Lyon, her Master came to my House just after Nine o'Clock, and said, he wondered she stayed so long: I was frightened out of my Wits: I sent my three Children into the Fields to see after her, and I sent my Apprentice to Mr. Colley's, her Uncle; they said, they had parted with her after Nine o'Clock at Houndsditch. I sent again in the Morning, and I went myself before it was light. Mrs. Colley was a-bed then: I said, Let me in, let me in; Mrs. Colley got up, and said, O lack, has not she come in yet? I said, No. She said, she left her there. Her Husband was called from the Glass-house; and I was ready to run distracted.

Mr. Wil. From that Time, to the 30th or 31st of January, did you hear any thing of your Daughter, or know where she was?

E. Can. She came Home the Day before King Charles's Martyrdom, at a Quarter after Ten o'Clock. I had advertised her in the Papers the first Time on my own Head; and then afterwards one Mrs. Maynard, a Turner's Wife, came to me, and said, Have you advertised her any more? I said, I did not think to do it; indeed it was out of my Power, it was very hard with me.

Mr. Wil. Did you hear any thing in Consequence of this Advertisement?

E. Can. One gave me a Shilling, and another gave me a Shilling; so I advertised her two or three Times, and had no Account of her.

Mr. Wil. Upon your Oath, did you know any thing of her during the Time she was gone?---E. Can. No, I did not.

Mr. Wil. On this Night, what Time did your Daughter come Home?

E. Can. A Quarter after Ten.

Mr. Wil. Where was you when she came Home?

E. Can. I was partly getting into Bed, and my Apprentice was going to fasten the Door. He called and said, Here is Somebody at the Door. I said, Who is it? He said, Betty. I said, What Betty? He said, Our Betty. My little Girl ran screaming up to the Chimney: I said, Feel her, feel her: I thought she was an Apparition. She came in in this Posture (describing it, which was almost double, and walking side-ways, holding her Hands before her). When she came up so, I took her to be an Apparition.

Mr. Wil. What was her Dress?

E. Can. She had a loose Bed-gown, and a Rag about her Head, and her Ear was bloody, and the Rag was bloody.

Mr. Wil. Did you, before she brought that Bed-gown Home, ever see it before?

E. Can. No, never in my Life. I never wore such a Thing, so poor as it is with me.

Mr. Wil. Did any of your Neighbours come in, after your Daughter came Home?

E. Can. After my Daughter came Home, the first that came in was Mrs. Woodward; my Apprentice James ran and fetched her, and Polly Lyon next Door to me; and the third Person was Mrs. Myers; then Mr. Roberts's Maid, and Mr. Wintlebury.

Mr. Williams. Now, when these People were come in, was your Daughter interrogated by them where she had been?

E. Can. They asked her, where she had been? Her Master Wintlebury took her by the Hand, and said, Where have you been? She said, Sir, I don't know, but only by seeing my Mistress's Coach, the Hertfordshire Coach: She was not able to say the Place where she had been at.

Mr. Wil. Was she able to give an Account of the Persons?

E. Can. No; she said, there was an old Woman, and two young ones, and she should know them again if she saw them, she thought.

Mr. Wil. Did she give an Account to you, what Sort of an old Woman it was?---E. Can. No, she did not.

Mr. Wil. Did she give an Account what befel her, after her Uncle Colley had left her in Moorfields?

E. Can. She said, she had been robbed, and by what Sort of Men, but she could not tell who they were; but that it was the same two Men that robbed her, that dragged her away.

Mr. Wil. Who asked her?

E. Can. We all asked her. She gave an Account, that they pulled her along, and after they gave her a Blow, she could tell no more, and that she was confined where there was Hay in the Room; she said, she lived upon Bread and Water; that from the Friday to the Monday she had none to subsist on; and she gave an Account of the Mince-pye she bought for her Brother.

Mr. Wil. Did she give a Description of a Pitcher?

E. Can. She said there was a broken Pitcher of Water, that very Night.

Mr. Wil. What was done to her that Night? Did you put her to Bed?

E. Can. I did, and it was Five o'Clock in the Morning before I could get any Warmth in her Feet.

Mr. Wil. Look at this Pitcher (which she did). Is this your Pitcher?

E. Can. It never was mine.

Mr. Wil. Did you carry that Pitcher down with you?

E. Can. I did not. I pull'd off my own Stockings, and put them upon her; and in the Morning you might have wrung the Things about her, she was in such a Sweat. Polly Lyon brought some Wine, and Mrs. Woodward and she mull'd it, and when she had some poured out she could not swallow it; she was in an extreme deplorable Condition in regard to her Health.

Mr. Williams. The next Day was any Body sent for of Skill in a physical way?

E. Can. Mr. Bakler, the Apothecary's Man, came in that Night; he wiped her Ear, and put a Plaster to it; he gave her some Drops, and then went away. His Master came in the next Morning; he ordered something for her, to give her, in Bottles; he asked her as to the State of her Health.

Mr. Wil. What is his Name?---E. Can. His Name is Bakler.

Mr. Wil. Did the Apothecary give her any Thing in order to cause a Stool?

E. Can. She had no Stool till she had three Glysters; she continued extremely ill.

Mr. Wil. Had you the Advice of any other?

E. Can. We had the Advice of Dr. Eaton. I had not Conveniency for her, having but one Room, and the Room which the Boy lay in; so she was carried from my House to a House over the Way.

Mr. Wil. How came there to be a Suspicion, that it was at Mother Wells's that she was confined?

E. Can. She nominated the Name of Mother Wills or Wells that Night, she did not know which; that she heard them call it very plain; I believe Mr. Wintlebury, Mr. Scarrat, Mrs. Woodward, and Polly Lyon, all were there at that Time.

Mr. Wil. Had any body that was there given her the least Hint of Wills or Wells, or any Name like it?

E. Can. No Soul ever spoke to her, till her own Mouth mentioned it.

Mr. Wil. How was it first known or believed, that this Mother Wills or Wells lived at Enfield-Wash?

E. Can. I don't know, Sir; because she had described it to be upon the Hertfordshire Road: Upon this there was Application made to Mr. Alderman Chitty.

Mr. Wil. Who fixed it down to be the House of Mother Wells at Enfield-Wash?

E. Can. I don't know; there were a great many People, and I was so concerned, I did not hear all their Talk.

Mr. Wil. Was there any Proposal to go down to Enfield-Wash?

E. Can. There was; we went down on the Thursday after she came Home; she came Home on a Monday Night: There was Mrs. Myers, Mrs. Garrat, my Girl and me, and a young Child in my Arms: We went in a Chaise.

Mr. Wil. Do you recollect any body that met you on the Road before you got down?---E. Can. Yes; Mr. Adamson.

Mr. Wil. Did he give you or your Daughter any, or what Description of the House of Mother Wells?

E. Can. Upon my Oath, he did not.

Mr. Wil. Did he ask Betty any Questions?

E. Can. His Horse would not stand still: He said, Drive, Coachman, I wonder you stay so long. The Coachman said, the Road was so bad, and such a Load he had, he could not go faster. He asked her, what sort of a Place she was in, and if she could remember it? and she said, she could. Then he rode on, and we came after. When we came down there, I was only in the Parlour and Kitchen.

Mr. Wil. Upon your Oath, did you ever go up in that Room, which goes up where your Daughter was confined?

E. Can. I went up one or two Steps, and said, Oh! oh! this is the Place of my Child's Confinement; and a Gentleman shoved me, and said, Get you down, get you down.

Mr. Wil. Recollect, when you came back, did Mr. Adamson bid her tell what was in the Room, if she could?

E. Can. I don't remember he did.

Cross-Examined.

Mr. Davy. I think you say, one Mrs. Maynard, a Turner's Wife, applied to you to advertise her?

E. Can. She did the second Time; but the first Time I did it myself.

Mr. Davy. (He shews her a Paper) I should be glad to know whose Hand-writing this is.

E. Can. I don't know whose Hand-writing it is.

Mr. Davy. When you advertised her, did you carry the Paper to the Press?

E. Can. No; a young Woman did for me; her Name is Mary Northan.

Mr. Davy. Who wrote the Paper that Mary Northan carried to the Press?

E. Can. I believe Alice Colley, her Aunt, wrote the first Advertisement; but I am not sure.

Davy. Did you see it before it was carried?

E. Can. I did, and read it.

Mr. Davy. Is this it?---E. Can. I cannot tell.

Mr. Davy. Are you acquainted with Mrs. Colley's Hand-writing?

E. Can. No, Sir, I am not.

Mr. Davy. The first was on the 4th of January, and the second was two Days afterwards, was it not?

E. Can. I believe it was.

Mr. Davy. Who wrote the second?

E. Can. Indeed I cannot tell, if you would give me all the World.

Mr. Davy. Did you write it?

E. Can. No, Sir, I did not; Mrs. Maynard, the Turner's Wife, advised me to it.

Mr. Davy. Did she write for you?---E. Can. No, she did not.

Mr. Davy. Who carried it to the Advertiser?

E. Can. Mary Northan carried all the Papers.

Mr. Davy. Who delivered them to her?

E. Can. I believe I did; I know I did the first.

Mr. Davy. Did you, or did you not, deliver the second Paper to be carried to the Press?

E. Can. I did, I think; I am positive they were delivered in my Room, and in my Presence.

Mr. Davy. Who were in the Room at that Time?

E. Can. Her Aunt Colley was at the first Time.

Mr. Davy. Who else?

E. Can. I don't know there was any body, but the young Girl that carried it, and my Children, that Time.

Mr. Davy. Who were in the Room when the ſecond Paper was delivered?

E. Can. I believe none but the young Woman and my Children then.

Mr. Davy. Who had you the firſt Paper of?

E. Can. My Siſter Alice Colley wrote it in my Room.

Mr. Davy. Do you know her Hand-writing?

E. Can. I have ſeen her write twice before; but don't know her Hand-writing. She wrote Scowerer inſtead of Sawyer.

Mr. Davy. I ſee upon it Scowerer is ſtruck out, and Sawyer wrote: Who had you the ſecond Paper of?

E. Can. I believe it was done at the White Lion, at the End of Fore-Street, facing the Gully-hole, by either the Maſter or Somebody there; Polly Northan can tell, for ſhe ſtayed the writing of it.

Mr. Davy. Now, had you at that Time heard any thing of your Daughter's being in Biſhopſgate-Street?

E. Can. Yes; I heard it of a Gentlewoman at an Oil-ſhop, the Sign of the Two Jars through Biſhopſgate, towards Cornhill. She informed me, ſhe heard a young Voice ſcream out in a Coach; but whether it was a Man's or a Woman's Voice, ſhe could not tell.

Mr. Davy. How long was it before the 6th of January, the Time of ſending the ſecond Paper, that you had this Account from that Gentlewoman?

E. Can. I don't know, but it was a Night or two Nights before.

Mr. Davy. Then her Screaming in Biſhopſgate-Street was wrote in the Paper by your Order?

E. Can. It was. I thought I would leave no Stone unturned to find her, and ſo I told Polly Northan of that.

Mr. Davy. Where had you the third Draught of an Advertiſement?

E. Can. That was wrote in my Kitchen by one Spencer; he did it by the Directions of the Gentlewoman at the Oil-ſhop for me, as I was adviſed by my Friends to do it.

Mr. Davy. Who adviſed you to put a Reward in?

E. Can. It was her Uncle bid me do that, and ſaid, he'd pay that, if he ſtripp'd his Skin.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Knowledge, at that Time, how much Money your Daughter had in her Pocket on the 1ſt of January?

E. Can. Yes, I had; for I lent her a little Box to put the Half Guinea in; for I was to have gone out with her on that Afternoon to buy a Cloak and a Pair of Mittens.

Mr. Davy. When was that Agreement made to buy a Cloak together?

E. Can. She made that Agreement with me, before ſhe went from me to go to her Uncle's; ſhe intended to return to me that Afternoon, but they would not let her return till ſhe had a hot Supper, becauſe they had nothing but cold Victuals for Dinner.

Mr. Davy. How much Money had ſhe in her Pocket at that Time?

E. Can. She had Half a Guinea, three Shillings, and a Farthing. I ſaw the Half Guinea put into the Box, and ſhe put the three Shillings looſe into her Pocket; and the Night ſhe returned, ſhe gave the Farthing to her Brother.

Mr. Davy. Was Thirteen and Six-pence Farthing all the Money ſhe had?---E. Can. It was.

Mr. Davy. When you advertiſed her the laſt Time, did you know then what Money ſhe had in her Pocket?

E. Can. Her Brother ſaid, ſhe had changed a Six-pence, and gave every one of them a Penny; and Mrs. Lyon told me, ſhe had given her Half a Guinea in Gold, and three Shillings in Silver.

Mr. Davy. Did your Child tell you ſhe had changed Six-pence?

E. Can. Yes; and that ſhe did not give him his Penny, becauſe he huffed her; but I find with his Penny ſhe bought a Penny Mince-pye.

Mr. Davy. Was it a Half-penny or a Penny each ſhe gave them?

E. Can. I don't know whether it was a Half-penny or a Penny a-piece.

Mr. Davy. Did ſhe turn out her Pocket to you?

E. Can. No, ſhe did not. She ſhewed me the Money; Half a Guinea, three Shillings, and a Farthing, is all I ſaw.

Mr. Davy. Did ſhe tell you it was all ſhe had?

E. Can. No, ſhe did not.

Mr. Davy. How many Children had you then?

E. Can. I had five in the Whole with her, with the Child in my Arms.

Mr. Davy. Who was to have had the Mince-pye?

E. Can. My little Boy.

Mr. Davy. How came you to adverti ſe that ſhe had twelve Shillings and Nine-pence Half-penny?

E. Can. I took it ſo, that ſhe had but twelve Shillings and Nine-pence Half-penny.

Mr. Davy. Here is by way of Poſtſcript, Had in her Pocket twelve Shillings, Nine-pence Halfpenny.

E. Can. I ordered it to be advertiſed; ſhe had Six-pence more, for what I know.

Mr. Davy. I obſerve theſe Words, twelve Shillings, Nine-pence Half-penny, are ſcratched out on this Paper; how came that?

E. Can. I fixed upon that Sum, thinking ſhe might have changed ſome Money to give Half-pence to the Children.

Mr. Davy. Who wrote the third Advertiſement?

E. Can. I can't tell who.

Mr. Davy. How came Part of the Writing on the Paper to be ſcratched out? And I obſerve that Part is not printed in the Daily Paper.

E. Can. I can't give the Reaſon, if you would give me the World.

Mr. Davy. When it was delivered to Polly Northan, was it ſcratched out?---E. Can. I don't know.

Mr. Davy. I find in this Paper, This is the laſt Time of Advertiſing; That alſo is ſcratched out, and both theſe are in different Ink and different Hands.

E. Can. I don't know that I ordered her to be advertiſed, This is the laſt Time of Advertiſing. I could not have advertiſed her, had I not had Aſſiſtance, and my Neighbours put me upon it. I don't know that I ordered any Thing to be ſcratched out.

Mr. Davy. Did you order Polly Northan to carry the Papers directly to the Printing-Office, or elſewhere?

E. Can. To the Printing-Office.

Mr. Davy. After you miſſed your Daughter ſo long a Time, you took all the Means in your Power to know what was become of her?

E. Can. Sure I did. I went to all the Agents and Places where I could think of, fearing ſome Caſualty.

Mr. Davy. Did you go to Wood-Street Compter?

E. Can. The People told me, if there were any Quarrels, they would take all away, Good and Bad together, was the Reaſon I went there.

Mr. Davy. Did you go to a Conjurer?

E. Can. I did. They call him the Aſtrologer.

Mr. Davy. Where does he live?---E. Can. He lives in the Old-Bailey.

Mr. Davy. What is his Name?

E. Can. I don't know his Name: He had a black Wig over his Face.

Mr. Davy. When did you go to him?

E. Can. I don't know when I went.

Mr. Davy. How long after your Daughter was miſſing?

E. Can. I don't know. It was before ſhe returned.

Mr. Davy. What was done there?

E. Can. I told him I had loſt my Child; and after he had got my Money, he bid me go Home and advertiſe her; he ſaid, Make yourſelf eaſy, ſhe'll come Home again

Mr. Davy. Did he tell you when ſhe would return?

E. Can. No, he did not. He only aſked me two or three Queſtions, and wrote, ſcribble, ſcribble, ſcribble along.

Mr. Davy. Did he tell you ſhe was in the Hands of an old Woman?

E. Can. No, he did not.

Mr. Davy. Recollect yourſelf.

E. Can. I don't know whether he did or no: He might, for what I know.

Mr. Davy. Or what Misfortunes had happened to her?---E. Can. No.

Mr. Davy. Whether he did not tell you ſhe was in the Hands of an old black Woman?

E. Can. The Word black I don't remember. I know he frighted me. When he ſhut the Door, and lighted the Candles up, he looked ſo frightful, I was glad to get out at the Door again.

Mr. Davy. What was his firſt Queſtion?

E. Can. I think, he firſt aſked me, what I came for? I ſaid, For my Child.

Mr. Davy. What were the other Queſtions?

E. Can. I can't recollect them: It was about her going away. I believe he aſked her Age.

Mr. Davy. Did he aſk what State of Health ſhe was in?

E. Can. No, Sir.

Mr. Davy. Nor when was the laſt Time you ſaw your Daughter?

E. Can. No.

Mr. Davy. Did he aſk any Thing about Biſhopſgate-Street?

E. Can. I believe I told him that; he bid me advertiſe her again, makes me think I did.

Mr. Davy. Did you tell him of a Dream you had?

E. Can. No, I did not.

Mr. Davy. Had not you had a Dream or a Viſion about it?

E. Can. I don't know of any ſuch Thing.

Mr. Davy. Or an Apparition?

E. Can. No; but I had wandering Thoughts.

Mr. Davy. What did you mean juſt now, by ſaying you had wandering Thoughts?

E. Can. I ſay, I never had Reſt Night or Day, for my Thoughts were wandering.

Mr. Davy. How came you to imagine ſhe was confined by an old Woman?

E. Can. It never came into my Thoughts that ſhe was; I more thought ſhe was murdered in Houndſditch, and throwd into ſome Ditch there.

Mr. Davy. At this Time, upon your Oath, had you ever heard of the Name of Mother Wells, when you went to this Cunning Man?

E. Can. I never heard of that Name till ſhe came Home.

Mr. Davy. Did you mention the Name of Mother Wells to him?

E. Can. No; I did not. He ſaid, an old Woman, I believe.

Mr. Davy. Did you mention Twelve Shillings, Nine-pence Half-penny to the Conjurer?

E. Can. I believe I did not. I was not there long, for I was all of a Fright when I was there.

Mr. Davy. Was there any other Perſon there?

E. Can. I ſaw no other beſides himſelf; he let me in, and I went by myſelf.

Mr. Davy. Who adviſed you to go to him?

E. Can. A great many of my Neighbours; one gave me Six-pence, and another Three-pence, till I got a Shilling, and then I went directly.

Mr. Davy. What are their Names who gave you the Money?

E. Can. I can't recollect any of them. I believe, a Gentlewoman that lived Cook or Chambermaid, who lodges at a Houſe over the Way, her Name is Mrs. Johanna, being out of Place; I was wringing my Hands and tearing about, and ſhe adviſed me to go to the Cunning Man. There were a Crowd of People about the Door, like a Fair about me.

Mr. Davy. You adverti ſed her as loſt or ſtrayed: Why did not you advertiſe your Suſpicions of her being murdered?----E. Can. I never did.

Mr. Davy. Do you remember your ſaying, that you had prayed to God, and had an Anſwer to your Prayers, ſo as to aſſure you that your Daughter would return?

E. Can. I never had no Anſwer. I prayed by myſelf, and gave up Bills in the Church, both at Aldermanbury and Cripplegate, and at the Meetings and Mr. Weſley's. I did not leave a Meeting or a Place, where I could put up a Bill in.

Mr. Davy. Of what Religion are you?

E. Can. I am of the Church of England, and was baptized at Cripplegate.

Mr. Davy. Did you not, about a Quarter of an Hour before your Daughter returned, mention to the Apprentice, you had prayed for your Daughter's Return, and that ſhe would return preſently?

E. Can. I ſaid to James, The laſt Thing you do, pray for her: He ſaid, he never went to Prayer but what he did. This was juſt before ſhe came in. I bid him every Night pray for her, and I repeated it.

Mr. Davy. Did you mention, that you believed your Daughter would be at Home that Night?

E. Canning. No, I did not.

Mr. Davy. Where has this Apprentice been ever ſince?

E. Can. He has never laid a Quarter of an Hour out of my Houſe ſince.

Mr. Davy. Has there been any Care taken to prevent People ſeeing him, and his being aſked Queſtions?

E Can. Here was a young Man came and ſaid, He'd give Half-a-Crown to ſee him; I was told this was ſome Scheme or Skit, and thought it would not be convenient, and ſo it was concluded he ſhould not be ſeen. There were about a Dozen Sawyers there.

Mr Davy. Did they not impoſe another Perſon upon him, inſtead of the Apprentice?

E. Can. Yes, they brought over another Sawyer, inſtead of him, to the young Man.

Mr. Davy. And ſo bilked him out of Half-a-Crown?

E. Can. They did.

Mr. Davy. How ſoon after your Daughter's coming in was it, that the Apprentice was ſent for theſe People?

E. Can. He help'd her into a Chair, and went out directly; and immediately came in Mrs. Woodward, Mrs. Myers, and Polly Lyon; and in two Minutes the Houſe was full.

Mr. Davy. What Things of the Room at Wells's did your Daughter mention that Night?

E. Can. She mentioned the Chimney and the Grate in the Room, and ſaid, ſhe took the Gown out of the Grate.

Mr. Davy. Did ſhe mention any thing of the Jack-line, or Pulley, or broken Caſement?---E. Can. No.

Mr. Davy. Or Saddles, or Cheſt of Drawers?

E. Can. No; ſhe mentioned Hay, and a Pitcher.

Mr. Davy. Did ſhe mention how much Hay?---E. Can. No.

Mr. Davy. Did ſhe ſay ſhe lay upon Hay?

E. Can. She ſaid, ſhe did now and then, or always, I don't know which.

Mr. Davy. Where did ſhe ſay the Hay was?

E. Can. She ſaid, it lay of a Lump in a Corner.

Mr. Davy. Did ſhe mention it was ſpread out like a Bed?

E. Can. No.

Mr. Davy. Had your Daughter had a Stool, did ſhe ſay?

E. Can. It is a conſtant Method with her to go a Fortnight without a Stool. I have another little Girl at Home now, that commonly goes ſometimes ten and ſometimes eleven Days without a Stool.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever mention this to any Doctor before the 1ſt of January?

E. Can. When ſhe was little, I mentioned it to Dr. Catridge, who lived in Aldermanbury.

Mr. Davy. Did they uſe to give her Glyſters?

E. Can. No; they uſed to give her Phyſic; that was when ſhe was ill.

Mr. Davy Was any Method uſed to occaſion a Stool before the 1ſt of January?---E. Can. No.

Mr. Davy. Had ſhe her Health perfectly well?

E. Can. She had; only ſhe was troubled with Pain in her Head.

Mr. Davy. Had ſhe a good Stomach to her Victuals?

E. Can. She had a very little Stomach always; that they know where ſhe lived.

Mr. Davy. Was ſhe very thirſty?

E. Can. She drank very little, without it was a Diſh of Tea; but not plentiful of that.

Mr. Davy. When your Daughter came Home, and told you this Story, did you think it was a very ſtrange one, or did you believe all ſhe ſaid?

E. Can. No, I did not think it ſtrange at all. I have known her, at Home, to live upon Half a Roll a-Day, when Things have gone hard with me.

Mr. Davy. Did ſhe tell you in what Manner ſhe eſcaped?

E. Can. Yes; out of a Window, by pulling down a Board.

Mr. Davy. Did ſhe mention any thing of a Pent-houſe?

E. Can. No, ſhe did not.

Mr. Davy. How did ſhe look when ſhe came Home?

E. Can. Her Face was ſwelled, bloated, and black, and ſodden, as if it had lain in Water, and her Arms black. She ſwallowed nothing hardly.

Mr. Davy. Did ſhe eat any thing that Night?

E. Can. No, nothing but a little Wine and Water; that ſhe could ſcarce get down.

Mr. Davy. Were her Teeth looſe?---E. Can. No.

Mr. Davy. Nor no Soreneſs in her Mouth?---E. Can. No.

Mr Davy. Do you know Mr. Scarrat?

E. Can. I have known him within this Twelve-month.

Mr. Davy. Did Scarrat come the firſt Night ſhe came Home?

E. Can. He did.

Mr. Davy. How lately, before your Daughter returned, had you ſeen him?

E. Can. I never had any Acquaintance with him before that. I don't know but I might ſee him go by a good many Times; but I never ſpoke to him in my Life before; but I hear ſince, he is a Neighbour.

Mr. Davy. Did he tell you he had formerly been at Mother Wells's?

E. Can. No, never.

Mr. Davy. Did you never hear him ſay he had jumped out of the Window himſelf?---E. Can. No, I never did.

Mr. Davy. How many Rooms have you got in your Houſe?

E. Can. I rented the Houſe in my Huſband's Time; and before he died, Mr. Roberts took the two Garrets, the Chamber, and a little Room I had below, which he has put to his Compting-houſe, for which he paid ſeven Pounds per Year, and after that I deſired he'd pay that to my Landlord. So I have but two Rooms.

Mr. Davy. Was any thing mentioned of Enfield-Waſh the Night of your Daughter's Return?

E. Can. I don't know when it was firſt mentioned. I believe it was when they came all together the next Morning.

Mr. Davy. Was your Apprentice a Witneſs upon the former Trial?

E. Can. No, he was not.

Mr. Davy. Was he ſubpœna'd?

E. Can. I don't know what a Subpœna is.

Mr. Davy. How came you not to mention the Grate, the Pitcher, nor the Bed-gown, on the Trial?---E. Can. Becauſe it was not aſked me.

Mr. Davy. Was Mr. Adamſon preſent when your Daughter mentioned the Hay?

E. Can. He did not ſee her the firſt Night, nor till we went down to Enfield.

Mr. Davy. Was Scarrat there when Hay was mentioned?

E. Can. I don't know, the Houſe was full of People.

Mr. Davy. Do you know one Mr. Dod, a Surgeon?--E. Can. I do not.

Mr. Davy. Did you ever hear your Daughter ſay, ſhe was afraid to lie on Hay, fearing there ſhould be a dead Man under it?

E. Can. I never heard her mention that, to my Knowledge.

Mr. Davy. Did you never ſay ſo to any body?

E. Can. No, not to my Knowledge.

Mr. Davy. Can your Daughter write?

E. Can. She can a little; it is a ſad Hand.

Mr. Davy. Can ſhe write a Letter well enough for you to find out the Meaning of it?

E. Can. She can hardly write at all.

Mr. Davy. Can ſhe write her Name?

E. Can. I believe ſhe can; I have ſeen her write it.

Mr. Davy. How long was ſhe at a Writing-School?

E. Can. About a Quarter of a Year.

Mr. Davy. When did you ſee any of her Hand-writing?

E. Can. I do not know that I have ſeen her Hand-writing theſe ſix Years.

Mr. Davy. Look at this Paper (it was a Notice of Trial with her Name to it, the Name wrote by her): Is this Name her Hand-writing?

E. Can. I believe it is her ſcribbling like.

Mr. Davy. Do you think, when your Daughter could write, ſhe would only make her Mark?---E. Can. I do not know for that.

Mr. Davy. I aſk this, my Lord, becauſe in her Information before Juſtice Fielding, there ſhe only makes her Mark, and by this Paper I ſee ſhe writes an exceeding good Hand.---(To E. Can.) How was your Daughter's Head covered, when ſhe came Home?

E. Can. With this Rag upon her Head, (holding the half Handkerchief in her Hand) and an old ragged Handkerchief ſhe had in her Pocket tied over that (producing it).

Mr. Davy. Whether you did not ſwear upon the Trial of Mary Squires, that your Daughter had a Cap on when ſhe came Home?

E. Can. No, not to my Knowledge; ſhe had no Cap on, to my Knowledge.

Mr. Davy to Thomas Gurney. You hear the Evidence this Woman has given; look at your Minutes, and give an Account of what ſhe ſaid in her Evidence on that Trial, as to the State and Condition in which her Daughter came Home, and particularly how ſhe was dreſſed.

Gurney. She ſaid, ſhe had nothing on but a ragged Bed-gown and a Cap.

Mr. Davy. Read the Account ſhe gave to that.

Gur. She ſaid, after ſhe was miſſing from New-year's Day, ſhe adverti ſed her three Times. She came back on the Day before King Charles's Martyrdom, about a Quarter of an Hour after Ten o'Clock; ſhe had nothing but a ragged Bed-gown and Cap on.

Mr. Davy. Were theſe her own Words?

Gur. I have here mentioned the Perſon ſhe, where ſhe ſaid I. I will not take upon me to ſay theſe are the very Words ſhe made uſe of, or that ſhe made uſe of no more Words; it is my Method, if a Queſtion brings out an imperfect Anſwer, and is obliged to be aſked over again, and the Anſwer comes more ſtrong, I take that down as the proper Evidence, and neglect the other: For Inſtance, here have in the Courſe of this Trial been many Queſtions aſked, which have not brought out any ſatisfactory Anſwer to the Counſel, which, when aſked in other Words, and upon Recollection, have produced more proper Anſwers, which I have put down. It is not to be expected I ſhould write every unintelligible Word that is ſaid by the Evidence.

Mr. Davy. Are you certain the Witneſs on that Trial ſaid, ſhe had a Cap on?

Gur. She did, or I had not put it down; and had ſhe ſaid a Handkerchief, I doubt not but I ſhould have found it in my Minutes.

Alice Colley again.

Mr. Moreton. Look at this Paper (which was the firſt Advertiſement ſent to the Daily Advertiſer): Is this your Hand-writing?

A. Col. I believe it is.

Mr. Moreton. Here is the Word Scowerer ſcratched out, and another Word put for it over it; is that your Hand-writing?

A. Col. That other Word is not my Hand-writing, nor the P. S. at the Bottom is not my Hand-writing.

Mr. Moreton. Look at this other Paper (which was the ſecond Advertiſement).---A. Col. I did not write that; I never ſaw it before.

Mr. Moreton. Did you write the firſt of your own Accord, or did any body dictate to you?

A. Col. Her Mother did; ſhe told me what to write down.

Mr. Moreton. Were you two alone then?

A. Col. I believe there were ſeveral Strangers by at the Time.

Mary Northan ſworn.

Mr. Nares. Do you remember carrying any Papers to be printed in the Daily Advertiſer?---M. Northan. I carried three.

Mr. Nares. Who wrote the ſecond?

M. Northan. (She takes it in her Hand.) I cannot remember indeed who wrote it. I think Mrs. Canning ſent me to the Corner of More-lane, at the White-Lion, there it was wrote.

Mr. Nares. Who wrote the third?

M. Northan. I cannot juſtly remember that.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Willes. Did you go by yourſelf, or in Company with any body?

M. Northan. I went by myſelf.

Mr. Willes. How came you to put in theſe Words, any Coachman?

M. Northan. The Mother gave Directions to put in about the Coach, becauſe ſhe was a ſober Body, and we thought ſhe might be forced away in a Coach.

Mr.

Mr. Willes. How came the Circumſtance of the Coachman to be inſerted?

M. Northan. Becauſe her Mother had been informed by a Gentlewoman in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, that ſhe heard a Coach drive in great Haſte, and a young Perſon ſcreaming out in it; and that ſhe had Nobody at Home, or ſhe would have ſent and ſtopped the Coach.

Mr. Willes. Was this Writing on the Backſide one of the Papers on it, when you carried it to the Printer?

M. Northan. I do not know; if it was read to me, I could tell better (It is read).

Note, It is ſuppoſed ſhe was forcibly taken away by ſome evil-diſpoſed Perſon, as ſhe was heard to ſcreek out in a Hackney-Coach in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet: If the Coachman remembers any thing of the Affair, by giving an Account as above, he ſhall be handſomely rewarded for his Trouble.

M. Northan. This was wrote at Mrs. Canning's Houſe, I believe, but I cannot tell by whom; I did not mention about the Coachman at the White Lion.

Mr. Willes. During the Time it was in Mrs. Canning's Houſe, was there any thing wrote in it, or on the Back of it, by any body there?

M. Northan. No, there was not.

Mr. Willes. Can you read?

M. Northan. I can hardly read at all. (She looks at it.) There was nothing on the Back-ſide when I carried it. (It is read.)

Elizabeth Canning went from her Friends between Nine and Ten on Monday Night, betwixt Houndſditch and Biſhopſgate, freſh-colour'd, pitted with the Small-Pox, high Forehead, light Eyebrows, about five Foot high, well-ſet, had on a purple maſquerade-ſtuff Gown, black-ſtuff Petticoat, a white chip Hat bound round with green, white Apron and Handkerchief, blue Stockings, and Leather Shoes.

Mr. Willes. Is this all you mentioned to the Perſon who wrote?

M. Northan. It is, I believe.

Mr. Willes. Do you know who ſcratched out theſe Words? (Any Coachman, who remembers taking up ſuch a Perſon, and can give any Account where ſhe is, ſhall have two Guineas Reward, to be paid by Mrs. Canning, in Aldermanbury-Poſtern, Sawyer, which will greatly ſatisfy her Mother.)

M. Northan. The other is all I gave Directions for; I don't know who ſcratched this out.

Mr. Nares. I dare venture to ſay this Alteration was made by the Printer, for I obſerve he has altered the Engliſh and Spelling all the Way through by the printed Paper; he ſaw there was ſome Suſpicion of a Coachman put in in a ſtupid Manner, and he began to alter it on the Back-ſide, as it is put down.

Mr. Willes. Here is the third Paper; do you know who wrote this?

M. Northan. I don't know; Mrs. Canning ſent me to carry it to the Printer.

Mr. Willes. Here are two Lines ſcratched out in this; how came that?

M. Northan. The Printer ſcratched them out, and ſaid, they were of no Uſe.

Mr. Willes. In the third Letter here are two Lines ſcratched out: Were they ſo when you carried it? The Words are, Had in her Pocket Twelve Shillings, Nine-pence Half-penny.

M. Northan. The Printer read it, and ſcratched them out; he ſaid, it was not material to name the Money.

James Lord ſworn.

J. Lord. I have been Apprentice to Elizabeth Canning's Mother between Six and Seven Years. I remember her being miſſing upon New-year's Day was Twelve-month. Mr. Lyon came to our Houſe firſt about Nine o'Clock, then about Ten, to know whether Miſtreſs know'd whether Betty was come home to her Houſe. Then I was ſent directly to her Uncle Colley's, at Saltpetre-Bank: They were all a-bed: Mrs. Colley anſwered and ſaid, They had left her about half an Hour after Nine o'Clock, upon the other Side Aldgate Church, in Houndſditch: Then, after that, I came Home and acquainted Miſtreſs with it. There was great Inquiry about the Neighbourhood all Night long almoſt; I inquired of ſeveral Neighbours that Night.

Mr. Williams. When was the next Time you ſaw her?

J. Lord. On the 29th of January, the Night before King Charles's Martyrdom, about a Quarter after Ten o'Clock, I was juſt going to make faſt the Door, going to Bed; Somebody lifted up the Latch; it goes with a Bit of String; Miſtreſs was down upon her Knees a-praying to ſee her Apparition, before ſhe came in.

Mr. Williams. Did you ſee her down on her Knees before Elizabeth Canning came in?

J. Lord. She was down on her Knees ſome time before ever ſhe lifted up the Latch.

Mr. Williams. From the 1ſt of January to this Time, did you ever ſee the Mother on her Knees?

J. Lord. Yes, I have ſeveral Times, praying to God to hear ſomewhat of her, whether ſhe was alive or dead.

Mr. Williams. This Prayer that you mention, and the Poſition of her being down on her Knees on the 29th, was that any thing particular, or was it no more than what ſhe had done before?

J. Lord. It was the ſame as ſhe had ſeveral Times done ſince ſhe miſſed her Daughter?

Mr. Williams. You was giving an Account that Elizabeth Canning lifted up the Latch, and you was going to make faſt the Door; go on, and give an Account in what Manner ſhe came.

J. Lord. I had the Candle in my Hand, and was going to make faſt the Door, and ſhe came in: Miſtreſs was praying: Miſtreſs aſked who was there? I then looked her up in the Face, and thought it was Somebody elſe came to inquire Tidings after her: I did not know her at firſt: After I had looked her in the Face again, ſhe frightened me, becauſe ſhe looked in ſuch a deplorable Condition. I ſaid to Miſtreſs, it was Betty: She ſaid, What Betty? I ſaid, Our Betty: Upon that Miſtreſs fell in a Fit directly, and continued ſo ſome Minutes, I cannot ſay how long.

Mr. Williams. Upon your Oath, do you think it was a real Fit, or a ſham Fit?

J. Lord. I never ſaw her in a Fit before; it was far from a ſham Fit. When Elizabeth Canning came in, ſhe was e'en almoſt ſpent: I took her by the Arms, and ſet her down in a Chair: She was e'en almoſt dead, as black as the Chimney-ſtock, black and blue: She was dreſſed up with an old Bit of an Handketchief round her Head, and an old dirty ragged Bed-gown, what they properly call a Jacket.

Mr. Williams. Did you ſee what was upon her Head?

J. Lord. She had no Cap, nor Hat; nor Stays on; her Ear was cut, and all bloody.

Mr. Williams. Did it bleed as if it had been freſh cut?

J. Lord. It was a-bleeding.

Mr. Williams. Was there any Blood upon the Handkerchief?

J. Lord. There was ſome Blood upon the Handkerchief that was about her Head: She had an old Handkerchief in her Hand, and a Bit of one upon her Head.

Mr. Williams. What Colour were the Handkerchiefs of?

J. Lord. One was white, but I cannot ſay for the other.

Mr. Williams. What Condition did ſhe ſeem to be in with regard to her Health?

J. Lord. She ſeem'd to be almoſt ſpent, juſt gone; and if it had been much further, I believe ſhe muſt have dropt down.

Mr. Williams. Who were in the Room at that Time?

J. Lord. There were none but my Miſtreſs and Children in the Room. As ſoon as my Miſtreſs recovered out of her Fit, I was ordered by Miſtreſs to call Mrs. Woodward, Polly Lyon and Mrs. Myers: They came; ſhe began to ſay where ſhe had been confined; the Woman was either named Wills or Wells, at Enfield-Waſh.

Mr. Williams. Was this that Night?

J. Lord. It was the ſame Night. So many People came in, I was obliged to keep the Door, to keep People out.

Mr. Williams. Who aſked her where ſhe had been?

J. Lord. My Miſtreſs; and ſhe ſaid, ſhe had been at Enfield-Waſh, and heard the Name of Wills or Wells; ſhe did not know which; for ſhe heard them go backwards and forwards in the Houſe, and heard them call her by her Name.

Mr. Williams. Did ſhe ſay how ſhe came to go there?

J. Lord. I was not much in the Room all the Time; I was obliged to keep the Door.

Mr. Williams. Then you cannot give an Account of what ſhe ſaid any further?

J. Lord. I know nothing further than that ſhe is an honeſt, induſtrious, ſober Girl.

Mr. Williams. Upon your Oath, do you, or do you not, know where Elizabeth Canning was from the 1ſt of January, to the Day before King Charles's Martyrdom, or any Part of that Time?

J. Lord. No; nor never ſet Eyes on her, or heard any thing where ſhe was, till ſhe came Home.

Croſs-Examined.

Mr. Gaſcoyne. What Time was you ſent to Colley's Houſe to inquire for the Girl?

J. Lord. It was between Eleven and Twelve at Night when I got there.

Mr. Gaſ. How came you to ſit up ſo late that Night?

J. Lord. Mr. Lyon came to our Houſe, as nigh as I can gueſs, between Nine and Ten, (which is generally about the Time we go to Bed) and aſked Miſtreſs if ſhe know'd any thing of her Daughter? She ſaid, No; ſhe thought ſhe had been come Home to his Houſe. The next Morning Miſtreſs and I both went to Mr. Colley's to inquire.

Mr. Gaſ. Did you not go to Mr. Lyon's firſt?

J. Lord. I think I did not.

Mr. Gaſ. What Time in the Morning did you go to Mrs. Colley's?

J. Lord. I believe we went out about Six o'Clock.

Mr. Gaſ. What Time did you get Home again?

J. Lord. I believe about Ten, and I went out to inquire after her again; I went one Way, and Miſtreſs another, to the Neighbours about.

Mr. Gaſ. To what Places?

J. Lord. I cannot tell all the Places; I did not go to any Place in particular.

Mr. Gaſ. Where did your Miſtreſs go?

J. Lord. I cannot tell; ſhe did not tell me; ſhe was juſt like a mad Woman.

Mr. Gaſ. Did ſhe order you to go to any Place?

J. Lord. I had no Directions from her to go to any Place in particular.

Mr. Gaſ. When did you go to your Work?

J. Lord. I did not go to Work till after Dinner.

Mr. Gaſ. What Time do you generally dine?

J. Lord. About One o'Clock.

Mr. Gaſ. Was your Miſtreſs at Home, when you came Home from Work?——J. Lord. I don't know.

Mr. Gaſ. Was the Door open?——J. Lord. It always is.

Mr. Gaſ. Was you in the Room when your Miſtreſs firſt kneeled down, the Night the Girl came Home?——J. Lord. I was.

Mr. Gaſ. Did ſhe not adviſe you to kneel down?

J. Lord. She did not.

Mr. Gaſ. What was you doing?

J. Lord. I was praying to God, in my Heart, that ſhe might hear of her.

Mr. Gaſ. What particular Converſation paſſed between you and your Miſtreſs that Night, before ſhe kneeled down?

J. Lord. I cannot ſay; I did not take Notice of all the Words.

Mr. Gaſ. Did ſhe ſay ſhe had more Reaſons for praying that Night, than at any other Time?

J. Lord. No, ſhe did not.

Mr. Gaſ. Upon your Oath, whether ſhe did, before the Time ſhe kneeled down, ſay ſhe ſhould ſee her?---J. Lord. No, ſhe did not.

Mr. Gaſ. Did ſhe ſay ſhe had any Reaſon to expect her that Week?

J. Lord. No.

Mr. Gaſ. Did ſhe ſay, ſhe had ſome Knowledge, or Somebody had told her ſhe would come Home that Week?

J. Lord. She did not expect her coming Home that Night, or that Week, no more than any other.

Mr. Gaſ. Do you know any thing of your Miſtreſs's going to a Cunning Man?

J. Lord. I know nothing at all about it; She did not acquaint me with it.

Mr. Gaſ. What, not of going to a Conjurer?

J. Lord. No; ſhe does not acquaint me with all her Affairs.

Mr. Gaſ. Did you never hear her mention ſhe had gone, or would go, to a Cunning Man?——J. Lord. No.

Mr. Gascoyne. Did you never hear your Mistress relate a Dream or Vision she had had?——J. Lord. No, not to my Knowledge.

Mr. Gas. Are you sure?

J. Lord. I might, or might not hear it; I cannot tell; the Care of my Mistress's Business lies upon me, and I have other Things to mind.

Mr. Gas. Give me a direct Answer, whether you ever heard any such Transaction concerning your Mistress's going to a Conjurer, or having been there?

J. Lord. There was some Talk of a Cunning Man; but I did not know whether she had been with one.

Mr. Gas. What was said of the Cunning Man?

J. Lord. I do not know: I remember there was Mention made of a Cunning Man that lived in the Old-Bailey.

Mr. Gas. What Cunning Man was that that lived in the Old-Bailey?

J. Lord. He used to tell Fortunes.

Mr. Gas. How came this Cunning Man to be mentioned?

J. Lord. I believe Mistress or Somebody did go to him, but I do not know who.

Mr. Gas. For what did they go?

J. Lord. To hear somewhat of her Daughter.

Mr. Gay. Did you hear this before or after she had been there?

J. Lord. I believe it was after.

Mr. Gas. Who did you hear speak of it?

J. Lord. To the best of my Remembrance, it was my Mistress herself.

Mr. Gas. What Conversation passed upon that, when your Mistress first informed you of it?

J. Lord. I did not hear a Word what he said to her; I heard no more than that she had been there.

Mr. Gas. Was any body by at that Time?

J. Lord. I cannot say who were in the House at the Time, or whether there was, or was not, any body there but ourselves.

Mr. Gas. Did you not inquire what the Cunning Man told her?

J. Lord. No.

Mr. Gas. Did you ever hear any body else in Conversation speak of what was done at this Cunning Man's?

J. Lord. No, nor have I heard to this Time; I always believed he could not tell.

Mr. Gas. Did you ever hear who your young Mistress was with?

J. Lord. No, I never did.

Mr. Gas. Nor any thing about an old Woman?——J. Lord. No.

Mr. Gas. Have you not heard your Mistress say any Thing about it?

J. Lord. I have heard her say, she feared some rakish young Gentleman had catched her up, and so carried her away; and I have heard her say, she suspected she was murdered.

Mr. Gas. What was your own Opinion?

J. Lord. I could not tell what to think.

Mr. Gas. Did you ever hear your Mistress say she was taken away in a Coach?——J. Lord. No, I never did.

Mr. Gas. As to the Night she came in, you say the Door was upon the Latch, and your Mistress fell into a Fit: How came you not to be affrighted when she came in?

J. Lord. As soon as she came in, all the Blood of my Body was in my Face; and when I recovered myself, I said, it was our Betty.

Mr. Gas. Was you ever affrighted at the Thoughts of an Apparition before?——J. Lord. No, I never was.

Mr. Gas. How did she appear as to her Face?

J. Lord. She was black and blue on her Face and Arms, like the Stock of a Chimney.

Mr. Gas. Did she look as if she had been beat?

J. Lord. She did, just in the same Manner; her Face and Hands would compare, for Blackness, to a Hat almost.

Mr. Gas. Had she black Eyes?

J. Lord. I did not see that, any more than other Persons are.

Mr. Gas. Did the Black and Blue seem to be Bruises?

J. Lord. The Colour of her Flesh was next a-kin to the Colour of Beating.

Mr. Gas. How long did she continue so Black and Blue?

J. Lord. I was kept out of the Room, and a Doctor attended her; it was not so proper for me to go there.

Mr. Gas. Can you remember, the Day she went to her Uncle's to Dinner, what Time she was to have come back again?

J. Lord. Yes; towards the Evening, and go with her Mother and buy a Cloak.

Mr. Gas. What Time did she call at your House?

J. Lord. About Eleven o'Clock.

Mr. Gas. When she came Home, what had she on as to Cloaths?

J. Lord. She had a Piece of an old Handkerchief about her Head, and a black Petticoat, I believe an upper one; I think it was the same she went away with. She had nothing over her but that Jacket.

Mr. Gas. How many Petticoats had she on?

J. Lord. I can't say that.

Mr. Gas. Did the Petticoat look clean or dirty?——J. Lord. It looked as if it had been draggled in Country Dirt, with Dirt and Mud.

Mr. Gas. How do you know the Difference between Country Dirt and London Dirt?

J. Lord. Because London Dirt is black, and the other lighter.

Mr. Gas. Did you see the Ear was fresh bleeding?

J. Lord. It was.

Mr. Gas. Have you ever been examined before you came into this Court?——J. Lord. No.

Mr. Gas. Did you ever make your Affidavit before?

J. Lord. No; I never was examined upon Oath before.

Mr. Gas. Look at this Bed-Gown.

J. Lord. This is the Bed-Gown she came Home in, the Day before King Charles's Martyrdom.

Mr. Gas. Did you ever see it before you saw it upon her, the Night she came Home, on the 29th of January?

J. Lord. No; I never did.

Mr. Gas. Is it your Mistress's?

J. Lord. No; I am positive it is not.

Mr. Gas. What Reason have you to say That is the Bed-Gown?

J. Lord. It looks like it; I am almost positive to it. I saw it the next Day after it was pulled off.

Mr. Gas. Did you make your Inquiry any other Day, after the second Day she was missing?

J. Lord. No; I kept on with my Mistress's Business.

Mr. Gas. Upon your Oath, do you believe your Mistress did know where she was?

J. Lord. Upon my Oath, I am positive, if my Mistress had known where she was, she would have fetched her Home, wherever she was.

Mr. Gas. Did your Mistress say, she expected to see her on the Sunday Night?——J. Lord. No, she did not.

Mr. Gas. In what Position was she when the Girl came in?

J. Lord. She was on her Knees by the Bed-side.

Mr. Gas. Did you ever hear she expected her Home that Night, or was told so by the Cunning Man?

J. Lord. No.

Robert Scarrat sworn.

R. Scarrat. I heard Elizabeth Canning was come Home on the 29th of January, at Night; and as I had never seen her, or spoke to her in my Life, to my Knowledge, I went in out of Curiosity to see her.

Mr. Moreton. Had you heard before she was missing?

R. Scarrat. I had, the very next Day after she was missing.

Mr. Moreton. What passed after you went in?

R. Scarrat. I was there some Time before she spoke a Word. Mr. Wintlebury came in after me: He said, Bet, how do you do? She said, O Sir, you don't know what I have suffered. He asked her, where she had been? She said, she had been on the Hertfordshire Road. He asked her, how she came to know that? She said, she saw the Coachman, that used to drive her Mistress into Hertfordshire, go by. She was asked, how far she might have been in the Country? She said, it might be about nine or ten Miles.

Mr. Moreton. Did she give any Reason for that?

R. Scarrat. I did not hear her. I asked her, if she knew the Name of the Person, and said, I'll lay a Guinea to a Farthing, she has been at Mother Wells's, for that is as noted a House as any is: She said, her Name is Mother Wills or Wills.

Mr. Morcton. Was that Answer after you had said you would lay a Guinea to a Farthing she had been at Mother Wells's House?

R. Scarrat. It was. I asked her about the House: She said, she had been confined in a longish, darkish Room, and saw the Coachman through the Crack of the Window, and that there were some Boards nailed over it. I asked her, whether the Window fronted the Road? She said, it did not; and when she got out, she turned down a little Lane, and then turned into the Fields on her right Hand. I asked her, if she took Notice if any of those Fields were ploughed up? She said, she believed there was. I asked her, when she was in them Fields, on which Hand was the Road? She said, on the right Hand coming to London. I asked her, when she came out of these Fields, whether she observed coming over a little Brook? She said, she did. I asked her, if she thought it was a Tan-House? She said, she believed it was. I said, it was Mr. Neal's, a Tanner, at Enfield-Wash.

Mr. Moreton. Did you know that Road?

R. Scarrat. I did very well; and that there was such a House, and what Sort of a Character it bore, that it was a very bad House. She said, she met a Man, and asked her Road to London. She said, she had been robbed, and described the Person that cut her Stays off to be a tall, black, swarthy Woman.

Mr. Moreton. Who asked that Question?

R. Scarrat. It was asked, but I can't tell by whom. I said, I had seen Mother Wells, and, to the best of my Knowledge, that Description did not answer to her.

Mr. Moreton. Did she tell you any Thing else?

R. Scarrat. She said, there were two young Women, one with black Hair and the other fair, stood laughing at her, while her Stays were cutting off.

Mr. Moreton. How did she appear to be for Health?

R. Scarrat. She appeared to be very weak and feeble, sitting on a little Stool: To the best of my Knowledge, she had on a dirty Bed-Gown and black Petticoat, and a foul Cap of her Mother's. I went down to Enfield-Wash with Mr. Wintlebury and Mr. Adamson on the 1st of February. The People were all taken into Custody.

Mr. Moreton. Did she give an Account of any particular Things where she had been confined?

R. Scarrat. She described a black Jug, broken about the Neck, that might hold about four or five Quarts; and she said, she believed there might be about four Quarts of Water in it, and the Jug was left in the Room when she came away; that she had some Bread, but it was so hard, she was forced to dip it in the Water.

Mr. Moreton. Who was the first that went into the Room?

R. Scarrat. I believe several of her Friends had been up in the Room before she came down.

Mr. Moreton. Upon your Oath, when did you see the black Pitcher first?

R. Scarrat. Upon my Oath, I had never seen it, till I saw her fix upon it in the Room.

Mr. Moreton. Was you there when she was in the Parlour?

R. Scarrat. She was brought into the Parlour, supported by two Men. I was in the Parlour then. We made them all sit down, that is, the People that were taken up. The Room was full of Neighbours and People that went down: Susannah Wells was on the left Hand of the Fire, and Mary Squires sitting by the Fire, with her Head and Knees together. Canning looked very hard at her; and whether any body bid her look up, I can't say; but she fixed upon her, and said, That is the Woman that cut off my Stays, and pointed to her. The Gypsey got up, and said, Dear Madam, don't swear my precious Life away. Canning said, I know you very well, I know you too well, to my Sorrow. She was asked, if she knew any body else in the Room, and if she knew a young Man, which was George Squires? She said, she did not say she did. She pointed to the Gypsey's Daughter and Virtue Hall, and said, the young Woman, meaning meaning the Gypsey's Daughter, was leaning on the Dresser when her Stays were cut off, and Virtue Hall was standing by her, when she went into the Room. She was then carried up the Stairs that front the Door. I saw her in one Room, but did not in the first she went into; that was the last she went into there. Coming down Stairs, she said, there was another Room; when she came into the Kitchen, the Door was shut; she said, Through that Door is the Place where I was confined; then the Door was opened, and she went up.

Mr. Morton. Was you one of the first that went up?

R. Sarrat. No, I was not. I saw her there with a black Jug in her Hand. She said, that was in the Room. She looked round, and found a Tobacco-Mould, and said, that was there when she was there. She said, an old Cask and a Saddle or two she left there.

Mr. Mor. Was she positive that was the Place?

R. Scar. She pointed to the Window, and said, she broke out at that Window.

Mr. Mor. Did you go before Justice Tashmaker? What Account did she give there?

R. Scar. I did: She gave the same Account there, to the best of my Knowledge, as she did here. When the People were taken up, George Squires had a Great-Coat on, and a slouched Hat; he pulled the Coat and Hat off; he was made to put them on again in the House, before he got into the Cart to go before the Justice; but Canning would not swear to him.

Mr. Mor. Had he the Hat and Coat on at the Justice's?--R. Scar. He had.

Mr. Mor. Upon your Oath, did you not, from the 1st of January to the 29th, know where she was?

R. Scar. I never saw her, to the best of my Knowledge, till she came Home.

Mr. Mor. Do you know, at this Hour, any body that does know where she was?---R. Scar. No, I do not.

Q. from a Juryman. Which Window did she point to, where she said she got out at?---R. Scar. To the End Window.

Cross-Examined.

Mr. Davy. Do you know Wells's House?

R. Scar. I do, by passing and repassing.

Mr. Davy. Had you ever been in her House before January 1753?

Mr. Mor. Though you should stigmatize yourself, let not the Truth go undiscovered.---R. Scar. I have been there.

Mr. Mor. How long ago is it that you was in her House?

R. Scar. It is some Years ago.

Mr. Davy. Was you ever in the Hay-loft?---R. Scar. I never was.

Mr. Davy. Are you very certain of that?---R. Scar. I am.

Mr. Davy. Did you never jump out at a Window in that Room?

R. Scar. No, I never did; I don't like Jumping so well.

Mr. Davy. Where did you live when you went there?

R. Scar. I was then Servant to Mr. Snee.

Mr. Davy. How often was you there, and when?

R. Scar. I was there once or twice, about four or five Years ago.

Mr. Davy. With whom?---R. Scar. With two or three Friends.

Mr. Davy. Men or Women?---R. Scar. Men.

Mr. Davy. Were there no Women?---R. Scar. No.

Mr. Davy. Did you never take a Girl there?

R. Scar. No, never in my Life.

Mr. Davy. Was you never there with a Woman?---R. Scar. No.

Mr. Davy. When was the first Time you was in the Hay-loft?

R. Scar. I never was in it, till the Time I went down with the Girl and them.

Mr. Davy. What Rooms in the House had you been in before?

R. Scar. The Kitchen and Parlour, and no other.

Mr. Davy. Was you never above Stairs?

R. Scar. No, never before in my Life, till I went down with them, and they were taken in Custody. I never knowed there was such a Room as the Place where the Prisoner was, till then.

Mr. Davy. Were there a good many People in the Room, when the Girl told you this?---R. Scar. Yes.

Mr. Davy. How came you to pitch upon the House of Mother Wells?

R. Scar. I judged it might be that House, because I did not know any other House on that Road so likely.

Mr. Davy. Did you make that Reply before you asked any Questions?

R. Scar. I said that, when she said she had been on the Hertfordshire Road.

Mr. Davy. And would you then have laid so much Odds?

R. Scar. Though I said it, I don't know that I should have laid it.

Mr. Davy. What Name did she say she heard mentioned?

R. Scar. She said, she heard the Mistress of the House called Wills or Wells.

Mr. Davy. Was the Apprentice by when she mentioned this?

R. Scar. I don't know that he was. Mr. Wintlebury was the first Person that she spoke to, as I heard. I was in the Room some Time, and some People spoke to her; but she spoke to none, before she did to him.

Mr. Davy. Had you any Acquaintance with Mrs. Canning, or her Daughter?---R. Scar. No, I had not.

Mr. Davy. What led you to go to Canning's House, having no Acquaintance?

R. Scar. A Maid-Servant came into the House where I bedded and boarded, and said, Betty Canning is come Home, Bettty Canning is come Home! which was the Cause of my going there.

Mr. Davy. Then you mentioned several Things to her very familiarly?

R. Scar. I did.

Mr. Davy. What were her Answers to them?

R. Scar. Her Answers were, Yes,---she believed,---or, she was sure,---or to that Effect.

Mr. Davy. Did you, in the Examination of this Girl, recollect as many Particulars of the House, and about it, as possibly you could?

R. Scar. I did.

Mr. Davy. Was you able to describe the House, the Road, the Pond, &c.

R. Scar. I did not mention the Pond, nor nothing in the House. I mentioned the Tanner's House, and a little Bridge that crosses the Brook; and asked her about the Road and the Field, whether it was ploughed up.

Mr. Davy. Did you mention one single Particular, to which she answered in the Negative?

R. Scar. That Question is answered; she said the Road was so, and the Fields so.

Mr. Davy. Did it never occur to you to ask her about any Thing that you knew was not there, in order to be better satisfied, whether she had been there?

R. Scar. I don't know I thought of such a Thing.

Mr. Davy. How soon after she was taken out of the Chaise was it, that you saw her at Enfield-Wash?

R. Scar. It was in the Room where the Prisoners were.

Mr. Davy. When she came into the Kitchen, did she immediately fix upon that Door, and say, This is the Door of the Room wherein I was confined?

R. Scar. She said that herself; Nobody spoke a Word to her.

Mr. Davy. Suppose she had been in the Kitchen, and the Door open, might she not be more positive than if it was shut?

R. Scar. More positive, to be sure, she must be.

Mr. Davy. If you had been with her in the Kitchen before, and the Door had been open, and she had not fixed upon the Room, and after that had been carried to all the other Rooms in the House, should you not have doubted of her Veracity?

R. Scar. I don't doubt, but she would have fixed upon that Room at first.

Mr. Davy. Attend to the Question. Supposing it had happened, as I have put it, whether that would have led you to doubt her Sincerity?

R. Scar. I should.

Mr. Davy. Did you hear what she said before Mr. Alderman Chitty?

R. Scar. I did.

Mr. Davy. Did she give the same Account on the Trial of Squires, she did there?—R. Scar. She did, to the best of my Knowledge; but I cannot remember in particular.

Mr. Davy. Did she, before the Alderman, mention any Thing of passing through Bishopsgate-Street?
